THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Happy New Year

By W. C. Benschoff, Moderator of General Conference

"These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." John 15:11.

We have here Christ's supreme disclosure. He seeks to impart the fullness of joy to make the believer supremely happy. He would have the saved to "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." A personal consideration—will I be truly happy throughout this year? The old one has been borne away on the wings of time, the bells have tolled its requiem; the new has been ushered in midst the best wishes of our friends—"Happy New Year." Will this "best wish" be realized as a personal experience? Circumstances may seem to belie the thought. How be happy when things have gone wrong, when possessions have vanished, when the very necessities of life are scarcely in evidence? Remember, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." A happy life depends upon right relations with Christ and not upon outward circumstances.

The joy which Christ gives is that which he possessed. The happiness of the world fluctuates, it is influenced by external conditions. But genuine Christian joy abides, increasing under trial rather than diminishing, for it abounds wherever Christ abounds. How happy Christ was, conscious of a oneness with the Father, obedient to every mandate, anticipating certain victory! He possessed the fullness of joy. This joy he imparts to all those who come unto God by faith in him.

The secret of a happy life then is in knowing Christ and abiding in him. Through faith in the blessed Son of God you may have the joy-bells ringing in your heart. Paul could rejoice in the Lord always because he could say, "I know whom I have believed." What a joy to hear the word of pardon from his lips! What a joy to be in harmony with God! What a joy to be adopted into the family of God; to be an heir of God and a joint heir with Jesus Christ! Know Christ, then, in the pardon of your sins; make him supreme in your life; obey his every command: live constantly in his presence; abide in him as the branch in the vine, and this will be for you a HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Signs of the Times

THE New Year

There is something tremendously solemn about the passing of another year. If there is any particular time more than others when the Christian should be engaged in self-examination and prayer, it is at the striking of the New Year. Yet probably the majority of professed Christians, with the world, were engaged in hilarious merry-making. It is thus that the worldling strives to forget the mistakes and calamities of the past, and also to dispel the ominous shadows of the future. He argues:—The cup of life is slender, and its content evanescent; let us drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die. His philosophy of pleasure is at bottom a philosophy of despair.

For the unbeliever there can be no New Year. The past with its blunders hangs irrevocably about his neck. He may think to turn over a "new page," but the record of the old abides and will rise up to trouble the conscience and condemn him at the last.

How blessed it is to be a Christian. For such there can be a New Year. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins—" The past is done, blotted out forever by the atoning work of his Grace.

WHAT is "TIME"?

The invention and use of the radio brings some rather startling experiences. Many listening in on the last day of the old year arrived in London at the same time that it arrived in Los Angeles. And he would be right if he meant clock time, but he would be wrong if he meant synchronous time.

The problem of "Time" is not an easy one. The philosophers have wrestled with it for centuries. Kant, greatest of the German thinkers, argued that "Time" has no objective existence, but is only a category of man's mind, a sort of tool with which he seeks to deal with the world of experience.

The truth of the matter seems to be that the essence of Time is measurement. You could not have Time without some way of measuring it. And this suggests an interesting definition:—Time is a relationship between things in a changing world. If this be true, then Time began with the creation of the world and will continue as long as the world exists. As long as the stars exist and move in their courses, the measurement of time will be possible.

It is not true, therefore, that some day Time will cease. That is purely a philosophical notion. The Bible does not support it. Rev. 10:6 should be translated "that there should be delay no longer." The word means an interval or period of time, not Time in the abstract. The Biblical picture of what we call "Eternity" in the future is set forth in a Greek phrase which literally means "ages of ages," that is, Time rolling on through age after age without end. And the interesting thing is that the mind of the common man conceives Eternity in exactly this fashion. The Bible was written for the common man, not for the philosophers. But it would be a good thing if more of the philosophers read it.

However, although Time will roll on without end, we shall not be so much interested in it in the future life. The almost frantic concentration upon Time in the present life arises because there is so little of it. If gold were as plentiful as the air we breathe, no one would think much about it. So it will be with Time in "the Father's House." We shall reign "into the ages of the ages." (Rev. 22:5).

WAIT A Moment"

One of the outstanding characteristics of the Japanese people is their love of beauty. Their poets and writers have given expression to this love in the presence of beautiful objects of nature, of which there are many in Japan. Yet in the midst of all this beauty of nature there walks an ugly specter: It has been found that the most charming places are chosen by those who are contemplating self-destruction.

Appalled by the situation, the Japanese authorities have at these places of natural beauty placed signs bearing the words, "WAIT A MOMENT." But the effort seems fruitless. Suicides have become more numerous than ever.

There is no refuge in Nature for the sick and weary of soul. When men have found life unbearable, you cannot hold them here with an exhortation to "Wait a Moment." They will ask, "What for?" Only in that God who is the source of Nature, but who is above it, can the weary find a Refuge for the soul. "Come unto me, and I will give you rest," is the Word of the Lord.

PENNSYLVANIA Buys Bibles

The Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania recently approved the purchase of some Bibles so that each of its new members could be provided with one.

No, the millennium has not come. These Bibles are not intended for reading purposes, nor to instruct the law-makers in righteousness. They will be used to administer the oath of office. By giving each legislator a Bible it will be possible to swear them all in at once, and thus save time.

In some places in this country you are not permitted to read the Bible in the public schools. I have often wondered whether in such places they still use the Bible as an accessory to the administration of the oath. Apparently it is safe to use the Bible as a piece of court-room furniture, but you must be careful about reading it.

WHEN is Alcohol Intoxicating?

Our hard-worked Congressmen have been recently engaged in profound thought and argument with reference to the quantity of alcohol which they may be allowed in beer without making it intoxicating and thus contrary to the 18th Amendment. The Volstead Act, you will recall, set the content at 1/2 of one per cent. Now the majority of Congress feel that this was wrong, and that a content of nearly four per cent will still leave beer non-intoxicating.

Some members of Congress have suggested that an actual test be made in the presence of that august body and a competent body of scientists. The idea is that several willing subjects be selected for the experiment, gradually filled to various degrees of fullness with the four per cent beer, and their reactions carefully observed.

Such an experiment is not likely to be carried out, for the very good reason that, as Senator Borah has pointed out, if the men got drunk the grave Senatorial investigators might be arrested for breaking the prohibition laws.

If such an experiment could be carried out, I have a much better suggestion as to method. Get the driver of one of these great busses which ply the roads, let him drink several bottles of this four per cent beer, arrange a course to be driven over a very dangerous road, and invite all the Congressmen to ride with him. Only those who accepted the invitation would be permitted to vote in favor of four per cent beer. This would settle the matter quickly and effectively. The bus driver would be in no danger because he would have no passengers to drive. And the country would hear no more about four per cent beer. Such an experiment might not be very scientific, but it would be practical.

THE Philosophy of the Negro Slave

An old Atlanta colored man, an ex-slave, uttered the following bit of wisdom as a Christmas message:

"Hyah 'tis Chris'mus agin, an' de folks is a gruntin' 'bout hard times. Dey been a gruntin' a hun'nad yeahs, since I wuz a boy

New Attitudes for the New Year

Are you afraid in the dark? Then you will go hesitant and trembling, if you go at all, into the dark and you will not get very far alone. The point is that your attitude toward a given situation very largely determines your conduct in regard to it. The word "attitude" refers primarily to a physical position of the body assumed, consciously or unconsciously, to express some feeling. So, fundamentally the word attitude involves a mental state or position and suggests one's habitual mode of regarding anything. It indicates one's opinion, or what he thinks and how he feels regarding anything. Our attitudes lead to action similar in character. Tell me your attitude toward the foreigner, toward Prohibition, toward the church, and I will tell you what you are likely to do in relation to these. It was our attitudes that largely determined our conduct during the past year, and if the new year is to see an improvement over the old, there must be a change for the better in our attitudes. There are a thousand ways in which our attitudes might be improved, but the following are vital and suggestive.

We need new attitudes toward material possessions. Our hearts are too much set on things. We live—the most of us do—as if our lives consisted in the abundance of the things we possessed, forgetting our Lord's words to the contrary. Much of our present world trouble is due to the insatiate thirst for and persistent struggle after material wealth on the part of Christians as well as men and women of the world. But wealth never satisfies; men are never enriched by their possessions, but their cravings are continually whetted by them. Some one has said: "I take him to be truly rich who lives on what he has, owes nothing, and is contented, for there is no determinate sum of money or quantity of estate that can make a man rich. Since no man is truly rich who has not so much as perfectly satisfies his desire of having more: for the desire of more is want, and want is poverty." We need to lift our eyes off the material things of life and set them on the spiritual, for that is the only way real satisfaction can be achieved, and the only way that life can be truly enriched. And never was a changed attitude toward wealth needed so much as now. This is said not because we would have it act as an opiate to make us insensible to injustice, but that we might not, in the midst of our struggles, lose our sense of the infinite worth of spiritual values.

If the new year is to be an improvement over the old, there is need of a change in our customary attitude toward self. Self and self-interests are rated too highly by the average individual, and the Christian finds it hard to rid himself of this tendency. Even in our Christian work, in our preaching of the Gospel, in our deeds of mercy, in our benevolent enterprises we are all too often thinking of what this or that project or achievement will do for us, how it will react to our praise or advancement. That is most natural, but it is not Christian. Jesus was so forgetful of self that he was actually surprised to hear some one salute him as "good." "Blessed are the poor in spirit," "the meek," those who take no thought of their own life. They are the ones whose lives shall be enriched and whose services shall be enlarged abundantly.

The new year should see a new attitude in the hearts of Christian people toward the church. It seems strange that such a statement should seem necessary, but it must be acknowledged that not all church members have the welfare of the church at heart, and very few put the church first in their considerations. For all too many the church gets only what it is convenient for us to do or to give. Our attitude toward this divine institution is one of indifference, and so it makes progress slowly, and it will not change its pace until the attitude of our hearts is changed and we are made to burn with love and loyalty for it.

And finally, there must needs be a new attitude towards Christ. Every member of the church has taken upon himself the name of Christ, but not every one has taken into his heart the spirit of Christ. Every one has acknowledged the Lordship of Christ with his lips, but not every one has charged himself with obeying all the words of Christ. For many people who call themselves Christians, Christ is very vague and unreal, little more than a name, and Christianity is a kind of culture rather than a new and more wholesome type of life. Many of the offshoots of Christianity are valued more highly than Christ himself. We follow Christ because it brings us social prestige, or chances of political advancement, or business advantages and not so much because we appreciate the great spirituality and power of his person. Many times Jesus must say to us as he did to those who rushed after him around the Sea of Galilee, "Ye follow me for the loaves and fishes." We need a new attitude toward Christ, one that will make Christ himself, his very own blessed person and the precious words that he spoke, the center of our interest and the object of our devotion. The old ways of permitting other things to get into the center of our lives have proven disappointing. They have left us lacking in power and vitality; our shining has been feeble, our witnessing unimpressive. We must set our hearts upon seeing "Jesus only" and have him as the fountain head of our lives or our own hearts will be puny and we shall be unable to sate the thirsting souls of men. Nothing else will satisfy. Men are crying, "Sirs, we would see Jesus."

Yes, we need new attitudes, but most of all with regard to the Lord Jesus Christ. No one should have so large a place in our affections as he. Nothing should be so conspicuous in our lives as his glorious Presence. When a friend of da Vinci was struck by the beauty of the richly chased and jewelled golden cup from which the disciples were to drink the great artist seized a brush and blotted it out. Patiently and long he worked anew at the figure of the Christ. He must have the pre-eminence. So must he have in our lives during the new year. That alone can make it the most blessed and profitable year of all our experience.

WHEN THE YEAR IS NEW

*I cannot always see the path that leads To heights above;
I sometimes quite forget he leads me on
With hand of love;
But yet I know the path must lead me to Immanuel's land,
And when I reach life's summit I shall know
And understand.*

*I cannot always trace the onward course
My ship must take;
But, looking backward, I behold afar
Its shining wake
Illumed with God's light of love, and so
I onward go.
In perfect trust that he who holds the helm
The course must know.*

*I cannot always see the plan on which
He builds my life,
For oft the sound of hammers, blow on blow,
The noise of strife
Confuse me till I quite forget he knows
And oversees,
And that, in all details, with his good plan
My life agrees.*

*I cannot always know and understand
The Master's rule;
I cannot always do the tasks he gives
In life's hard school;
But I am learning with his help to solve
Them, one by one,
And, when I cannot understand, to say
"Thy will be done." —Selected.*

EDITORIAL REVIEW

A Happy New Year, and may God's blessing be upon you all. The editor wishes to thank the many friends who sent Christmas and New Year Greetings to his office and to his home. They were heartily appreciated.

We learn from a personal note from Brother C. H. Ashman that he delivered the annual Christmas sermon at Juniata College, December 18 and addressed the student body on the following Monday morning. On both occasions he had capacity audiences.

Dr. Martin Shively tells us there were no "peak time" expenditures at the Brethren's Home and consequently the present demands for support are in no wise due to extravagance or lack of careful management, rather all funds have been and are being expended according to the soundest business principles. The Home is therefore deserving of the support of all who are able to give, and it should have the prayers of all who know how to pray.

Dr. Bane, Sunday School Editor, asks a few questions about "Rebellious Sunday school teachers." Then he proceeds to show why more should rebel than do. Whether you are a teacher or not you will be interested in what he says. Sunday school superintendents also should read and consider. If you are having trouble with your teachers, or with your curriculum, maybe you'll get a suggestion here.

The Business Manager has a new year message this week also. It tells of the loyalty of some of our churches to the Evangelist. We greatly appreciate the faithfulness of the churches that have remained on the Honor Roll through these years, and also for the fine spirit shown on the part of those who are returning or just now coming on. Others have told us they were working on new and enlarged subscription lists. This is the time to do it. Any church or individual wishing to take advantage of our special cash rates may do so. We will gladly extend their subscriptions one year from the date of their expiration.

The church at Fort Scott, Kansas, has recently experienced a season of refreshing under the spiritual leadership of Brother James S. Cook and the pastor, Brother L. G. Wood. Brother Cook's evangelistic ministry was greatly enjoyed by pastor and people and the church was much strengthened and encouraged. It was a time of seed sowing and we have the assurance that God's Word will not return void. Brother Cook had previously conducted a meeting at Mulvane, Kansas, where a number of members consecrated themselves to Christ. As Brother Cook remarks, this is the home church of our Brother A. E. Whitted, who is the faithful pastor of the church at Louisville, Ohio. The Mulvane church is being served at present by a minister of the Church of the Brethren. This is a rural church, but it maintains a Christian Endeavor society as well as a Sunday school.

We are beginning with this issue the promised new department which we are calling "The Voice of the Church." We had expected to call it the Ministers' Editorial Page, but we have been led to broaden its scope to include lay leaders as well as the ministry. We hope our ministers and lay leaders will make use of this department to bring to the Evangelist family their best thought. It is not to be used as a means of criticising and attacking one another, but for presenting in a constructive manner and briefly opinions, convictions, observations, comments or devotional suggestions in a spirit of Christian love and in kindly consideration and tolerance of others' views. Express your own views and leave others the same right. The Editor will be kind and considerate, but will exercise his right to use the "blue pencil" where necessary. Write on one side of the paper only; write legibly; and don't crowd your lines.

Brother I. D. Bowman writes of the successful meeting conducted at Calvary, New Jersey and concerning which his son, the pastor of the church, recently made report. Dr. Bowman speaks of the exceptional difficulties of the field. It was a case of solving the difficulties of getting unsaved people to church by going after them and as well as taking the message to them by means of personal calls. What a blessing automobiles can be when dedicated to the service of God, particularly when the laymen do not let the pastor stand alone in such a dedication! Brother Bowman mentions with appreciation the ordination sermon delivered by Brother Christiansen at the time of the induction of Brother Milton Bowman into the ministry. At this point we would refer also to Brother Christiansen's report of the dedication and his favorable comment concerning the newly ordained minister. He expresses, too, his appreciation of the veteran minister, Dr. Bowman and his ministry.

Brother L. A. Myers, pastor of the church at Morrill, Kansas, expresses his appreciation of the prayers of the Evangelist readers in behalf of the restoration of his son from the effects of a very critical operation. It is fine that brethren can thus share one another's burdens by means of prayer. Perhaps we might make still larger use of this blessing of intercession if we would but make known our needs of prayer. The good people of Morrill are keeping up their work at the cost of sacrifice during these times and at Thanksgiving time all bills were paid. Three souls have been added to the church by baptism since last report. One of the promising features of the work at this place, according to the word of the pastor, is the number of new Brethren homes being established by the marriage of Brethren young people. Happy is that church whose young people are building Brethren homes. They are doing two things—helping to secure the future of the church and the happiness of their home life by the fact that they are not being joined together with unbelievers.

A great revival was experienced by the good people of Louisville, Ohio, where Brother R. Paul Miller was the evangelist and Brother A. E. Whitted is the pastor. There were forty-five people came forward during the meetings, nineteen to confess Christ for the first time and twenty-six to renew their vows. At the time of the report made by Brother Whitted sixteen had been received by baptism and three by letter, while others were soon to be received. This is indeed a great blessing for the Louisville church, which has been struggling under great financial handicaps, which naturally affected spiritual conditions somewhat. Along with this great revival of spiritual power, has come the information that financial conditions have improved also somewhat, due to the reopening of the town's former banks. God is indeed turning Louisville's blue cloud wrong-side out and displaying the silver lining. At the annual Homecoming and Dedication Anniversary in November, Prof. A. L. DeLozier was the speaker of the occasion, which was accompanied by a large attendance and much rejoicing and thanksgiving.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for a revival to begin at Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania, January 8th, with the pastor, Rev. William Gray, doing the preaching.

The First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, began its "witnessing revival" on Sunday, January 1, with the pastor, Rev. C. H. Ashman, in charge. Pray for this meeting.

Pray for revival at Third church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, beginning January 14. Rev. W. C. Benshoff, evangelist and Rev. J. L. Gingrich, pastor.

WHAT OUR PREACHERS ARE PREACHING—

Some interest has been taken in the sermon subjects being used by our preachers and so long as there is sufficient interest shown in this feature to send us lists of subjects we will publish them. Following are some recently received:

Fred C. Vanator used these subjects during the course of his revival meeting the early part of December: "Changing Clothes," "The Flesh Pots of Egypt," "The Changing World and the Unchanging Christ," "The Tap-root of Sin," "The Day of Loose Thinking," "Excuse Me," "What Do We Mean by Judgment?" "Jumbled Conversation."

Rev. Floyd Sibert, of Masontown, Pennsylvania, sends us this list of sermon subjects which he recently used: "Repentance," "Repent or Perish," "The Believer's Two Natures," "The Besetting Sin," "Christ's Power Over the Winds," "The Second Mile," "Christ and the Spirit," "The Holy Spirit and the New Testament," "The Baptism of the Spirit," "The Ministry of the Spirit," "Have You Had the Baptism of the Holy Spirit?"

FACING THE NEW YEAR

(A Symposium)

With Devotion to Christ

By Rev. Dyoll Belote

In thinking of this subject I have been thinking of two characters, one from Bible times and one from the age in which we live, whose lives set forth the thought of devotion to Christ and its practical application better than any the lives of any other two men of whom I can think at the present moment. When approached by Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman with a request for the secret of his marvelous success as the founder of the great Salvation Army organization, General William Booth said, "I resolved that God should have all there was of William Booth, and by his grace he has had it." And the Salvation Army, with its mighty ramifications and its wondrous impact upon the need of the world, stands as a monument to the power of a devoted life.

The other character of whom I thought was none other than the intrepid old apostle of the cross, St. Paul. One can almost hear him as we read his declaration of purpose and his expression of devotion to the interests of the kingdom of the Lord Jesus in those memorable words in Philipians 3:13 and 14: "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

In these two declarations of purposeful dedication of their all to Jesus Christ and the furthering of his kingdom, these two Saints of God have given to us and all men of all ages the highest challenge that can face the human heart at the opening of a New Year. "Who follows in their train?"

With Loyalty to the Church

By Prof. A. L. DeLozier

Who has the courage to face the new year after the record of the old? The future has come to be the real synonym of fear. The note of hope is at a low ebb. How are men and women planning to face this great unknown? Are we lacking in plans? Putting it in French, say "au contraire."

The air swarms with ideas. To be alphabetical, we have the aristocrats, autocrats, bureaucrats, democrats,

"ephebocrats," gynocrats, ochlocrats, plutocrats and last, but by no means least in publicity, the technocrats. If we have omitted any of the ex cathedra "gang," please send in their names.

But I beg leave to add one more and make it an even ten, the theocrat. You catch my point. I want to bring in a minority report and have God in the picture.

We got into this "mess" because we felt independent enough to get along without God. One church reports a loss of two and one half million communicants during our present apostasy. It does not even now occur to us that we need God.

A few hundred years ago our Lord founded the Church. This great body has come through many depressions, wars, apostasies and reverses. May I say that she has survived the devil's whole program.

I do not hesitate to say that I tremble before the future. I fear to face the new year. All is doubt. All is uncertain, untried, in a state of transition and experimentation. I am afraid of a serious accident in this great laboratory.

BUT I thank God for the privilege of facing the new year with the church. But how am I to face it with the church? With loyalty.

This means loyalty to the church and all of its institutions. It means confidence in those who have answered the call to responsibility within that church, whether pastors, deacons, trustees, or members of various boards. In a day when the pet organizations of the world are failing, God help me to be loyal to his

With Love for One Another

By Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs

The year just closing has held many disappointments. There have been financial distress, unemployment, war in the Far East, attempts to tinker with the Eighteenth Amendment, a reduction of missionary enterprises, a decline in the attendance at schools and colleges, and what is still more, there is a general spirit of discouragement on the part of the common man.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

XXXVI—Elder T. H. Broad

By Dr. Martin M. Shively

Soon after the sudden death of this man of God, Brother Bauman, who conducted the funeral services, wrote at some length, telling the Evangelist readers of his birth, at Cornwall, England, April 15, 1873, and of his marriage there to Katie Hendy, and of their coming to the United States in 1901, and very feelingly told of the intimacy of the relations between himself and Brother Broad and of his high Christian character. In this short sketch I shall devote myself to the pleasant task of telling my readers about "Tom" as I knew him. I found him already established in the ministry of the Brethren church when our paths converged, as I came into southern California for my second pastorate on the Pacific Coast. He was then pastor of the church at Lordsburg, afterwards LaVerne. It was a case of love at first sight, on my part, and the high esteem with which he at once came into my heart, has never waned and now that he is gone, I know it never can wane. From him I learned of his having been engaged as a miner in Grass Valley, where he came into contact with Dr. Robinson, a most loyal and enthusiastic Brethren, and former parishioner of mine, and from this Christian physician he learned of the Brethren church, and not only of it, but the things for which it stands, both as to the Word, and all the things for which the church stands in relation to it. This led Brother Broad into the church, and into its ministry. This Christian doctor did much for suffering humanity until death ended his useful life, but he never did a finer service than when he led Tom Broad into the life which characterized him thereafter, until the Lord called him to himself. I never heard Tom preach, so far as I now recall, but I saw him live, and at once joined the host of those most profoundly impressed by the beauty of his life. He was, I think, the most incurable lover of men that I ever knew. If folks were ill, or if they were in trouble of any sort, no matter if it were of their own bringing, he never asked about their faith, whether Protestant, Catholic, Jew, nor looked upon the color of their skin, nor asked about their nationality or race; he was at their side as soon as he knew of their need, either to pray or to serve in any capacity, whether to act as nurse, or cook, or spiritual advisor. Little wonder that tearful throngs came to do honor to his memory, as his body was laid to rest, in a community where few had failed to profit by this propensity. Everybody loved him, for to know him at all, made it impossible to entertain any other feeling toward him. And I, among many others, have abundant reason for indulging such a sentiment toward this most unusual man. My only sister was a member of his congregation at LaVerne, and passed to be with the Lord whom she had long faithfully served. When she had gone, her daughter wrote me of the unflinching devotion with which Brother Tom had served the sufferer and the family, day after day, and night after night, in any capacity as need developed, until death brought release, and then he became the comforter of the family, as he pointed the stricken group to man's only Source of help. Later, that sister's husband, Charley Hixson, was called to join the wife who had gone before, and again Tom was shown to be like his Master, as one who served. Still later my brother Joe lay for weeks waiting for the end, and Tom again put all other things aside, and cared for him as nurse until death brought release. What Tom thus did for me and mine, he did for hundreds of others, and none ever felt that he rendered such service except in the name of the Lord, to whom he had so completely dedicated his life. If he was all I have tried to depict in his relation to others, he was even more in his relation to those in his in his own household. Knowing the warmth of the relationship which existed in that home, I could well imagine the grief which that unexpected death inflicted upon the heart of his devoted wife, Katie, and upon the children, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope, for the faith and hope which motivated Tom is theirs also. The world is better because such men as Tom Broad have lived in it, because it has witnessed a demonstration of what the Lord would have all men to be, and what he would help them to be.

The Late T. H. Broad

—honesty, and the rewards of faithful and right conduct, seem all to have failed. Young men and women of most excellent parts, ready and willing for life's work, suddenly find that the world has no use for them. In all my teaching experience I have never had a finer lot of young people than those enrolled now in the College, and some are right well discouraged at the very outset of their career. Older people have had their life-time savings swept away, and through no fault of their own at all. Thus homes are wrecked, careers blasted, and hope destroyed. The year 1932 has held many disappointments.

On the other hand, certain new virtues have been developed, or at least old ones newly aroused. Some of the more enlightened are seeing things from a new angle. That we are "our brother's keeper" has had a new enforcement, so that "community chests" have overflowed, and gifts to and from the Red Cross have been multiplied. Thus in many cases, our attention has been turned outward from self towards others. Misery has been shared, sorrow alleviated, and hope, to some degree, rekindled. Then too, some see "God in it"; they see his chastening hand and have resolved to be henceforth less selfish and more generous.

However, until society as a whole comes to see the bitter injustice of many of our present-day institutions, the utter folly of faith without works, and also to realize that remedial measures are both necessary and possible, the lessons supposed to be learned from 1932, will be useless and barren. Furthermore, the far-seeing will discern an ominous cloud upon the horizon of human optimism. This present distress has brought forth mutterings not pleasant to hear.

Now, there is no better time or day to begin the practice of love towards our fellow-man than right now. And by love, I do not mean charity or alms. I mean justice and fairplay. A right to live, work, and enjoy opportunity for advancement,—these are but elementary Christian virtues. May they be magnified in the year 1933.

THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH

Editorials from Ministers and Laymen

A CRITICAL MOMENT

The church of our day is facing a critical moment, and yet possibly her greatest opportunity. If there was ever a time when every Christian should be alert and full of love and zeal for their Master, ready to help, offering a cure for the multiplied ills of the world, that time is now. Will the church meet her opportunity or will she be caught in the drift of this materialistic age and miss her opportunity? To fail our Lord in a time like this would indeed be tragical. As far as the Brethren Church is concerned we do not have the slightest intention of retrenching or retreating. By the Grace of God we will carry on the great work of our Master until he shall come. I know there are those who would darken the future of the church. Those who cannot see a ray of hope. They are very much in the minority. The church has always had them, but she moves on, and will continue until the "kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms" of God's dear Son. Is this a critical moment for the church? If so, it is but as the refiner's fire through which his children are passing, and if, in word and life, they proclaim the unerring, infallible, Supreme Word and its Christ, this that now seems a dark hour will be but the dawn of a brighter day, and a more powerful church. But, will we respond, or will we stand idly by and allow all that for which the saints and martyrs suffered to become a hissing and a fable? My! what a day and opportunity to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." God has always had a people and he always will have one, and if this generation proves faithless he will raise up another that will love and honor and serve him. Shall we permit the fire of eloquence and devotion to our cause to be quenched by the sin of indifference? Those who have gone before us have left us a noble heritage. We will be true to the trust they left us, even unto death. What should be the proper attitude of the Church in a time like this? Here it is. "Preach the word: be urgent in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all longsuffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure the sound doctrine; but, having itching ears will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts; and will turn away their ears from the truth, and turn aside unto fables."

C. C. GRISSO, Lanark, Illinois.

"YE WHICH ARE SPIRITUAL"

The task of the Christian religion is the restoration of damaged souls. Paul's letter to the Galatians seeks to correct an erroneous view that the Christian religion consisted in defending doctrine. St. Paul was interested in a practical religion, a religion that not only held a correct doctrine but translated doctrine into life.

Spirituality is not sentimentality. "To be carnally minded is death but to be spiritually minded is life." The spiritual person can see the good in the unlovely sinner. The spiritual person seeks to reclaim and restore the image of God in a damaged soul.

The attainment of the spiritual life is an achievement. "For while one saith, 'I am of Paul, ... are ye not carnal?'" The spiritual man or woman has attained an insight into the purpose of God for all mankind. God wills good to all and for all. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels ... and though I have all faith to remove mountains, and have not love ..." What kind of love? "Love that suffereth long and is kind, love that vaunteth not itself and is not puffed up, and doth not behave itself unseemly." This is the achievement in the spiritual life. "Let this mind be in you that was also in Christ Jesus ..."

A spiritual man or woman is concerned in restoring lost sheep not in speculating on why the sheep strayed away. A spiritual man or woman is practical and constructive. He has contact with divine power and can help folks to overcome their weaknesses. The spiritual people are busy helping erring men and women. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." Galatians 6:1.

BARNACLES

Barnacles are a form of Marine life living in salt water. They attach themselves to boats and various objects in the water. They are on the boat, they go with the boat, but are not in the boat. Their presence hinders the progress of the boat. When the boat enters fresh water they drop from it. There are many barnacles on the Gospel ship. They go with it for a distance, they are with it, but are not in it, and as long as the old ship sails through the buoyant Salt Seas of the world, they are content to hang on. When the old GOSPEL SHIP enters the fresh waters of LOVE, CHRISTIAN SACRIFICE and REAL SPIRITUALITY, the barnacles leave the ship. ARE YOU A BARNACLE?

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Flora Indiana.

ABOLITION OF POVERTY

On the pages of a recent issue of the Pittsburgh Press appeared these significant words: "During the peak of prosperity when employment was plentiful, wages high, and markets for all products rising a vision of ABOLITION OF POVERTY, with a life of comfort on easy street, arose as a mirage before the eyes of reckless investors and speculators, disregarding the warnings and advice of conservative business men and bankers, with the inevitable result and wreck of numerous fortunes and enterprises. Nevertheless confidence is evidently returning. ... The sun of prosperity will again shine on all classes alike."

We are reminded at once of the truth and folly contained in these statements. They do tell a true story of man's activity as well as his ambition. But like any other worldly organism it leaves God out of the picture. It reads most like the story of Babel. They sought the peak and in so doing they became so Godless that confusion fell upon them. We do recall that one of the recent thoughts in the mind of man was the abolition of poverty, and a life of ease for every man. We wonder if man will ever learn to begin with his process of reasoning where his Creator left off?

Most distinctly did God speak in the beginning. His word is as unchanging as it is eternal. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake and in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life ... and thou shalt eat the herbs of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground."

In man's effort to lighten his toil and speed up industry he has described a peculiar cycle. Once more is he found seeking the bare necessities of life from the ground, "by the sweat of his face." It is even as God said. Man has, with all his efforts, never gotten far from this position. If he lightened his toil, he increased his sorrow. If he minimized his sorrow, he increased his toil, and hours of sweating.

It is a strange, though certain, fact that man's Utopia never fully matures. It is ever a mirage. In the throes of world-wide poverty he can yet see and promise (in his own strength) a sun of prosperity to shine on all classes alike. Would it not be better to take God at his word with reference to this desire of the heart rather than to travel the long, troublesome and disappointing cycle only to find at last that God spoke the truth? However, if man will toil "in the sweat of his face" patiently, trusting God he shall in due season reap the fruitage of righteousness if he faint not. But this desired condition of life will come as God's fulfilled promise and not as man's accomplishment. For in the day that this is realized, "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" "And I will rejoice in Jerusalem and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying. There shall be no more an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old. ... They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of the tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth trouble, for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them" (Isa. 65:19-24). For this man seeks in vain unless his seeking is in the Lord.

REV. FLOYD SIBERT, Masontown, Pennsylvania.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

PACIFISTS NOT WANTED

Some organizations seems to possess a peculiar mental bias toward the definition of a patriot. This fact was most forcibly illustrated some months ago when the Daughters of the American Revolution "perpetrated" a black list of dangerous citizens which contained the names of a number of eminent churchmen and women of the country. More recently a self-confessed patriotic group, the Woman Patriot Corporation, has achieved much publicity by demanding that the State Department debar from our shores the famous scientist, Prof. Albert Einstein, who comes to the United States to become the head of our super-university in which we hope to develop thinkers like him. The corporation charges that Dr. Einstein is a communist, a pacifist, a war resister, and has "astronomical ideas destructive of organized religion." Dr. Einstein's reply to these charges is quite devastating. Denying affiliation with any political party, he asserts that he has always considered it a duty to intervene when justice is at stake. As to war resisting hear his challenging statement:

"I have always fought war—an attitude which the majority of sound political opinion in the United States appreciates. Proudly I rise to defend so-called 'war resisters,' whom I regard as greater heroes than those who allow themselves to be sacrificed upon the altar of misconceived patriotism."

Far from debaring such men as Dr. Einstein, we need more of his kind, both because of his high scholarship and his sane patriotism.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

BALDWIN SEES AIR DESTRUCTION

No speech in recent days has aroused so much attention as the one in which Mr. Baldwin described in solemn and somber words the perils which hang over the world because of the conquest of the air. His words have been severely criticized because of his assumption that regulations and conventions which restrict the use of military weapons are only dead letters when war begins. Why then the trouble to make any such agreements? his critics ask. Is there any covenant which is not waste paper when the drums roll and the bugles call to battle? But apart from this criticism, there is a general agreement that Mr. Baldwin did well to make us and other nations face reality in this matter.

For England the fate is clear. He who by carelessness, or folly, should steer this country into a European war is preparing destruction for its people from the air. Mr. Baldwin did not say this but it is a fair inference from all that we are permitted to know about the development of the machinery for war in the air. Such a speech has led people to think again and to think more urgently upon the tasks before the disarmament conference.—Christian Century.

"AS WE FORGIVE OUR DEBTORS"

December has brought another economic crisis to the world. The same old war debts which have for so long been disrupting the trade, economic recovery, and friendly relations of the nations of Europe and America, are once more demanding settlement. If the huge sums due the middle of the month from England, France, and the other debtor nations are demanded by the United States, the commerce of all countries, including that of the creditor nation, is threatened with another check toward recovery. The "Pay up and shut up" policy of some of our politicians is the greatest possible negation of the law of brotherhood and charity.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

CHURCH ARCHITECTURE

This "word about beautiful churches," quoted from the parish paper of Trinity Lutheran Church, Detroit, and written by its pastor, the Rev. Gilbert T. Otte, is worthy of attention:

"What is a church building for, anyway? Isn't it a treasure chest for those precious jewels from heaven, God's Word and holy Sacraments, and not a club house or entertainment auditorium? If it is God's house and not mere man's can anything be too good, too fine for him? Dare the best of things be withheld from his purpose—to seek and to save that which is lost? If it can be demonstrated that an attractive hotel or an attractive bank building will draw more patronage than a cheap, bleak looking structure, is not the same true in the case of one's parish church? To argue that our churches must be quite bare of all color and symbolism is as foolish as to argue that a woman in a faded house dress, old slippers, and her hair in curl-papers is more beautiful than the same woman in her 'Sunday best.' If God designed a beautiful tabernacle and temple in the Old Testament, he certainly is pleased to see churches built in the New Testament which are not an expression of greedy covetousness but which by their structural honesty and beautiful adornment 'fill men's minds with greater reverence for his glorious Majesty and affect their hearts with more devotion and humility in his service.'"

Dr. Otte's own church is, judging from the illustration in the same periodical, a notable example of the dignity of Christian architecture. It is an encouraging fact that so many modern churches, Roman, Anglican, and Protestant, are truly setting forth the beauty of holiness which is so strong a characteristic of Christianity at its best.—The Living Church.

SWEAT SHOP HORRORS

Collier's magazine for November 12 carries an expose of unscrupulous tyranny by employers over garment workers that would be unbelievable were the story told by a less reliable journal and with less detail of investigation and proof. By taking advantage of lax laws in the state of Connecticut, fly-by-night firms contract to make clothing at much below what it would cost in New York and make money for themselves by luring workers. They draw upon the present large number of women laid off by textile firms in that state during this depression. The firm cited specifically issued one check for sixty-five cents for a week's work and rarely paid more than $2.00. "And at that," says the writer in Collier's, "they were by no means the worst among their fellow miscreants." Connecticut will enact adequate protective laws at the next meeting of its legislature, the governor of the state announces.

Thoughtful people who buy "ready-to-wear" apparel and other commodities turned out by factories have been astounded by their cheapness. While not every "bargain sale" is made possible by robbing workers of reasonable compensation for their labor, the expose of Collier's explains some of them. Christian women owe it to their religion to be willing to pay a living wage to the members of their sex who toil at machines in factories. They should refuse patronage to firms who offer goods at prices that are obviously insufficient to allow a reasonable wage for the work required in their manufacture. And while they are at it, they might inquire what laws have been enacted to protect women and children from unscrupulous employers. Beyond the economic dangers involved in tyranny and injustice practised upon a section of society helpless under unemployment, the Christian citizen recognizes the command of God. He does not suffer persecutions without limit.—The Lutheran.

Zephaniah

Hear the solemn words of the prophet Zephaniah: "The word of the Lord which came unto Zephaniah, the son of Cushi, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hizkiah, in the days of Joseph the son of Amon, king of Judah."

These are the introductory words of the prophet revealing his ancestry and the historical background of his prophecy. His immediate purpose was to announce:—"The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord: the mighty man shall cry there bitterly."

"That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness," etc.

Upon these famous lines (and kindred passages in Matthew 25 and 2 Peter 3:10-12) was based the famous hymn of Thomas of Celano, the intimate friend and biographer of St. Francis of Assisi. It is the Dies Irae, Dies Illa:

Day of Wrath! That Day Foretold

"Day of wrath! that Day foretold,
By the saints and seers of old,
Shall the world in flames infold.

What a trembling, what a fear,
When the dread Judge shall appear,
Strictly searching far and near!

Hark! the trumpet's wondrous tone,
Through the tombs of every zone,
Summons all before the throne.

Death shall shiver, nature quake,
When the creatures shall awake,
Answers to their Judge to make.

Lo, the book of ages spread,
From which all the deeds are read
Of the living and the dead.

Now, before the Judge severe,
Hidden things must all appear:
Nought shall pass unpunished here.

Wretched man, what shall I plead,
Who for me will intercede,
When the righteous worky need?

King of dreadful majesty,
Author of salvation free,
Fount of pity, save Thou me!

Recollect, good Lord, I pray,
I have caused Thy bitter way:
Don't forget me on that Day!

Weary sat'st Thou seeking me,
Died'st, redeeming, on the tree,
Let such toil not fruitless be!

Judge of righteousness severe,
Grant me full remission here,
Ere the reckoning-Day appear.

Sighs and tears my sorrow speak,
Shame and grief are on my cheek:
Mercy, mercy, Lord! I seek.

Thou did'st Marys' guilt forgive,
And absolve the dying thief:
Even I may hope relief.

Worthless are my prayers, I know;
Yet, O Christ! Thy mercy show:
Save me from eternal woe!

Make me with Thy sheep to stand,
Far from the convicted band,
Placing me at Thy right hand.

When the cursed are put to shame,
Cast into devouring flame,
With the blest then call my name!

Suppliant at Thy feet I lie,
Contrite in the dust I cry:
Care Thou for me when I die!"

I THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Zephaniah. (Ancestry above)
2. When and Where Written? Around 630 B. C. in Palestine.
3. To Whom Written? To the Nations and Israel.
4. Why Written? To Announce the Present and Future Days of the Lord.
5. Authenticity. The best test of the trustworthiness and reliability of this book is the test of fulfilled prophecy.

II THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The Day of Wrath: Universal Judgment: God's Severity, 1, 2.
2. The Day of Wrath: Special Blessing: God's Goodness, 3.

III THE NATURE OF THE BOOK

The book of Zephaniah is a sort of compendium of prophecy—general and particular in scope—yet present and future in application.

It was Dr. Keith who pointed out the minute discrimination of Zephaniah, Zechariah, and Amos in their utterances concerning the four chief cities of Philistia—Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, and Ekron. A paragraph from this student of prophecy will suffice:

"Comparing Amos 1:6, 7, 8; Zech. 9:5; and Zeph. 2:4-6, it will be seen, that of Gaza it is declared that baldness shall come upon it, and that it should be bereaved of its king. At present, amid ruins of white marble indicating its former magnificence, a few villages of dry mud are the only abode of its inhabitants. Of Ashkelon and Ashdod it is said that both shall be "without inhabitants;" and so they are. Gaza is inhabited; Ashkelon and Ashdod are not, though their ruins remain. Different from the destiny of each was to be the end of Ekron: "It shall be rooted up." Now its very name is lost, nor is the spot known on which it stood. . . . Clearly, prophecy and providence—predictions and the events that fulfil them—are guided by the same hand.

IV THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Word. Wrath. "The Day of the Lord." "In the Midst."
2. Key Verses. 1:14-16; 2:3; 3:8, 9, 16-20.
3. Key Chapters. 3 and 1.
4. Key Ideas. The Severity of God: The Goodness of God.

V THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

"There is a day," says a noted Bible expositor, "when God will come to judge the earth, when he will interfere in human history and end it; a day in which God will come himself, supernaturally, immediately into the presence of human affairs, and that to judgment. The men of Zephaniah's day said, 'The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil.' The men of Peter's day said, 'Where is the promise of his coming? For, from the day that the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they are from the beginning of the creation.' The men of our own day are saying exactly the same thing, that God will never interfere in judgment in this way. The declaration of this book is that there is a day of Jehovah, a day in the history of humanity, when his patience will be at an end, and when he will bring to pass his act, his strange act of judgment."

VI THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Dr. Hodgkin has an admirable statement about the Lord who dwells in the midst of this book. The writer will be pardoned for quoting it freely:

"The third chapter contains a beautiful lesson, taken spiritually. It describes the sinful condition of a soul apart from Christ—ver. 1, sins of commission; ver. 2, sins of omission. Those who should have been leaders in righteousness are leaders in iniquity—princes, judges, prophets, priests. Then the Lord himself takes the place of these leaders, and we see him 'in the midst,' fulfilling each office in turn. First, he comes to our hearts as Judge, and convicts us of all that is sinful there, bringing his judgment to light (5-7). Second, he comes as Prophet, teaching us with pure lips to call upon his name—still 'in the midst,' dealing with the pride of heart, and bringing us low into the place of blessing, in the presence of his holiness (8:13). Third, he comes 'into our midst' as King, to reign in undisputed sway in the heart that is surrendered to him. When the Lord reigns thus the song begins (14-16). Fourth, he is 'in the midst' as our Great High Priest, bringing us into the place of communion with himself. Here we know him as the Beloved of our souls. 'He will rejoice over thee with joy, he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing.'"

Rebellious Sunday School Teachers

By Dr. Charles A. Bame, Sunday School Editor

When is a Sunday School teacher rebellious? To whom can a Superintendent refer when he tells the Editor that his teachers are in rebellion and that on their account he has been compelled to change his plans and even his curriculum? Who ought to run the Sunday school, anyway? Is the Superintendent a sort of "boss" or aristocrat who must have his way? Does the teacher have nothing to say as to what she can teach? On the other hand, does she have all the say? Do the teachers of a Sunday school have a right to dictate what they shall teach—or quit altogether as we know some to have done? Or is there a golden mean? Should the curriculum be determined by either alone? Or should the officials of the whole school determine? Or, should the Official Board have a part in it? Whose is the responsibility, anyway?

All these questions are the result of a recent conversation with the Superintendent of a very large Sunday school who was quizzing me about my work and the output of our publishing house. In the conversation he said, "We are just changing from the Closely-Graded Series of lessons to the International." I replied, "That is very interesting to me; what is the cause?" He replied, "My teachers will not use the other any more; they say there is not enough Bible in them." There was not much more said on that point as our conversation was suddenly and abruptly brought to a close. But it started a train of thought that I have already passed on to you in the above questions. Now, I desire to make two short observations:

First, do not teachers have a right to rebel against a system that tries to develop or profess to develop Christian character without Bible lessons? Perhaps rebellion is the most unfortunate word that could be used here; but certainly a conscientious teacher will not want long, to try to make Christians without a Bible or without Bible lessons. If they do not have a right to rebel, they surely do have a right to protest and protest until something is done. From now on, the teachers in the above-mentioned school will not need to try to make bricks without straw.

Second. What is said about teachers of a Whole-Gospel Sunday school that does not protest? Rather, because some other system makes them less work, or demands less preparation, they promote and emulate the work of the Bible-less Christian publication because they can organize better their department.

In other words, still, I am raising the questions whether there should not be more rebellion among our Sunday school teachers than there is. Why do so many of our church officers who have been complaining for years about not having Brethren literature, now that they can have it, seem so unconcerned about investigating?

I shall not indict anyone. But I do insist as I have been insisting, that investigation and comparison should be made and the cause of the Bible can not possibly suffer among our people if our teachers and officers demand lessons from the Bible rather than from biographies and nature studies. I believe it is not rebellion among our people so much as just plain indifference and neglect. Take a look to see if your teachers are getting and giving lessons from the helps that take the Bible as the Word of God.

Strengthening the Sunday School by Careful Records

II. Plan of Recognition

The most elaborate and accurate system will be of little value if the results are not constantly kept before the public. The monthly report card will do much to inform and interest the pupil and the parents, but in addition to that it is necessary that some plan of recognition should be given to all pupils who satisfactorily complete their work.

Honor pupils should have their names inscribed upon a conspicuous honor roll, or printed in the church bulletin each month. This keeps the constituency of the school informed that such a system is in operation, and stimulates the interest and efforts of the pupils.

In addition to this monthly recognition there should be:

1. An annual certificate.—The registrar should determine, by averaging the monthly grades, those who have met the passing requirements of the department, and these should be awarded a certificate on Promotion Day (Rally Day). In a graded Sunday school these certificates will indicate the year a pupil has completed in the department and the subsequent grade to which he is now promoted.

2. Gold seals for honor pupils.—Honor pupils may be recognized by the placing of a gold honor seal upon their certificates. Where it is desirable of recognizing the best pupil, a gold seal designating "highest honor" may be placed upon the certificate.

3. Diplomas for department graduates.—When a pupil completes the work of a department he is awarded a diploma instead of a certificate, and this, as we shall observe later, recognizes not only his satisfactory completion of the graded curriculum, but also of the supplementary memory work covered in that department.

III. Follow Up Absentees

There is no doubt that a trained teacher, a graded lesson, and a plan of recognition for accomplishments will work wonders toward securing regular attendance on the part of the pupils. But as a guarantee against pupils dropping out it is well to adopt some plan for following up absentees. Two methods are suggested:

1. The immediate call.—Under the Entz-minger plan, the teacher is required to visit the absent pupil within one week and report to the department superintendent the following Sunday. This plan is successfully carried out in many Sunday schools.

2. The constant call.—This plan relieves the teacher in part and divides the responsibility for absentees among other officials of the Sunday school.

(1) First Sunday, registrar notifies pupil.—All absentees are carefully recorded by the registrar, and it is incumbent upon her to notify first the scholar and then the officials whose duty it will be to call upon the pupil.

As a postal card to the absent pupil will be sufficient reminder in many cases, this is all that will be necessary the first week.

(2) Second Sunday, teacher calls.—The registrar now notifies or really reminds—the teacher that a pupil has been absent from her class for two Sundays and that according to the agreement it is necessary for her to make a personal visit. No one is better able to make such a call than the teacher, and she should be the first one to call upon a sick or delinquent scholar.

(3) Third Sunday, department superintendent calls.—The call of the teacher should be followed up by a visit from the department, who after the teacher is most closely associated with the pupil. The registrar should provide the department superintendent each week with the names and addresses of all pupils who have been absent three consecutive Sundays.

(4) Fourth Sunday, superintendent calls.—The visit of the general superintendent will be the last resort to bring back a delinquent scholar. In case of protracted illness, it is equally important that he should visit the pupil. Where the absentee is a member of the church, the pastor as well as the superintendent should call, and it would be wise for the registrar to notify both that the pupil has been absent four consecutive Sundays.

After a pupil has been absent for one month, and every effort has been made to bring him back, except on account of illness or for some other reasonable excuse, his name should be dropped from the roll. This does not mean he is to be neglected altogether, or forgotten, for he must still be called upon from time to time and included in every canvass and Rally Day visitation. However, he need not be reinstated as a regular pupil until he has attended four consecutive Sundays and given bona fide evidence of his desire to be a regular attendant.

IV. Excusable Absences

All Sunday schools will have pupils who are unable to be present for good reasons, such as the sickness of themselves or others. In other words, they are not willingly absent, but only prevented from attending by conditions over which they have no control. Some provision should be made whereby they can keep their standing in the Sunday school and secure their certificate at the end of the year with the other members of the class. Such provision can best be made by requiring that the absentee send in his home work and offering on the Sunday he finds it necessary to be absent. For so doing he

JESUS BEGINS HIS WORK

Daily Readings and Suggestions

The Temptation of Jesus. Matt. 4:1-11

"The world, the flesh, and the devil"—all were included in the temptation of Jesus. Satan appealed to the flesh when he tempted Jesus to provide food for his hungry body, and he offered Jesus the world (which Jesus had come to win), if only he would worship the devil. As has so often been pointed out, Jesus withstood the temptation by his reliance upon the word of God, which he was able to quote so effectively. The world, the flesh, and the devil tempt us today, even as they tempted our Lord then; may we find our strength in the living Word, who is able to deliver us from all the wiles of the devil. Let us praise him especially for his keeping power.

TUESDAY

Jesus Preaching, Luke 4:14-22

It is significant that Jesus did not begin his public preaching until after his temptation, or testing. Undoubtedly he was fully conscious of his divine origin and power before this, yet he refrained from public ministry until he had been tempted in all points, like as we are, yet without sin. As we read the gracious words of verses 18 and 19, followed by the statement that this scripture was even then fulfilled, and then think back to the crucifixion and resurrection by which he sealed his promises, we too must bare him witness. Let us praise him, not only in the intimacy of our own family circle, but in the eyes of all the people.

WEDNESDAY

The First Disciples. Mark 1:12-20

After his own preparation by testing, Jesus began his public ministry. For this work he needed helpers, and when he found those whose hearts were ready to hear, he called them to leave their ordinary toil and work with him. Undoubtedly these fishermen lost much of their personal ease and comforts when they left their nets to follow Jesus, but how much more they would have lost if they had NOT followed him! Today his work is not yet finished, and he still calls for helpers whom he would make fishers of men: may we hear his voice when he calls, and follow wheresoe'er he leads!

THURSDAY

Jeremiah Begins his Work. Jer. 1:1-10

This passage is well worth our study and meditation. So often we think we have been placed in most difficult places: Anywhere else we could do so much more! God didn't promise Jeremiah much—from the human standpoint. He was to meet bitter opposition, as all must who root out, destroy, and throw down in order to build and plant. Yet God had foreordained him for this work, and promised to be with him and strengthen him in it. Could there be greater promise than this? Then read Eph. 1:4, 5, and Matt. 28:19-20.

FRIDAY

Isaiah Begins his Work. Isa. 6:1-10

It was in the house of God that Isaiah, in a vision beheld the Lord, and heard his voice calling him to service. Like those first disciples of Jesus, he at once offered himself as God's messenger. He was made ready for service by testing and cleansing, and then God gave him his message and sent him forth. O God, search our hearts just now, and see if there be any unclean thing; cleanse us from secret faults, strengthen us for service, and put thy words in our mouths. In Jesus' name. Amen.

SATURDAY

Paul Begins his Work. Acts 9:10-20

How different was the call of Paul from that of Isaiah! Stopped short in his persecution of the church which is his body, he too heard the voice of Jesus and counted his own sufferings as naught, that he might serve the Lord who had bought him with his own precious blood. God's call comes to all, regardless of occupation or surroundings; our testing is in the way we answer his call. God help us to answer aright—and to help others to answer aright!

SUNDAY

The Work of Jesus Foretold. Isa. 11:1-9

We often speak of the "finished work of Jesus," but more properly his work is not yet finished. Jesus outlined his work when he said: "I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go ... I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." We have reason to believe that it is but a little while till he that shall come WILL come, and bring to pass the glorious conditions described in this passage. It is a blessed hope; and it is a blessed thought that we can help. Pray that many may hear his call today.

JESUS AT WORK

Daily Readings and Suggestions

Working with Authority. Mark 1:21-28

Not as the scribes and pharisees, for in spite of all their pride they were but men, and even the wisest men may not speak their own opinions with authority. But Jesus was more than man—the Word made flesh while he dwelt among us—and he alone could speak with authority. The evil spirits who bore witness to his authority and begged for mercy were but a foreshadowing of the day when every knee shall bow before him and confess his supreme authority. That we need not fear him in that day, let us now bow before him who can teach us with authority and lead us in the way everlasting.

TUESDAY

Healing and Praying. Mark 1:23-35

In recent years, again, many abuses have grown up around the doctrine of divine healing. The great heart of Jesus ever melted at the sight of human suffering, and we have no case on record where he refused healing to the cry of faith. He has not changed from that day to this, but let us beware lest we allow our faith to rest in always getting an affirmative answer to our requests. It is what we ask in his name that he has promised to grant. Let us think well upon the meaning of that phrase; then let us praise him "who healeth all thy diseases."

Preaching and Healing. Mark 1:36-45

In many evangelistic meetings of our day many idle curiosity seekers are attracted by the undue prominence given to alleged healing services, and the real purpose of the meeting—the saving of souls—is defeated. It was this very thing that Jesus wished to avoid. His great heart could not refrain from healing, but his primary mission was to preach; when he found the people would no longer permit him to do this, he remained in the desert places where the earnest seekers after life might find him without hindrance from the curious. God help us to keep our efforts ever focused upon the chief mission to which he has called us: to go to the "villages beyond" with the message of life.

THURSDAY

The Prayer Life of Jesus. Heb. 5:1-10

Jesus was and is a great high priest who has never needed to make an offering for his own sins, yet he found great need of prayer. When he had great work to do, he prayed first; when his work was finished he felt the need of again communing with the Father. And still he ever liveth to make intercession for us. If Jesus, being God, still felt the need of prayer, how much more do we need prayer in our own lives! Dear Lord, teach us to pray!

FRIDAY

God's Regard for the Body. Matt. 6:25-34

There are few thoughts more blessed or more comforting than the realization that God cares, and will provide for all our needs. Ye are of more value than many sparrows! He that created us in the beginning can recreate and repair our bodies when it is in accordance with his plan. And when these old bodies have been laid away in the grave his care is not yet ended, for he has promised to bring them forth once more, gloriously changed and made like unto his own. Truly our God is a great God, and has loved us with a great love; let us praise him!

SATURDAY

Prayer and Health. James 5:11-20

This passage should be very familiar to all Brethren. There are many among us, and among other people who can testify that the prayer of faith HAS saved the sick—and we are certain that it shall yet save many others. Even so, our faith must rest in him, not in what he, in his infinite wisdom, does or does not do for us. Certain rules are laid down here for such saving prayer: we are to confess our faults to one another, as well as to the Lord, and forgiveness of our sins is coupled with physical healing. Note, too, that we can only pray effectually when we have put on Christ our righteousness.

SUNDAY

The Messiah's Ministry. Isa. 61:1-6

It is well to read such passages as this often, stopping to really meditate upon each phrase and considering well its meaning.

These things we have heard so often, from youth up, that too frequently they have become mere words, devoid of meaning. These precious promises were in part fulfilled at the Messiah's first coming, but their complete fulfillment is reserved for the blessed days following his second advent—the blessed hope to which the whole creation moves. Our God IS a great God, and greatly to be praised!

of the opportunity to learn much that Achimota has to teach us. The trip to shore was a difficult one and dismayed some who would otherwise have gone. We were swung down over the edge of the boat in a basket into a dancing surf-boat, from thence we were propelled by paddles to the breakwaters. One then stepped on the edge of the boat, climbed into a chair supported on the heads of some of Africa's faithful sons, and was carried to the beach. From here our little party of five ladies walked to the office of the Woermann Line where we made arrangements for an auto to take us to Achimota. While waiting we attended part of the native service at the Wesleyan church nearby. The songs were in English, the Scripture reading (and doubtless the sermon, which we did not hear), was in the native language.

At Achimota, while classes were not in session we were shown by one of the students over the buildings and campus. From this great school, which maintains as far as possible the simplicity of native customs, teachers are being sent out to their own people. The primary teaching is in four languages, Tui, Ga, Evke, and Fanti. During the primary grades boys and girls are together. After 10 years of age separate classes and dormitories are maintained for the sexes and all teaching is in English. We praised God that it is possible to see clean, simple, humble Christian men and women wearing costumes of the utmost simplicity, meditating upon the "things which are lovely and of good report."

We have already been 48 hours in port. While one thousand tons of cargo are being discharged. All are anxious to be on the way again. It is promised that we shall move out tonight.

Miss Myers, Miss Crawford and myself have been kept from fevers, although not altogether from headaches and other reactions to tropical sun and heat.

Our prospects for reaching Kribi in seven or eight days more are very good, and we are still hoping to spend Thanksgiving at our stations.

Once having arrived, we shall be able to complete for you the story of our journey from Lagos to the Mission. Now we can only conjecture that our friends will be leaving the stations for the coast today expecting us to arrive November 12th.

We have precious seasons of prayer twice daily. For two Sundays we had the privilege of attending services conducted by Rev. Beetham of the Wesleyan Mission at Kumasi, and, as I have said, yesterday attended church on land.

On Saturday, November 5th, we thought much of our dear Mrs. Kennedy, who has now walked for one year the weary path of widowhood.

We marvel at the wondrous grace of our God who permits us to return once more—Miss Myers for the third time, myself for the fifth, to dark Africa for him. We praise God that he is permitting dear Miss Crawford to have the desire of her heart in going out at this time.

We go once more to bear a testimony in this dark land. Last night as I sat on deck watching the intermittent flashing of the Accra light-house, I thought how like it is to a missionary's experience. We know that we shall continue to have your sustaining prayers as once more the light of our feeble experience flashes in the darkness of Africa's ignorance, as through us the Accra, Gold Coast, W. Africa,

November 7, 1932.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

More than five weeks of journeyings have elapsed since last we wrote you. Tomorrow we shall arrive at Lagos in Nigeria where we shall have an opportunity to mail our letters.

It was October 1st that we left Antwerp for Paris. Eighteen happy days were spent there in fellowship with our Brother and Sister Taber before Miss Myers, Miss Crawford, and I departed for Boulogne. Strange as it may seem these days also were crowded with either the business of preparation or departure. During this time we had the privilege of making last minute purchases for various missionaries, of visiting Americans and French friends in Paris, of attending various English and French services.

American missionaries studying in Paris form a happy company. It is with joy mingled with sorrow that some of the number from time to time depart for their respective fields in the various French colonies. The entire missionary group as well as various French friends accompany the departing missionaries to the Station from which they have elected to depart. Songs are sung, prayer is offered, affectionate farewells are said, and "they who are scattered abroad go everywhere preaching the Word." We ourselves during our brief stay joined in a farewell for two Baptist Missionaries leaving via Bordeaux for the Eastern part of Oubangui-Chari. Our hearts were moved as we saw them go forth to face again the vicissitudes of Africa. Four days later our turn came. and we left Paris for Boulogne—expecting to embark at 10 P. M.—by "light" for the Wadai. Yet scarcely had we alighted from the train when we learned that owing to rough seas our boat was late. We proceeded to a hotel to spend the night, and left at gray dawn on the morrow. We were thankful even for the meager French breakfast, this time only a hot drink without the rolls, before starting out on our cold walk to the wharf. Our baggage was taken in a hand-truck by the hotel porter. The red tape of presenting passports, etc., was soon over and we were on the "lighter," being carried swiftly to the steamer. It proved to be a beautiful day, and so busy were with settling in the cabin which was to be our home for four weeks and with letters, accounts, etc., that we scarcely realized we were crossing the Channel. Evening found us at Southampton where a large number of English passengers embarked—and where I received the trunks which had been left in England. We rejoiced together at the auspicious beginning of our voyage, and retired with open port hole, the refreshing air streaming in. It was perhaps midnight when we were awakened by the steward—the porthole must be closed! It was the first of the rough seas which were to churn the little "Wadai" in their ruthless grasp. None of us can plead guiltless of "mal de mer" during the days which followed, as in cold and storm we plowed southward over the mountains of water. Yet, our own little party were on deck the entire hours of each day, although compelled to retire to the unventilated cabin at night. There were passengers whom we did not see for days—one dear little lady especially who did not recover from the complications of seasickness during the entire journey to Freetown.

We found that of the 64 passengers on board fifteen were missionaries. There are four young Catholics bound for Victoria, several Adventists who disembarked at Freetown to resume their voyage a month later to Douala two Methodists who disembarked at Lacoradi, two Danish members of the S. U. M. who will disembark at Port Harcourt, and we three Brethren (?)—sisters, rather—who are the only passengers for Kribi.

A group of young Syrians, some of whom we met first on the "lighter," have become warm friends of the missionaries. Two are Catholics, one a Jew, one a Mohammedan and only one a Christian, although weak. We were delighted to have him reconsecrate his life to the Lord before he disembarked a few days ago at Tacoradi. For the others, we must still pray, trusting that the seed sown may bear fruit unto eternal life. The first port at which we touched was Tenerife, but no one cared to disembark here—as the boat was in harbor only from midnight until 8 A. M. Some of the missionaries however disembarked for a brief time at Las Palmas. We parted with sorrow from a little group of friends at Freetown on October 31st. They had become dear to us as we had been permitted to minister to them in the Lord. Other friends left us at Monrovia, and a very precious group, consisting of two dear missionaries and our young Syrian Christian at Tacoradi.

Yesterday, although Sunday, we had the very great pleasure of visiting the famous English training school at Achimota. Our boat was lying in harbor at Accra—is still doing so—in fact, and we took advantage light of the Gospel dispels in even a small degree the dense darkness of her superstition.

We trust soon to be able to write you a letter of Thanksgiving from Oubangui-Chari.

Yours for the testimony of Jesus.

A SHORT MEETING AT MULVANE

I am sure there are those who will enjoy a brief report of our short meeting with the Brethren at Mulvane, Kansas. We regret we had to disappoint the brethren in the time scheduled to begin. About ten days before the meeting was to start we were in an automobile accident and while no one was seriously hurt the car was badly damaged. It took longer to have the car repaired than first thought, and the date of the meeting had to be changed twice. When we finally got on the job it seemed to take a day or two to convince folks that the speaker had arrived. Then in about the middle of the meeting, we had our first near-zero weather, which never increases the crowd any. Taking everything into consideration the crowds were fair, and we closed with a full house and a number of re-consecrations. While the meeting was short, beginning November 9th and closing the 20th, there was an expression of deep appreciation for the Word of God.

The church is located about six miles east and south of Mulvane. While these brethren have their problems as all do in these days, they do have a live Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. A minister from the Church of the Brethren is giving them part time service at present.

I did not know until I arrived on the field that this was Brother Albert Whitted's home church. I was in the homes of two of his sisters and took dinner,—Mrs. Davis and Mrs. Smith. Albert's ears must have burned during those days.

We met Brother and Sister George Wygal at Fort Scott conference last year, and they were at Portis this year to our district conference, and in fact it was through them the plans were made for our coming. We will not forget their untiring service as well as many others.

We were entertained in the home of Brother and Sister F. G. Scharper. Brother Scharper is 86 and Mrs. Scharper is past 80 and still active. They were among the charter members of the church, and faithful supporters of the work. Thanks to them and the many others for their kind hospitality. May God's richest blessings ever be theirs.

JAS. S. COOK.

OUR MEETING WITH THE FORT SCOTT CHURCH

At the close of our meeting with Mulvane, I came direct to Fort Scott where our Brother L. G. Wood is the faithful pastor. I arrived there Tuesday evening, November 22 in time for the evening service. I found that Brother Wood had preached Monday evening so as to lend every influence possible toward the meeting. Brother Wood has an earnest group of people who greatly appreciate the Word. There are many things that render this field especially difficult, and Brother and Sister Wood are to be commended for the faithful service rendered, and the sacrifices they have made. We have an adequate church building splendidly located but in need of some repairs. And we are glad to announce that while we were there a brother in Parsons, Kansas, promised to pay for the decorating of the interior of the auditorium. It would be a worthy and a highly appreciated gift if some one else would come forth with another such gift for other repairs, for instance, a lift on their newly installed furnace.

Unfortunately upon my arrival at Fort Scott, and for the first few days I suffered with a severe pain in my ear and jaw, which made speaking and eating difficult. And of course both speaking and eating are important in times like that. For a few days and nights the hot water bottle and I were close friends. However, I can assure you my needs were all supplied as I made my home with Brother and Sister Wood, and they did all that kind hands could do to supply every comfort. It was a real pleasure to be in their home. This was the first time Brother Wood and I had worked together in a meeting, and I can assure you I enjoyed the Christian fellowship and the hospitality of the pastor, his good wife and their people. For them may Philippians 4:19 be fully experienced.

JAS. S. COOK.

REVIVAL AT FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

Our revival services began on November 20th with the writer in charge, and Rev. J. S. Cook arrived from Mulvane, Kansas on the following Tuesday evening. He had been in a meeting there for two weeks and came over here for our meeting, while in this part of the state.

Brother Cook was well received, and his great Bible messages were both interesting and helpful to all that attended. A splendid feature was his dispensational truth, which he stressed throughout the services, from a large chart which he used.

I am sure that it was a seed-sowing period, that will bear more visible fruit in days to come.

Several members and some from other churches came forward for a deeper consecration, and an increasing life of usefulness, for service in Christian living and effort.

Our group was very faithful in attendance and we had quite a few others in attendance nearly every evening. While we have no new accessions to report we are sure that the meeting was a success, and it is evident to all, that Brother Cook did not shirk nor shun to declare the whole council of God.

Believers were strengthened and the membership was inspired to a greater diligence, and this means a great deal to both pastor and people.

We are now in a follow-up campaign and expect to conserve the effort and reach some that were interested.

The first Sunday evening that Brother Cook was with us we held our fall communion, and it was pronounced by all as a splendid service.

We are now leading our people in Bible study every Wednesday evening on the subject: "The Personality and Power of the Holy Spirit," this is proving very interesting, and we are sure it will be very beneficial to the membership.

We ask for the continued prayers of the brotherhood, for the work and the workers at this place.

L. G. WOOD.

OUR MEETINGS IN NEW JERSEY

I had expected before this to give a write-up of our services in North Jersey but have neglected to do so. The field seems somewhat difficult—hard to build up—for several reasons, as I view it.

First. All the churches seem to lack power or ability to build numerically. The Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Disciples, Church of the Brethren, and Brethren have had very few additions for the last five or more years. Some of these churches have had good evangelists and put forth strenuous efforts but could not arouse the members. We at Calvary have had especially good evangelists, who labored true and faithfully, who put on good programs of music and catchy, drawing sermons which drew crowds, but few of the unsaved would come. A large percent of old and young just cannot be induced to respect the house of God enough even to attend these wonderful meetings. I found this same trouble thirty years ago. I put up a tent, had the best music professors to organize a choir, and also had men of the best reputation as evangelists, advertised extensively, but I found a large number of people could not be induced to come. All who have tried this method have found it quite largely a failure.

Second. In addition to the program as stated, much visitation from house to house, cottage prayer meetings from house to house, and using autos in going after those who had no way to come seemed partly to solve what appeared to be a hopeless situation.

Political speeches almost nightly and then a great rain storm the second week seemed to greatly hinder the meeting; but the last week four, and some nights more, autos were used to gather in the folks so that we had the greatest gathering, that any of the churches has had for years. To prayer and consecration and strenuous efforts on the part of the laity and the pastor, I attribute the secret of their success. My son drove his auto 1600 miles visiting and bringing the people to the meeting. Others caught the contagion until many of other churches as well as our people became intensely interested at the close of the meeting.

Calvary church having no baptistry, baptism was put off for two weeks and I baptized them at Sergeantsville. All but one were baptized and she wanted to be, but was opposed by her parents. The mother was once a member of Calvary. She told me her heart is still with us but her husband being a nominal Methodist she went with him at his request. The daughter still attends our services.

Ordination

Brother Christiansen, unprepared because he expected one of the Examining Board would be present and preach the sermon, preached the best ordination sermon I ever heard. Biblical, spiritual, uplifting.

He showed that the Elder must desire the office of the ministry, this desire must be begotten of the Holy Ghost, and when this desire is made known to the local church, it is the duty of the church to authorize his ordination.

He made a great appeal, showing the relation of the church to the Elder and the relation of the Elder to the church.

It was surely a spiritual message delivered to a house full of people. Then the Ordination was very effective and uplifting.

In conclusion I want to state that both Sergeantsville and Calvary are handicapped by an inflow of Jews and Italians.

Sergeantsville is overchurched and undered spiritually.

I feel very sure that if the Sergeantsville Brethren church would be as true to the Spirit of the Word as they are for the latter, and continue to raise the spiritual standard higher and higher, and put on a progressive programme they could draw for miles around. Many are looking for something better than the husks of their own churches.

Brethren, let us not try to improve God's perfect but simple plan of redemption. Let us not substitute oyster suppers, ice cream, cakes, and pies for the Blood of Christ, or worldly joys and pleasures which are vanity and vexation for the joys and pleasures of God which are unspeakable.

What heartaches and sorrows would vanish if we would stick faithfully to our motto—"the Bible, the Whole Bible and nothing but the Bible," as our only essential and written creed. ISAAC D. BOWMAN, Leesburg, New Jersey.

SERGEANTSVILLE, NEW JERSEY

It was a great joy to the writer to join Brother Isaac D. Bowman in the ordination of his son, J. Milton Bowman. Knowing Milton from childhood as I do, there was not the slightest doubt in my mind, as to his fitness and call to the ministry. During my nine years and a half as a member and an associate worker in the Whole Gospel Mission of South Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. I found Milton to be a boy of few words, but when he spoke, the words were stated in the depth of sincerity and firmness. I never found him to be quarrelsome nor a trouble-maker in any circle of life. His moral standing in the community where he lived and among his companions, was of the highest sort and with the best record as a young man.

Having had several contacts with Milton during my ministry, some personal correspondence; I know that the same principles of modesty, honesty and sincere pursuit after the highest and the best, the truest for Christ and the Church, is the course which Milton delights in.

Therefore, it was a real joy to me to place before him the meaning and the responsibilities, the hardship and sorrow, which are interlinked with the great blessings God sends those who are truly serving him. There was a deep comfort came over my soul, as with the father—Brother I. D. Bowman, D.D., I laid hands on our young brother to set him apart for the ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ.

May God's choicest blessings rest upon the ministry of Brother Bowman. This service I rendered as the Eastern Pennsylvania District Evangelist.

While at Sergeantsville, New Jersey for the ordination service I was pleased to see the fruitage of an evangelistic campaign conducted by Dr. Bowman. It is not often we hear of father and son engaged in a service of this kind together. We often found a father engage a son for such a service, but here the son had engaged the father, and God honored this service in giving them ten souls, whom I saw baptized, and taken into the church the same evening of the day when I saw them baptized in the morning.

The simple but true gospel sermons of Brother Bowman are still blessed by God, as in former days. It was said of "The converts during Mr. D. L. Moody's services, that 75 per cent of them turned back," while during "Chas. G. Finney's services 85 per cent of them kept true unto the church." The same author says it was "due to the power Mr. Finney had to impress upon the consciences of men the necessity of holy living." I feel the great success God has granted unto our dear Brother Bowman is due to the fearless stand he has taken in delivering the Whole Gospel, and the sincere way in which he has tried to live it out. I do not know of any of the evangelists in our church during the past twenty-five years to whom God has granted abiding results in the Brethren Church than to the services of Brother Bowman. I believe his teachings reached the consciences of the people, awakening them to the consequences of sin, and the result was a genuine yielding to God. This is more lasting to have men join the church because of others who belong, or to get influence in the church and community.

Some of the people who had attended the services said, "This is the greatest gospel teaching we have heard."

Brother Milton found entrance into several new homes and the future of the church looks brighter than before.

S. E. CHRISTIANSEN.

507 Tilghman Street, Allentown, Pa.

LOUISVILLE, OHIO

We have many things for which to rejoice as we continue to serve the Lord Jesus here at Louisville, November the 20th will be always remembered as a red letter day for the Brethren here when they celebrated their fourth anniversary of the re-dedication of the church. There were 230 in attendance for the Sunday school and morning church service. Prof. A. L. DeLozier was the speaker for the occasion and as usual was very graciously received. Some 155 partook of the fellowship dinner which was served in the basement of the church. Mrs. Sarah Keim, of Ashland, widow of the church's first pastor, Elder Josiah Keim, gave a very timely message and sang two German Hymns at the afternoon service. Other special numbers of music and greetings from former pastors made the service complete.

Elder S. L. Hang and his good wife who were unable to attend the services at the church, celebrated their 59th wedding anniversary in a quiet way in their home on East Gorgas Street. A number of the church people called at their home during the day to wish them well in the remaining days of their journey together. Elder Hang was one of the founders of the First Brethren church in Louisville and for the past 54 years both he and his wife have been active members.

Victory Revival

On December 5, Brother R. Paul Miller came to lead us in a three weeks' revival. For some months we had prayed and planned against barriers of many kinds and the Lord has shown us that our praying and planning were not in vain. Our prayers were answered, God sent us a revival which causes us to sing with great fervor, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

This was my first experience in a meeting with Brother Miller and it was a most happy experience. He is very thorough in his work and has power in the pulpit that is far above the ordinary. But why speak of these things to the brotherhood who already know them? Every sermon was of the highest Biblical, spiritual and revivalistic character, striking mighty blows at sin and lifting up a Christ who has power to save, all who will come unto God by him. Miller is also a prince in personal work, and it was a wonderful blessing to the pastor to go with him from house to house and plead the merits of the Gospel of the Son of God.

The results were most gratifying. When the last service was ended a total of 45 souls had found their way to the foot of the cross where they met their Lord and found pardon and grace for a closer walk with him. Of the 45, 19 confessed Christ for the first time, while 26 renewed their vows to the Lord thus expressing their desire to serve him in a better way. Sixteen have been baptized and received into the church. Three came by letter, while others have already expressed their intentions of full surrender to Christ and membership with us.

Our choir of some 18 or 20 voices was on the job every night for which we want to thank them. The service they rendered counted for more than they thought. Our pianist too, was very faithful. These are some of the lesser things that make a pastor's heart glad. We surely appreciated the effort of every one.

We had visitors during the meetings from the Ellet church where Brother Grant McDonald is pastor and also from the Canton congregation. Brother and Sister McDonald gave several special numbers in song for which we say, "Thank you."

Another interesting and helpful feature was the Question Box. Some fifteen minutes were devoted to this item each evening. Much benefit was realized. Some expressed themselves as believing that equally as much good came from this feature as from any other.

As we close this report we want to say that our hearts rejoice in Louisville, in a revived church, in the salvation of many precious souls, and for the outlook ahead as we labor, wait and watch for his blessed appearing. A. E. WHITTED.

THE REVIVAL AT LOUISVILLE, OHIO

Upon my return from Spokane, Washington, I at once opened a meeting in Louisville, Ohio with Brother Whitted and his people. I found here that the pastor had done most excellent work in preparing the field for the campaign. The very first night manifested that the advertising had been well done for interest was already marked. Except for a few nights of icy roads and sidewalks we had a fine house full of people at the meetings. The folks could easily negotiate the snow and the rain, but the icy surface of streets was a little too much for which we could not blame them.

These Louisville people have done a very creditable piece of work in the remodelling of their church structure. I was in Louisville for a meeting ten years ago to the day, but then their church was not half the size it is now. They surely used good judgment in their choice of arrangement and material for the building. These people have had some very trying times also through the closing of banks which very seriously affected the church finances. However, through it all a very fine and honorable spirit of love, sacrifice and fairness was manifested by the responsible leaders of the church. This speaks fine for the type of folks in this congregation for in these days many leaders and others have lost their balance and are in a panic of pessimism and irritability which is making it hard for many church organizations to function.

The Louisville church has a great field in which to work and they are doing a great piece of work in their efforts to reach that field. If they continue as they have been they will surely have the capacity of their entire plant strained to its utmost. There is no reason why it should not be, for the material is there to be worked on and it only remains for the congregation to rise up and go forth.

This is my first revival with Brother Whitted and I hope it is not the last for he proved himself not only a splendid workman for Christ, but also the finest kind of a brother. He is loved by his people and by many who are not connected with the church at all.

There is a fine body of young men and women being gathered into this congregation who are destined to become a mighty power in the future of this church. The pastor is mindful of this and is doing all he can to maintain and increase these young folks.

It was my happy privilege to live in the parsonage during these three weeks and to enjoy the fine hospitality of the pastor, wife and their family. It was with a real tinge of regret that I finally left this happy home. The hospitality of these people, as well as the members of their congregation has no peer. How greatly I enjoyed the happy times spent in the various homes where we were privileged to go could never be told, but it all lingers as a very fine memory.

I am home now for a few days in preparation for our Executive meeting of the Home Mission Board, after which we will begin our next campaign.

R. PAUL MILLER.

MORRILL, KANSAS

So many Evangelist readers and others have written, inquiring of us as to the condition of our son Forest, who just returned home, after going through a very serious operation, which was followed by six weeks spent in the Sabetha Memorial Hospital. The operation consisted in the removal of more than two feet of the large and small intestines and the draining of a pus pocket located in the region of the appendix. When the physicians and surgeon discovered the seriousness of the case, they held out no hope, saying it would only be a few days longer, but the operation would at least give him a chance. He is now at home with us after going through the most serious operation in the history of Sabetha Memorial Hospital, apparently well except for a little weakness. The recovery was as great surprise to the physicians as to us. Not the least disturbance of the pulse was even manifest nor the slightest evidence of fever ever appeared. Out of real experience we are made to say, how good our God is, and his will and way is always the best. We thank the Brethren Evangelist and its readers for the earnestness and concern manifested.

The work of the church here continues with about the same interest as usual. We took our annual pause to meditate upon the spirit of the great Giver in his Christmas Gift to us. The Gift he made reveals his great goodness; his boundless love expressed through his effort to free us from our sins. The church here showed very great kindness to us during the Christmas season through gifts which we very gratefully received. It is such as these that warm the heart, and makes us all experience the genuine spirit of true brotherhood.

Our Thanksgiving season, which was observed here, affords us all the opportunity to express our appreciation to our God for his goodness. The church here has not been in position to serve with its money as it would desire. The bank failure, here, coming just at the beginning of the depression has more than made it doubly hard for the church to do its work without embarrassment. Yet at this Thanksgiving all bills were paid. We are looking forward to the time when these abnormal conditions will disappear. Throughout the year our services have held up in attendance and also interest. Many of our folks are making sacrifices to keep the church work up to standard. Since our last writing three have been baptized and received into the membership. We have been gleaming the field as fast as opportunity permits. One of our hopeful outlooks rests in the families of young people Cupid is establishing in our consistency. Some of the finest types of service the church is now receiving is through some of our younger folks. A number of our Bible school teachers are of this group. The Bible school Superintendent herself is one who has faithfully served in this capacity and was recently reelected to this honor for the sixth year. Our hopes of the future church is through the loyalty, fidelity, and intensive service of the young people. Cupid's darts have reduced the Sisterhood to smaller numbers but they continue to have their monthly meeting and carry on their work. He must be chained or imprisoned until the Sisterhood can build up their ranks.

The W. M. S., guided by their faithful president, Mrs. B. M. Lichty, is at the pilot wheel, seeking to guide the ship through the stormy sea. The ladies are doing their part in all the work of the church, and in addition are extending their works and deeds of encouragement to all. They meet each month in the devotional meetings, and as often as necessary in their work meetings.

The spirit of the church here is very fine, and the necessity of cooperation is teaching us all the lesson of brotherly love and faith in the God who is supreme.

THE Inside is Still There

The other day I read something surprising about the spineless cactus developed by the late Luther Burbank. The writer warns against bruising the leaves. If you do, he says, the cactus will immediately grow spines. I would like to know whether this is true. What a wonderful illustration of the natural man with his reform movements for salvation of men.

"NO PEAK TIME" EXPENDITURES AT BRETHREN HOME

It is too much to have expected that this institution should escape the effects of the world wide depression, when of all others, so far as my information goes, none have escaped. The Brethren Church is fortunate in that none of its forward looking projects were launched during the boom times, when the equipment would have cost vastly more than was spent in launching them. However, not being able to foresee the times which have come upon us, and laboring under the impression that the so called "good times" would continue at least for some years, we might be blamed, in some quarters, for not having foreseen, and established a policy of retrenchment. Whatever might have been done in this direction by most of our Boards, no such a policy could have been adopted so far as The Home was concerned, because, except for the fact that a farm was purchased, for reasons which were cited in my last article, no expenditures have been made except those which have been absolutely necessary. There must always be a superintendent and matron there, and the inmates must be fed and kept warm, and the property must be kept in repair. Beyond the items of expense incurred for these things, all of which are kept at as low a figure as is consistent with dignity and a sound business policy, there is no other expense than that which is involved in keeping faith with our Annuitants. These are all connected definitely with The Home, and who had such confidence in the church which authorized it, and the Management which the church had chosen to care for it, that they willingly entered into such contracts, turning over various sums of money, all of which was consumed in the erection of the buildings and providing the necessary equipment. The total involved in these Annuity Contracts is around $30,000.00, interest on which is to be paid as long as the annuitant lives. After his or her death, interest ceases, and the money involved becomes the property of the Home absolutely. In the meantime we have a property worth not far from $100,000.00, all of which is jeopardized as the church fails to stand back of it. We want our readers to know every detail as to The Home and its management, both because we want you to pray for it and to give as you may to support it, for you may need an open door some day, for yourself, and if not, then you may seek for such a door for others. In the meantime, visit it, pray for it, and help.

STRENGTHENING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL BY CAREFUL RECORDS

will receive a passing grade, which will still enable him to qualify for a certificate at the end of the year. When this word can be communicated to the secretary of the department she will report him "accounted for," and thus make it unnecessary for the registrar to send out the customary card for unexplained absence. Where a child is too ill to prepare his home work, special arrangements should be made by the teacher for making it up upon his return to Sunday school.

V. Additional Recognition

Thus far it has been observed that no effort has been made to stimulate interest by rewards for well doing. The policy of recognition rather than rewards should be closely adhered to. Prizes are not necessary, and it is possible to demonstrate that prizes in the long run do not really increase attendance or better the morale of the school. It has been proved that children who gain prizes are generally the most regular and punctual, and would be loyal to the Sunday school without any reward. Getting a child to act because of a prize or reward may possibly be permissible, but it is dangerous, as it may develop in him a love for rewards rather than love for the Sunday school.

On the other hand every effort that the pupil puts forth should be recognized, and publicly and privately encouraged. The monthly report card, the annual certificate, and the publishing of the names on the honor roll are inexpensive and effective means of recognition.

However, should the school desire to go beyond this and provide additional recognition, two suggestions are offered:

1. Honor ribbons.—The department maintaining the best record can be decorated with honor ribbons each month, upon which will be printed the name of the department and the month during which it has secured special honors. An honor banner could be used instead of ribbons, and remain in possession of the department as long as it holds the best record.

2. Summer camp.—Some Sunday schools maintain a summer camp and offer an outing of one or more weeks as a special inducement to all pupils who attain a certain grade. This plan will appeal especially to pupils in the Junior and Intermediate Departments.

Some may regard such an outing as a reward rather than recognition for good work, but when we consider the value of a summer camp, not only in the provision made for the social and physical needs of the older boys and girls, but also in the splendid opportunities afforded for spiritual contacts, its real worth will be evident.—The Sunday School Times.

merits; but undoubtedly it has afforded a period of relief to nations that were harder put to for funds than the good old U. S. A., whether this relief was fairly and rightly used and appreciated or not.

Relief for Our Churches

For a goodly number of years our churches have been asked by The Brethren Publishing Company, through the authorization of General Conference to observe the fourth Sunday in January as Publication Day, and on that day to make an offering to apply on the debt on the building purchased by The Brethren Publishing Company.

A number of churches have already paid more than their share of the indebtedness, if the share were to be measured by the number of members in the churches. But such a rule can not be observed with any degree of fairness, as ability to pay is not measured by numbers.

For the past two years practically all of our churches have been suffering in a financial way as the result of the world-wide depression, and they are finding it more and more difficult to meet their budgets for home work.

The business manager has consulted the Prudential Committee of The Publishing Company, and talked the matter over with the editors of our publications, and the conclusion has been reached that it will be a great relief to our churches if we declare a moratorium on the Publication Day Offering this year. While the Publishing House has felt the effect of the general depression as much as any other institution of the church, we will be in a position to keep the interest paid up on the indebtedness, even though nothing may be paid on the principal this year; and we felt if the churches were relieved of this responsibility this year, perhaps in another year they would be able to make it all up again.

"Lest We Forget"

Since habits are so easily formed and since it is so easy to forget certain requirements, it is not our purpose to ask the churches to entirely abandon the observance of Publication Day, but rather to make it a day that has a little more of a local appeal than ordinarily.

We want the churches to observe the day, and, if possible, bring to a climax the special campaign for subscriptions to The Brethren Evangelist that comes to a close on that day; and, wherever possible, to take up an offering to be used by the local church to apply on its budget, if the Evangelist is included in its budget, or to pay for the paper for the needy members of the local church who are unable to pay for the paper themselves, or to apply on the account the local church may be owing the Publishing House. Just observing the Day in a manner to keep it alive and to retain the benefits this year for the local church.

We feel there is not a congregation in the entire brotherhood that would not be greatly benefited by observing Publication Day on the fourth Sunday in this month in some such manner. The Publishing House is trying to be good to you. Will you not be good to yourselves?

It has been a long time since we published the Evangelist Honor Roll in its completeness, but since that has been last done, the churches at South Gate, California, with Leo Polman as pastor, and at Roanoke, Indiana, S. C. Henderson, pastor, have been added to our list; and just today we received the renewal of the list from the First Brethren church of Long Beach, California, making it the fifteenth year for Long Beach. So you see the good work goes on, and we only hope the campaign that closes on the fourth Sunday of this month will add a number of more churches to our already commendable list.

The Brethren Annual

We have received several inquiries as to the probable publication of a Church Year Book this year.

The committee in charge of this matter was very much undecided as to what would be a practical thing to do; but it has finally been decided to publish the Conference Minutes and the regular Annual with the list of conference organizations, churches and their pastors, and a list of all Brethren ministers.

The last of the copy was received just today, and we are now at work on the publication.

The churches will please remember that the General Conference voted that one thousand copies shall be published and mailed out to the churches according to their membership, and that the churches shall pay for the copies sent to them, and distribute them among their membership as they see fit.

The point is General Conference expects each church to pay for its quota of Conference Minutes, in order that the church may have a permanent record of Conference proceedings each year.

This is not a project of The Brethren Publishing Company, but an order of the Conference, and each church is expected to assume its portion of the load. So, when the Minutes are mailed to you, please make settlement as soon as possible.

Meditating on the Changing and the Changeless

*The years roll on,
The seasons come and go;
The changing years
Are changeless in their flow:
But, changeless as the years,
His love, his power,
Whose hand divine has led Unto this hour.*

*To him we lift
A hymn of grateful praise
For blessings strewn
Along life's winding ways;
A Father's guiding hand
We clearly trace—
Our every path he bounds
With love and grace.*

*Our Friend, our Guide,
Our Counselor divine,
His loving care
With all our days entwine;
Whate'er of good or ill
The future holds,
In this we rest secure:

*And so we face
The future's untried way;
The past secure,
Our hand in his we lay
And journey without fear
Where he may lead—
His presence quite enough
For all our need.*

CALVIN COOLIDGE

The most important item in the news concerns the passing of Calvin Coolidge, ex-President of the United States. Very quietly and simply, in his beloved New England, he fell into the sleep of death. He died as he had lived, without ostentation. For him "the shoutings of the captains" had little attraction.

As president he was, in one striking respect, a strange figure in a strange situation. Careful, conservative, thrifty, a tenacious champion of simplicity and homely virtues, he presided over the wildest, most irresponsible, most extravagant period in the history of the nation. From time to time his voice was heard counseling the nation to follow the virtues in which he believed and which he exemplified, but for the most part his was a voice crying in the wilderness. The nation admired him, but paid little attention to his words.

Doubtless, he came to realize at last the chasm that separated him from his generation. In his last interview he said, "We are in a new era to which I do not belong." That was true even when he was President. The American people still expresses admiration for the homely, Puritanical virtues of New England, but their admiration is for the most part archaeological, not moral. The interest is similar to the interest in early American furniture; we buy it to look at, not to sit on. It is, to most people, not very comfortable.

FEW days, and Foul of Trouble"

Just as Calvin Coolidge lies down in the last sleep, we read of the actions and decisions of another man, Franklin Roosevelt, as he prepares to take over the appalling task relinquished in 1928 by the former. It is not cynicism to say that, of the two, Roosevelt is the one who most needs our pity. He inherits conditions which Coolidge could not prevent and which Hoover could not remedy. Mr. Roosevelt was not my choice for President, but as the presiding ruler of this nation he needs the prayers of the church, and he should have them. "The powers that be are ordained of God"—do not forget that. (Romans 13:1-7). "The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will" (Dan. 4:32).

THE Last Rites

The funeral services of Calvin Coolidge were marked with all the simplicity possible in the case of one to whom honor was due. No great man was brought in to deliver oration or eulogy, but the brief service was in charge of a young, practically unknown pastor. That will remind you of the ex-President's habit, while in the Black Hills some years ago, of attending a little country church and listening to a student pastor.

Not much is known about the personal religious beliefs of Calvin Coolidge. At the church he attended while in Washington, he probably heard but little of the Blessed

Good News, but he must have known what it is. It is interesting to note that one of the funeral hymns selected contains the following lines:

O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from Thee;
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red
Life that shall endless be.

If there is a love which "will not let me go," it is found only in Jesus Christ and his Cross.

A CHURCH of Fame

The church at Northampton, Massachusetts, in which the funeral services of Calvin Coolidge were held is the church made famous by the great preacher, theologian and philosopher, Jonathan Edwards. It was here that he preached his best known sermon, "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God." If I remember rightly, it was said that Edwards read the sermon from manuscript, rather quietly and without gesticulation, but its terrific logic so shook the souls of the listeners that with their hands they gripped the very pews on which they sat.

The church is now called the Jonathan Edwards Congregational church. I have often wondered if the truths spoken by the great preacher are any longer heard there. As our Lord intimated, it is still the fashion of men to build memorials to the prophets and ignore what they said. While some of its ministers continue to bear a splendid testimony to the Truth of God, the Congregational Church has largely passed into the control of Modernism. And Modernism does not believe in Sin, nor the Wrath of God, nor Judgment to come.

It is said, sometimes, by the Modernists that by getting rid of the Wrath of God we are able to see him better as a God of Love. The answer is that no one can really appreciate the Love of God without some understanding of God's Wrath. When the Christian understands, as Jonathan Edwards did, the awful nature of the Divine Wrath which must fall upon human sin, then he begins to see the Infinite Love of that God who himself bore the penalty of sin in our stead. Modernism, by the very nature of its philosophy, can never know the Love of God.

TACKLING the Problem of Marriage

In Indianapolis, Indiana, it is reported that forty out of every one hundred marriages come to an end in annulment or divorce. Disturbed by the situation, authorities of Butler University, situated in that city, have inaugurated a course of study for the purpose of finding what is wrong, and also how to succeed in the marriage relationship.

This university course in marriage relations is to be divided into four parts; one dealing with the physical aspects of marriage, another with the economic side, a third with the psychological phase, and (can you believe it) a fourth dealing with the spiritual aspect.

But, as you might expect, the spiritual side is to be taught by an unbeliever, a Unitarian preacher. He will try to show his students how to achieve happiness in marriage through spiritual means. The effort, of course, is doomed to failure. The Christian knows that there is but one spiritual sphere where true and permanent marital happiness may be found, and that is IN CHRIST, whose glory and deity the Unitarian preacher denies.

The use of the word "spiritual" is no guarantee that a movement is good. There are two "spirits" in the world. If you wish to know the false from the true, apply the test laid down by the Apostle John: "Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not Jesus is not of God" (First John 4:1-3 ARV).

MERRILY Going to Hell

Today you will not often hear a preacher courageous enough to tell his people the truth about the moving picture industry. Too many of them attend. It is rather remarkable that the severest published criticism quite often comes not from the pulpit, but from those whose own work is linked up with the stage.

A well known theatrical writer in a Cleveland newspaper recently went on the war-path regarding the "filth" of the theater. He said, "Filth helped to kill burlesque. It has done incalculable damage to vaudeville. It has shamed the legitimate stage. And the movies merrily go to (the same) hell without studying the lessons the stage was taught."

It is the considered opinion of some thoughtful men that the movies are doing more spiritual and moral damage than even the old saloon did in its worst days. It is very doubtful whether any boy or girl ever took as a great ideal either the drunkard or the bartender that sold him liquor. But thousands of boys and girls are taking for their ideal certain persons of the screen whose marital adventures proclaim their morals to be of such a character as would have brought a blush to the cheek of the average old-time bartender. And he did not blush easily.

What Others Say About the Church Paper

It is good occasionally to sit back and listen to what others have to say about the particular task a person is set to promote. That is our feeling just now with regard to the church paper. We have talked often and much about it, and have always had a sympathetic hearing, but for this once, we want to stand by and let others say some of the same things we have often said. It may sound different, if it isn't new. First, we will give the floor to a whole group of men engaged in the same work in which we are engaged—fellow editors, met in the Editorial Council of the Religious Press:

"The industrial depression has made the financial situation of Protestant journals even more precarious than usual, and dwindling subscription lists mean a restriction in influence as well as finances. When the majority of Protestant families get their interpretation of the work of the church from secular journals instead of the religious press, it must be obvious that our Protestant leadership is not awake to the menace of the present situation, and that more statesmanlike measures should be devised to secure a reading of Christian literature in the homes of the people."

Bishop H. Lester Smith of the Methodist Episcopal Church says: "A religious periodical is a necessity for every Christian who desires to be informed upon the ideals, the program and the progress of religion in the life of the world today. The secular press does not and cannot discuss the problems of religion, of morals, of industry, of society, and of human life in general from the Christian viewpoint. . . . The church paper is a necessity for every member of the church who wishes to be informed concerning the ideals, program and progress of his own church. No general religious paper can give sufficient space to the details of the activities and the undertakings for which the churches are responsible. Here our people will find the truth about Prohibition, which they do not find in any of our secular papers. Here will also be found the discussion of world peace, of moral, social and economic problems from the Christian viewpoint in such a helpful form that the ideals of our young people will be formed upon Christian principles."

The Editor of The Christian Advocate (Methodist Episcopal Church, South) is speaking: "I do not have the exact figures, but it is approximately correct to say that of the 500,000 families in our church, four-fifths of them are without any of our periodicals. We are bewailing the debacle, but we should not be surprised. Nothing else can be expected when Arthur Brisbane and like-minded writers are the oracles of the large majority of Methodists. As one example, the most conscienceless propaganda that was ever put over on uninformed church members has been circulated by the wet press against Prohibition. The small circulation of the church press is the most serious handicap in refuting the widespread misrepresentation. We lay no claim to an insight that is able to locate the responsibility. Certainly I am not talking down to pastors, for I have a recollection that I was not an ideal pastor. But this much is true, if we are to stem the currents of secularism and religious ignorance and indifference which threatens to engulf us, we must make a more vigorous and persistent effort to circulate the periodicals of our church."

The Committee on the Baptist Press makes report, observing the small circulation of Baptist papers and seeking to account for it, concludes: "The remedy for this situation lies with pastors and other leaders of the local churches. They alone can make the church membership, as a whole, acquainted with our denominational literature, arouse in them an interest in it, and create in them an appetite for it."

Call up the voice of John Wesley and hear him admonish his preachers: "It cannot be that the people should grow in grace unless they give themselves to reading. . . . Press this upon them with all your might." And Mr. Wesley was right—the people must read if they would be nourished in mind and heart, read especially their Bible and their church paper.

A Warning to the Evangelist Readers

We are sorry to have to write anything uncomplimentary about a Christian brother, and particularly a brother in the ministry. We would much prefer to help him. And this we have tried to do. We have tried to be a friend to Brother H. C. Marlin, editor of the "Postscript" and have sought by personal correspondence with him to persuade him to change from the unchristian attitude of knocking and opposing everything and everybody to one of Christian co-operation and helpfulness in the work of the Lord. Others also have written him in the spirit of brotherliness, trying to get him to cease his unwarranted attacks upon the institutions and leadership of the church, but he has refused to give any heed to these expressions of personal interest. Such infractions of Christian courtesy and misrepresentations of men and conditions as those to which he has given his paper cannot go on indefinitely without public protest and the issuance of warning. After long and patient effort to avoid so distasteful a task, we have come to the place where we feel we must advise our readers of the general unreliability of his stories about Brethren work and workers.

Brother Marlin has been wrong both as to the accuracy and the character of much that he has written. That is, he has characterized his brethren in unchristian ways and has not been true to the facts in many things he has said about them. And for proof of this statement we need only to quote his own words. In a signed statement which he made before the National Ministerial Association and which was published in The Evangelist under date of September 10, 1932, as well as in his own paper, he said:

After hearing the testimony, I have been convinced . . . I have been wrong in my method, too vigorous and outspoken in my language, and have in too many instances made insinuations and false statements based on, and provoked by, much misinformation from many of my brethren, and have called my brethren by unchristian names.

Furthermore, I am sorry for and greatly regret the injury done to the cause of Ashland College, Ashland Seminary, the Home Mission Board of the Brethren Church, the Foreign Mission Board, the work of the 1931 Conference, and church leaders in general.

I now frankly, sincerely and humbly repent, retract and ask forgiveness for all offenses and promise to make the policy of the Postscript conservative, promoting harmony and peace in the brotherhood. . . .

Brother Marlin made his retraction voluntarily. When he was faced with the facts and was unable to offer any evidence in support of the offending statements and false accusations published in his paper, he brought voluntarily to the next session of the Association a written retraction, acknowledging the untruthfulness of many things he had published, asking for forgiveness and promising to change the policy of his paper, even offering (verbally, it may not have been written down) to permit a committee of three ministers from the Association to cooperate with him in directing the policy of his paper. His statement was accepted in principle and as a basis from which a committee, every member of which was approved by him, went into session with him and brought out the identical statement which he signed and most of which we have quoted above.

We thought he was sincere, and I would not say that he was not, for I believed he was. But for some reason when he got back home, he changed his attitude. Why, only he knows. He had the same affidavits in his traveling bag at Winona Lake that he had when he got home, at least he told us he had such affidavits. But he didn't rely on them when he was there in the presence of evidence he could not deny. He went home and forthwith retracted his retraction. Even then we were personally inclined to treat him with forbearance and patience, hoping he would yet see the error of his way. But after these months, he still persists in abusing his brethren in his paper and reiterating accusations which he admitted were false. And now he misrepresents the situation with regard to one of our Ohio churches—that of Middlebranch. and heaps abuse upon the Elder called in by the members of that church to guide them in their difficulty.

He refers to The Evangelist, his own church paper and the organ of the church he says he loves, as a "purveyor of hokum." We do not need to make a denial of such a ridiculous charge. The many loyal members of the Evangelist family know it is mere cavil. We merely call attention to this to illustrate from another angle how easy it seems for Brother Marlin to give expression to carping criticisms and unfounded assertions and misrepresentations. We do not profess to know his motives, or to understand how he arrives at the positions he takes, but we do know in a goodly number of instances that he has not been in accord with the facts, as he himself confessed at Winona Lake.

Brother Marlin has said much about the "steam roller" and the "gang", but we have never known him to be denied the right of expression or discussion. It is a figment of his own imagination. It may be that not every question has been settled in accord with his views. The same can be said for us. But not everybody can have his way, and the majority must rule in a democratic body. He has had the same right that every member of the church ought to have, of entering into the discussions of problems and policies without jeopardizing his standing or position. We are not in favor of smothering discussion, done at the proper time and in the right way, and we believe that practically all the ministry and lay leadership that attend our conferences are of the same mind. But once a decision has been reached after free discussion and vote of the delegates present, a man has no right to set out on the war-path and spend the entire year following knocking and bitterly criticizing. That isn't the Christian spirit, nor is it the way to success in a Christian institution. The man who will rule or ruin is always having trouble and his fellows are always at fault, according to his views. But when a man has a paper and publishes his distorted views broadcast, he does incalculable harm. And it is to warn the Evangelist readers against taking too seriously just such a situation that these words have been written. The Postscript did not show any improvement in reliability at the time of the publishing of the retraction above referred to, and we have waited in vain for it to show any improvement since.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother C. D. Whitmer puts the Christian Endeavor program for the months of January and February again before the young people on their page. Also, they will find there an interesting article by the Quiet Hour Superintendent, Brother Ray Klingensmith.

We again invite the ministers and leaders among the laity to make use of our new editorial department devoted to recording the thought of the brotherhood. If you have a thought you believe would be helpful to others, send it in. Write thoughtfully, constructively and carefully.

President E. E. Jacobs in his College Notes records some of the holiday activities of some members of the faculty. It is always encouraging when any of our institutions are able to report specific gifts to meet specific needs. Some needed redecorations have been made at the college by means of some such gifts. We believe God moves his people to take care of the agencies of his church when they keep within his will.

Prof. M. A. Stuckey, of the Ashland Seminary, was chosen by the Ashland Ministerial Association to deliver a series of sermons at the union services during the "week of prayer," and all of his five sermons dealt with different phases of Biblical teaching and example in prayer. His sermons were of a high order, being both instructive and inspirational and the public interest in them was proven by the steadily increased attendance from night to night.

Brother John H. Thompson, whose decease is recorded in this issue, was more than an ordinary layman, as every minister acquainted with the Uniontown, Pennsylvania, membership could testify. Few of the regular attendants at General Conference were more intelligent or more widely read than he, and he also had devotion and humility. His pastor, Brother Blough, and a former, Brother Belote, pay tribute to his memory in another department of this paper.

A new feature in the way of service now being offered the brotherhood by the National Sunday School Association is the promotion of the use of tracts, and a tract superintendent has been selected in the person of Brother Leslie E. Lindower, pastor of the church at Warsaw, Indiana. This week he gives his first installment of reviews of tracts, dealing in this instance with tracts on Baptism. You will be interested in his further reviews.

Our Canton correspondent says that thirty-one confessions have been made in this growing Ohio church during the past quarter under the ministry of their pastor, Dr. J. C. Beal. The evangelistic campaign was closed with a communion service that was exceptional both from the standpoint of attendance and enjoyment. Brother Beal places large emphasis on Bible instruction in his ministry and the Canton church is increasing steadily, not merely in numbers, but in spirituality and power.

Our good correspondent from Lanark, Illinois, is right when he says there can never be any depression with God and consequently no financial depression can stop the forward march of spiritual forces,—if God's people are sufficiently dependent upon him. The Lanark pastor, Brother C. C. Grisso, has given and is yet to give some time to other churches in evangelism, and during his absence the regular services are being cared for by the organized departments of the church, the young people especially showing themselves efficient.

Dr. C. F. Yoder, leader of our mission work in the Argentine, writes that Brother Luis Farre, the converted priest, has been giving a series of sermons in each of our churches, much to the delight and profit of his hearers. We note the team work and division of labor and Sisters Nielsen and Larson make a splendid team for the conduct of vacation Bible schools in the different missions. The tent is proving a great blessing in their evangelistic campaigns and at Firmat the attendance ran over 300 from night to night.

We are glad to be able to begin with this week Dr. Bauman's series of Bible studies, repeatedly promised in these columns. We were sorry that the first installment arrived too late for the first issue of the New Year, but Brother Bauman expects to be able to maintain his studies without interruption from now on, although with his time so much in demand it will be quite a sacrifice to do so. But we are sure our readers will appreciate what he may give us. He has, as have other writers, the freedom to give us what he most desires, and we shall count it a real contribution.

Don't fail to read the Business Manager's Corner this week. Dr. Teeter has something more to say about the Publication Day offering which you are not to take for the Publishing House at all, but are to apply it on Evangelist subscriptions for your own local church folks. Maybe you'd like to use it to pay subscriptions for those who are unable to subscribe, or to pay part on the subscriptions of all, or apply on your church budget, if your church is sending the paper to all on its membership. There are just two things we are asking, if at all possible; take an offering, and then use it to help put the Evangelist in your homes.

Brother J. L. Gingrich writes of the work of the Third church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where he is pastor, and we are especially interested in his merged service program. The merged service is not an uncommon arrangement these days, but there are several ways of conducting such a service. We are glad to note the aims they kept in mind and to have him say their arrangement was successful. Brother Gingrich is giving much attention to Bible instruction in his Sunday and mid-week services. This can be said of many of our pastors, and it augurs good for the future. Bible instructed Christians make good church members.

The matron of the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana, tells of Christmas at the Home and of the splendid gifts that made the Christmas festivities possible, and which also helped to pay some

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Mrs. Eleanor Romanenghi, whose husband is pastor at Rio Cuarto, Argentina, and who is the daughter of Dr. Yoder, is somewhat broken in health. The doctor has ordered her to take a six months' rest in the country. Pray for her speedy recovery.

Pray for the tent meetings being conducted in our missions in Argentina, that many may find Christ.

The Prohibition Slump

By Prof. L. L. Garber, Lit.D

"Public sentiment is everything. With public sentiment nothing can fail; without it, nothing can succeed. Consequently, he who moulds public sentiment goes deeper than he who enacts statutes or pronounces decisions. He makes statutes and decisions possible or impossible to be executed."—Abraham Lincoln.

"The world is governed in every generation by a great House of Commons made up by the Human Passions; and we should be careful to see that the Handsome Passions are in the majority."—Woodrow Wilson.

"I have found courage, faith, and inspiration in literature. My conviction has deepened that the progress of the world is dependent upon a widening appreciation of good literature. 'Man shall not live by bread alone.' All the wonders with which science has surrounded us, merely tell us what we can do; they do not reveal what we can be. Of themselves they add nothing to our moral power and are indifferent to the higher aspirations of the soul. If we want to increase our knowledge of liberty and patriotism, of justice and mercy, of self-sacrifice and charity, of any of the ideals that raise men above themselves, we turn to literature."—Calvin Coolidge.

Millions of Americans are watching the passing show at Washington with anxious hope and fearful foreboding. To those of us who for a generation have been working, praying, giving, sometimes to the extent of thousands of dollars, to make America a sober nation, the prospect of the nation's going back to drink, drunkenness, and debauchery seems a tragic frustration, an inglorious defeat, a surprising failure where success seemed assured.

Whatever the outcome of prospective legislation, the situation is one that should give Christian Americans deep and thoughtful concern. How comes it that so triumphant a victory has been so soon turned to inauspicious defeat? What has become of the temperance sentiment that adopted the prohibition amendment in 46 out of 48 states? What trumpeter has given forth an uncertain sound? Who betrayed the cause? Who mismanaged the campaign? Where did education, religion, government fail? To this and similar questions, this article will attempt to give a partial answer.

The fundamental error of the temperance forces—educational, religious, governmental, is that their psychology was in the main wrong: They failed to create, to develop, to build up a sustaining public sentiment in favor of the prohibition amendment. Without such sustaining sentiment, every cause, however worthy, fails; especially is it certain to fail, where a large and powerful minority are motivated by old habits, where there is the antagonism of avaricious and greedy wealth, where a corrupt and powerful press continually creates opposing sentiment.

Thoughtful reader, re-think the wise words of Abraham Lincoln. How aptly, pointedly, unmistakably he states the case. "With public sentiment, nothing can fail; without it, nothing can succeed." "He who moulds public sentiment goes deeper than he who makes statutes: He makes statutes possible or impossible to be executed."

Re-study the profound and suggestive statement of Woodrow Wilson. "The world is governed in every generation by a great House of Commons, made up by the Human Passions:" the ideals, the emotions, the sentiments,—the feeling elements of personality—these are in every age and in every time the governing and controlling forces. Consequently, keep the Handsome Passions, as the desire for cleanness, purity, reverence, justice, honesty, sobriety, in the majority.

Re-examine the autobiographical record of Calvin Coolidge. Note that the chief character-forming elements in his life were the ideals and sentiments gathered and absorbed from great literature: the great biographies, the great poems; from the makers of men who stress ideals and sentiments as the most essential parts of education,—such education as inspired and empowered the men who put prohibition into the constitution.

Here we have failed. What has religion, education, government done in the last twenty years to develop and build up a national sustaining sentiment "without which statutes are impossible to be executed, without which nothing can succeed?" In many cases next to nothing; in all cases far too little. Education has busied itself mainly in learning THINGS, rather than in becoming SOMETHING. It has all but neglected the "Handsome Passions," to say nothing of keeping them in the majority. It has devoted itself far too exclusively to fact-mungering and process-acquiring,—scientific, linguistic, literary, historical,—under the naive delusion that merely to know things is the way to goodness, to happiness, to human welfare. Education has thus denied the faith of Lincoln, of Wilson, of Coolidge, as well as that of the Bible. "Keep thy heart (tastes, sentiments, ideals) with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

What has the church done? Something but far too little. It has relied chiefly upon a few fragments of hours from a few fragments of days to build up and maintain that personal and national solidarity of sentiment "without which nothing succeeds;" whereas the situation demanded a more continuous, a better organized, a better-methodized program. Not only has the church failed to encourage the creation of the necessary political machinery, as proportional representation and direct legislation, through which it might express itself certainly, justly, powerfully, and not have its strength misrepresented, wasted, obscured, as in the hocus-pocus, hodge-podge of issue in the last election; but also it has failed to utilize its strength and opportunity in controlling the great sentiment-creating and ideal-fashioning forces in the support of prohibition. In too large part, the church has sat

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

If it is repealed—Who will be to blame?

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION. ARTICLE XVIII. Section 1. After one year from the ratification of this article, the manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from, the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes, is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall be ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several states, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

idly by in laissez faire fashion while education has been lost in formalism, and the public press, the radio, the movie, have been in considerable part prostituted to every doubtful, vile, and greed-promoting interest.

In no sense do we depreciate or underrate religion. Religion must furnish the great dynamic of proper living. But in order that this dynamic may be effective it must be spread and must be shared. This necessitates the embodiment of this dynamic in concrete and artistic forms, as art, literature, the movie, and political institutions.

What has the government done? Some honest effort has been made to enforce prohibition and some effective results obtained; but far too often the enforcement has been entrusted to party henchmen who denied the authority and doubted the efficiency of the statute. Statutes do indeed create sentiment, but the tragic failure of this effort in many cases is a convincing proof of Lincoln's dictum: "Without public sentiment, laws are impossible to be executed." The failure of government, like that of the church, has largely been one of omission. The government has not, as was its duty, utilized its power, its resources, its prestige, in strategic places to support and sustain the prohibition amendment. How much has the government done to build into the majority of its citizens those "Handsome Passions which govern in every generation?" What public organs has it published and controlled for this purpose? What sentiment-creating movies has it had written and exhibited toward this end? What radio broadcasts has it organized and sustained to promote these high issues? "None, Brutus, None."

Suggestive examples of what may be done to create that "public sentiment which makes laws and their enforcement possible or impossible," which "keeps the Handsome Passions in the majority," which "develops those sterling and worthy ideals that create great citizenship," are exhibited in modern Italy and Russia. There, the press, education, the radio, the movie, are all used in scientific fashion to create the sustaining sentiment in support of the ideals and ambitions of the state. In this way, the illiterate conglomerate body of citizens is being unified into a homogenous and enthusiastic citizenry supporting the state's program. A utilization of the same effective methods in America would have made the 18th amendment safe against the possibility of repeal.

As "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," it is also the price of temperance and good government. As citizens, we should lose no time in the utilization of every means to regain lost ground in the re-education of the growing generation as to the perils of intemperance. Christian America faces another similar task. We have a vast and growing crime problem. The same neglect, ineptitude, and stupidity that has brought about the crisis in prohibition, has permitted amongst us the development of the most disgraceful and colossal criminal body of citizens that has ever afflicted a civilized state. The solution of the crime problem must follow the same scientific and fundamental methods as will be effective in the rehabilitation of temperance sentiment.

Worldly Thrills versus Spiritual Joys

By Ruth Waymire

Of all man's enemies—the world, the flesh and the devil—the world is the most subtle and insidious. The flesh and the devil are almost always recognizable; we usually enter into fellowship with open eyes. But the world is so seemingly innocent, and so ingratiatingly beckons, and promises such alluring reward! He cunningly blindfolds his victims, or perhaps gives them some pleasant opiate before he leads them into destruction.

The world's most effective weapon is propaganda. The power to mold and change men's minds through the press, the drama, music and literature is great. Subtle and effective are the insinuations. Not long ago we witnessed one of the most colossal attempts imaginable on the part of one of the leading periodicals, not to find out the opinions of men, but to mold them, to get them to flock together, to respond to the herd instinct. The popular mind becomes really intolerant of Prohibition. Some one said to me that he thought people who were so narrow-minded as to believe in Prohibition were cranks and should "get out." Thank God that is just what God's children will be doing, and I hope soon, when our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ returns for his own in the rapture. But until that time they must be about their Father's business here below, doing all the good they can, making war against sin and wrong-doing, seductive influences and evil devices.

The worldly and sacreligious influence at work is to be seen in the titles of much of the popular music and the vicious movies. Not only is there much that is crass and vulgar, cheap and suggestive, but actually blasphemous. Such sacred words as "Hallelujah," "Hosanna," "Salvation," "Gospel," "Glory," "Green Pastures," and all that life holds dear are being thrown into the insatiable maw of the god of this age—jazz. The evil influence on the unbeliever is great. When he hears these words he thinks only of the worldly connection, and mocks and ridicules. Those who devise such sacreligious influences will be held accountable.

Anyone can notice the lowering of standards of conduct through the influence of the movies and their portrayal of loose morals. Not only is an evil influence exerted through the pictures, but also through the lives of many who help to make the pictures. Through their influence popularity is given to evil ways, and the proper form of conduct is ridiculed. "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil," we read in Isaiah 5:20. All the old virtues of bygone days are being laughed out of court. Modesty, humility, chastity, and even honesty are being considered by many as out-of-date. Restraint is thrown to the winds. Everything must bend toward giving a good time, and the popular idea of a "good time" includes all too many of those things which strike against the physical well-being of men and women, and also against their highest mental and spiritual good. People are being trained or influenced to covet the things that are base, or unworthy, or passing. If I were a preacher I would write or preach a sermon on two texts which I think explain the situation and point the remedy. They are:

"There is no fear of God before their eyes."

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

Nothing is sacred any more. Surely all sensitively religious souls were grieved at seeing the sacreligious perverting of Bible verses to notorious characters by a well known columnist in the newspapers.

Children are no longer being reared in the fear and admonition of the Lord. Little wonder then that they are bewildered when the time comes for them to make choices, and to resist temptation. They have no solid moral foundation, no background of religious training. With the example of their elders before them, and in addition the modernistic teaching in the schools, the movies, modern literature, the lives of many of their teachers and even some pastors who partake of the same worldly amusements that they do, you cannot blame them for being worldly and disgusted with past standards. They are sick of being told on the one hand that they are going to the dogs and on the other that they are the hope of the world.

They must be taught through example and precept that the words, "Come out from among them and be ye separate" are still the key to the Christian life. The transient thrills of the world are as nothing to compare with the deep joy and delight of a life dedicated to God through prayer, Bible study, and service. I would most assuredly be the most pessimistic of individuals as I look about on present conditions, were it not for the "Blessed Hope" which all this presages. Through the clouds of doubt and despair, which hover overhead we can see the Sun of Righteousness rising with healing in his wings.

"Even so come quickly, Lord Jesus."

THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH

Editorials from Ministers and Laymen

GROWTH IN THE EARLY CHURCH; GROWTH IN ANY CHURCH

Verse 31 of the ninth chapter of Acts is one of the great verses of that New Testament book. Of course it should be studied. "Then had the churches rest throughout all Judaea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost were multiplied." Moffatt gives us this rendering: "Now, all over Judaea, Galilee, and Samaria, the church enjoyed peace; it was consolidated, inspired by reverence for the Lord and by its invocation of the Holy Spirit, and so increased in numbers."

It is worth while to study growth of the church in New Testament times. The elements of growth are hereby set forth. Peace, edification, multiplication. People grow in the things of God in an atmosphere of peace. It is not possible always to have peace with the forces of opposition without. But the Lord frowns on turmoil within. Paul exhorts the church to "follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another" (Rom. 14:19). People of the same faith in the same community finding it necessary to worship Almighty God in separate buildings do not look good to a scoffing world. We know what God thinks about it. As Moffatt puts it, the early church "was consolidated, inspired by reverence for the Lord, and by its invocation of the Holy Spirit, AND SO INCREASED IN NUMBERS." The church is God's life-saving crew. Like a great ship pounding to pieces on the rocks, as the present world-order is men inspired by reverence for the Lord, and comfort of the Holy Ghost, would be expected by worldly critics to be busy rescuing as many of the crew as possible before they all go down beneath the beating waves. Debates about the best method of repairing a doomed ship can not be expected to interest very many people. And what are paint cans and brass tacks worth anyhow to an old ship pounding in pieces by the rush of the oncoming waves? God's call is to get the drowning men and women off the sinking ship. No, this present world-order, however men may be trained in its ways, can never put souls into the Kingdom. "Numbers" in God's sight is at the end of DOING GOD'S WORK IN GOD'S OWN WAY.

BLASPHEMY

The charge, of which Jesus Christ was not guilty, but for which he was crucified, was blasphemy. In his last stand before the priests they ask him: "Art thou the Son of God? And he said unto them, Ye say that I am. And they said, What need we any further witnesses? for we ourselves have heard of his own mouth." This to the Jew was blasphemy. They thought rightly that God was holy. They concluded wrongly that Christ was not holy and that he was an imposter and hence a blasphemer. But which was blasphemer, Christ or priests? No one will deny today that the priests were the blasphemers in that they crucified the holy Son of God.

But many who would admit this as truth still continue themselves to blaspheme. God said to Moses in the mount, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." Men who would not abuse another man do not hesitate to commit the crime for which Christ was crucified innocently. Yet if Christ had been guilty he had suffered the death penalty justly.

In most states there are statutes that declare profanity a crime and the offender to be punished. But how many of us have heard many executives of the law violating this law and others they have vowed to enforce! But what is still worse, we know all too often, some of the very persons who claim their hope of eternal salvation in the name of him who was heinously blasphemed against, in turn take their place with the priests who crucified him, by taking their precious Savior's name in vain. Shall we forget, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God?"

The only excuse for blasphemous, columnious, vile profanity, is short witted, ignorant cussedness. To say that it is just carelessness and thoughtlessness is bad enough but is putting the matter entirely too mildly. No true child of God has any business blaspheming the name of his only Savior and Lord Jesus Christ.

SIGNS OF HIS COMING

Recently a minister in Kansas City preached to a mid-week congregation on the Second Coming of Jesus. He referred to the economic stress in which the whole world is engulfed as a "sign" and caused his audience to wonder "How Long (?) people would have to endure and "What next (?) they would have to go through with. His thought was that the world is on a toboggan economically and can last no more than three years more. And, to add to the trouble, there are those who would bring back prosperity with "beer." That will never work. It will only increase the misery and darken the gloom. It may also be another "sign" of the Lord's soon return. We don't want the return of the liquor traffic and will fight it. But we are looking for our Lord's return, and I personally don't care how soon.

But if he carries a season or a few years, what is that to me? That is the Father's business; he only knows the time. One man says he wishes Jesus would return right now; he is ready. A certain woman says, "I do not want him to come soon, for I have some plans to work out, and my daughter will graduate next year." Well well! Who are we to set times for God?

Just WHEN Jesus comes is the Father's business; to WATCH and be ready is OUR business. Lord, help us to be faithful while we wait.

of the matron's grocery bills. It is to be noted that no men are mentioned as among the givers this week, but perhaps the needs of the occasion and the individuals in the home had something to do with it. However, if memory serves us right, the good women and girls seem to be much in the majority in giving to the Home. Do the women have more money than the men during these hard times, or are they just more sacrificial?

Brother George A. Copp, treasurer of the Southeastern District Mission Board, writes concerning payments that are due from the churches of that district and of the importance of meeting those obligations promptly. Knowing something of the problems connected with district mission work we covet for the officials of that district the very best response possible. That leads us to say that the Treasurer of the Ohio District recently informed the editor that some Ohio churches are getting considerably in arrears in their district apportionments. We urge Ohio churches also to do their best. They have an enviable record to maintain.

Brother Paul Davis, the young pastor of the church at Center Chapel, near Peru, Indiana, is rejoicing with his people in God's blessing upon them during the evangelistic campaign recently brought to a close, with eight confessions, three reconsecrations and many strengthened in their faith. Brother Davis was his own evangelist and the people gave him hearty cooperation and support, both in the music during the meetings and in calling in the homes in the interest of the Gospel. God always gives power to churches that give themselves to the task of soul winning in such a united and consecrated way. These people are enjoying the ministry of Brother Davis, as the church secretary informs us. This church was under the pastoral care of Brother J. W. Clark until illness caused him to relinquish his work.

Brother Dyoil Belote, pastor of the church at Ashland, Ohio, writes of the progress of the Lord's work at this place and reports from the pastor's standpoint the meetings recently written up by Dr. Miller. He tells us that of the thirteen people who took a stand for Christ during Dr. Bell's meetings, six were received into membership by baptism, two came by relation and two made re-consecration of themselves to Christ. It was a good meeting and the Ashland people enjoyed the messages of the evangelist. We believe the Ashland church is in a wholesome spiritual state and that Brother Belote's ministry is being appreciated. The good work being done along Christian Endeavor lines is especially deserving of commendation.

A good layman from one of our strongest churches writes this gracious note, which we venture to publish as a sample of the fine rewards that come to us, bringing encouragement in the midst of our strenuous work: "I wish to express my appreciation for the splendid work which you have accomplished as editor of our denominational paper. I am looking forward to even greater success during the coming year. May the Lord richly bless, not only The Evangelist during 1933, but its staff as well." We thank this kind brother and all others who have written encouraging words, and we thank also those who have offered helpful criticism. We truly appreciate and invite the latter. May we also ask for the prayers of God's people in behalf of ourselves personally and the work we seek to do.

An encouraging note is sounded by Brother Sylvester Lowman, pastor at Oakville, Indiana, where the calendar year was closed with the financial slate clean and enough fuel secured through a wood chopping to last through the winter. Oakville, we are glad to hear them say, is loyal to every general interest of the church. That is the spirit to demonstrate—the willingness to do what they can for every cause of the church, whether it be much or little. That gives encouragement as much as anything else we could mention. The church was greatly revived by means of a special campaign conducted in October under the leadership of the pastor, and concerning which we made editorial comment at the time. "Eighteen or twenty" reconsecrations were the numerical results. Brother Lowman is justly proud of his young people who maintain Christian Endeavor meetings with an attendance of from thirty to fifty.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

SOME PEOPLE KNOW

Robert G. Ingersoll, the great agnostic, left this statement on record: "Someone will ask whence I come and whither I am going. I do not know whence I came and I do not know whither I am going. I am on a wide sea sailing on a great ship. I know only a few of the passengers, and I have no acquaintance with either the pilot or the captain. If this ship goes down in mid-ocean, I will go down with it; if it rounds into a beautiful harbor, I'll be there." That sounds beautiful, and it is perhaps all that an unbeliever could say touching the future. But another has left on record a statement far more beautiful and far more satisfying to the human heart. It is so familiar that we scarce need to repeat it here—"In my Father's house are many mansions: . . . I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go, and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know."—Religious Telescope.

LACKING WISDOM

We of the present generation are more confused and perplexed than we have ever been. The financial world is a seething sea and the man of large estate and the smallest tradesmen do not know what to do. Political matters, national and international, are tumultuous and intricate, and those whom we count wisest are not agreed. We all have hope that Franklin D. Roosevelt will prove to be able to lead the people out of the political turmoil. There is confusion in the Church, and no one can remember when there was as great a variety of utterances. Amid it all, the average man or woman who thinks at all is much perplexed. Outstanding and trustworthy leaders are very, very rare. We consult experts, but find they are confused likewise, and if clear-spoken, are wrong as often as they are right.

There is a Bible text which ought to give us some comfort and hope in the confusion. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." In that statement of the practical James, the solution will be found. We depend too much on human wisdom, knowledge and device when a greater wisdom is within reach. We think we will get into smoother circumstances sooner by seeking the wisdom of God than by all the plans and devices of men.—The Presbyterian.

FREE ADVERTISING FOR THE BOOTLEGGERS

How low the press of our cities has fallen in the moral and journalistic scale is manifest by the way the papers act as panders to the element that seeks to prey upon the weaknesses of the public. There is no theatrical exhibition that is too vile to be admitted to the advertising columns. The valuable news columns are freely given to the race-betting fraternity.

Of the same character is the manner in which the Cincinnati Times-Star on December 22 devoted the bottom of its front page, space too valuable to be sold, to a page-wide spread of a free advertisement of the bootleggers' business. The prices of liquors and wines were carefully explained and the whole matter was given the treatment of a quite honorable transaction.

Of course, it is supposed that the Times-Star is too honorable to have received a financial return for this. As a matter of fact, the wet press is a kept press; they are all delighted at the prospect that they will receive advertising of beer and liquors beside which the recent cigarette advertising will not be a circumstance.

There was a time when the Cincinnati Times-Star had some respect from the better type of Cincinnati citizens. Now they barely endure it.—The Christian Standard.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

"In the Beginning."

(Genesis 1:1)

Genesis, says Webster, means "the origination or coming into being of anything." The Biblical book of Genesis derives its name from the substance contained largely in its first three chapters, where Omnipotence tells us how things first got under way in the heavens, and especially on this troubled old terra firma. He who understands the work and the ways of God must first understand Genesis. Scofield is right: "In a profound sense, the roots of all subsequent revelation are planted deep in Genesis, and whoever would truly comprehend that revelation must begin here."

It is not too much to say that there is not one single great or fundamental doctrine in all the Word of God that is not found in the germ in Genesis. With these doctrines as they come to us in the germ, this series of articles will deal.

As to the Mosaic authorship and divine authority back of this genesis of all the fundamental truth, we are not disposed to enter into any argument. Why should we? The Master of all, Himself God incarnate, said to the Jews: "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me" (John 5:46). Unless we are ready to reject the whole order of Christian faith, that statement is sufficient; for, to reject the authority of Christ is to reject the whole system of Christianity.

"In the Beginning, God Created the Heaven and the Earth"

For simple sublimity, overwhelming majesty and fathomless depth of knowledge, no sentence that ever came from tongue or pen can compare with the first six words of the Hebrew Bible, translated by the ten English words: "In—the—beginning—God—created—the—heaven—and—the—earth." We need not wonder that the great French infidel Rousseau, was compelled to confess: "The majesty of the Scriptures strikes me with astonishment!" At a single stroke, six Hebrew words emblazon the universal darkness and impel light to burst forth upon the stupendous problems which, from time immemorial, have baffled the utmost powers of human thought. Men may accept the statement or reject it. If they accept it, they have an Omnipotent Thinker "in the beginning"; and, in him, they have the solution of all things that were, and are, and are to come. With him, there are no mysteries in the physical realm—only miracles. But, reject those first six words, and the universe at once becomes an enigma, defying all solution. The existence of an uncreated Intelligence in the beginning may stagger our comprehension, but not more than the existence of uncreated matter; or, worse yet, the existence of nonexistence. The fool of fools is the man who makes comprehension the boundary-line of faith. So long as man cannot comprehend how he can lay his hand on the top of his head, it is hardly in order for him to refuse faith in God because he cannot comprehend how God was "in the beginning;" and, in that "beginning," laid the foundations for the heaven and the earth.

Here, then, in six simple words, we have the stupendous facts of a personal God; of the first great Cause of all that exists; and, of the orderly creation of the universe. Yea, we have here in six words, a sufficient answer for all time to all the problems of atheism, materialism, pantheism, and polytheism.

Of one thing we are sure, no uninspired penman first wrote these six words. There is hardly room enough on all the shelves of the great Congressional Library at Washington for all the books that man already has written on the genesis of things. And one would think that man has hardly yet made a beginning on his thesis. Moses wrote six words, and then—"Finis." Moses? Pardon us—only a God writes like that!

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

Haggai

Dr. John D. Davis, Ph.D., D.D., LL.D., Professor of Oriental and Old Testament Literature in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, New Jersey, taught, prior to his death, the following to his students concerning the prophet and the writing of Haggai:

"A prophet, contemporary with Zechariah (Hag. 1:1 with Zech. 1:1). He prophesied after the return from Babylon. The work on the temple had ceased for 15 years, and Haggai was largely instrumental in arousing the people to proceed with the building (Ezra 5. 1, 2; 6:14).

The book of Haggai is the tenth of the minor prophets. It consists of four prophecies delivered within the space of four months in the second year of Darius Hystaspis, 520 B. C.

1. On the first day of the 6th month the prophet reproaches those who left the temple in ruins and built ceiled houses for themselves, and he points out that God's blessing is withholden from their ordinary labor. In consequence of this exhortation, work on the temple was resumed on the twenty-fourth day of the same month (1).

2. In the 7th month, 21st day, he encourages those who mourn over the humble character of the new building as compared with the splendor of the old edifice. He predicts that the latter glory of the house shall be greater than the former glory, for God will shake the nations and the desirable things of all nations, their silver and gold, shall come and fill the house with glory, and God will give peace in that place (2:1-9; Heb. 12:26-28).

3. In the 9th month, 24th day, he adds a sequel to the first prophecy. As the touch of the unclean pollutes the clean, so their former neglect of God polluted their labor and God did not bestow his blessing. But their revived zeal for God will be accompanied by fruitful seasons from the Lord (2:10-19).

4. On the same day he adds a sequel to the second prophecy. When the Lord shakes the nations, he will establish Zerubbabel, who represents the royal line of David (2:20-23)."

The teaching of Dr. Davis was remarkable for its intense clarity and wholesome tolerance. He saw things whole and stated profound truth simply. The above is a splendid example of his writing and teaching technique. He always gave the essential facts.

I THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Haggai.
2. When and Where Written? About 520 B. C., probably in Jerusalem.

3. Why Written? To Encourage the Temple Builders By Rallying the Too-Contented People.
4. To Whom Written? To Judah.
5. Authenticity. Scholars practically all agree—modernistic and conservative alike—that the writing of Haggai is a trustworthy product of the prophet himself.

II THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The First Prophecy: Rebuke. 1:1-15.
2. The Second Prophecy: Encouragement. 2:1-9.
3. The Third Prophecy: Blessing. 2:10-19.
4. The Fourth Prophecy: Safety. 2:20-23.

III THE NATURE OF THE BOOK

Haggai was the first of the post-exilic prophets, being a contemporary of Zechariah. Gentile dates, for the first time in the Old Testament, grace the pages of his predictions. A Babylonian education would have a tendency to explain their inclusion.

The writer is modest, unselfish, and wastes no time in self-glorification; he glorifies only the Lord of heaven and earth. His "thus saith the Lord" is as rare in his day as it is in ours, but none the less he utters the divine message which he receives. He rebukes and criticizes men, but is gracious enough also to commend by word and stimulate by example.

IV THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Temple, "Thus Saith the Lord," "Lord of Hosts," "Consider," etc.
2. Key Verses. 1:4-6, 7, 8; 2:6-9.
3. Key Chapters. There are only two: both are equally good.
4. Key Topics. The Duty of Courage: The Desire of the Nations.

V THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

It was Isaac Newton who said, "There is scarcely a prophecy of the Messiah in the Old Testament which does not to some extent at least, refer to his second coming." And it might be added, to his first advent also. In days of discouragement, depression, and darkness, either coming has a message for us. Herein lies certainly one of the chief values of this book.

VI THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

"I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts." Hag. 1:13. So runs the burden of Haggai's prophecy. The best proof of that fact is to be observed in the fact that Christ actually came to Herod's Temple in the deep disguise of a peasant Galilean. He was a King then and is a King now; then he was dethroned, now he is enthroned; then on the earth, now in heaven. But, he will come again to Jerusalem's Temple as the chief Monarch of all time, some day, and that day will be worth something to men who now heed the noble Haggai's word, "Be strong . . . and work." He was strong and worked. How can we do less than render him worthy service?

VII THE MESSAGE OF THE BOOK

Work is one of the greatest boons known to mankind. Rest is its counterpart. If we do our work well, we are happy; if we fail to do our work well, we are unhappy. So is it with rest. If we rest sufficiently, we are healthy, if we fail to rest at all, we become unhealthy.

There is only one weakness in the preceding paragraph. Work and rest without Christ may be just so much drudgery and discontent. If Christ graces the work of each day, then it is a day well spent—full of gladness and peace. It is a great joy to work day by day for God—if we work honestly, hard, and long. Is this not the message of Haggai?

"Yet will I live my life,
Dim though its mystery be,
Not wholly lost to sense, nor yet
Absorbed in what I see.

For me—to have made one soul
The better for my birth:
To have added but one flower
To the garden of the earth:

To have struck one blow for truth
In the daily fight with lies:
To have done one deed of right
In the face of calumnies:

To have sown in the souls of men
One thought that will not die—
To have been a link in the chain of life:
Shall be immortality."

The Greatness of Christian Faith

By Leander S. Keyser

The Christian religion is a great faith-religion. No other religion lays a greater stress on faith. The Bible, which is the Christian's handbook, is a great faith-book. If one were to recite all the precious passages relative to faith that are found in the Bible, and were to arrange them in proper order, they might well form the libretto of an oratorio equal to THE CREATION OR THE MESSIAH.

Its Biblical Basis

Let us just note a few of them to get our Biblical basis. "Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness." When Job's wife became discouraged, and bade him curse God and die, he did not obey her, but said, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." Then he added those beautiful and rhythmic words, "the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord"! In the Psalms men are often exhorted to put their trust in Jehovah, not in kings or princes or in the arm of flesh.

The New Testament tells the same story. Our Lord said at the very beginning of his public ministry, "The kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel." Again, "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." How often Jesus said, "Thy faith hath made thee whole", or, "According to your faith be it unto you". The Apostle Paul echoes the same refrain, "The just shall live by faith." "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ"; "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Then listen to John's clarion paean: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

Then there is the eleventh chapter of the letter to the Hebrews, which may well be called the great faith-chapter of the Bible: "Now faith is the substance (reality) of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Hear the roll-call of the heroes of faith in Old Testament times: By faith Abel offered a more excellent sacrifice than Cain; by faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; by faith Noah built the ark, and thereby saved the human family and preserved God's plan of redemption; by faith Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and Joseph and Moses and Joshua and Gideon and Barak and Samuel and David, and all the rest of those splendid heroes, wrought their great achievements. In the next chapter we read: "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith."

Now throughout a long life, including much study, thought and experience, we have found that, whenever the Bible emphasizes something so greatly, it is because it is a matter of fundamental importance—something that inheres in the very nature of the thing; something that belongs to the very constitution of the material, moral and spiritual universe. So Christian faith is not something that can be tossed aside by a mere wave of the hand. Such an action would be indicative of a superficial mind.

Definition of Christian Faith

We are now ready to define this great thing, Christian faith. One of the best definitions we know is given in an American edition of Luther's small Catechism. It is as follows: "Christian faith is personal trust in the Lord Jesus Christ alone for salvation." How do you like that definition? The writer likes it first rate. He likes it on account of its simplicity. Everybody knows what "trust" is. Everyone knows when he trusts a person and when he does not. Even a little child knows that. We once had an experience which illustrates this point. We entered the home of one of our fellow-ministers. After we had greeted the parents, we wanted to be friendly with their little child. But she drew back from us; she was not quite sure that she could trust the stranger who had come into the home. And we had to behave ourself quite nicely for a while before we won her confidence. But she taught us a lesson on Christian faith, namely, that even a little child knows intuitively when it trusts a person and when it does not.

Now, do not you and I know whether we trust in Jesus Christ alone for our salvation? If we can say from our hearts that we do so trust him, it is one of the best inner tokens we can have that the Holy Spirit has done his office work of regeneration in our souls. Do you ask why? Because such trust in Christ is so spiritual an act of the soul that the natural mind and the carnal heart never could achieve and exercise it. This is proved, too, by what the Apostle Paul says, "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." Moreover, John says, "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." So do not go about doubting. Trust in Christ alone for your salvation, and know by that token that you are saved.

A Mistaken Idea of Christian Faith

Unbelievers have a mistaken notion of Christian faith. They are wont to call it "blind credulity", and to attribute it to ignorance and superstition. One of their constant allegations is that we Christian people are "ignorant", and for that reason we believe in Christ as the world's Redeemer and in the Bible as the inspired Word of God. A favorite caricature of the infidels is that Christians are like a nestful of callow young robins; if you touch the rim of the nest ever so lightly, all the little golden-lined mouths will fly open, and they will swallow anything you have a mind to put into them.

We must protest that such a simile is not apt nor true. Infidels as infidels—that is, as an organization—have not a single first-class liberal arts college or university in the land; whereas the Christian Church has established and is today carrying on hundreds of them. Then how can unbelievers rightly claim to be the elite of intelligence, and charge Christian people with being a crass and ignorant lot?

Christian faith cannot be mere gullibility for several reasons: First, it is something that is begotten in the soul by the Holy Spirit (Ephesians 2:8); and surely the Holy Spirit would not beget anything irrational in the human mind. Then, too, there are many finely educated people who are whole-souled Christian believers. Surely they cannot be blindly credulous. No! the person who avers that Christian faith is mere blind credulity simply "gives himself away"; he proves by that very token that he has never had the blessed experience of truth and joy that comes from accepting the Lord Jesus Christ, and is therefore incompetent to pronounce a judgment upon it.

Brethren Tracts

This is the first of a series of articles to be published as reviews of tracts which are worthy of advertisement, and which would be valuable for every Sunday school to have and distribute. This is a new department added by the National Sunday School Association at our conference last fall. The first Superintendent feels very keenly his weakness and lack of originality in initiating it. He would welcome any suggestions, and many more tracts to be added to his present meager collection.

This article will call attention to a group of tracts published by the Brethren Publishing Co., explaining and defending triune immersion as our mode of baptism.

The first is "The Law of Baptism", by J. E. Wampler, (deceased). It is a very thorough analysis of the Great Commission, coupled with interesting incidents and statistics on this great doctrine of the Scriptures.

The second is "Baptism", by J. L. Gillin. This is a rather unusual interpretation of the social significance of baptism as it is illustrated especially in triune immersion.

The third is written by Elder J. F. Garber of Weldon, Iowa, and is entitled, "Christian Baptism; How and Why?" This is a brief, but very concise statement regarding triune immersion as the correct mode of water baptism, in carrying out our Lord's Commission to "baptize."

The fourth is "Baptism; What is It?" by A. D. Gnagey. This is a brief treatise describing the various forms of Christian baptism with the New Testament authority for triune immersion.

These may be recommended for those wanting brief material on our mode of baptism. In the reviewing of this group attention may be called to the fact that they all belong to an older generation of writers. To be sure they are or were consecrated men, and their testimony is valuable, but do we no longer need any testimony on baptism? These authors served another generation, when there needed to be great emphasis on this subject of the mode of baptism. Why do we not have more tracts being written today to more closely conform to present day needs? Not that the doctrine of baptism is out of date. New converts today will not so readily dispute the mode of baptism. They are concerned and hungry for the spiritual significance and meaning of that observance. We Brethren have a great opportunity in pointing out to the world that triune immersion is the only symbol which thoroughly teaches what water baptism should illustrate.

JESUS FORGIVING SIN

(Lesson for January 22)

Lesson Text: Mark 2:1-12; Golden Text:
Mark 2:10

Daily Readings and Suggestions

A Man Forgiven. Mark 2:1-12

If there were no forgiveness for sin man would indeed be miserable, and without hope. Jesus' power to forgive sin, therefore, is of very real interest to all. A man may forgive his neighbor's sin against him, but he is powerless to forgive that neighbor's sin against God. The Jews recognized the fact that only God could forgive sin. Jesus' power to forgive sin was evidenced by his power to heal. He plainly taught that unless sin was forgiven there could be no healing. Perhaps some of his blessings are waiting upon forgiveness; let us bow before him who alone has power to forgive sin.

TUESDAY

A Woman Forgiven. Luke 7:40-50

Only in Christ has woman been accorded a place of dignity and respect. Simon the Pharisee was quite contemptuous: this woman was a sinner. But Jesus had come into the world to offer forgiveness to sinners, and though this woman must have been an outstanding sinner he freely forgave her all. Jesus was and is no respecter of persons, and knows no bounds of time or place. He forgives today as fully and freely as he forgave this woman, when we come to him with hearts of love and faith.

A Ground for Forgiveness. Matt. 6:5-15

"A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." He proved his love for us all by bearing our sins for us and forgiving those who would accept his forgiveness; if we would love one another as he loved us, we must be willing to forgive them all, even when we suffer wrongly at their hands. In fact, he tells us plainly that unless we do there is no forgiveness for us. What a difference it would make in our daily relation to others if all Christians practiced this!

THURSDAY

Confession and Forgiveness. Rom. 10:6-15

We must confess with our mouths that Jesus is Lord, and is able to forgive sin; also, it must be not merely a word of mouth affair: it must be a matter of heart belief if we are to find forgiveness with him, and be saved. We must call upon him (v. 13), in fervent prayer, and the prayer of faith shall save those who are sick with sin. Verses 14 and 15 remind us very definitely of our duty to those who have not learned of the blessed forgiveness that may be theirs. Pray that we may be faithful in discharging this duty of confessing to them with our mouths.

FRIDAY

Conditions of Forgiveness. 1 John 1:1-10

In the meditations for the two preceding days we have seen that the promise of forgiveness, like every other promise of God, is conditioned upon our own acts. All need forgiveness, for all have sinned, and if we can say we have not we are deceiving ourselves and disbelieving God's word; therefore we should see to it that we have met all God's conditions upon this point. If we fulfill our part he is faithful and just to forgive.

SATURDAY

A Prayer for Forgiveness. Psalm 25:11-22
Without the peace and pardon of our God our hearts and lives are indeed desolate; our feet are caught in the net of sin, and we are holden with the cords of death. With David, let us pray not only that our eyes may ever be toward him but also that he will keep our souls and deliver us—for we KNOW whom we have believed, and are persuaded that he is able to keep what we have committed unto him. Let us wait on him.

SUNDAY

The Joy of Forgiveness. Ps. 32:1-7

We have seen that confession of our sin and of God's power to forgive is one of the conditions of forgiveness. When we harden our hearts and refuse to confess our need, as in the case of David, his hand seems heavy upon us, and the joy is gone from our lives; but when we confess our sins unto the Lord, he is ready to forgive, and to place in our hearts the song of deliverance. Happy, indeed, is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered; conversely, he whose transgression is NOT forgiven must be UN-happy. May we be willing to be sent to the many unhappy ones, bringing them the oil of gladness for the spirit of mourning.

"God No Longer Answers Prayer"--Who Said That?

By Ray Klingensmith, Quiet Hour Supt.
I'll tell you in a minute who said that. It is the person who has never personally found the power of prayer or whose inconsistent life makes it impossible for God to answer him. It is never the man who knows anything about prayer that denies it; it is always the fellow who hasn't yet tried it. It is never the man who is burdened for sinners that says it; it is never the man that lives close to God who doubts prayer. It is always this conceited so-called "Too busy" class of Christians. Their work is so important and they are so busy that even Almighty God can't have a minute with them.

I wish you had been with me last night. Some months ago in the state of Ohio a man was sent to the Whipping Post because the Law decided that he couldn't be handled any other way. He was too mean. So he was whipped soundly and sent home. Now we find him in Ashland. Last night had you been with me at the City Mission where revival services are being held you would have seen the same man—kneeling, sobbing,—waiting long after the rest had gone home. It wasn't the lash of the whip this time; it was the smiting of the Holy Ghost, who was breaking his heart because of his sin—not his back. Nobody knows who brought him every night this week. Nobody ever invited him. But some folks said: "My, but I was surprised." Well, just the same, some of us would have been surprised if he hadn't come, for we have been praying every day for God to save him. God is still willing to save sinners if folks just ask him. But they haven't!

"Ye have not, because ye ask not."

When we think ourselves too heavily laden with our own troubles to give sympathy to another, we may sever the line on which help was coming to both of us.

ARGENTINA

Since leaving his work in the Bible Institute in Azul, Brother Luis Farre has been giving a series of sermons in each of the churches of our district. During the past month he has spoken in Almafuerite, Rio Tercero and Tancacha. His addresses have been very helpful to the believers at each place and have attracted many who have not hitherto attended. In Cabrera the priest, to counteract his influence brought in a half dozen other priests to hold what they call a "mission", but our hall was filled to overflowing each time. In Almafuerite several new people now come as a result of the meetings and a "mission" is planned for the near future. In Tancacha even the priest listened from the outside, concealed among the trees.

Sisters Nielsen and Larson are busy with the vacation Bible schools. They make an able team in this work and the children are greatly interested. In Tancacha the average attendance was over forty. In Almafuerite, the work is new but there are about twenty-five regular attendants.

The tent has had a great campaign in Firmat. This is a large town and a railway center, but no preaching of the Gospel has ever been done there, except the personal work of colporteurs. The priest has had his own way and now does everything possible to prevent the people from attending, and yet the attendance has been over 300 night after night. Many who come leave the special meetings started by the priest in order to listen to the Gospel in the tent.

The workers will go from Firmat to Hernando soon and then come on to Rio Tercero and Almafuerite. We hope for great blessings in these towns through this work. Pray that many may be converted.

In Rio Cuarto our daughter, Eleanor Romanenghi, is somewhat broken in health and has been ordered by the doctor to rest in the country for six months. Pray for her speedy restoration.

C. F. YODER.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

By the time these notes reach their readers, the College will have resumed its regular routine work. During the vacation, the faculty members were variously engaged. Dr. Caldwell attended the annual meeting of the American Sociological Association in Cincinnati. Dr. Gillin who is a regular attendant was absent this year, being now in Mexico where he is studying their penal institutions.

Dr. Ullman attended certain educational meetings at Columbus. Others of us met with the committee of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools in its study of the revision of standards. The conferences so far have been satisfactory.

I am to give three addresses this coming Saturday before the Holmes County Teachers' Institute.

It looks now as if the annual meeting of the Board of College Trustees should be held April 25th, the second Tuesday after Easter.

At the last meeting of the Faculty Club which was held at Mansfield, Dr. Monroe read an exhaustive paper upon the Biblical Theory of the Interpretation of History. A lively discussion followed.

At the last regular Faculty meeting Professor Stuckey reviewed a book on the Virgin Birth of Jesus.

Through some very fine gifts, we have been enabled to redecorate the old Hesperian Literary Hall on the third floor of Founders' Hall, now used for the Seminary Chapel one day a week, and for Freshman Chapel two days a week. Our Chapel room is too small to accommodate all our students at one time; hence the division.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

OAKVILLE, INDIANA

A belated report from Oakville Brethren church.

Yes, we are still trying to carry on pretty hard these days of financial stress and amid the apostasy that is upon us.

As far as finances are concerned we will finish 1932 with a clear slate and enough fuel to run us the balance of the winter. This has been possible because of two brethren giving some timber, and a bunch of our men going out and cutting it into furnace length.

We have taken every offering as set by our National work, but these have not been what we would desire.

In October we had a two weeks' meeting with the "Gospel Messengers" helping us the second week over Sunday. We had good cooperation from our church and good attendance. There were no new confessions, but some 18 or 20 reconsecrations and the church strengthened.

We had our annual Christmas program with White Gift offering.

Our Sunday school keeps up well with a larger average attendance than last year. This has been very largely due to the untiring efforts of our capable Superintendent, Charlie S. Kern.

Our W. M. S. is working and keeping very much alive under the leadership of our local President, Miss Lillie Ball.

As Brother Beachler of Gratis some weeks ago wrote of their young folks, their Christian Endeavor work, we too have a going, growing young people's society of 30 to 50 each Sunday night and they are helping us in our church work in a fine way (and this in a small community too).

What shall 1933 bring us? It will be very largely what we make it. Usually if a thing does not cost much we do not prize it very much, but these testings ought to be valuable.

S. LOWMAN, Pastor.

LANARK, ILLINOIS

I firmly maintain that no editor of religious publications should be placed in that unpleasant situation in which he finds himself, when he must scrutinize, scrap or return news or other articles not fit for publication, — simply because someone has thrown something loosely together, and sent it;—thinking that thus his church will be represented. Upon this acknowledgement, I accord the editor the right, which is his already, to discard anything here offered.

I have so much to say that I'd like to say, that I scarcely know just how to begin. As a church we are still on the firing line, and as sure of victory as heaven can make us, if we obey commands.

I remember that I said, through the Evangelist, that no depression, however severe, can stop the forward march of Spiritual progress, so long as God remains on the throne; and, since no potentate, however powerful, can dethrone God, I shall continue believing that even out of all this chaos God is as able to create something like heaven,—just as he was able to create chaos, then form the earth and sky with all their wonderful beauty.

Reasoning from the same basis, the quickening of the dead is proportionately less a miracle than to have originally created something from nothing. Nothing is difficult to God. The stronger the opposition, the more pronounced is the victory. I say it with all seriousness, if there ever was a time when the nations should uncompromisingly turn their difficulties over to God for adjustment, it is NOW! After having looked in every earthly direction for relief, and found disappointment, we'd do well to look up.

Now a bit of news from the church: Our pastor, Brother Grisso, recently returned from Lake Odessa, Michigan, where he held several weeks' meetings with the brethren there, in the Campbell congregation. His purpose was to confirm and establish the congregation where he labored arduously and successfully several years during the earlier part of his ministry. He goes to Loree, Indiana early in January to hold evangelistic services in the Brethren congregation there. We ask that you, with us, pray that the Lord may use him to his glory there also. It is said Loree has a record of holding a revival each year. We hope many shall take their stand on the firing line and put the agencies of sin to flight in that community.

During our pastor's absence the work is being carried on by the several organized departments of the church and Sunday school, the Christian Endeavor society taking an active part. We find the Endeavorers are efficient, not only in rendering efficient service when emergencies arise, but are seeking and making opportunities for service as well. These young folks are making favorable community history because they are succeeding against opposition. Not much credit was due us for good behavior in the days of our innocence; but now it is a virtue worthy of praise, because our attainments are fraught with difficulty.

For the sake of good fellowship and economy, the churches here are holding union mid-week prayer services; and the Sunday evening meetings will no doubt soon take the same course for the same reasons.

We are planning to make this Christmas season as Christlike as we can, to as many as we can, featuring the White Gift offering.

Closing, we extend to all, the Season's greetings, in the name of him whose birth we have just celebrated—Jesus Christ, our Lord.

CENTER CHAPEL, PERU, INDIANA

Dear Evangelist Readers:

It has been some time since any letter has been sent to you about the work at Center Chapel. The past year our pastor, Brother J. W. Clark, had to give up his work at this place, because of sickness. He was accomplishing much for the Lord, and was loved by all, both in the church and the neighborhood. The Sunday school progressed nicely and the attendance for each Sunday averaged 90 plus. We have a splendid group of young people here and they are always ready and willing to do what they can to help in Kingdom Building. The last Sunday in September was Homecoming Day and many came to enjoy the program and basket dinner. Brother Vanator gave a splendid address in the afternoon. On October 4th Brother Paul A. Davis, a young man from the Loree church, accepted the call as pastor and preached the sermon on the above date, and is preaching for us every two weeks. Brother Davis is a very promising young man and is doing nicely in his work. On November first Brother Davis presided at the communion services. While the attendance was not what it should have been, the Spirit of the Lord was manifest and we felt like it was good to be there. Brother Davis conducted a revival meeting from December 5th to 23rd. Many wonderful messages were given and souls stirred. Several things hindered the attendance, and especially sickness, as the "flu" was in so many homes, and some very serious cases. We were made glad when various churches came with delegations. It was a hard task to get the unsaved to the church even though much personal work was done and prayers offered. Our hearts rejoiced when eight young people accepted Christ. There were three reconsecrations. The seed has been sown and we believe it will not return void. We enjoy reading the letters from the other churches in the brotherhood even though we are careless in our own church correspondence. We covet your prayers that we may be found faithful and always ready to do his will.

MRS. GEO. HUDDLESON, Secretary.

CENTER CHAPEL CHURCH, NEAR PERU, INDIANA

The meetings at Center Chapel church began with very favorable weather and attendance, cooperation between young and old being good. As the weather grew cooler the attendance varied accordingly, with the exception of a few nights. There were many folks who were willing to help in the meetings by contributing to the music and by bringing delegations from other churches. The Church of the Brethren of Mexico gave us a fine interested song leader, who drove back and forth to her school, which was about forty-eight miles round trip from the church, in order to render service each evening.

She enjoyed the work very much, and with the aid of two other talented ladies had two choirs, and several quartets, solos and duets. In order to use young, and old folks, there was a division of singers into a Junior and Adult choir. The people here like to sing, and enter into it in such a spirit that every evening an atmosphere was created that lifted many to higher things.

A Church of Christ contributed some music, and interest in the meeting, as well as the Methodists and Brethren people of Chili, and elsewhere.

Ministers from various churches lent their interest, and encouragement in the services.

The young folks attended the services from night to night very faithfully. Almost every night from one-third to two-thirds of the congregation were young people, which led me to believe that the young people are more loyal than older people; and haven't gone to the dogs, as some would have us believe.

There was a general inviting and calling upon people, both believers and non-believers in the community. The result was a response to the services of almost one hundred per cent, except in cases of sickness. God surely works for and with men today. Men and women who had been in the habit of absenting themselves from the house of God very much, came during these meetings quite faithfully. They showed a hungering for God and his Word by their interest, thinking and presence. Some were caused to think and believe differently concerning the church and the work of Christ. Many were deeply moved and manifested the working of the Spirit of God by repenting of their sins, changing their attitude toward Christ and by cooperating with their fellowmen, while others shed tears of sadness and joy.

The results of the efforts put forth may not all be seen now, but there were eight confessions, three reconsecrations for more service for the Lord, and some men want to accept Christ as their Savior some time soon.

Pray for those who are halting, and have not accepted our Lord as their Savior.

There was such a decided increase in interest and work to be done, due to the warmer, more favorable weather which came on the Sunday night of the second week, that it was decided to continue the revival services for a time. The result was an increased attendance; and one more confession of Christ.

The revival efforts closed on Thursday night just before Christmas on account of the increasing sickness, etc.

Every one seemed to have enjoyed the meetings, and gained some benefit from them.

Brother Grisso visited the Center Chapel church, and gave God's redemptive plan, and an appeal for souls to be saved on Sunday afternoon, January 1st, although no one accepted Christ as their Savior, some were moved by the message and appeal.

I was very glad for this former pastor, and friend of many there to go to hold that service on the first day of 1933.

The harvest for 1932 is over, but I trust that the seed sown in 1932 will ripen and will be harvest in 1933, in the community there, as elsewhere.

Please remember this flock, the unsaved there and the workers there at Center Chapel. Although the church is a Brethren church, yet there are many living in the community who worship there and who are members of other denominations. They are in many instances as loyal as our own members.

The Sunday school has an enrollment of 100, while the church has an active list of 98, but 141 members are on the roll.

Your Brother in Christ,
PAUL A. DAVIS.

THE ASHLAND REVIVAL

On November 13, 1932, the Ashland congregation entered into a revival effort of two weeks' duration, with Dr. W. S. Bell, of Milledgeville, Illinois, as the evangelist. Teamed with the evangelist as helpers were the pastor and Dr. Charles A. Bame, the latter as song leader. The campaign was the sixth one which Brother Bell had conducted for the writer, and so we were well acquainted with the methods and plans of the leader; while it was the third time that the pastor had teamed-up with Dr. Bame in such an effort. The evangelist was prepared for the campaign and gave forth no uncertain or disheartened message, but declared the truths of the Word with vigor and assurance. Dr. Bame was wise in his selection of song numbers, and many of the services were enlivened by the assistance of the very fine Sunday school orchestra which we have, while other special musical numbers were also provided, so that the evangelist was well supported by the musical part of each service.

While it has been some time since the close of the campaign, the report of the pastor has not been made sooner because of inability to find a generally convenient time for the baptism of those who would finally unite with the congregation, or with some church. The total number of those influenced in the campaign was thirteen. Of this number six have been baptized and received into the membership of the congregation, while two came by relation; making a total of eight new members. Among the remaining number influenced during the services three were children whose parents deemed them too small to go farther in Christian profession and obedience. God grant these "little ones", of whom the Master spoke so lovingly, may come all the way when they ARE "old enough". The remaining two parties reached made public reconsecration of their lives to God during the meeting.

In the totals of souls reached and influenced the results may not seem large to those not acquainted with the Ashland field. To those who do know the field and its problems this will be better understood. The church is well satisfied with the results of the brief effort, and the thanks and best wishes of the congregation go with Brother Bell as he continues to labor in the Lord's vineyard in whatsoever place he may undertake for the Kingdom.

During his stay in the congregation Dr. Bell made his home with the pastor, and it was a real pleasure to pastor and wife to renew the friendship of other days and recount experiences in other campaigns. Many who may read this report will remember some of those former meetings, and some who read may even be counted among those who were saved during his other campaigns. The membership of the Ashland congregation assisted in the care of the evangelist by inviting him out to the dinner meals each day, and to say that Brother Bell did ample justice to the quite numerous turkey dinners provided for him is only stating the barest truth, while the pastor and Dr. Bame were not far behind in action on the numerous occasions when they were included in the "invites."

All in all the campaign was satisfactory to the congregation, and Dr. Bell will find a welcome among the Ashland people whenever he chooses to drop in and visit among them. While Brother Bell made his home in Ashland for more than two years yet his work during that period kept him away from Ashland most of the time and the people of the church here had not learned to know him so well. The meeting served to overcome this and to create and cement friendships for the days to come.

The work of the Ashland church continues to move along, if a bit slowly, yet we hope on a solid basis. There are no efforts at spectacular enterprises, but a continued effort is being made to interest and hold the youth of the congregation. An exceptionally fine group of Intermediate Christian Endeavorers is being led and trained by two of the good women of the church, and it is the hope of the pastor that they may continue to go on in the work of this organization which has always for its motto "For Christ and the Church", and every aid possible is being given by the pastor toward such an end. A fine Junior C. E. group is also maintained, and so it is hoped to work in a large way toward the conserving of the children and youth for the church in that impressionable and likewise dangerous period of human life. All the auxiliaries of the church are alive and working, though perhaps none of them as active as they might be—which is likely true at many other places. We have all the problems of any other congregation of the brotherhood, and then one or two beside because of the presence of the college. But we are working along in quite general harmony and believe it is possible to continue to do so. We need and solicit the prayers of the brotherhood for the work here, and we shall continue to pray for our brethren elsewhere. Almost every Wednesday evening some request for prayer for some congregation or individuals from some congregation is made at the prayer meeting, and prayer is offered. So we endeavor to maintain our contact with the brotherhood by way of the throne. In the words of little Tim "God bless us everyone."

Fraternally,

DYOLL BELOTE.

CANTON, OHIO

Again the Canton Brethren wish to publicly thank our Father in heaven for his blessing on the work being done here in that thirty-one confessions have been made during the last quarter.

The communion service held at the close of the three-week evangelistic campaign, conducted by our pastor, J. C. Beal, was more largely attended than any previous service, and no doubt most greatly enjoyed, as each repetition of the symbols of the three-fold ministry of our Lord and Savior brings to us a greater reality of the One who came to die for us, who now intercedes for us and who will some day (we hope very soon) come to take us unto himself, that we may be forever in his blessed presence.

At the Christmas season—a pantomime entitled, "When the Chimes Rang" was presented by a number of the members, after which the White Gift offering was received. It was a very beautiful service which emphasized the great truth that "sacrificial" giving is the type which truly pleases God.

We are just completing a study of the book of Romans in the Sunday morning services; and are having a series about "The Seventy Weeks of Daniel" in the evenings. The second epistle to the Corinthians was completed last week in the Tuesday evening Bible Class and we shall now continue on to Galatians.

The Thursday afternoon class is very much interested in a study of Leviticus which will be followed by Hebrews, and the Men's Fellowship hour is taken up in a study of Genesis. All of these classes are taught by our pastor, so you can see that it is certainly no fault of his if his "flock" does not become acquainted with the Word.

Our New Year's wish and prayer is that all the brethren may find in the coming days and months, that close fellowship with our Heavenly Father, which will result in the edification of the saved, and the salvation of those who are yet to become a part of the Body of Christ.

G. M. SPICE.

JOHNSTOWN THIRD CHURCH

Because of a keen interest in the general work of the church and a conviction that others would enjoy hearing of our experiences, I submit the following items of interest which characterized our church since last summer. Just because our name did not appear in the paper does not mean that nothing was done. On the contrary, we are a live group and aim to prove a big nuisance to the devil.

I shall begin with the summer program. We routed and defeated the giant summer slump, by adopting a merged church service. The church hour of worship preceded the Sunday school session. In doing this we aimed to accomplish certain definite goals, viz., to place more emphasis on the importance and priority of the church; to use the worship part of the church as the devotional period for the Sunday school opening assembly; to enable parents and children to worship in church by sitting together; to introduce both church and Sunday school to those who were not keen on breaking a habit. The results?—very gratifying. Both interest and attendance increased from Sunday to Sunday.

A splendid Rally Day program initiated the fall and winter program of the church. No spectacular or sensational methods are employed in enticing and holding people for services. Our motive is to continually break the Bread of Life. The people are coming, eating and living. Three special series of Bible lectures are being preached for a period of five or six months. In the morning we study Genesis, in the evening we study I Corinthians and for Wednesday evening we are studying Ephesians. This program together with a definite, systematic and personal prayer for the members less interested will surely honor and glorify our Lord.

Two recent services in the church are worthy of mention. One was a specially prepared Cantata rendered by our faithful choir. I heard once of the choir as the military department of the church; well ours is far from that. A more faithful and loyal choir one will find nowhere. We insist that every member of the choir be first of all a Christian. The other program was the Christmas exercise given by the children. It seems these little ones tried harder than ever to please parents and friends. The name of Christ and his spirit always pervaded the entire program.

Now we are anticipating the coming of the Ashland College Ladies' Gospel Team which will make three appearances in our church.

Our revival will begin January 16, with the Rev. W. C. Benschoff as our evangelist. May we ask that all remember us in prayer.

Yours till he come,

JOS. L. GINGRICH, Pastor.

JOHN H. THOMPSON

John H. Thompson, born February 28, 1860, departed this life December 17th, 1932, aged 72 years, 9 months and 19 days. Brother Thompson was ill only a few hours with pneumonia when he went to be with his Lord. He married Elizabeth Howard Steele at Masontown, Pennsylvania, in 1882 and celebrated his golden anniversary last Thanksgiving day. He is survived by his wife and the following sons:—Gerald J. Thompson, Clarksburg, West Virginia; Frank Thompson, Uniontown, Pennsylvania; Joseph A. Thompson, Charleroi, Pennsylvania; and Charles S. Thompson, Uniontown, Pennsylvania. Thirteen grandchildren also survive.

Brother Thompson had been employed as a florist at Barton's Greenhouse, Uniontown for over 42 years and was considered one of the best and most experienced horticulturists in Fayette County. He was a charter member of the First Brethren church of Uniontown. The services were conducted by the pastor who was assisted by Rev. William Gray of the Brethren church of Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania. Burial was in Oak Grove Cemetery.

Brother Thompson was widely known and loved by everyone. For many years he attended the Winona Bible Conference and the General Conference of the Brethren church at Winona Lake. He was a student of the Word of God, searching, reading and studying the blessed book of God.

Brother Thompson, besides being a charter member of the Brethren church, was the oldest Deacon and the teacher of the Men's Bible class. He was a faithful follower of Jesus Christ. He believed in the Eternal Security of the children of God but believed it necessary "to continue in the word," Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." Truly it can be said, "He proved his Christianity and manifested his faith in Jesus Christ by the life he lived." He loved his God. He loved and served his Savior. He loved, he studied and he taught his Bible. He loved, he worked, he prayed and was a faithful steward to the Master in serving his church. Twenty-four hours before Brother Thompson went home to be with his Lord, he and his wife accompanied the writer in attending a tabernacle meeting at Wheeling, West Virginia, to hear one of the country's noted and best Bible teachers. Seven hours preceding Brother Thompson's death it was the writer's privilege to have fellowship with him in his home, sitting around the radiator trying to keep warm. The principal subject of discussion was the blessed hope of the Christian, a subject which always vitally interested him.

Brother Thompson, always unassuming, but ever faithful to his trust and to his God, though it be hard to believe, has been called from the community and from our midst to his reward in Heaven. His place will be hard to fill. The home has lost a devoted and true husband and father. The community has lost a good citizen. We have lost a friend. Our loss is his gain and we dare not be selfish for "to depart," said the Apostle, "is far better." He has gone to the land where the roses never fade, where the sun never goes down, where there is no night there, where there is no sorrow, sickness, nor sadness—to the land where all will be sunshine and gladness—to Heaven to receive his awaiting crown. The Psalmist said, "And now Lord, what wait I for? my hope is in thee." Good night, Brother Thompson, we will see you in the morning.

 REV. WILLIAM B. CLOUGH, Pastor.

JOHN H. THOMPSON—AN APPRECIATION

In the death of "Deacon" John H. Thompson of the Uniontown, Pennsylvania, congregation, on December 17, the Uniontown congregation lost one of its most faithful members, the denomination one of its best read and loyal adherents, and the writer a "good friend." This last expression was the "Deacon's" own signature to the numerous communications which it was my privilege to receive from him throughout the years that we have been acquainted.

The writer first came to know "Deacon" Thompson when he went to Uniontown as pastor in 1909. Brother Thompson was then a member of the Official Board of the congregation and naturally pastor and deacon were thrown often together and soon became particular friends, for it is not every layman who can meet his pastor on even balance in the discussion of both the problems of congregational management and the theological viewpoints of that day. This faculty was the possession of Brother Thompson, and woe betide the preacher who made a slip in his theology in the good deacon's hearing, for he would be pretty sure to hear about it the next time they met. And the presence of such a kindly critic, for kindly he was in all his relations with his pastor, was a good check on the pastor and helped him to greater care in the presentation of his messages. The young minister who might have access to Brother Thompson's library would find himself in touch with the best thought of both past and present on matters theological.

Quiet, and even of a retiring disposition, Brother Thompson was yet an intelligent and interesting conversationalist, as many who made his acquaintance can testify. For many years he and Sister Thompson had been regular attendants at the National Conferences and he was often called upon to represent the laymen of the church upon important committees of the Conference. It was an understood custom that the "Deacon" always took an extra suit-case with him to National Conference that he might more easily carry his book purchases home with him from conference. His favorite relaxation from the strain of regular conference attendance was to "browse around," as he put it, among the books at the bookstore, and whenever his pastor wanted to find him and he was not at the session he was invariably to be found "browsing" contentedly among the books.

For 42 years Brother Thompson served in the employ of one concern, and in the faithful execution of the duties of his position, which was that of horticulturist for one of the largest greenhouses in his section of the state of Pennsylvania, he came to be one of the best informed men in his profession and a valued and trusted servant to his employer. And the writer has reason to know that he was held in highest esteem by his employer.

Not only was Brother Thompson respected by his employer and his fellow-members in the church, but the community as well knew and respected him, and the local paper, in an editorial said of him:

"Standing high as a desirable citizen and a true Christian, John H. Thompson of South Union township has been called to a greater reward. Always unassuming but ever faithful to his trust and his God, Mr. Thompson became a sudden mark for the Grim Reaper who this time called from the community a man whose place will be difficult to fill in the hearts, memories and estimation of those who knew him intimately and who at all times revered him.'

For more than twenty years it was my pleasure and satisfaction to count John H. Thompson as indeed "good friend" as well as fellow Christian. For nine and one-half years of that time we worked together as pastor and parishioner, and the years but strengthened and deepened the respect in which he was held by the writer. And now my "good friend" has been called to the enjoyment of the rewards of Christian living which he so richly deserved. He leaves his good wife and four sons to revere his memory and emulate his faithfulness in "the little while between" until they shall join him. For all of us who have known him life has been more worth while because he came into our earthly associations. And heaven is dearer, too, because it contains another loved form, as added reason for seeking God's favor by consistent Christian living that we too may come at last with all the dear ones loved and lost a while, into the presence of the Lord himself, thus to be "ever with the Lord." Farewell, "good friend," we shall meet upon a fairer shore, to continue the fellowship which but started here.

"Cornstalk wood," hard as teak and almost as strong as steel, for use in the manufacture of furniture, was part of an exhibition by Iowa State College at a recent convention of the wood industries division of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers at Jamestown, New York. It is claimed there is no natural wood that cannot be imitated in the cornstalk product. The types exhibited ranged down to synthetic cork and had all of cork's properties.

of the rottenness in public life there is no cure that can be obtained by altering the machinery." I think our Lord had something like this in mind when he said to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again." There can be no Kingdom of God on earth without a society of twice-born men. Only such can enter the Kingdom which our Lord so many day set up here on earth.

THE NEGLECTED TRUTH

For a good many months now, Brethren have been getting, some of them gratuitously, a small sheet which in its head lines professes to be "DEVOTED TO PUBLISHING THE NEGLECTED TRUTH." It is my purpose in as brief space as is possible to show that this is a misnomer.

In less than two columns of space devoted to myself, no less than twenty untruthful or defamatory statements are made. It was not unexpected that this happened. It is my candid conviction that Paul Lorah would not be where the church has relegated him with regard to the Brethren Ministry had it not been for this sheet professing what it does not practice. It was to be expected that some defense would be advanced which as any one can see, is not a defense of a protegee, but a misrepresentation of the author of the article telling the truth about the election of a pastor of one of our small churches which was in the grip of one who was mocking, deriding and castigating the people and organizations which they held dear.

The editor of this sheet wants nothing more than scandal and sensation upon which to feed his sheet and I have not the slightest doubt that it could not live and pay for itself four months without it. Most of our people whom it attacks do not and will not answer the editor and his bold challenges because they know it will only feed his sheet with more opportunity to live. It has been proven too, that promises made by the editor under the most impressive and emotional circumstances are not honored nor respected. BUT THE NEGLECTED TRUTH IS, THAT THE UNDIGNIFIED, UNTRUTHFUL, SLANDEROUS STATEMENTS IT HAS MADE HAVE NOT BEEN EXPOSED. BUT SO FAR AS THEY SLANDER AND MISREPRESENT MYSELF, if the editor of the Evangelist will publish it, these twenty errors shall not be withheld from the readers of our own church

CHRISTMAS AT THE HOME

Am writing to tell you how much the women here enjoyed their Christmas. They received a large box from the Sisterhood Girls of Washington, D. C., containing individual presents, candy and nuts and a $10.00 Money Order, to buy a Christmas dinner or anything else I needed.

We had roast chicken and dressing, mashed potatoes, gravy, peas, a salad and coffee, and had a date pudding ready to serve but they said they were "full", so saved it for supper.

I used the $10.00 and $2.00 from Mrs. S. J. Davis and $1.00 from Mrs. Irene Solenberger of Altoona, Pennsylvania, for my grocery bill and was very thankful as I still owed $1.00 from November and still owe now on my December bill.

From Elkhart W. M. S. came a nice package—containing aprons and caps for all the ladies and they were very much appreciated too.

The Sisterhood Girls of Flora, with their Patrons, Mrs. C. Hendrix, came on Thursday evening and gave a very nice Christmas program including Christmas Carols, readings and prayer.

They left boxes of candy and a small gift for the ladies.

There were remembrances from different Flora people and some from their relatives, so altogether they had a very nice Christmas.

The ladies of the Willing Workers' Class at Flora remembered Tiny Brenner (our little stay in bed) with Christmas cards and she enjoyed them so much.

Hoping the New Year will bring you all God's richest blessings in every way.

I am Very Respectfully, paper. Here they are, taken from the issues of the Postscript October 15, 1932 and January 1, 1933. First October 15, 1932, page 1, column 4:

(1) "headed a delegation from the Church of the Brethren and walked down the street to a Brethren church because his feelings were hurt." Untrue. Though this refers to me and I wrote the letter, that thing never happened. It is pure misrepresentation and slander. I entered the Brethren church from the sister Brethren organization by invitation to the pastorate of the Dayton Brethren church, was ordained in Philadelphia by vote of the Brethren church there, and did not take charge of the Dayton church until three months afterward.

(2) "Doffed whiskers and clerical garb." Untrue. I did not have whiskers and did not doff clerical garb. I still wear it many Sundays.

(3) "golf pants and a degree." Untrue. I never had a pair of golf pants; never played a game of golf. This is a slander which by inference and innuendo the author tries to make out that I am a gentleman of ease, wealth and luxury—a sport. It is a base slander. As for the degree, I never asked for it, worked for it, nor expected it. It came to me granted by the trustees of Ashland College upon the completion of the largest (then) Brethren church when I was associate editor of the Evangelist. (Enough from that issue. Now, for the issue of January 1, 1933, page 4 Col. 4.)

(4) "Student Pastor chased out of the Middle Branch church." Untrue. He walked out of a Business Meeting, voluntarily.

(5) "Ohio Moderator  rushes in to Silence Youngster." Untrue. His troubles with his people began with a letter written by himself from Covington, Ohio, dated September 14, 1932. Is three months' time rushing in?

(6) "Another young man is out of the Brethren Ministry." Untrue. He never was in. He was licensed to preach. That is not ordination.

(7) "unfrocked." Untrue. It was ruled that he had things to make right before he could become a candidate for a Brethren pulpit. Weeks ahead, he was so informed. His reply was, "I have nothing to make right."

(8) "It appears that almost half the church went out with him." Untrue. It was more like a Sunday school class—mostly girls under 18 years of age.

(9) "Ohio's Moderator takes all the credit." Untrue. I take none. It was done by the vote of the church. I simply presided by vote of the church and not as Moderator of Ohio conference.

(10) "the old reliable purveyor of hokum—the Evangelist." Untrue. For this I shall not waste words now. The Editor is fully able to speak for himself and I dare say he will not allow it to pass unchallenged.

(11) "a good many of those 56,000 miles he has traveled have been in an effort to get others to apologise." Untrue. If it were true, how could he say it of a man with whom he has not even talked ten minutes in a whole lifetime? If it were true, I would not be ashamed of it. But a man would, who has no regard for apologies and retracts them immediately.

(12) "It doesn't matter what Paul Lorah said." Untrue. It does matter what a Brethren minister says unless he owns a newspaper.

(13) "Just to shake hands with Marlin is enough offense to be thrown out of the Brethren ministry." Untrue. Marlin's name was not mentioned. Exalted egos often get people into trouble.

(14) "'set up' is that billiards or golf"? Not knowing either game or having played either; I shall need to ask Marlin.

(15) "Bame went with Baer and DeLozier as witnesses to make Lorah apologise." Untrue. These two Brethren are my witnesses that Lorah was not asked to apologise.

(16) In Column 5, same page. "How much of the 'Travel Flash' article was truth and how much was propaganda . . ." All is the truth and I have the letters and witnesses to verify every word and move. We still have a Middle Branch Brethren church.

(17) "Is it not a fact that Paul Lorah was telling tales out of school, etc.?" If the church voting to have a different pastor is a "steam roller"—well, it is good the brotherhood is getting a definition of what this monster steam roller is, by Marlin himself. Here is his definition: A steam roller is a church voting its will by majority.

(18) "You must be bossed to hold a job." Untrue. By whom? Who can elect a pastor if not the church itself? Must the denomination make Marlin Bishop with appointive and lambasting power to avoid the false cry "steam roller"? I do not have much hope that they shall.

(19) "Why is it that they are so afraid of adverse criticism?" I do not think they are afraid of adverse criticism; they prefer not to be exposed to vilification and misrepresentation. They have too much sense to believe that they can build by destructive criticism. Scandal may endure for a night, but truth cometh in the morning.

(20) Do you think you will see a denial of the teaching of evolution in the college in any Brethren Publication? Is there any need of a denial? How does anyone suppose the college shuts the mouth of hundreds of Brethren boys and girls schooled by our preachers from babyhood against the theory? They have been here many years before there was any Lorah or Marlin. Truth is propagated by constructive teaching, not by denials. Most Brethren know that.

Problem: If a sheet can make that many misrepresentations in less than two columns, how many can it make in 480? Ponder that.

AN UNCONSCIOUS CONTEST

Most contests are usually engaged in with the full knowledge of the contestants, and ordinarily careful preparation is made in advance so that the chance of winning may be increased. But unknown to either party to the contest, one has just developed between two of our most outstanding congregations of the brotherhood.

Just a few days ago we received the renewed subscription lists to The Brethren Evangelist from the First church of Long Beach and the First church of Philadelphia. One list contained one hundred twelve names and the other one hundred fourteen. Just two baskets difference. Oh! excuse me. I am thinking in terms of basketball. That would be some score, would it not? Winning the game by two baskets with the record standing at 114 to 112.

Well, why not put as much zeal and enthusiasm in the work we do for the Lord and for his church as we do in a game of athletics?

We listened in to the RoseBowl game between California and Pennsylvania on January 2nd, and felt rather sorry for the Panthers. They put up such a heroic fight and seemed to do their best; but California was too much for them and they lost.

However, in this case of Evangelist subscriptions Pennsylvania is two ahead of California. While the game is not a tie yet we feel both teams would like to play a little "overtime", and we are perfectly willing they should, and we don't care whether it is by "forward passing," "end running," or "bucking the line," we are anxious that a few more tallies be marked up on the "score board," and "may the best team win."

Publication Day

Don't forget Publication Day. While we are not asking for an offering to apply on the Building Debt this year, we do not want any church to be deprived of the blessing of giving to some good cause on that day, and by thus giving keep the day alive.

As we said last week the day may be spent or observed by bringing to a close with much earnestness and zeal the special campaign for Evangelist subscriptions, as the three months' campaign with special rates terminates on that day. So make the most of it, and when the "final whistle blows," or the "time-keeper's pistol bangs," may each church, each pastor and each group feel that they have done their best, remembering that after all the question is not "Did you win the game? but How did you play?"

I think the Apostle Paul would endorse with an Amen! the above suggestion.

TO THE CHURCHES OF THE SOUTH-EASTERN DISTRICT

A resolution was passed at the Roanoke Conference last June that one-half of the District Mission funds allotted to the congregations should be paid by December 31, 1932. Today after paying three pastors who are doing Home Mission work for January, there is $322.42 in the treasurer's hands. This amount will be only sufficient to make a little more than three more monthly payments. Then there can be no more payments made unless the congregations pay their Home Mission dues.

The treasurer sent out statements to all the congregations soon after the Roanoke Conference so that each congregation might be prepared to meet their payments.

Very respectfully,
GEO. A. COPP, Treasurer,
Strasburg, Virginia.

Don't Stop John's Paper

*Don't stop John's paper, editor,
For he could not live without;
Surely he will want to know
All the activities 'round about
Throughout the church from East to West,
From North and South as well,
From Japanese and Chinese shores,
And the land of William Tell;
What's new way down in Bambur-land,
As well as up Northeast,
The news from Red Bird's changing day
And Europe's topmost crest.*

*Why, man alive, he'd miss the vision
Of his beloved church,
With teeming millions deep in need,
And leave them in the lurch;
He could not see beyond the borders
Of his own local perch, He'd narrow down and shrivel up without the inspiration
That comes from reading every week your grand old publication.*

*Now don't you dare to take John's name
From off the Honor Roll,
For I'm fearful if you do
The man may lose his soul;
For don't you know that when we're left
To our own device and thought,
We do not think of Him and His
As frequent as we ought?
We need to be reminded the day is now at hand
When the old revival blaze will soon be burning in the land,
And to keep in line and hear the news
From hundreds of our brothers,*

*We constantly must read and think—
Not of ourselves, but others.*

*John's family, too, will want to know
What other folks are doing,
Throughout the length and breadth of our beloved communion,
They'll want to keep through all the week the Sunday lesson brewing;
Then, too, the Bible studies will deserve your careful reading;
With the missionary news and the things that they are needing.
And say, they simply cannot miss the editorial page,
For without it the whole family will prematurely age;
And all the golden weddings and silver jubilees,
To cheer them on and keep them sweet until their own they read.*

*Now there are many other reasons
Why John's paper shouldn't stop,
But I know I need not give them,
And the subject we will drop.
From now on, Mr. Editor, whenever a man writes in,
And tells you stop his paper, you should at once begin
To pray for that dear brother and inquire as to the "Why,"
For his pathway will be rocky and things will go awry,
If this friendly weekly visitor ceases coming to his door,
We're fearful he will lag behind and we'll hear of him no more.*

Prohibition

(It will pay you to read this call to arms by a great educator)

Prohibition has reached a critical stage. It is time for its friends to wake up to the dangers ahead, lay aside their minor differences, and make a united effort to save it.

Prohibition abolished the saloon. The Wets substituted the bootlegger and the speakeasy, and have done all in their power to hamper the Government in enforcing the law. The bootlegger and the speakeasy depend for their existence on their patrons. Their patrons are the Wets, not the Drys; and yet the lying propaganda of the newspapers always ascribes bootlegging and the speakeasy to Prohibition. Mrs. Charles Sabin calls her cocktail group of society women a "Women's Organization for Prohibition Reform." They pretend to aim at the reform of the evils which they have done all in their power to create. The only reform needed in their case is the reform of their own conduct in violating the Prohibition Amendment and the Volstead Law.

Prohibition is the only means in sight for preventing the return of the saloon. It may come back under another name. In Canada it is called "Beer Parlor" in some provinces and "Tavern" in others, and government officials in their official reports have stated that bootleggers sell as much whiskey as the government.

In New York City definite steps have been taken to prepare the way for its return. An article of a column and a half appeared very recently in the Times extolling the good side of the saloon. The writer repeated the familiar argument that the saloon was the poor man's club, and that Prohibitionists made a great mistake in not providing a substitute form of club when Prohibition came. He repeated other familiar arguments in its defense. He admitted parenthetically that the saloon sometimes violated the law, but treated it as an incidental thing. This article was signed "Rev. Charles Stelzle." A few days later, another article appeared in which the writer stated that when he was a theological student he used to go to a saloon to find a quiet room for study and found it a very decent place. Still later, a third article appeared in the same paper signed by a German, who said he came to this country at the time that Carl Schurz and other eminent Germans came here because of the repression in Germany of a revolutionary movement. He described the "decent German Beer Gardens" then existing in New York and argued that they should be restored.

All this seems to be propaganda to prepare the public mind for the return of the saloon, in case the Amendment is repealed. If the indifferent multitude, which includes a great many Church members and a very considerable number of ministers, once realizes that there is no way of preventing the return of the saloon except by Prohibition, they will become active as they have not been before. Prohibition and the enforcement of it will keep out the saloon, and clean out the speakeasy and the bootlegger. The repeal of the Amendment will make this impossible.

But repeal is not nearly as certain as the Wet press has made it appear since the election. There is great diversity of opinion among the Wets as to the best course take. They are also finding that the Wet sentiment is not nearly so strong as they assumed. The result of the late election was due to the revolt of voters because of the depression and its consequences, far more than to Prohibition. Present discussions in Congress are bringing this fact out.

Under these conditions the friends of Prohibition should, among other things, unite in insisting upon the following: (1) That any repeal Amendment must have a provision against the return of the saloon, under any name, which can be effectively enforced. The more this is discussed in Congress and thought out by the people, the clearer it will become that it is impossible. (2) That such a repeal Amendment must include a provision that will effectively protect Dry States against the importation of liquor from Wet States. Again the more this is discussed, the more impossible it will prove. This will array the Dry States strangely against ratification of a repeal Amendment. (3) That the time limit for ratification must be short, not seven years as proposed by the Wets. The people had experience with the license system before Prohibition and they have had over twelve years experience with Prohibition. There is no reason why they should have seven years to decide which they want. The demoralization in enforcement during the years allowed for ratification is what the Wets want, to influence Dry States to ratify; this

KINDLY DEEDS

By J. L. Bowman

A kindly deed is like a flower,
Its perfumes' rich and rare,
It has no favorite habitat,
For it blooms anywhere.

You sow the seed with tender care,
You water it with tears;
It takes some days to germinate,
And sometimes it takes years.

Long, long ago the seed was sown,
It may forgotten be,
But, God keeps watch above his own—
He's not like you and me.

That tiny seed, though very small,
A germ of greatness held,
That Germ a part of God's great plan,
And his plan never failed.

He watched the seed, he saw the time,
When it was best to grow.
The seed was stirred, it heard the word,
Its power began to show.

That seed has now become a plant,
Its blossoms wondrous fair,
They were admired by all who saw,
Their perfume rich and rare.

The sower he, had gone above,
His labors here were o'er.
But the kindly deed brought joy to him,
As he walked the golden shore.

A cup that is given in My name,
A crust that is shared with Me,
Will bring happiness here and over there
Through all eternity.
Linwood, Maryland.

must be avoided. (4) The effort of the Wets to provide that the repeal Amendment must be adopted by State conventions especially provided for this purpose and not by legislatures, must be opposed. All other Amendments have been ratified by the State legislatures. There is no good reason why this one should not be.

It is not difficult to see why the Wets want State conventions. (1) They have millions of money at their command. They hope to control the nominations of the members of these conventions. They hope to do this through the political machines in the various States. (2) They hope to control the newspapers of Dry States first as they have controlled the press and magazines for twelve years in the country. (3) It is difficult to get people to go to the polls and vote at any election where there is only one issue to be decided. It would be hard to get the Dry vote in large numbers to the polls simply to vote for delegates to such state conventions. The Wets have plenty of money to bring out the Wet vote. This was illustrated in 1928 when the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment spent $74,000 simply to get out the vote on election day in Massachusetts alone. This was entirely exclusive of the amount they spent in the campaign in that State.—Thomas M. Balliet, in the Reformed Church Messenger.

*He was a boy like other boys,
And he played and sported with the rest,
He had his troubles and his joys,
And strove for mastery with the best.
He was great-hearted, tender, true,
And brave as any boy could be,
And very gentle, for he knew
That Love is God's own chivalry.
And one thing I am sure about—
He never tumbled into sin,
But kept himself, within, without,
As God had made him, sweet and clean.

The Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry

For more than three months we have been hearing a great deal about the so-called Appraisal Commission of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry, with a net result that has not been to the advantage of foreign missions. The inquiry was instituted at a meeting of laymen on January 17, 1930, and was sponsored by laymen representing seven Protestant denominations as follows: Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, Dutch Reformed, United Presbyterian, Congregational, Protestant Episcopal and Northern Baptist. These laymen selected fifteen prominent churchmen from the denominations represented and sent them on a trip throughout the Far East with instructions to make a comprehensive examination of the mission effort in those lands. They were to inquire whether foreign missions had not finished their work, whether they were as valuable as they once were, whether indeed they should be continued, and what should be the attitude of Christianity toward the non-Christian religions.

This Inquiry apparently had its birth in the minds of men who had lost faith in the fundamental motives of the missionary enterprise—the command of our Lord, the universality of his atoning grace and the overflowing gratitude of redeemed souls. Otherwise they would not have launched out upon this Inquiry with the attitude of mind that the above mentioned questions indicate. Besides, the men selected to make the survey were coldly intellectual, without mission passion or spiritual fervor. They were undoubtedly keen men, highly specialized in various fields of learning and were said to have “special training and fitness to estimate the various phases of missionary work,” but men and women who have lost faith in the authority of the Word of Christ and in the unique character of his mission are not really fitted to sit in judgment on the missionary enterprise. And they brought home a report such as we might expect from men of their type.

Notwithstanding all that is being said and written about their report, some of the best informed and most spiritual leaders of the churches represented are discounting the worth of the Inquiry. One prominent Presbyterian, a past moderator of the General Assembly, says these distinguished investigators offered nothing new in their criticisms regarding the conduct of missions, nothing in the way of weaknesses but what missionary executives already knew and were seeking to correct. A certain missionary who had been in Japan for thirty-one years expressed a similar opinion. A very strong religious weekly, whose church had representatives on the Appraisal Commission, has written lengthy criticisms of the report and finds itself not “in agreement as to first principles,” saying “so much of vast importance fails of a hearing in the Report.” Missionaries are criticised as being “inefficient” and “bad business executives.” This smacks of the efficiency craze of “big business,” and the popular demand for “specialists and experts.” Of course, “efficiency” is not to be deprecated, nor are “specialists” and “experts” to be discounted, but the missionary task is not “big business,” nor are efficient missionaries to be judged as mechanical experts. Their specialism and expertness lie in a different field. It has been true of all the great missionaries from the days of the Apostle Paul down to the present time. “They were ‘experts’—in the knowledge of man—and ‘specialists’—in the knowledge of God.” There is grave danger in, what one writer calls, “the cult of specialism,” in any line, and especially in Christian missions, either on the part of missionary or executive. Our distinguished editor referred to says: “Were there available a staff of saints whose spiritual insight was as profound as the worldly skill of big business men, by all means remand to them the full direction, administration, partition, and running of our mission fields!” Give us men who are in response to the love and will of God.

But the greater objection, by far, to the report is to be found in its attitude toward the missionary enterprise as such, and the relation of Christianity to other religions. These investigators went on their way not with devotion for the cause of Christ, attachment to his church, and concern for the growth of the Kingdom in foreign lands, but, as they said, considering “always the greater interest rather than the lesser, the good of humanity rather than the growth of a movement.” As if the “movement” were merely of human origin and the “good of humanity” could be separate and apart from it! These men in their wisdom did reach an agreement that missions should go on, but they said: “There is in this fact, however, no ground for a renewed appeal for the support, much less the enlargement, of these missions in their present form and on their present basis.” If the church is to continue to ask for mission support, it must discover a new basis of appeal. The old Gospel appeal is no longer adequate. It is not strange that this veteran missionary to Japan complained: “I miss the sense of humility and awe which, it seems to me, should grip men who are tracing the steps of the redeeming, recreating Christ across a century of India's, China's and Japan's life.” And he said further: “I miss something else, I miss it tremendously. I miss a great glowing soul in the Report. There is no fire, no passion. Unharnessed and undirected emotionalism is dangerous and deadly, but when a divine passion ceases to pulsate through this foreign mission enterprise it is doomed.” And so it is. Such a consideration of missions with such an attitude could not be other than passionless. It has no divine Christ, no dying Savior, no risen Lord. Jesus is merely one among the world's great teachers of religion, maybe the noblest, but still not the only one, even if the greatest. Without a Christ that is unique, and supreme, the Son of God and the world's only Savior, there is no impelling, compelling urge to take the “good news” to the uttermost parts and to bring all men to know his saving grace.

Nepotism--“Pay Roll Racketeering”

During the election last fall a little discussion was provoked in “Our Readers' Views” department regarding expenditures and salary of the President. Except for the fact that partisan spirit seemed to be quite pronounced, we might have published further discussion. Besides there was much mis-information scattered abroad by press and radio and also much information misapplied or given the wrong inference, so that it was difficult for even the best informed and most conscientious of our readers to avoid being led unwittingly into the spread of political propaganda, or from thinking those presenting divergent views were doing so. We offered a brief explanation of the situation with regard to the President's salary and allowances and let the subject drop at that.

Now some one comes to us with the question: “Wasn't there a good deal more that might have been said and that people ought to know about government waste and officials growing fat at the expense of the public?” We answer this inquirer in the affirmative, saying: Yes, there is much that ought to be known, and which if known would influence public opinion in a way that would bring about some rather unusual forms of economy in the prevention of payroll padding. Much that ought to be known by intelligent citizens, however, is beyond the scope of a church paper to communicate. We will pass on some information, however, regarding “pay roll racketeering” as one representative in Congress styled it, that will illustrate by contrast how much more unselfish and highly motivated are the leaders of the church than are those of the government. Newspaper correspondents have known for a long time that nepotism was practiced on a large scale by government employees, particularly by members of Congress, but have said little or nothing about it until the depression made it "news." If even a few church leaders had shown themselves to be as greedy and unscrupulous as have many representatives and senators in Congress, who are commonly considered among the nation's noblest, reporters would have sought them out and given them first page prominence.

When a senator or representative puts the members of his family on the public pay roll as his helpers, it is hard for the public to believe that he is motivated by anything else than the desire to fatten his family income at the expense of the taxpayers. Thomas Jefferson once said: "The public will never be made to believe that an appointment of a relative is made on the grounds of merit alone, uninfluenced by family views; nor can they ever see with approbation offices the disposal of which they intrust for public purposes divided out as family property." Yet the Pathfinder is authority for the report that more than one-fourth of the members of the House and nearly forty per cent of the senators have members of their families on the government pay roll as secretaries, clerks, stenographers, etc., many of them giving no real service at all. "One representative had a daughter at Vassar and a son at West Point, yet they were being paid for work allegedly performed daily in their father's office. A senator ... carried his wife and sister-in-law at $6,300 a year, though they did no work." Another senator "was revealed as employing two daughters, a son and a grandson, with a son-in-law in the Farm Loan Bureau for good measure." Still another senator "had his aged mother-in-law on the roll for $2,580," and another had his son as his secretary at the top salary allowed, $3,900, and at the same time this son is said to be "vice president of a paving company which has received hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of contracts from the District government." The Pathfinder says it "learns, unofficially, from a high government official that 73 wives of members of Congress are on the public pay roll in some way or another." Not all of these relatives are racketeering employees. There are doubtless many doing efficient and proper service, but considering the number who are employed primarily for family income purposes, it is not surprising to learn that a bill is being sponsored that would prevent our national legislators from hiring relatives.

Over against this, consider the uncounted number of pastors whose wives are serving right along side of them in the work of the church, whose sons and daughters are in many cases assisting in the music, in leadership in young people's work of various kinds, in addressing letters, in operating duplicators, and many other forms of service for the church, not for financial gain but from love of the service. Instead of racketeering the church's pay roll, they are among the church's greatest volunteer workers and are entering into fellowship with their relative, the pastor, in vital concern for the growth of the church and the kingdom of righteousness. These and many other volunteer workers, not relatives of the pastor and yet his brothers and sisters in Christ, who are devoting much time and energy to the service of the church, are among the most unselfish workers the world has.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Miss Gladys Spice, general secretary of Christian Endeavor, offers on the young people's page a suggested program for the promotion of Quiet Hour observance. Read it and use it.

Prof. G. W. Brumbaugh of Dayton, a member of the Brethren's Home Board, writes this week, appealing for the support of the Home. One statement he makes is especially worthy of reiterating and pondering: "We must 'hold the lines' in these times in all our institutions."

A newspaper clipping from Nappanee, Indiana, informs us of the installation service for their new pastor, Brother G. L. Maus, who comes to them from Roann, Indiana. Brother A. T. Wirick presided at the service which was held on the evening of January 5th.

The Business Manager informs us in his "Corner" that two churches,—the First church of Philadelphia and the First church of Long Beach, California,—all unconscious of the fact, seem to be playing a "nip and tuck" game for first place in Evangelist subscriptions. Last week Philadelphia was ahead, this week Long Beach has first place. In case of a tie, Brother Teeter thinks it may be necessary to allow some "over time play." There are others, too, that are in the game with earnestness, and we stand ready to offer any encouragement possible to success. If you have special problems related to this campaign, write us; maybe we can help you out.

PUBLICATION DAY, THE LAST SUNDAY IN JANUARY is to be observed in the interest of the local church this year. You are not asked for an offering to apply on the purchase price of the Publishing House building, but use your offering to help pay Evangelist subscriptions for your own worthy poor, or apply it on your local budget to help get the paper into every home, or pay a certain part of each subscription and ask the individuals to pay the remainder (A number of churches pay a dollar and ask fifty cents of the members, but during this campaign we are offering a better price to Honor Roll churches.) Use whatever method you desire and apply the money as you desire for the benefit of your own people that they may be helped to the blessings of the Evangelist in their homes.

Next week we will publish a special Christian Endeavor number of the Evangelist with the cooperation of the National Christian Endeavor Officers and Editor of the C. E. Page of this paper. The Evangelist ought to be going into all the homes of the young people and in order to encourage a larger circulation among them we invite C. E. Societies to write for sample copies for distribution among their members. Then a special canvas should be made in an endeavor to put the paper in all homes where it is not now going. The special rates now being offered will be extended to all societies wishing to put on a canvas. If the church has not yet made such a canvas, this is an opportunity for the young people to do a special service for the church. New subscribers in clubs of five or more $1.25 cash with order; renewals in clubs of ten or more $1.35 cash.

One of the most successful evangelistic meetings reported for a good while comes this week from Leon, Iowa, where Brother Miles Taber is pastor. Brother Taber had the help of the California Quartet of Ashland College, during the holiday season, and those four young preachers, in cooperation with the pastor, proved to be a most efficient evangelistic team. They had the pleasure of seeing sixty-eight persons make the good confession during the meetings, a few of which were reconsecrations. The members of the quartet were Ernest Pine, Paul Bauman, Donald Carter and Ed. Colburn. They are all preachers and all singers, and it appears that they are all filled with love for souls and have the energy to go after them. It was a really great meeting. God's power was manifested and God's name was glorified.

Brother C. C. Grisso reports two evangelistic meetings recently conducted, one at the Campbell church in Michigan and the other at Loree, Indiana. Brother Grisso, having formerly been pastor of the Campbell church, knew the field well and was able to be of splendid service in the way of building up the people in greater unity of spirit and loyalty and devotion to Christ and his church. He says it was not an evangelistic meeting but proved to be a real revival. It is as good a work to cooperate with God in saving and reviving a church as it is to build a new one. Brother Grisso's meeting at Loree was well prepared for by Brother and Sister D. A. C. Teeter, who have charge of this work and are highly esteemed for their leadership. As suggested, this church is in the habit of having ingatherings every year and this meeting was not an exception. We must wait for a report direct from the field, however, to learn definitely the results, though it is hinted that there will likely be a score of baptisms, and there were also many reconsecrations. The evangelist found time to preach once at the Center Chapel church where he preached his first sermon twenty-nine years ago.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Prof. Alva J. McClain has been ill for a week or more and would appreciate the prayers of God's people that he may be speedily recovered and given strength for the heavy and responsible work that devolves upon him.

Things By the Way

By A. D. Gnagey, D.D.

Christmas of 1932

Another Christmas has come and gone. It is an annual affair. Christmas does come once a year. One is made to wonder just what remains a month after. On Sunday, January 8, 1933, the writer preached a sermon on "What Is Left of the 1932 Christmas?" Is there anything left of it? If so, what? Is there an abiding element in the annual observance of the anniversary of the birth of the Lord Jesus? Was it and is it worth while? The writer's Christmas sermon was entitled, "Keeping Christmas in may be sure that we have not kept it anywhere else.

A great preacher once said that it is not easy to keep Christmas in the heart; he said well. Like the Bethlehem Inn there are too many guests who claim room in our hearts; besides our hearts are apt to grow cold and hard and unsympathetic, yes, and more uncomfortable than the Manger in Bethlehem. As the little child hangs the empty stocking on the bedpost, so it might be for "grown-ups" to do a little house cleaning, empty the heart of all the Heart All the Year." Have its memories faded? If the reader were asked now just where he was on Christmas day and what he did and how he kept this Holy Day, would he have an answer that would satisfy his God, his Christ, his church,—and, his conscience? Jesus was born in Bethlehem 1932 years ago (approximately)—was he re-born in our hearts three weeks ago? Paul tells us that he was in travail "until Christ be formed in you, the hope of glory." If we have not kept Christmas in the heart we strife, bitterness, envies, grudges, etc. and "hang it up" clean and empty. And if you will do that with the implicit faith and confidence with which the child "posts" its empty stocking you may be assured that some heavenly Messenger will find the spot in your life which has been made ready for a "priceless gift."

Yes, it was worth while; we have seen what the child Jesus can make of the world for a little while, we know what the Lord Jesus can make of the world enduringly, when we let him have his perfect way with us.

Changed His Mind

The Homiletic Review tells of a prominent American who before Christmas sent a card to his relatives and friends with an inscription to the effect that as the modern Christmas is swiftly passing beyond the spirit and meaning of Old Yuletide and is now a day of much worry, distress, sorrow and ill-will, while "peace on earth and good will to men" has ceased to express today's Christmas attitude he had taken Christmas off his private calendar, and therefore would discontinue the custom of offering gifts or other Christmas tokens. It was a protest against the abuses which have been thrust upon the observers of the birthday of our Lord. But, continues the writer, strange as it may seem, this man who struck Christmas off his calendar put it back the next year, and wrote, "This Christmas I will be found among my fellow-men to put into effect, into living reality the greatest message I ever heard, Peace on earth, good will to men." Even so, it has come to pass that no one in any civilized land or in pagan lands can escape the birthday anniversary of the Lord Jesus. Nor indeed can one escape Christ himself: He has become a part of the world's thought and life, and while men may ignore him, they cannot escape thinking of him. In spite of man's attitude toward him, he is crowding, crowding, himself into the life of the world, and so we are led to believe that this old world is now in the birth pangs, the travail, of a new era. Will it bring forth a demon or a Savior,—who knows?

The Effect of Bible Reading

A well known Englishman, Strindberg, after issuing for years a series of rabidly violent attacks on the present social order, and assailing Christianity and Christian morals, took to reading the Bible constantly during his last illness. Those who had an opportunity of talking to him about spiritual matters said that he read with a heart hungering after the Gospel. The day before he died he beckoned his nearest relative to his bedside, took the Bible from the table, and lifted it with both hands and said: "Every personal grudge is now gone. I have settled with life, my accounts are closed, this (meaning the Bible) is the only true guide." He then pressed the Bible to his heart, and announced as his last will that, when life had ceased, his Bible should be placed on his breast, together with a small cross which he used to wear around his neck. A book that has power to so completely transform a life must have an origin other than merely human.

American Girls Wedded to Foreign Titles

The writer has in his possession the names of nearly one hundred American girls who became the wives of as many foreigners with honored titles, and the "dots they have taken with them." More than seventy-five per cent of them have been divorced even though they carried with them to their homes beyond the sea more than 500,000-000 dollars. "Money," we are told, "talks." It does. But the trouble is it talks too much and often in the wrong place. It has no power to bind together in sacred relationship men and women who have no genuine love one for the other. Among the real values of life, money occupies the lowest place.

IN THE MARKET PLACE

By Nellie Goode, Dallas, Tex.

*I stood and watched with troubled face
The crowd within the market place,
And grieved to see them, aimless, go
With restless footsteps to and fro.
So many roads, and paths, and creeds,
So many hopes, and aches, and needs.
At last I cried out in despair,
"Is there no guide, no teacher, there,
Whose words may reach above the din,
To speak of faith, of truth, of sin?
My voice, alas! is far too weak;
They would not hear if I should speak."*

*And then I thought a voice replied,
"They would not listen if you cried
In trumpet tones to all the rest,
For each one thinks his way the best.
Those words thou hast of truth and cheer,
Let thy life tell, and they will hear."*

*And so I sought along the way
To do small kindnesses each day;
I helped a stumbling child along,
I cheered the dreary ways with song;
I smiled at those whose hearts were sore,
And shared with needy ones my store.*

*And lo! at length the crowd drew near.
"Teach us," they said, "and we will hear."

Who Are the Saloon Keepers?

By Lawrence C. Ridenour

Some years ago in our pre-prohibition days a fearless lawyer-minister of our denomination said in an address to a rather large assembly of our people that the saloon-keepers were those who would not oppose or vote against the saloon business when they had an opportunity. It made a vivid impression on my mind. Came Prohibition. The impression vanished. Recently, and for obvious reasons the thought of it reproduced the impression afresh. Following it, arose the question in my mind, Will we yet be "saloon keepers"?

It is almost needless to say that the "wet sentiment of our country took definite and ominous form November 8, last. It is not a new form however, but one revived and trying to survive the will and the legitimate decision of an enlightened and conscientious citizenry who about twelve years ago dealt a staggering blow to the legalized liquor traffic and its mainstay, the saloon.

But some people will say, "O we are not going to have the saloons again, no, no." Let us not be deluded. If the liquor business of the past had only a half bad record and its participants a fairly good reputation we might politely hope they were sincere in making such assertions. And the "drys" could feel that they had gained in point of reform. But why dream like that? If that were true Prohibition perhaps would never have been born. The liquor interests never were concerned about reform, else they would have regarded other laws for the regulation of their business prior to National Prohibition.

The liquor advocates for the business are not however, so particular at present about dealing in the traffic under the name of the old saloon. What they ardently seek to have first is the stuff they can legally, and we should say unscrupulously, dispense for monetary profit, namely, intoxicating beverages. They have the assurance of un-governed appetites for drink from countless prospects for patrons. They know that as well as we do. If there be no saloon, other methods just as promising, and we should say just as evil, will be employed with the thought that they are not objectionable. But putting liquor in neatly labeled bottles or in shiny brown top jugs or white jugs or in polished kegs or barrels with white enameled hoops wouldn't change the contents one bit. John Barleycorn cannot disguise his character in an attractive dress.

Already our daily papers are giving out the information that some of the brewers of by-gone days are actually preparing for an early return to the manufacture of beer, real boozy beer. Such reports are braggative and delusive, to say the least about them. Our "wet" friends (?) would have us believe that this indicates a sure step to prosperity and happiness. But we "drys" are not fooled. We have not forgotten the woeful days of the old saloon and its disgusting associations. Their proprietors would not scruple to take the money of working men for liquor when it should have been spent for the necessities of life for their own families and for themselves. And if it is consistent to think or believe that the consumption of beer at any stage of a depression such as we are now having, when people have so little money to spend for food and clothing or fuel and shelter, then consistency is illogical in a moral or an economic standard for the welfare of humanity.

Our historic commentary of the saloon business is sad and disgraceful, and we maintain that we have a right to judge it accordingly. It took a long time and a lot of expense before the "wets" would admit that the saloons were undesirable or detrimental. And this they have done only as a last resort as a compromise with the "drys" to make them believe they were responsive to their views. One is reminded of a biologic freak in humor: "what a queer bird the frog is; when he sit down he stand up almost; when he jump he fly almost."

Our common error has been in the fancy that when statutory Prohibition was ushered in that all was safe and that all was done. That accomplishment was indeed a glorious national gesture, but it was not the end of the battle. More must be done if we hope to keep the 18th Amendment to our Constitution. It will be prudent and profitable that we be "redeeming the time because the days are evil", especially concerning this momentous question of keeping a sober nation.

Recently I attended two Prohibition rallies sponsored by our National Prohibition Party. If I were to judge by the meager number of people present I fear there may be some "saloon keepers" in the Dry camps. We should not be guilty. Our protest to a "repeal" should be registered to a maximum at every opportunity to present it or express it. The laws of every state, city, or any territory of civil jurisdiction for enforcing Prohibition should be retained. The Wets are seeking to have them repealed as they are seeking also to repeal eventually the 18th Amendment to our National Constitution. To lose the latter would be a tragedy to our national rectitude and a blight to the welfare of our posterity. Let us not be "saloon keepers" by our silence or non-support to any endeavor to hold that which has been achieved concerning this momentous moral issue again at stake.

The Little Church Knows Not Its Achievements for Christ

By Herb Lewis

"The little church by the side of the road"—with its membership varying from 75 to 150, may feel that its labors and influence count but little for the Kingdom when compared with the reports of activities of our larger congregations as published by our church papers.

These reports of our greater bodies which are better equipped, better financed and, perhaps, more firmly entrenched, should not in any way discourage the smaller units of the brotherhood; but, instead, should spur them on to expansion as general progress will support and justify. And one soul unsaved is justification for expansion and effort to reach that soul.

But, the little church in the old home town, where finances and equipment are limited, with its long record of soul-saving, has more to rejoice about, if it has persevered, than has the larger church, comparatively speaking. It is a happy thought for the still remaining pioneer members of a little home town church, to look back and rejoice over the salvation of souls—the rehabilitation of characters and lives—wrought by the untiring efforts of the little congregation, its pastors and teachers, as the many years have rolled by. Steadily there has been an ingathering of souls—a work of the Master—going on. Many may have departed, either for other lands or may be even more for the final rest, so that the congregation seems barely “to hold its own.” Hence the members may lose sight of the record God has made—of the hundreds of souls delivered into his hands as the years have rolled on. Blessed is the little church that holds its own, in this day of divided Christendom; for it must know that the work of the Kingdom is not falling by the wayside. This may be seen, as it is in the “little grey church” I have in mind, where today only two of its “charter members,” survive, after nearly 36 years of labor. As the records show, hundreds of people have here “made the great confession” and entered the waters of baptism, and through them—as they have passed to other scenes of earthly action, the gospel has spread from the little church to many parts of the world. The influence and teaching was seed sown in good soil. No doubt today, some of our ablest pastors in larger pulpits were eventually—perhaps directly or indirectly—led to their calling and service by the touch of the little home town church. Indeed, as I think of our little church, which is still pressing on, “holding its own,” preaching, teaching and reaching forward for continued service. While apparently doing so little, it is a great consolation to look back over a record of added souls, year after year, and to know this influence has reached far, far “into the uttermost parts of the earth.” It will continue as long as every little church keeps on doing whatever its capacity, support and equipment will permit: God not man, is keeping the record.

There's a little grey church in the old home town,
Which holds in our hearts a dear place;
And though it has gained little worldly renown,
We know it is under God's grace.

Many years have gone by (ye've not labored in vain Midst the trend of a worldly strife),
God counts souls by the score for his Kingdom's gain
Who were led to the Way and the Life.

Here pastors have labored and teachers have taught
The Word of the Master and King,
And no one but God knows the good that's been wrought
Which caused his angels to sing.

From this little grey church in the old home town
Saved souls have gone forth and afar,
With message of love, lifting those who were down
By pointing to Bethlehem's Star.

When these bodies of clay have entered their rest—
These spirits to heaven have flown,

O yet may we see, from that home of the blest,
That little grey church we have known.—Selected.

THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH

Editorials from Ministers and Laymen

“CALLED TO BE SAINTS”

Do you feel yourself shying away from the word, “saints”? Perhaps we have the wrong notion that a “saint” is some sort of person so good that he cannot come in contact with this wicked world. There are people that only associate with those who agree with them. All they know about conditions in the world is mostly what they have heard or read about. They do not feel it incumbent upon them to be the salt of the earth.

A “saint” is one who possesses the divine quality necessary for salvation. The only contact God has with the human race is through the people who are saved and set for holy living. An insoluble salt would be worthless just as salt which has lost its saltiness. If God has produced any change in human beings he has at the same time affected them with divine virtue. In the soul thus affected there must of necessity be something of God-likeness. When God saves he imparts something and when people are saved they receive some divine quality.

The Biblical meaning of a “saint” is one who is able to communicate the power and virtue of God. A “saint” is a veritable “live wire” charged with holy energy. A Puritan may not be a “saint” but only “static!” A “saint” can lose himself in the world without having the quality of his nature destroyed. He can help because he possesses eternal virtue that is not destroyed by temporal things. The “saint” is not under command of law but subject to the law of his calling. A “saint” is morally original and not one who apes the religious utterances of some other pilgrim in the world. It is God who calls us to be saints (Romans 1:7) and therefore a saint is not a repository of ancient homilies but an active soldier of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus.

LOYALTY TO CHRIST

Before writing on my subject, I want to commend our good Editor for this new feature in our paper—“THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH.” If all who write for this department will enjoy the perfect peace that the Psalmist wrote about, so that nothing will offend us, I am sure this department of our paper will prove to be of great practical benefit. If the Editor thinks that anything I write deserves the scissors, or even the waste basket, I am sure I will not be offended. I have not gotten offended in more than twenty-five years in controversy, and I am sure I am too old to start now.

We should be loyal to our beloved church and all its institutions, just so far as they are loyal to Christ and no further. We should reprove and rebuke in a kind and loving spirit the local churches, the national church, and all its institutions, just so far as they may be wrong. This will help the church to keep pure and loyal to Christ.

When exercising the sense of discernment between right and wrong, we should show great care for we are in danger of wresting scripture from its meaning. The Apostle Paul asks that he be followed so far as he follows Christ. The Bereans who would not accept Paul's teachings until they had searched the Scriptures for themselves, were more noble than others who swallowed down all he said without testing it by the Word. He also said that if he—the greatest evangelist the world ever knew—preached any other Gospel, or even should an angel from heaven—a higher created intelligence than man—let him be accursed.

Surely this and other similar Scriptures given any regenerated, Spirit-filled layman as well as others, the privilege to test everything in the local church, the denomination and all its institutions by the Gospel.

To teach that every member must obey the church because “the gates of hell shall not prevail against it”, referring to the visible church (right or wrong) causes every member to sin. Indeed it makes Jesus Christ a sinner after he went back to heaven. In Revelations 2 and 3 Jesus, O King-Priest, finds serious fault with five of the seven churches of Asia. He commends all that is good and condemns all that is evil. Hence it is a serious and grievous error to teach that we should be true to any church or any institution of any church without giving it the acid test of the Gospel.

Hence every local church, every denomination, every institution of every church, should be open to conviction, to honest, conscientious, open investigation. This should be done kindly, in a loving spirit, free from personalities. It is popular in politics to assail the individual instead of honestly meeting the argument. Often the same is practiced in the church.

Christ said he did nothing in secret. Everything should be brought out into the light and fairly and sincerely considered.

DRYS AGAIN IN FIGHTING MOOD

Atlanta, always a stronghold for prohibition is trying to rally dry sentiment for the approaching congressional fight. The Allied Forces held a meeting in the Baptist Tabernacle recently when Bishop Ainsworth of the Methodist church, south, was the spokesman. The bishop delivered a ringing challenge to drys to line up for a last stand against the enemies of prohibition, declaring that the nation was still dry at heart. But with all the congressional representatives regarding the last election as a mandate from the American people for straight repeal, there is not much comfort to be had from prohibition rallies and speeches. The south is confused. The prohibition issue, in the drinking of most drys, is yet to come. However, the press is convincing many people that the pols spoke in November.

This is evident: the drys in the south are not overconfident, neither are they afraid, and their boldness seems to take more intelligent and effective forms than of old.—Christian Century.

ALCOHOLISM ON THE INCREASE

The problem of alcoholism and more recently of drugs has gained increased importance since the end of the war. On the one hand, the use of drugs, formerly little known, has rapidly spread, and the consumption of liquors, as shown by official statistics, has constantly increased; on the other, the new social reforms, which in many respects have worked marvels, by modifying the family status have suddenly removed old standards and barriers. Their disappearance, to a certain degree, has been responsible for a weakening of nerves, leading, as was recently pointed out by Prof. Fahreddin Kerim, to an increase of suicide. Given this moral crisis, the struggle against alcoholism and drugs is emphasized by the Green Crescent—the Turkish temperance society—as the best means of morally strengthening the rising generation.

A strong argument on which the Green Crescent bases its propaganda is the fact that prohibition, decreed during the war of the Independence because steady nerves were then needed, yielded excellent results during the whole time of its enforcement. According to official statistics, it witnessed a decrease by 42 per cent of vice and crime. But the situation was reversed when prohibition was repealed and replaced by a state monopoly.—E. Gueron, in Christian Century.

Unbelievers in Holy Writ are far from being in agreement among themselves as to the time in which the heaven and the earth were created. We saw a late pronouncement coming forth from the American Association for the Advancement of Science, asserting a need for 500,000,000 years for the building of this old "Mother Earth." Well, if they need all those years, they can have them.—more if they want them. Yaers are something of which God happens to have a very bountiful supply. As to the present geographical arrangement of the land and water surface of the earth, that is another question. The scientist can have all the time he wants to give age to preadamite life, dwelling either in the shapes of men or of beasts. As to the age of the present race of men, descendants of Adam and Eve, that is another question,—a question for men to determine who "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1:21), and not be men who write as they are moved by the latest prejudices and vagaries of unregenerate minds of the man-like bodies of a preadamite race of creatures on this earth bfore Adam's day, we shall speak later. Suffice it to state here that between the first and the second verses of the book of Genesis, men of worldly science can find all the time needed even for its wildest imaginations.

But, remember this,—

"In the beginning GOD"—not MATTER

All reputable scientists are exceedingly cautious in taking issue with that statement. Many of them, and the greatest of them, affirm it with great positiveness. Prof. J. Clerk Maxwell, of Cambridge, England, one of the most distinguished mathematical physicists in the history of science (of whom Prof. Huxley said: "He is a philosopher, as remarkable for the subtlety of his intellect as for his vast knowledge")—this man did not hesitate to affirm:

Science is incompetent to reason upon the creation of matter itself out of nothing. We have reached the utmost limit of our thinking faculties when we have admitted that, because matter cannot be eternal and self-existent, it must have been created.

If matter "must have been created," then by whom? There is only one reply—God, the God who has revealed himself to man in that marvellous personality, Jesus Christ.

"In the Beginning—ELOHIM"

"Elohim"—such is the Hebrew name first applied to deity in the Scriptures. "Elohim"—a uni-plural noun translated by Hebrew scholars—"gods." Note the inspired statement:

And Elohim said, Let US make man in OUR image, after OUR likeness: . . . So Elohim created man in HIS own image, in the image of Elohim created HE him; male and female created HE them (Gen. 1:26, 27).

Once again, read the same passage and place the emphasis on the nouns or pronouns referring to man.

And Elohim said, Let us make MAN in our image. after our likeness: and let THEM have dominion. . . . So God created MAN in his own image, in the image of God created he HIM; male and female created he THEM.

The "MAN" is "THEM" and the "THEM" is "HIM." The two of "them" are "him"—if you will pardon the grammar. And "them" or "him" is "man." "They two shall be one flesh," says the inspired apostle (Eph. 5:31).

Even so with "Elohim," the "us" is "he," and "he" is God. The eternal Father, the eternal Son, the eternal Spirit,—each uncreated and "in the beginning"—and these three are God.

"We are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones. For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery, but I speak concerning Christ and the Church" (Eph. 5:31, 32).

"This is a great mystery": "They two"—husband and wife—"shall be one flesh." And, "this is a great mystery": They three—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—are one God.

Verily, the Trinity is a great mystery, and yet not more of a mystery than the mystical union between Christ and his Church, or between husband and wife, or between believer and believer. "Holy Father," prayed our Lord on the night before he went to the Cross—"Holy Father . . . I pray . . . that they may all be one; as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one

"In the Beginning."

(Genesis 1:1)

"In the beginning"—not merely six thousand years ago, but back in an eternity so remote that only God can know and man cannot discover—"God created the heaven and the earth." One trouble with most men in the world of science is that they know a lot about the revelations of science, but almost nothing about the revelation of God. If they knew more about the inspired Word of God, they would not show their ignorance in accusing Moses of writing that "the heaven and the earth" was created by God "six thousand years ago." The first three words of divine revelation fix the time of creation as having been "in the beginning"—a fact that one would think a child would understand. If not then, then when?

in Us. . . . The glory which thou gavest me, I have given them; that they may be one, EVEN AS WE ARE ONE" (John 17).

Three Persons of absolutely one mind, a perfect union, that is the Elohim of the Scriptures. Because of their utter oneness of wisdom, oneness of mind, it could be truly said of Christ: "If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him and have seen him. . . . He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father. . . . Believe me, that I am in the Father, and the Father in me" (John 14:7-10).

There are three: the Son, who was bowed beneath the waters of the Jordan in the holiest of all baptisms; the Spirit that was seen "descending like a dove and lighting upon him"; and, the Father, who spake from heaven, saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. 3:17). Three? Surely! One? Just as surely!

And thus, in the name, "Elohim," of the first verse of the first chapter of the first book of the Bible, we find the first intimation that our God is the great Three-in-One and the One-in-Three.

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Zechariah

Zechariah (Jehovah Remembers) the son of Berechiah, (Jehovah Blesses) the son of Iddo (the Appointed Time), is a very common name in the annals of the Old Testament. There are exactly thirty-one different characters who bear his name, including the prophet's name in the list. The son, father, and grandfather all bear names signifying important truths namely, "Jehovah remembers, Jehovah blesses, at the appointed time." Indeed, Jehovah remembers his people and the covenant, he blesses them, and at the proper time he has restored and will restore again wayward Israel.

The Prophet's History

Zechariah, the prophet of the Restoration and Glory, was no doubt born in captivity in Babylon. He came back with the exiles and certainly spent eighteen years in the homeland before he began to prophesy in the second year of Darius Hystaspis, 520 B. C. He was a contemporary of the governor Zerubbabel, the high priest Jeshua, and the prophet Haggai. (See Ezra 5:1, 2; Zech. 3:1; 4:6; 6:11). With the latter prophet he joined hands, head and heart in admonishing the Jewish leaders of the colony to rebuild the place of worship. He probably was a Levite and also a priest. Hence his intense desire for the restoration of the Temple is readily appreciated.

The Book Itself

The prophecy of Zechariah is one of the most difficult of all the so-called minor prophetic writings. It is historical and apocalyptic, that is being interpreted, factual and revelatory. Where the prophecies of the book have been fulfilled there the history of the book has been vindicated; but there remain many unfulfilled prophecies which the present day scholar will do well to peruse with the greatest care. He should never mistake the flickering light of his own over-zealous individuality for the great transactions of Almighty God. So thoughtful and reverent a Bible scholar is Dr. James M. Gray has this timely warning for the serious student of unfulfilled prophecy: "We must not be too hasty in forming our opinion with reference to unfulfilled prophecy, or uncharitable and dogmatic in asserting them. Let our attitude be that of prayerful searching of God's Word, humble attendance upon those who, taught of the Spirit, are in their turn able to teach us, and only kind and gentle expression of that which we believe to be truth when it is opposed by others who may seem to have as good a right to be heard." Angels could wish for no more gracious statements of the case than this. It is well-balanced judgment and well-seasoned wisdom. May those who watch the present eastward course of empire take immediate and watchful heed:

I THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Zechariah.
2. When and Where Written? Around 520 B. C., probably in Jerusalem.
3. To Whom Written? To the Jews.

4. Why Written? To encourage the building of the Temple and to announce future events in Israelitish History.
5. Authenticity. The best scholarship of our day adheres to the unity of the Book. Its Authorship, though disputed, is Zechariah's.

II THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK (MORGAN)

- A. Messages during the Building of the Temple. 1-8.
 1. The First Message.
 2. The Second Message.
 3. The Third Message.
- B. Messages After the Building of the Temple. 9-14.
 1. The Burden of Hadroch.
 2. The Burden of Israel.

III THE NATURE OF THE BOOK

The first part of the prophecy contains these visions:

1. The Myrtle Trees. Israel Today.
2. The Horns and Smiths. Israel's Enemies Overthrown.
3. The Measuring Line. Jerusalem's Future Prosperity.
4. Joshua. Israel Cleansed and Restored.
5. The Candlestick. Israel as a Light Bearer.
6. The Flying Roll. Earthly Government.
7. The Ephah. Wickedness Restricted.
8. The Chariots. Righteousness Administered.

The second part of the prophecy deals with:

1. The Grecian Period.
2. The Roman Period.
3. The Final Period.

IV THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Vision. Jealous and Jealousy. Jehovah of Hosts.
2. Key Verses. 1:3, 14; 4:6; 8:2, 3.
3. Key Chapters. 14, 1.
4. Key Ideas. God's Concern and Love for his People.

V THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

Dr. Chambers remarks: "I agree with Pressel that he must have no eyes who does not see and admire the grandeur of the night-visions, and he no ears who does not hear the heavy tread of the last six chapters. Manifest as is the dependence of Zechariah upon his predecessors in some particulars, he yet has a marked individuality both in thought and expression; for example. God's protection of Jerusalem as a wall of fire round about and glory within (2:5); the dramatic scene of Joshua and Satan before the angel of the Lord (3:1, 2); the poetic delineation of the resistless Spirit (4:7); the development of the idea in the word Branch (3:8; 6:12); the exquisite picture of peace and prosperity (8:4, 5); the representation of Judah as a bow which the Lord bends, and of Ephraim as the arrow fitted on a string (9:13); the energy in describing the wretchedness of the flock of slaughter (11:5); the striking comparisons (12:8-10); the amazing conceptions in the phrase, 'fellow of Jehovah' (13:7); or the picturesque method of setting forth universal holiness (14:20, 21). The Hebrew of Zechariah is now admitted to be pure, and remarkably free from Chaldaisms. There are some orthographic peculiarities, some singular uses of words, and some unusual constructions; but in the main the language corresponds to that of the earlier models, and exhibits far fewer traces of linguistic decay than we should expect."

"Instead of this book being all fulfilled prophecy, as some would have it, it is indeed mostly unfulfilled, and even some of the prophecies which, on the surface seem to have seen a fulfillment were only in part realized." The book has this additional value.

VI THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Christ is depicted in Zechariah 12-14 as

1. The King: Coming.
2. The King: Rejected.
3. The King: Second Advent.
4. The King: Victorious.
5. The King: Program.

Read also 3:8; 9:9; 9:16; 11:11-13; etc.

VII THE LESSONS OF THE BOOK

1. The principle of "not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts" is stressed. Religious movements lacking the might and power of the Spirit of God may expect to fail sooner or later.
2. "Return unto me" and "I will return unto you." That is ever Jehovah's request. Man must meet it if he expects any sort of prosperity or success in the religious life.

The Greatness of Christian Faith

By Leander S. Keyser

Why Faith is Pleasing to God

You will remember that Hebrews 11:6 says, "But without faith it is impossible to please him (God); for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

But why is faith so pleasing to God? It is taught in the Bible, and there must be a divine rationality in it. Well, let us put it just as primer-like as we can: Faith is pleasing to God for the simple reason that our Heavenly Father wants to be trusted. Is that not reasonable? If it does not appeal to the unbeliever, or the unregenerated person, it surely will appeal to every person who has had the experience of God's life in his soul.

Do not you and I like to be trusted? And is it not a fact that the honestest we are the more it hurts us when some one calls our probity in question? How we would resent it if some one were to call us a falsifier just once. Since we have been created in the divine image, we may reason back to God; and so we may say that God likes to be trusted just as we ourselves do, if we know ourselves to be honest and sincere. We are minded to put it this way: Nothing pleases our Heavenly Father more than for you and me to say, "Father, I lay my hand in thine; lead thou me in the way that I should go"; or when we say trustingly, "Father, when I cannot walk by sight, I am willing to walk by faith; for thou wilt guide me with thine eye, and thou canst see in the darkness as well as in the light." Yes, an honest God wants to be trusted by his rational creatures.

What Trusting God Means

Let us probe a little more deeply into our theme. When we put our trust in God, we are going back to the Ultimate Reality. Is not that a rational act of the human mind? There must be an Ultimate Reality. Do you ask why? Because there is something now; therefore there must have always been something. If there ever was a time when there was nothing, nothing could have ever come into existence. Ex nihilo nihil fit. Now, that eternal and ultimate Something must be the Eternal and Ultimate Some One, because there are not only material substance and organic life in the universe, but also sentient, self-conscious, ethical and spiritual personalities; and the only adequate cause for their origin and existence is a Personal Ultimate Being who is their Creator and Preserver—that is God. Human personality is a fact and an effect; therefore it must have had an adequate cause.

Thus you see that Christian faith, which goes back to that which is eternal and absolute, is a most profound and rational act of the soul. Why are so many people of the world so unstable and dissatisfied? Mad for pleasure, they run to and fro with hectic pursuit of it; yet they are sated, nauseated, troubled with ennui. The reason is so evident it lies on the surface: they are putting their trust in temporal and mutable things, and when they change, their feelings and moods change. Hence they are "tossed about by every wind of doctrine" or they run after every flitting ignis fatuus of pleasure. There is no stability of true satisfaction in their lives.

But the Christian believer puts his trust and stays his life upon the eternal and unchangeable God; upon him Who "inhabith eternity"; Who is "from everlasting to everlasting"; Who "is the same yesterday, today and forevermore." That is the reason his life is stabilized; that is why he can tread with stately steppings on the gradient "highway of holiness", while he looks at "the things that are not seen; for the things that are seen are temporal, while the things that are not seen are eternal."

Some one has given us the smart adage, "Hitch your wagon to a star." As a saying to stir high aspiration for the things of this life-time, it may answer a good purpose; but we would venture to amend the epigram by saying: "Do not hitch your wagon to a star—that is, do not bind your life to a star, but to the God Who made the star and Who made all the stars, and then you will live a solidified and unified life." Then you will not be a "double-minded man, unstable in his ways." You will be "steadfast and unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

God the Final Psychologist

After all, God knows more about human psychology than do all the human students of that branch of science. Having created the human mind in his own image, he must know all about its essence, its functioning powers, its ethical and spiritual states. In these facts we may see another reason why faith is pleasing to him.

When he looks down into people's souls, is it thinkable that he is indifferent to their inner status? When he sees that a soul believes in him, trusts him, treats him as if he were an honest God, is it not reasonable to believe that he is gratified? Why should he not be? On the other hand, if he scrutinizes a soul that is full of unbelief; that says resentfully, "I don't believe in God; or if there is a God, I don't believe that he is a good God, or that he ever cared enough for us to give us such a special revelation as is claimed for him in the Bible"—is it reasonable to believe that God could look with complacency on such a psychical frame?

The ethical inner condition of the believer is different from that of the unbeliever. The believer is humble, trustful, aspires after love toward, and happy and holy fellowship with, God, who is the highest Being. The unbeliever is almost always arrogant, bitter, rebellious against the order of the world, and hates the idea of a God. No wonder God cannot be pleased with such an unethical and unspiritual state of mind.

The Story of Transformed Lives

Another reason why faith—Christian faith, we mean—is pleasing to God is because of the many lives which have been transformed through faith in Jesus Christ. What a roster of men and women who have been redeemed through such faith might be called! Just think of a few of them—Paul, Peter, Justin Martyr, Chrysostom, Augustine, Luther, John Newton, John Bunyan, John Knox, Rowland Hill, Dwight L. Moody, Phillips Brooks, and many, many more. Think of all the "Twice-born men" of Christian history. Reflect on "God in the slums" and the marvelous transfigurations which Christ has wrought. How many men have been rescued from bad lives and saved to good lives through faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Redeemer.

Now, think the proposition through: Do you know of any persons who have been saved from evil lives to good lives through doubt? Go back in history, beginning with Celsus, Porphyry, Hierocles, Lucian, and come down to Voltaire, D'Alembert, Diderot, and all the rest to the very latest unbeliever, and how many people have been saved from sinful lives to righteous lives through their influence and writings? We fear you will find none. Surely transformed lives must be pleasing to a good and holy God such as the Bible portrays.

So we want to plead with our readers not to give up their faith in God and Christ and the Bible, whatever doubts, trials and misfortunes may come into their lives. We would especially like to make this appeal to the young men and women in our colleges and universities, who will be the future leaders of thought. Do not let your faith be undermined when some one, even though he may occupy a notable university professor's chair, scoffs at Christianity. If you abandon faith in God and the Bible, what will you do then, and what will you gain? Will any of your fundamental problems be solved? Not one of them. On the contrary, they will be plunged into Chimerian darkness. Suppose you should give up the Bible, what about these salient problems that will not down: Whence have we come? Why are we here? Whither are we bound?

However, think of the great alternative: If the Bible is true, then these vital problems of origin, purpose and destiny are solved for us in a most reasonable and satisfying way. Then we know the whence, the why and the whither of every one who accepts God's gracious revelation to the children of men, so that they need not grope about in spiritual darkness. Ought not all thinking people to accept the most rational world-view, and then go to Jesus Christ in faith and humility, and thus discover in a real Christian experience that he is "the way, the truth and the life"? Truly we may say with the Psalmist: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

"A glory gilds the Sacred Page,
 Majestic like the sun;
 It gives a light to every age;
 It gives, but borrows none."

JESUS AND THE SABBATH

(Lesson for January 29)

Lesson Text: Mark 2:23 to 3:6; Golden Text, Mark 2:27, 28

Daily Readings and Suggestions

The First Sabbath. Gen. 1:24 to 2:3

God and his Christ have never exacted anything unreasonable from man. In all things, even in death, he has gone before us, and has set us the example and shown us the road. On the seventh day God rested; we cannot believe it was merely from physical exhaustion (if we may use such an expression concerning Deity); rather, he set us this example, knowing that it was not well for man to be continuously busy. Man needs time to rest from his labors, to meditate upon them and the fruits thereof; he needs also to meditate upon the labors of God and the fruits they bear in his life. Let us bless God for the Sabbath.

TUESDAY

The Sabbath Commandment. Exodus 20:8-17

None of God's laws may be transgressed with impunity; for every transgression there is a penalty, and much of the disregard for law and the rights of men today may be traced to the ever growing disregard for God's laws and especially God's Sabbath. Occasionally the ox does fall in the ditch, but we too readily permit business and pleasure to interfere with our observance of the sabbath, and spiritual poverty is the result. Let us soberly and honestly examine ourselves in this regard.

The Sabbath Made for Man. Mark 2:23-28

Men often take advantage of this scripture in their efforts to justify themselves in their evident disregard for the sabbath. However, it is true that we are not under law, but under grace; it is not the letter of the law that counts, but the spirit. Emergencies may sometimes arise which cause us, in the eyes of men, to appear to break the sabbath; but if, while so engaged, our spirits are inclined toward God and our hearts are yearning for his courts, God knows our hearts and remembers that the sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath. How thankful we ought to be that we have a Savior who lived in human flesh and understands!

Doing Good on the Sabbath. Mark 3:1-3

The spirit of the Lord's Day, or the "Christian Sabbath," is in some respects quite different from the sabbath of the law. The latter was a day of complete rest from all toil, of any description; only the simplest and most essential duties might be performed, and the remainder of the day was given over to the temple service, to meditation and prayer. But the Lord's Day was a day for doing good, a day of great activity, doing as much good as humanly possible. At the close of the Lord's Day we may be physically tired, but our hearts are glad at the opportunity we have had for service.

FRIDAY

Healing on the Sabbath. Luke 13:10-17

Healing on the sabbath was just one way Jesus had of doing good. God's power is no less today; he can and does heal, even today, although in general it seems that he has a different plan for dealing with these bodies of ours. However, he has commissioned us to lead men who are sick with sin to the great Physician who can heal the soul, and may heal the body as well. One thing is certain: there is no healing of the body until the soul be healed. Pray that we may be as concerned about the spiritual sickness of our friends (and of our own selves), as about physical illness.

SATURDAY

Worship on the Sabbath. Luke 4:16-22

By his own example and by word of mouth Jesus taught that man shall not live by bread alone. With this passage Jesus would have led the people to think upon the Lord and upon his holy Spirit; upon the gracious work that he had already done in and for them, and upon the greater work that he was yet to do through the Messiah. If we are to become spiritually strong we need spiritual food and we need the strength that comes from the worship of the Lord's Day. But just as we do not suffer our bodies to go a whole week without food, so our spirits need food from day to day. Let us also thank him for the Family Altar and the privilege of daily worship and communion.

SUNDAY

The Joy of Worship. Ps. 122:1-9

Originally God was the actual ruler of the Jewish state, and his house was still the center of Jewish life. To many it had become merely a habit, or a form; but those who still worshipped Jehovah in spirit and in truth found joy in so doing. And it has always been so. Our God has done so much for us—a beautiful world which bountifully supplies our every need, friends and loved ones; and best of all, when death entered there came One who saves from sin and death. Truly there is joy in the worship of such a Savior!

A QUIET HOUR SERVICE (from C. E. World). Song service—"He leadeth me," More about Jesus," "It pays to serve Jesus," Quiet Hour Presentation.

Duet—"Open my eyes that I may see."

Scripture Lesson—"Our Need of the Quiet Hour." Psalms 31:19-24; John 5:39; Matt. 4:4; 2 Tim. 2:15; John 15:4.

"His Example." Matthew 14:23.

"Strength in Temptation." 1 Cor. 10:13; Matt. 26:41; Ps. 119:11.

Short Talks—

1st Talk: "WHEN to keep the Quiet Hour." (The following poem might be used in connection with this.)

"I met God in the morning

When the day was at its best,
And his presence came like sunrise
Like a glory within my breast.

All day long the presence lingered,

All day long he stayed with me;
And we sailed in perfect calmness,
O'er a very troubled sea.

Other ships were blown and battered,

Other ships were sore distressed;
But the winds that seemed to drive them
Brought to us a peace and rest.

Then I thought of other mornings

With a keen remorse of mind,
When I too had loosed the moorings
With the Presence left behind.

So I think I know the secret

Learned from many a troubled way;
You must seek him in the morning
If you want him through the day.

—R. S. Cushman.

2nd Talk: "WHERE to keep the quiet hour." (A very interesting page was devoted in the Sunday School Times some months ago, to the discussion of WHERE to keep our quiet hour. If one is not so fortunate as to have a room where you can lock yourself away from others, it is a real question. But one busy mother managed to find time while her children were at school; another who was compelled to lie down each day in order to keep fit physically used that time to just simply meditate on the Word and pray to the Father in heaven; while a busy business man had to steal away to his library in the wee-hour of the morning (when all others were sleeping), but in each and every case where there was someone really interested and anxious enough to get "alone with God" there was a way provided to do so,—and so we believe that each Endeavorer CAN find some place to enter the secret of his presence if they really want to.)

3rd Talk: "HOW to keep the quiet hour." Certainly meditation, prayer and Bible reading should take up this time. By the way, did you ever hear a better definition for COMMUNION WITH GOD THAN this: "Communion is entering into thought with God regarding his Son." The following illustration is given to make this definition very clear: You enter a home which has just recently had its presence graced with a new baby,—you talk to that mother and father probably about the "depression" or the "weather" and you get a half-hearted response to your conversation; but the moment you begin to talk about that baby you have the whole-hearted attention of the parents and they do not miss a remark you make regarding that "little bit of heaven" which God has entrusted into their care. Now, if this be true of earthly parents, how much more true it is that our heavenly Father is "all attention" when we begin to think WITH HIM regarding HIS SON. Of course, in order to be able to do this: i. e., enter into thought with God regarding his Son, WE MUST KNOW THE WORD, so herein enters the need of Bible study. How often we say we have studied the Bible when in all truthfulness we have only "read" it.

It is one thing to READ the Bible through, Another thing to read to learn to do. Some read it as their duty, once a week, But no instruction from the Bible seek.

Some read it as if it did not speak to them, But to the people of Jerusalem.

But read it PRAYERFULLY, and you will see
A pattern for YOUR life,—like him to be.

We would like to make this suggestion also, that when you pray, TALK ALoud TO GOD. This may seem foolish to those who have never tried it, but it does away entirely with that tendency toward wandering minds, and brings about the sense of God's reality in Person as nothing else will do. If you believe that God is a REAL PERSON then talk to him like he was a real Person, and the first thing you know you will be unconsciously "practising the presence of God."

Song: "I need thee every hour."

Blanks to be distributed and signed by those willing to become Quiet Hour Comrades.

Closing Hymn: "Take time to be holy."
THE AIM OF THIS PROGRAM IS TO GET AT LEAST 25% of the active members to spend at least 15 minutes daily in devotions.

Special courses in Bible reading should be directed by your pastor.

We would suggest that your Quiet Hour Chairman order some of McConkey's booklets from the Silver Publishing Company, Bessemer Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. These are sent out free, but inasmuch as the work is kept up by free-will offerings, it is best to send at least a small offering with your order if you expect to order a large number at a time. A postal card sent to the above address requesting samples of these pamphlets will bring you a series from which you can choose your order. All are worth reading.

Another help which your Secretary has found very valuable is the Grace Saxe books, which can be purchased for 25c from the following address: Miss Grace Saxe, 843-845 N. Wells St., Chicago, Illinois. The following list is quoted:

Studies in Genesis; Studies in Exodus; Studies in Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy; Studies in Joshua, Judges and Ruth; Studies in 1st and 2nd Samuel; Studies in the Major prophets; Studies in the Life of Christ; The Acts; Luke; and three studies, namely, 1. Christian Science Compared with the Bible; 2. The Second Coming of Christ (with diagram). 3. The Way of Salvation.

The last 3 studies all in one book for the same price as the others named,—25c each. We would recommend these very highly inasmuch as they are true to the Word and at the same time can be purchased at such a low price.

the work and rewarded the evangelist accordingly. I covet the prayers of God's faithful children for the work here that the right leader might be secured for them that they might take their place again as one of our growing aggressive congregations.

Loree, Indiana

At the invitation of the Loree Brethren church we began an evangelistic effort with them on December 26, and continued just two weeks. All arrangements for the meeting were well planned before we arrived. Various committees, such as are necessary for a successful revival, had been selected and all were working at the task assigned them. The meetings had been well advertised. The spiritual preparation had not been overlooked by the pastor. Thus the meeting was begun under favorable conditions. The weather was great. Only one night did weather seriously affect the attendance. Other evenings the house was comfortably filled. This church has an ingathering every year. The Bible school was well gleaned. Thus it was necessary to go into new fields for our harvest. This we did. The folks came, they heard, they believed, and in all a number of whole families were won for Christ and the church. The pastor will report the additions to the church. There were many reconsecrations. These we did not keep a record of. There will likely be a score of folks baptized as a result of the meeting. It was a genuine old-fashioned revival, the like of which I have not witnessed for some years.

Brother D. A. C. Teeter and his good wife are at the helm and are universally loved by their people and by the entire community. We enjoyed his fellowship. He is a true yoke-fellow. The church is at peace. We did not hear one discordant note. Not one word of complaint of the efforts of the pastor. This is as it should be. This church is blessed with a host of young people. One service by actual count there were seventy-seven of them present. This speaks well in these days when so many of our young folks are not interested in spiritual things.

We made our home with the Teeters, and what a home it was! We were cared for in such a way that we were kept physically fit to carry on the work unhindered. The Lord gave us much liberty in preaching the gospel and was pleased to abundantly bless our labors together. Loree is one of our best Indiana churches. Its spiritual atmosphere is exceptionally good for the times. They love the Word and love to hear it preached. We shall never forget their many kindnesses and their words of appreciation of our labors among them. They were kind enough to invite us for a return meeting. This invitation we are glad to accept. We hope for continued victories here under the present leadership. One Sunday afternoon Brother Paul Davis of this congregation took me over to where he ministers, twenty miles away, to give my chart lectures. We brought the message to a splendid group of earnest listeners. Paul helped us much in the meeting. He is loved by his people at Center Chapel. Nearly fifty from this church found their way over to Loree one evening during the meeting. It was at Center Chapel that this writer preached his first sermon twenty-nine years ago. There were a number present at this service who heard "that most wonderful discourse" twenty-nine years ago.

PASTORAL AND EVANGELISTIC SKETCHES

Campbell, Michigan

On November 10 the writer was privileged to begin a two weeks' meeting with the Brethren church at Campbell, Michigan. Here we labored in years past and the Lord was pleased to give us near a hundred souls for our labors in those days and through the leadership of the Holy Spirit a work was builded that at that time was one of the leading rural churches of the brotherhood. But reverses came; Satan entered in and divided the once thoroughly united flock. Knowing the field as we did and the people in general we were invited to come and spend some time in an effort to restore the work if possible to the place it once held. We firmly believe that there is a very marked growing spirit of unity and cooperation which, if it continues will unite them again in a way that they can go forward as in other days. Here is to be found some very loyal Brethren. They are Brethren and they know why. They have an abiding interest in all the general work of the church, despite the efforts that have been made to thwart this interest. The meetings throughout were well attended and a very fine spirit prevailed. The unsaved were not there. Hence we accomplished nothing in the way of evangelism. We did have a revival. There was a quickening of interest all along the line. We did all that was in our power to bind up the broken chords and restore peace and harmony, and get them to see the necessity of standing together and keeping the work of the church going for the sake of the community, which without them would be unchurched, as well as for the sake of their children. We spent much time in visiting and giving counsel and we believe that our efforts in that direction have not been in vain. Arrangements are well on the way to have a pastor on the field soon. Whoever he is if he gives the proper sort of shepherding he will find a mighty loyal group of folks with whom to labor. Our heart was made heavy to witness the loss of some who ought to have been saved to the work. Paul's prophecy in Acts 20:29-30 has been fulfilled here. We closed the meeting with a love-feast in which upwards of fifty surrounded the Lord's table. It was a most blessed service. The church was highly appreciative of the efforts put forth to revive

At the close of the meeting we journeyed homeward via Goshen where Mrs. Grisso had been spending a week with our daughter and our new granddaughter.

Lanark, Illinois

During our absence in the above meetings the work at home has been cared for nicely by different groups, such as Bible classes, Christian Endeavor, etc. We hear much praise of their efforts. Our ever faithful church correspondent is reporting our work here from time to time, hence we leave it to him to keep you informed of our activities in the Lord's work. Let us unitedly endeavor to make this a great year for Christ and the church. C. C. GRISSE.

NEW PASTOR INSTALLED AT NAPPANEE, INDIANA

Reception is Held for Rev. and Mrs. G. L. Maus

About 250 members and friends of the First Brethren church attended the reception held Thursday evening, January 5, 1933, for the Rev. and Mrs. G. L. Maus, formerly of Roann, Indiana. The installation services were conducted by the Rev. A. T. Wirick of South Bend and a welcome was extended to the new pastor by each department head of the church. The program consisted of musical numbers by the brass quartette; vocal trio selections by Miss Cora Culp, Mrs. Bert Radabaugh and Mrs. Mervin Stuckman; vocal solo, Miss Eleanor Sechrist; number by girls' chorus and selections by Robert Widmoyer and Mrs. Arlene Stouder at the marimbaphones. Following the program refreshments were served and a social hour followed.

Rev. S. M. Whetstone of Goshen a former pastor of the church and Mrs. Whetstone were among the out-of-town guests who attended the services.

Rev. Maus comes here from Roann, Indiana, and prior to his ministry there he had successfully had charge of the work at Dallas Center, Iowa, Bryan, Ohio and Peru, Indiana. He comes highly recommended for his work and not only the members of the First Brethren church but the people of Nappanee will extend to him a hearty welcome.—Nappanee Advance-News.

THE CALIFORNIA QUARTET AT LEON, IOWA

It was with some misgivings that we planned to hold a revival in Iowa in mid-winter. Those who are acquainted with our mud roads and snow storms will understand the reason. But it seemed to be the only time that we could arrange for a revival this year, so we invited the California Quartet to come during their Christmas vacation from Ashland College and Seminary. The meetings began on Christmas day and continued for fifteen days.

The country roads were practically impassable at the beginning due to a rain on Christmas eve. An attempt to reach the county home for a service Christmas afternoon ended on a mud road a short distance from town where the quartet enjoyed for the first (but not the last) time the pleasure of digging Iowa mud out of the car wheels. Another discouraging condition was the great amount of sickness at this time. But road conditions gradually improved, and the size of the congregation increased every night during the campaign except one. On the closing Sunday night the largest congregation ever assembled in the Leon church was present. This was made possible by borrowing a public address system from Frank Stewart, our local undertaker, and placing a loud speaker in the basement of the church. More than a hundred people heard the service through this speaker, and many people were turned away, unable to find room anywhere in the building. And it had rained that afternoon!

I cannot speak of the work of the individual members of this quartet because they left the impression of being a unit rather than four individuals. We did not see so much Ernest Pine, Paul Bauman, Donald Carter and Ed Colburn, as we saw the power of God saving souls. Even when Ed was confined to his room for several days with tonsillitis the other three carried on without him and for several nights a trio replaced the quartet. To my mind the most impressive service was not held at the church but in Ed's room one night after church when we anointed him and these young men poured out their hearts to God asking that Ed might be restored to the quartet. The doctor had given us little hope that he would be able to sing again during the meetings, but prayer was answered and Ed's beautiful voice was soon singing the gospel as fine as ever.

On the fifth night of the revival there were two confessions. The next night Ed preached the first sermon of his life and had the joy of seeing six souls come to the altar. After that there were conversions every night without exception, fifteen coming on the last night. The total number of confessions was sixty-eight. A few of these were reconsecrations, but most of them were confessions of faith in Christ for the first time. And some of the reconsecrations were as remarkable as the others. In addition to this eight new life work recruits came forward on the last Sunday afternoon. Twenty-five were baptized by the pastor that afternoon and they were received into the church. Many others will be baptized soon. Some will go to other churches. Besides these splendid results which we can report by numbers, there has been a great quickening of the spiritual life of the church. We cannot express the joy in our hearts as young ministers of the gospel. It has been a blessed experience in our own lives. God was with us.

We were conscious all of the time of the prayers of God's people in Ashland and Long Beach, as well as many other places throughout the brotherhood. Your prayers were answered. Much time was spent every day in prayer by the quartet and pastor. The rest of the time was spent in practice and visiting. All of our plans for sight-seeing and recreation were cast aside for the greater joy of saving the lost. Only the vigorous bodies of these young men and the sustaining power of the Lord made possible the tremendous amount of work which they accomplished during the fifteen days they were in Leon.

These young men were here during their Christmas vacation. They will be busy at school now until Spring. But I believe that they could be persuaded to give their entire summer vacation to evangelistic work. They form a splendid gospel quartet, as well as singing solos and duets. They can make the congregation sing. They are all capable preachers, and they preach the gospel. While this organization is still intact it is my hope that many churches will take the opportunity to use them. Leon wants them back again. Many people begged them to stay another week. With souls coming every night it was mighty hard to close the meetings. But we all knew "what the professors would say." May God bless these young men as they are used in the other churches. MILES TABER, Pastor.

"WHAT I EXPECT TO DO WHEN I RETIRE"

The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty in a recent issue presented a symposium on what pastors expect to do upon retirement from the regular ministry. Some of the answers follow in part:

"I am not contemplating what I shall do when I retire because, while a nearing prospect, it has not become so actual as to command my close attention. However, if I have got a good book and a quiet nook, I think I shall not be bereft of friends, but be able to fill in my time."

"I propose to help clear the decks for those who are coming on. I cannot contemplate with complacency the many ministers, still in the prime of life, who write most pathetic appeals for employment. Still more am I concerned for the many splendid young men just out of the seminary with no place to go. Some of the more fortunate have returned for additional training, but many are forced to seek secular employment, for which they are poorly prepared, while others join the already overcrowded ranks of the unemployed."

"I am hoping that when I do retire, if it shall not be that permanent retirement that we call death, that I will be acceptable for a small pastorate, where I shall have a good long drive every week and be expected to preach two or three times, and meet with the young people, and conduct a week-time Bible class, and go to school commencements and social occasions, and visit all the sick and the shut-ins, so that life will be just one glorious thing after another."

"So far in my life I have known intimately and become deeply interested in three of America's greatest cities. Near to one of the other of them, if not in it, I would like to make my home, trusting that in such a place there would be interests which might engage my thoughts and strength, and believing that churches here and there might for brief or longer periods afford the opportunity for renewing the service which has been the major occupation of these swiftly passing and busy years."

"What I would like most to do when I retire from active pastoral service, say twenty years from now, would be to have the privilege of spending ten years in serving worthy brother ministers, and especially to make it possible for young ministers to take advantage of summer school opportunities and graduate study, and to render such service absolutely gratis and without compensation of any kind, so that the entire benefit might be theirs."

"I hope to write some of the things at which I have always wanted to try my hand but have been prevented by other crowding duties. So definite is this desire that quite a sheaf of notes for this purpose awaits the arrival of some possible opportunity. In addition to this simple, unhurried life, I want some time for play with the grandchildren and the opportunity to freshen my enthusiasms by as much contact with youth as will be agreeable to them."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

HAPPILY EVER AFTER?

By Bernard C. Clausen, D.D., in the Watchman-Examiner

"And so they were married, and lived happily ever after." It is the traditional ending for the old-fashioned fairy story. In these ancient tales, all the trouble happened before marriage. Everything was supposed to be safe and pleasant afterwards.

Nowadays, the stories begin with the marriage ceremony and show the trouble which comes afterwards.

"Needles and pins, needles and pins, When a man marries, his trouble begins!"

This is the jingle that is characteristic of our new experience. Why?

In the first place, it is harder than ever to create the necessary factors for a happy home life. And in the second place, we know less than ever about it. We have learned so skillfully to do almost everything else. But for this, the most difficult profession in the world, we have devised no adequate training, and can propose no satisfactory advice.

And so I am daring, out of an experience which has involved marrying 1,200 young people and hearing from them year after year in direct and intimate correspondence, to suggest ten commandments for wedded life:

1. Thou shalt have no other purpose more important than the purpose of securing and maintaining a happy home. Nothing is worth while without; nothing is too hard to bear with it. Poverty, pain, defeat—these are mere incidentals to the men and women who enjoy exultant love in their homes. Whatever else you omit from your life, this you must secure, or be in all respects a failure.

2. Thou shalt not neglect thy Church together. I know that this sounds like professional advice from a minister who is anxious to build up his business. But I dare to give it because I have never seen a break occur where both continued consistently active in the same Church. I know that the glow of romance and the "busy-ness" of new babies combine to make it hard to come to Church. But as far as I have been able to observe, it is one absolutely certain safeguard against domestic unhappiness.

3. Thou shalt be conscious of little things. Most divorces can be traced to the constant irritation of tiny differences. Before you are married, people are likely to say, "I don't understand what he sees in her!" But after you are married they are likely to say, "I don't see why they irritate each other so easily!" Yield little things for the sake of home joy.

4. Thou shalt look forward. Choose what you do in the light of your future years and your children.

5. Thou shalt remember—dates, events, seem like neglect. Your joy together depends on preferences, places. If you forget it will depend upon your ability to remember.

6. Thou shalt forget. Do not harbor resentments. Night-time is a lovely time, partly because it is a time for forgiving. Settle things before sleep comes, always.

7. Thou shalt not be afraid of knowledge. I know the old-fashioned idea that if you knew anything about marriage, you were stained by the knowledge. But I have come to believe that the more you know, the better are your chances to succeed. Most homes know too little.

8. Thou shalt decide all money matters by honest and frank and friendly negotiations. A business partnership has no chance to succeed unless the books are always open.

9. Thou shalt develop life together—no tangents, no independent ventures, few surprises.

10. Thou shalt never get too tired to me decent to each other. This is my own great discovery. Domestic unhappiness comes most often when we are worn out, our nerves frayed, our tempers exhausted. It is at such times as these that you do not know what you are saying and what you are doing. But this is no excuse! You must never get so tired!

Perhaps you are sighing, and saying, "Ah well, it is too late now. We have started the wrong way. If only we had had these commandments when we began." No, it is not too late. You may start again tonight. Why can you not, with all your knowledge and all these new suggestions, take a fresh hold on life and find anew the secret of a happy home? From this time on, why not live happily ever after?

ANSWERED PRAYER

In November, 1857, I was unexpectedly informed that the boiler of our heating apparatus at Orphan House No. 1 leaked so that it was impossible to go through the winter. Our heating apparatus consists of a large boiler under which fire is kept, and with which the water pipes which warm the rooms are connected. Hot air is also connected with this apparatus. The leak was a serious matter. After the day was fixed for the work, a bleak north wind set in, accompanied by the first really cold weather. What was to be done? For the children, especially the infants, I felt concerned, that they might not suffer through cold. But how were we to obtain warmth?

The repairs could not be put off. I asked the Lord for two things: that he would change the north wind into a south wind, and give the workmen "a mind to work," for I remembered how much Nehemiah accomplished in fifty-two days, while building the walls of Jerusalem, because "the people had a mind to work." The evening before the bleak north wind still blew; but on the day when the fire was out, the south wind

I HATE SHAM

By H. A. Gossard

Deny me friendship, honor, wealth, renown,
If aught they yield be nothing but a show!
Are gold and silver proven by their glow?
Are smiles and laughter products of a frown?

Do folk in serious mood portray the clown?
As stratum ores,—fast to the rocks below,—
Appear to glide beneath a current's flow,
So, human trends slant up, while going down!

I'd succor him who, with no eyes to see,
Should fall thru, being forced to make escape.

If one with two good feet, and eyes, should take

A bruise, that he might get my sympathy,
I'd pity him,—but take him by the nape
And shake him;—to reward him for his fake!

LaMark, Illinois.

blew, as I prayed. The weather was so mild that no fire was needed. The brick-work was removed, the leak was found very soon, the boiler-makers began to repair.

About half past eight in the evening, I was informed that the principal of the firm from whom the boiler-makers came, had arrived to see how the work was going on, and if he could in any way speed the matter. I went immediately into the cellar to see him, to expedite the business. In speaking to him of this he said, "the men will work late this evening, and come early again tomorrow." "We would rather, sir," said the leader, "work all night." Then remembered I, the second part of my prayer, that God would give the men "a mind to work." By morning the leak was stopped; within thirty hours the brick work was up, and the fire in the boiler—and all the time the south wind blew so mildly there was no need of a fire.—George Muller.

BUT WE'LL NEVER LEARN THE LESSON

It took the depression to make people understand that it is entirely possible for government expenses to become so high that taxing the people to meet them becomes an oppressive burden upon the entire public. So long as nearly everybody was making a good deal of money, public expenses were nobody's business. Of course the people took an academic interest in the subject and perhaps growled a bit every time they had to march up to the treasurer's office and give up a good deal of money, but, after all, they had the money to give up and so they forgot the whole matter in a few days and failed to remember it again until next tax-paying time. But when taxes became due and several million people did not know which way to turn to obtain the money to pay their share of government expenses, they began to wonder whether, after all, they had not been making a mistake all these years in permitting government costs to mount, year after year. But now that they have discovered that there is no doubt about their having been negligent, they do not know what to do about it except to demand lower taxes to meet expenses that for the most part are definitely fixed and cannot be lowered except by special legislation.

But this attitude is merely a reflection of the average man and his family's attitude toward their personal affairs during boom times. They did not reflect that the family income might be reduced. They always had been able to meet their installments eventually, and so they proceeded to buy anything on the installment plan that happened to please their fancy. For transportation purposes a Fidgety Four might meet their needs quite well, but since the Joneses next door had an Opulent Eight they also bought an Opulent Eight. Good times were going to last forever, and if anybody ventured even to pipe a squeak of doubt about it, he was promptly dubbed a killjoy, a knocker and a bum sport.

The lesson of this depression is that in times of prosperity we should prepare for times of adversity, but if you think anybody will learn that lesson, you surely do not know what you are talking about. Almost nobody ever has learned it, although it has been taught many times, and probably almost nobody ever will. Even though the weather man predicts rain, who carries an umbrella if the sun, at the moment, is shining brightly?—National Republic.

GIVE YOUR SOUL A CHANCE

Why don't you give your poor soul a chance with God? You need more than three square meals a day. You are not all dining room and kitchen. You need more than a change of raiment. You are something more than dummies to be put in a window to show off clothes. Bricks and mortar will not satisfy you. You can't buy a home. A home is created. It is built out of an atmosphere, made out of love, understanding, sympathy, God; made out of little cradles, with babies in them. Home is a bit of heaven; you can't buy that ... Are you worried, tantalized, in agony, blistered by the terrible scorching fires of the world, the flesh, and the devil? Face up to God. He knows your capacities. You are built out of the stuff out of which he builds eternities. Your immortal soul needs something more than toys, motor cars, cocktail parties. The world is beautiful, the world is music, the world is purity. Don't confuse God's world with the devil's world—the world which would go to Communion on Sunday morning and give the rest of his day to frivolity; the world that despises the Bible, and ignores family prayer; the world that gets into and ruins the church. Oh, somebody will have to rise in the church in this country and, like John the Baptist, risk his head in calling the church back from its perilous worldliness.—Gypsy Smith.

To breathe a word of prayer,
To meditate upon the Christian way,
To see the good in others,
My happiness to share,
Will help bring Heaven nearer every day.

RICHARD MAKES A PROMISE

Richard twisted and squirmed in his seat. School was a very dull place. If a fellow could just be let alone and not sent to school! "I'd learn enough to do me, anyway," he thought rebelliously. "And I'd have plenty of time when to do interesting things like flyin' my kite and skatin' and goin' to the zoo. I wish I lived on an island where there wasn't any school." Daddy and mother and the law were all bent on giving him an education.

"Richard!" It was Miss Emory's crisp voice. "What is five times nine?" Richard's head was suddenly in a whirl. He wished earnestly that whoever it was that invented the multiplication table had never been born.

"All right, Richard! Five times nine?" Miss Emory's patience was running low.

"Er—five times nine equals sixty-three," said Richard desperately. He knew it wasn't right. But when he had to write five times nine equals forty-five twenty times and hand it in he was crosser than two sticks.

So he stopped by on the way home to tell Uncle Benny. Uncle Benny, mind you, was no more kin to Richard than he is to you or me, but there are some men every one calls "uncle," and Uncle Benny was one of them. Richard loved Uncle Benny. He was one-legged and old and rather dirty always. But he had a kind, funny, wrinkly smile and a soft drawling voice, and he knew any number of first class stories. He had a tray that hung from his shoulders with pencils and shoe strings and matches in it. But he didn't have many customers; so he had time nearly always to talk to Richard.

So that day Richard stopped by and began to tell Uncle Benny how he hated school, and how he could not learn the multiplication tables, and then he said wistfully, "Did you have to go to school, Uncle Benny?"

The old man's leathery face puckered into a rueful expression. "No, sonny," he said, "I didn't have to. I could a-went, though. But I was like you. I didn't like it. And them days they didn't make children go to school.

"I 'lowed I'd sell papers and get some money to do as I pleased with." Richard nodded. He had known Uncle Benny would understand. "And so," went on the old man, "I did, and I liked it fust rate. No teacher to boss me, and no books to bother me. I did just as I pleased. I got along all right them times. But after a while, when I was grown and married and had a little boy of my own, I wanted to do better.

"And sonny, I found out then that you need to know somethin' 'bout books to get along much. And I didn't have no time then to go to school. I had to work hard to make enough to eat. And, long time later, when my little boy was grown and gone, I was too old to learn books. Then the street car ran over me and I lost my leg. I was in the hospitals a long time, and when they brought me this wooden leg it was very hard at first to get about. I have been sellin' pencils and such ever since. Now, you see, if I'd learnt my head'n when I had a chance I could use my head now when my body's worn out, and I could live nice and decent. And my boy 'ud be proud of me like you are of your daddy. I bet he studied at schools!"

Richard's chest swelled a bit. "He did!"

NEW YEAR'S DAY

*To live a little better,
To love a little more,
To sow a few more smiles along the way,
To speak a bit more kindly,
To keep an open door
Will help to make a happy New Year's day.*

*To cheer the friend discouraged,
To weep with those who weep,
To tell my love with flowers while I may,
To gladly help the needy,
To find a wandering sheep
Will glorify this happy New Year's day.*

SUPPORT THE BRETHREN HOME

The Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana, is an institution of the Brethren Church that is worthy in every way of the generous and hearty support of our entire brotherhood. Its location in the "garden spot of Indiana" is ideal and its management under the supervision of Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Myers as superintendent and matron is in good hands.

Due to decreased income the past year some obligations have not been met that are past due, and an appeal is made to all our churches to make the most liberal offering for the home on our next Benevolence Day in February. We must "hold the line" in these times in all our institutions. The Home is well equipped to care for more people as residents than it now has under its care. To those who might be interested in a good home under Brethren influences we invite your consideration. Its location near an active and aggressive Brethren church makes it most desirable and spiritually helpful.

We trust that all our pastors will present the urgent needs of the Home to their congregations from time to time so that there may be a generous response in gifts and offerings in the near future. May we all make it a matter of earnest prayer and then may we give as the Lord has prospered us with the assurance of God's choicest blessings upon the institution.

he said. "And he was very poor then. But he learned everything he could. And everybody respected him. And he kept learning till he got a fine job and made lots of money."

"That's it," nodded Uncle Benny. "Now, when you get to hating school, you mind about me. And you think about what education done for your daddy. And when you're old like me you won't be thinkin' about havin' to go to the poorhouse either!"

Richard looked at the worn old face, so dismal and hopeless looking. He felt mighty sorry for Uncle Benny. But he nodded very solemnly and said: "All right, Uncle Benny I'll remember." And he did.—The Weymouth Baptist.

Business Manager's Corner

WHAT THE SCORE BOARD SAYS

Last week we told of an unconscious contest that was engaged in between two of our churches on opposite sides of the continent, and we suggested there should be a period of overtime play granted because of the very close margin of the contest.

Last week Pennsylvania was reported two subscriptions ahead, but today we received SIX more subscriptions from Long Beach which puts that church four subscriptions ahead. We are now awaiting the report of the result of the overtime play from the Philadelphia church to see if it tops the report from the Pacific coast or whether it goes beyond.

Let every church put forth a special effort to bring this special campaign for Evangelist subscriptions to a triumphant close the last Sunday in this month.

Every Brethren family needs the paper and we need the subscriptions.

IN THE SHADOW

HARRIS—Stephen A. Harris was born in Knoxville, Tenn., October 20, 1848, and departed this life at his home in Fort Scott, Kansas, December 2nd, 1932, at the age of 84 years, 1 month and 5 days. When but a child he moved with his parents to Lawrence county, Missouri, later to Oney, Ill., where he was united to Martha J. Barrett. To this union were born four children, three of whom are deceased.

He had lived in Kansas over 60 years and in Fort Scott forty-six years. He was a member of the Cato Baptist church and was a highly esteemed citizen.

His devoted wife preceded him in death by nine years. He is survived by the following: Charles W. Harris, of Fort Scott, who with his wife gave him the best care that was possible, during his last years; a nephew, H. Mathis, near Arcadia, Kan.; a half brother, Jas. Harris, Garland, Kan.; a half sister, Mrs. Jane Howard, Mulberry, Kan. also two grandchildren, Herman H. Harris of Kinsey, Kan., and Mrs. E. J. Rebeck of Redfield, Kan. Funeral by the writer, who had known Mr. Harris for more than 50 years, assisted by the Rev. Penick of the M. E. church of Fort Scott, Kan. L. G. WOOD.

GILLIS—Sarah Angelina Gillis, one of the founders of the County Line Brethren church, died at her home at Lapaz, Indiana, December 30, 1932, at the age of 70 years, 5 months and 20 days. She leaves to mourn their loss, a grandson, Charles Gillis and one daughter, Esther Kirkley; three brothers—Sylvester Mangum of Iowa Falls, Iowa, John Mangum of Prairie, Minn., and Wm. Mangum of Bilozi, Miss., and many other near relatives and friends. She was a very loyal and faithful member of the County Line church and was respected and loved by all who knew her. Funeral by the writer in the County Line Brethren church. E. H. FLOIDA.

HOSLER—Joseph Hosler, a faithful member of the Brethren church at Nappanee, Indiana, died at his home, Dec. 27, 1932, at the age of 68 years, 7 months and 2 days. He leaves to mourn their loss a widow and seven children. He was a member of the church from boyhood to its end and devoted to his family. He had been a great sufferer for seven years. His spirit quietly slipped away in the night. One is reminded of the sentiment in the Negro Spiritual, He stole away home to Jesus. Funeral services were conducted in the First Brethren church before a large congregation, by the writer, assisted by Rev. Whitstone of Goshen, Ind. E. H. FLOIDA.

WAMPLER—David R. Wampler was born near Dayton, Ohio, and died at his eternal reward from his home at Pleasant Hill, Ohio, November 5, 1932, aged 81 years, 10 months and 14 days. I had known Brother Wampler for more than forty years, finding him at our earliest acquaintance, serving as Sunday school superintendent at West Alexandria, Ohio, and later as pastor. During the lifetime of my service there, a period of almost four years, he served in that capacity, and I thank for a good many years thereafter. He was a charter member of the Brethren church at Pleasant Hill, Ohio, and was a loyal member of our denomination, at the time of his death he was a member of the congregation at Pleasant Hill. He was the father of four children, all of whom were devotedly attached to him, as were also a very large group of Brethren and friends. Funeral services were conducted both at Pleasant Hill and West Alexandria, which had been the family home, a good many years. At Pleasant Hill Brother Martin was in charge, with the writer assisting, and at West Alexandria, the writer was in charge with Brother Martin assisting. At both services large congregations were present, attesting by their presence of the love and respect in which Brother Wampler was held. His body lies beside that of the wife of his youth, near West Alexandria, where his best waits for the coming of his Lord. MARTIN SHIVELY.

GILBERT—Caleb Gilbert was born in Maryland, February 20, 1852, and died at his home near West Alexandria, Ohio, December 27, 1932, aged 80 years, 10 months and 7 days. He came in his early youth with his parents to make his home in Ohio, settling first in Montgomery County, and later in the adjoining county, where he continued to reside until the time of his death. He united with the Brethren church at West Alexandria, almost 50 years ago, becoming a charter member of the organization there, and remained a loyal, faithful member until he was called from this life. The writer has known and loved him during all the 40 years of our acquaintance, which, no doubt led to my being asked to officiate at his funeral. The service was very largely attended, an eloquent expression of the place he held in the hearts of his near and dear friends. Brother Gilbert was an invalid during the last four years of his life, he had a satisfaction which was unusual, in that his five sons and three daughters, with their mother, were all living, ready and anxious to render any service which he or duty could suggest. His was the first death in the family, and though none could wish him back to continue the suffering which he had borne for these last years, none was ready to give him up. There is, however, this compensation,—they sorrow not as others who have no hope, for the knowledge that he lived on in the Lord sustained them. MARTIN SHIVELY.

CULP—Donald Leon Culp, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Culp, aged 2 months and 17 days, passed away at Fort Scott, Kansas, January 6, 1933.

Besides his parents he is survived by five brothers, and the following grandparents: John A. Culp, and Mr. and Mrs. Sam Moore. The funeral was conducted by the writer, from the Cheney Chapel, on January 7th, 1933. L. G. WOOD.

SKINNER—On Wednesday, December 21, 1932, Brother Lewis Skinner, 54 years old, member of the Oakville Brethren church, passed away to be with the Lord, waiting for the resurrection of the righteous dead at the coming of the Lord. Brother Skinner was not seriously sick but for a short time. All that human hands and care could do was done.

On Sunday morning, December 18th, he asked for the Elders around him according to the plan of the church. Brother Skinner was a faithful servant of the Lord and his church, and was for many years one of our honored deacons, and served the church for many years as her treasurer, also taught a Sunday school class for a long time. He will be greatly missed by his family, his church and the entire community. Funeral services at the Oakville church, conducted by his pastor, S. Lowman, assisted by S. C. Henderson.

ETZLER—Sister Laura Etzler, wife of Brother James Etzler, who preceded her by fourteen months, died at her home, January 5, 1933. She leaves to mourn their loss, four daughters and three sons, all grown to maturity. Sister Etzler was for many years a member of the Fairview Brethren church. Funeral services were conducted in her home by her pastor, assisted by Brother Jesse Garner of the Church of God, a life-long friend of the family. Interment was made in the Unionville cemetery. Sister Etzler was aged seventy years and three months at the time of her death. She was a loving Father-land her sons and daughter, to a closer walk with their mother's Savior. J. L. Paganizing Propaganda

As Seen by a Southern Baptist Church Paper

In the Atlanta Constitution of October 5, 1932, Pierre Van Passen writes about the paganizing process going on now in Germany. He says: "Mass desertions from the churches are taking place in Germany. Both the Catholics and Lutheran churches are alarmed. Of course, both socialism and communism are agnostic in that direction also. Both Lutheran and Catholic churches are aware that some step must be taken to guide the nation along paths that lead away from mere hero worship or the sun cults of the ancient Teutons, which are the only positive substitute offered for those who desert the established churches.

"This week, so dignified a journal as the Frankfurter Zeitung quoted from the Catholic Augsburg Post the following hymn to Hitler, (which represents the frenzied feeling that any personality, with glowing ideals, is able to inspire in those without a firm basis of religion:

Adolf Hitler, which art our leader,
Foes tremble at thy name,
Thy third empire come!
Thy will be done on earth,
Let us hear thy voice daily,
And command us through thy leaders
Whom we will obey even at sacrifice
Of our own life,
This do we vow,
Hail Hitler!

"It is after such collective prayers as this, preferable after all to the obnoxious hymn type, such as 'When Jewish gore from sword-blades drips' that political murders are committed."

In America there is no danger of hero worship. There is not an idol of this type in the nation today, and tomorrow is not apt to offer one, if those in authority and position of leadership will use their strength of heart and brain to rid the masses of the pale fear of want. Poverty, and oppression, beget Lenins and Hitlers, in spite of cathedrals and churches, in spite of orthodox theology and stately ritual, and in spite of liveried bishops and singing priests. This is a union, which, let us pray, shall never take place in America.

But a nation may be rich and human and sink into the depths of paganism. Its masses may pack the churches and compass sea and land to make proselytes, but the process of paganization will go forward if the leaders of its religious, social and political life are blind to its rising tide. To say that commerce and education have capitalized the human form, particularly the form of the female, will not be gainsaid by thoughtful readers of The Index. The movies, the Daily press, the rotogravure sections of Sunday issues especially, magazines, advertising agencies, church parties, municipalities, states and even the nation itself challenge their young women to enter beauty contests, the winner, as a rule, being rewarded with an offer to enter the "Follies" or the movies. The best barometer of what is taking place in this respect is to be seen on the news stands. A glance at the names of magazines for sale, a word with the proprietor or clerk, and the consciousness of utter helplessness to have this nauseating muck removed is overwhelming. Just as a worm feeding on green vegetation is colored by the juices digested, so does the reading, the pictures, the rotogravures and the highly-colored advertising posters color the thought and determine the life of young America. It is inescapable.

Moral: Read good books and your denominational paper.—The Christian Index.

The Index is right. And that is good reason why every Brethren church member should have and read their church paper.

HE KEPT THE FAITH WHICH THE PEOPLE PLACED IN HIM

Prayer of the Rev. Albert J. Penner at the Funeral of Calvin Coolidge

"Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, at this moment a whole nation stricken with grief bows before thee. We are made to realize again the frailty and transitoriness of our life here upon earth and our constant need of thee, who art the eternal rock of ages. We thank thee, O God, that we can cling to thee and that amid all the change and decay which all around we see, thou never changest.

"But it is not alone a grief-stricken nation which bows before thee—it is a thankful nation as well. We thank thee for the life of him whose death we now mourn. We thank thee for what his life has meant to the country and to the world.

We thank thee for the exemplary devotion which he showed in the discharge of all his public duties. We thank thee for the faithfulness with which he served his town. We thank thee for the measure of dedication which he brought to the service of the commonwealth, and above all do we bless thee for the consecration with which he served his country in the highest office within the gift of the people. He kept the faith which the people placed in him.

"We know he is not dead, for with thee there is no death. And now we pray that thou wouldst make his memory to be a bright and shining light upon the untried way that we have still to walk, and upon the unknown path that our nation has still to go. May we share his devotion, his consecration, his deep humility in a profound faith in thee. Raise up, O Lord, in our day, new leaders who follow in his steps.

"O Father of infinite compassion, God of all comfort, reveal thyself to those who have especially been brought into the darkness of sorrow; to those who knew him best and loved him most. Strengthen the hearts that faint under the heavy burden, and support them in the arms of thine infinite love. May they know that in all their distress thou dost care for them with unfeeling tenderness. Help them to bear with patience their affliction, and to look with glad confidence toward that future, where God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

"May we not begrudge him, whose loss we so deeply mourn, the rest with thee which he has so richly deserved, knowing that by thy mercy and grace he finished his course, having kept the faith. We ask this for the sake of thy Son, our Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen."

ABSORPTION OR EXPULSION

Recently Kathleen Norris, the well-known story writer, addressed the women of the Los Angeles Ebell Club on the subject, "New Fashions in Old Loyalties." Mrs. Norris expressed her opinion of Judge Lindsey and his weird vagaries and said, "The theory of companionate marriage is the most evil and insulting theory ever offered to women." She also condemned war in severe terms and declared her opposition to any change in the Eighteenth Amendment.

As regards law enforcement, Mrs. Norris argued that the difficulty is to a very considerable degree increased by the varieties of human beings who make up our population. Her words deserve serious attention and are suggestive of certain alternatives which the American people must choose if our national safety is to be preserved and our national health improved. On this particular subject, she spoke as follows: "An English jury lawyer tries an English criminal, an English judge passes judgment after an English jury has listened to evidence. But in America we have the great task of amalgamating all kinds of people. When I heard a little French peasant boy say the other day that America is the bunk, I remembered when I went through the town where his father was born in France. There were no sewers, no electric lights, no pavements in a town of 35,000 inhabitants. This boy had had free education in America, dental and surgical work at his school clinic. He had had everything one of our schools could give him free, and yet in his home he is taught that America is the bunk. I say the sooner we restore such citizens as his father and mother—no matter from what country they came—to their ancestral domains, the better."—The United Presbyterian.

If you talk only when you have something to say you will save both your tongue and other people's ears.

The Christian Endeavor Society in the Program of the Church

By C. D. Whitmer, Editor of The Evangelist's Christian Endeavor Department

The great problem in the Church today is the problem of caring for the youth. We must weld their service into the service of the church in order that they may receive the proper training for the future work of the church, when it becomes their duty to carry on the many responsibilities as they will be called upon to do.

We must not lose sight of the basic principle of Christian Endeavor, namely, to teach young people how to do things by doing them. The training school idea is correct.

Often churches have no program at all. The youth just drift along as best they can. No attempt is made in such cases to knit the organizations together. Christian Endeavor Societies cannot be expected to do their best work when the church leaves them alone just to grow like "Topsy" (in Uncle Tom's Cabin.) The youth seeks for counsel, advice, guidance and encouragement, and the church is the proper source for that advice or counsel.

Our mind reverts back to the organization of the first Christian Endeavor Society in Portland, Maine, in 1881. Dr. Francis E. Clark, the pastor of a large church, observed that his young people were not being properly cared for by his church, and he set about trying to find a way by which he could put his young people to work. He made a great change in the program of the church. And since that time the youth has had a very active and prominent place in their church, and this activity has led many a young man and young lady to accept Jesus Christ as Savior. Some of our greatest leaders in the church today are men and women who have been cared for and trained in Christian Endeavor in by-gone days.

Consider the church as a machine, with all its organizations as wheels. Each wheel should have a definite function to perform; none should be loose and useless. The society is one of the wheels. In a machine, if the wheels are allowed to get loose and no attention is paid to tightening up the bolts, it may eventually lead to a very severe accident, but if cared for at the proper time, the wheel can be saved and the whole machine kept in good working order. So it is with the program of the church. If the youth (one of the wheels) is allowed to go or do as per his own good will, he will eventually be lost to the church and Christ, and such loss will be a very great detriment to the church organization.

By working together any colony, for example of bees, can accomplish more than if the members worked only as individuals. This is true of the church and its organized groups.

The difference between an army and a mob is organization. The efficient church has its members organized, and the work of each group clearly marked out. Likewise the church must have its program properly mapped out, that all departments, of which the Christian Endeavor Society is a very essential one, must work together, as a cog within a cog, in order that no friction occurs in the mechanism, the church.

To accomplish anything you must plan your campaign. The general staff of an army does this; otherwise each regiment would be left to do what it liked, and defeat would be certain. I candidly believe, dear people, that what the church has been laboring against in the past few years, has been a lack of careful planning. We must plan our program of the church or else defeat will be certain and Christ and his church will suffer, in this apostate age in which we are now living.

The church should use the society to develop growth in grace and spiritual power in young people (see 2 Timothy 2:1-15). The society is the training camp for soldiers of Christ, and should be nurtured by the church as camps are nurtured by the government. (vs. 3).

The society should be used to ground young people in the faith, to lead them into the teachings of Christ, and to do real service. The church can help the Endeavorers to a noble ambition to please God in all things.

Here are some places in which young people can be trained to work for their church:

In Evangelism. We can assist at open-air meetings; usher in the church; study personal evangelism and practice it; invite people to church.

In Missions. We can form a study class in missions; present missionary plays and pageants; collect curios; keep a scrapbook; pledge missionary money; write to missionaries.

In Community Service. We can organize a Junior or Young People's choir; organize an orchestra; hold community sings; prepare a community Christmas tree; collect old clothes for the poor; give Thanksgiving and Christmas baskets.

In Sunday School Work. We can recruit for the Sunday school; form new classes; act as teachers; be ready as substitute teachers; organize a Sunday school choir and orchestra; attend Pastor's Bible classes.

South Bend, Indiana.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother J. L. Bowman of Linwood, Maryland, says plans are getting under way for the next annual Brethren Day celebration, and asks for suggestions from members concerned with this event.

The Indiana churches are to have a Sunday School Institute at Goshen on February 7th. A good program has been prepared, with sessions morning, afternoon and evening. All those who attend will doubtless be richly rewarded.

Brother A. V. Kimmell, a member of the Brethren's Home Board, gives us another reminder of the need of that worthy institution, which, as he says, is yet young, and consequently has not yet had time to put itself on a self-supporting basis and must needs depend on the offerings of the churches.

The Business Manager has a final word to say about the Publishing Day offering, which really is not to be taken, but an offering is to be lifted to promote Evangelist subscriptions in the home congregations. Isolated members are not to be left without a way of participation, as you will see, when you read his department. Also, we notice that the First churches of Long Beach and of Philadelphia are still in the contest for highest place in Evangelist subscriptions.

Dr. K. M. Monroe gives us an installment of Seminary news, all of which should be of interest to our readers. The emphasis laid on the work of the Gospel Teams and especially the splendid reports they are ever and anon bringing back from their field work, and particularly the unusual success of one team in a recent meeting at Leon, Iowa, impresses us with the fine spiritual atmosphere that pervades the seminary and the evangelistic zeal with which the students are being inoculated.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, editor of Sunday school lesson publications, shares with us some of the very encouraging reactions he has gotten from his recently revised Sunday school quarterlies—the "Boys' and Girls'" and the "Youth's". Some of our teachers who are using them are finding them to be just the kind to meet their needs. We doubt not that many other teachers of Junior and Intermediate pupils would find these quarterlies satisfactory, if they would give them a fair trial. Examine the lesson material of your own publishing house, before you go elsewhere to buy.

We have a report this week from the First Assistant to the pastor of the Lorie, Indiana, church, and she tells us the work is moving forward steadily. Brother D. A. C. Teeter is the faithful pastor. The Sunday school has just had the best year of its history, the Christian Endeavorers have been very faithful in Bible reading and special Bible study, and the W. M. S. are active in their practical service as the good women usually are. The evangelistic campaign, recently conducted by Brother C. C. Grisso and reported by him in last week's paper, is said to have resulted in nineteen confessions, and seventeen had already received baptism at the time of the report.

This is the Christian Endeavor number of The Evangelist, and quite appropriately we have several Christian Endeavor reports this week. The societies telling of their work are Hagerstown, Maryland, Berlin, Pennsylvania and Warsaw, Indiana. Also, we have a statement from the Junior Superintendent, Miss Mildred Dietz, of the Berlin church. Miss Mary Kellogg of the Ardmore church, in South Bend, Indiana, writes a splendid article, as do also the following members of the Christian Endeavor staff: President E. M. Riddle, General Secretary Gladys Spice and Brother C. D. Whitmer. The latter being editor of the Christian Endeavor department in this paper, we are giving space in the editorial department this week.

Prof. M. A. Stuckey, in his "Miniature Studies of the Divine Library", completes with this issue the Old Testament, and asks for a little breathing spell before taking up the books of the New Testament. He has some other special work resting upon him just at present, but in May, at the close of the Seminary year, he will resume his studies and will go through the New Testament without interruption as he has through the Old Testament. We cannot speak too highly of this work of Prof. Stuckey, and numerous compliments have come to hand on this series of Bible studies. We hope our readers will continue to be thoughtful to express their appreciation for such work as he and other men are doing.

Ohio Brethren Endeavorers will be glad to know that Dr. Daniel A. Poling, President of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, is scheduled to give four addresses in four different Ohio centers during the latter part of February, and the subject of his addresses is to be "Why I Believe in Christian Endeavor." Following is the schedule: Wednesday, February 22, in the Old Stone Church at the Public Square in Cleveland; Thursday, February 23, in Central Reformed Church, Second and Ludlow Streets, Dayton; Friday, February 24, in St. John's Evangelical Church, 61 E. Monnd Street, Columbus; Saturday, February 25, in Masonic Temple, Steubenville. Note these dates on your calendar and arrange a delegation to your nearest meeting place.

Brother E. L. Miller, pastor of the church at Maurertown, Virginia, writes of his efforts in the work of the Lord, and he certainly is a busy man. He seems to enjoy it, too. Most folks do when their heart is in their work. He records several revival meetings conducted since his last letter. The meeting conducted at Mathias was previously reported by the pastor of that field, Brother Arthur Snider. In his meeting in the Maurertown church, Brother Miller was instrumental in leading five souls to Christ. In the Mount Olive church, where Brother John F. Locke is pastor, eleven confessions were received, ten of which were baptized into the church. He reports Brother Locke doing a fine work at Mt. Olive. Brother Miller preaches three times a Sunday most of the time and often has two Bible classes to teach. The work at Maurertown continues to press forward in spirituality and power, despite the general handicaps that all churches are experiencing.

We have an interesting report this week from the pen of Dr. Florence N. Gribble, taking up the record of the return journey of our missionaries to the African field where she left off in her last letter. The overland journey was quite eventful and prolonged and trying on physical strength, but God was with them, giving them some compensation for each delay and bringing them safely through danger and delay to their journey's end. This is Miss Crofford's first trip to the field, while Miss Myers is entering upon her third term of service and Dr. Gribble upon her fourth, if we are not mistaken. Dr. Gribble finds the building that had been destroyed by fire, rebuilt at Yaloke station. With the medical staff strengthened, the hospital there is destined to grow in reputation and influence. The three stations are now quite well manned with workers who are well equipped and consecrated. We can be justly proud of them and should thank God for them. They challenge the home churches to sacrifice.

The work at La Verne, California, continued in a good spiritual state under the efficient leadership of Brother Archie L. Lynn. The largely attended communion service last October was featured by an impressive scene of the bleeding Christ when the communicants were about to be served with the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of the Savior. The revival service was aimed especially at a revival of the church and it was a success, nearly the entire congregation indicating a desire for a fuller consecration. Several souls were led to confess Christ for the first time. The congregation has also had occasion to thank God for healing in answer to prayer. We thank God when we hear of churches stressing that Christian privilege; may there be more of them. The Sunday school has averaged 200 in attendance and the Junior Endeavorers are saving money to purchase an automobile for the Sheldons in Africa. The fine record of this congregation's help given the needy is commendable and makes one think of a truly apostolic church.

Two other church papers pass out. With the issue of January 14, 1933, THE BAPTIST, liberal organ of the Northern Baptist Convention, ceased publication and was merged with "The Christian Century," a non-denominational religious magazine also published in Chicago. "The Baptist" put up a hard fight for continued existence, but, to use its own words, "the financial difficulties with which it had to cope proved insurmountable." To save expense a bi-weekly issue was adopted as an expedient. That failed. Vigorous subscription campaigns were launched, but results were not sufficient. It sought to unite with The Watchman-Examiner, conservative Baptist organ, but found it "impracticable." Its merger with The Christian Century ought to prove satisfactory to its readers, as the two papers have been much alike in attitude and ideals. Also, the Presbyterian Standard, published in North Carolina, was recently merged with the Presbyterian of the South, published at Richmond, Virginia. Verily, the way of the church paper is hard.

Recently we published in our "News and Views" department an editorial comment from one of our exchanges setting forth Dr. Albert Einstein's attitude toward war. A letter and a marked clipping from The Evangelist of this particular comment was recently received at our desk and reveals a misunderstanding that we take this opportunity to correct. We had no thought of sanctioning anything that Einstein may stand for, except his therein expressed attitude toward war, which was given in these words: "I have always fought war—an attitude which the majority of sound political opinion in the United States appreciates. Proudly I rise to defend so-called 'war-resisters,' whom I regard as greater heroes than those who allow themselves to be sacrificed upon the altar of misconceived patriotism." That statement honors the historic Brethren attitude of refusal to engage in carnal warfare. That was the point in question, and the quotation was published merely to add weight to that position. It may be that our good critic has as strong convictions against war as we have (we hope so), but it appears from the underscoring of the clipping that the misunderstanding grew out of the nature of portions of our fellow editor's comment and looking at it from the viewpoint of our critic we are ready to say that his criticism was just. We certainly do not approve of Einstein's notions about religion and economics and we most certainly do not want more "thinkers like him" in such matters. It is possible for a man to be great in some respects and foolish in others. Einstein has a great reputation as a scientist (and we do not profess to be able to judge him as a scientist), but we do not think he is worth listening to when he expresses his views on God and the after life. Rather than have any word or act of ours misunderstood as indicating respect for Einstein's views in such matters, we would warn men against him as a lop-sided thinker, which we are frank to say we think he is. And this we say not because of any intellectual egotism, but because of faith in the Bible which reveals the true God. And we are of the conviction that any man of the highest all round intelligence must have a place in his thinking for revelation.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

President E. M. Riddle - - - of the National Christian Endeavor Union

Sends Greetings to all Endeavorers and the following Message:

The New Year is with us. Within a few days we celebrate another anniversary of this wonderful youth movement—Christian Endeavor—which has all but girdled the globe. This international organization is blazing forward in her program but not without many struggles. Her program is missionary, evangelistic and devotional and every Christian worker knows so well the barriers that such organizations meet in these days. The financial problem reverts back to our own Brethren Union and the local society. Therefore we must lean on our Faith and also upon the POWER OF PRAYER. If Endeavor forces give as they pray and pray as they give, we as a Union shall succeed and the International society shall even prosper in the shadows of this hour.

Reader! will you look at this word picture, which came to my desk only a few days ago,—A World Outlook—it is a bright picture and good to look upon. "We are a world movement, international, interracial, interdenominational. The most recent reports bring great satisfaction. The German convention recently held at Frankfort reached a high spiritual level and brought together four thousand delegates. The British convention at Brighton likewise inaugurated a new general secretary, and vigorous forward plans, with twenty-five hundred present. The Irish convention at Londonderry was one of the best in years, with one thousand delegates. The story of Wallace J. Anderson, President of Korean Christian Endeavor is one of the most interesting in modern missionary annals. Over 500 Christian Endeavor societies have been organized in that tight little land since the war. He says further that their societies are the most dynamic evangelizing agency in Korea. Very encouraging reports come from China, in spite of their present difficulties."

My co-workers! the day may be tempting and very trying, but this is our day of opportunity. The iron is red; it is lying on the anvil. Will you help wield the hammer? This exceptional opportunity to enlist young life just NOW may not always last. A few are busy, many are idle, many are floundering, others are seeking a stabilizer. Our societies may win such groups, at least some of each, for they are worthy, for Christ and the Church. We dare not fail them in a time like this. If we do, what will the future be?

Therefore a big field is open to your society as you plan to observe Christian Endeavor Week, January 29th to February 5th. We trust that you have fallen in line with the plans of your city, county or state in a challenging program for Christian Endeavor Week.

Our distinctive program for the year has been published. Societies are working at it. You will profit if your society will adhere to even part of it. Our slogan (see it again in print) is challenging and one worth expending your best efforts upon.

This slogan might well be enlarged and placed upon cardboard or canvass and kept before your society.

Note the words CONSECATED EVANGELISM. Christian Endeavor was born fifty-two years ago in a revival. New young members added to the church gave reason for the organization that would take care of them. Evangelism has been first with our Lord's ministry. Healing the body, calming the troubled mind, and ministering to both body and spirit were all important in his ministry. He called his followers to be fishers of men. He came "to seek and to save that which was lost" and his life, his death, and his Resurrection were all concerned with that central mission of his Saviorship.

Do NOT leave EVANGELISM out of your program this year. A direct work in this direction should be undertaken. Aside from contacts at the church, organize groups of twos and call at homes of prospective young people. This program will be helpful to the individual as well as the church.

Young People of the Brethren Church, this must be the best year for us that we have experienced with this generation of Endeavorers. Remember! JESUS NEVER FAILS. Waterloo, Iowa.

THAT FIRST ORGANIZATION

Christian Endeavor societies and county and district unions throughout the world will join in celebrating the Fifty-second Anniversary of the organization of the first society, which took place in the Williston Congregational Church, of Portland, Maine, February 2, 1881. Dr. Francis E. Clark, the young pastor, assisted by his wife, Harriet E. Clark, called together more than fifty young people who had been gathered into the church as a result of a revival meeting and presented to them a pledge which challenged them to a devotion to Christ and a loyalty to the church such as they had not thought of till then. They accepted the challenge and there and then was launched a movement that had grown in breadth of sweep and power of momentum till the present time and still grows. What if that first group of young people had not the courage to sign that challenging pledge? But they did, young people still have, if their leaders have the faith to expect it of them. Expect courage and you will find them courageous. Put faith in young people and they will meet almost any reasonable challenge.—Editorial Space Filler.

Christian Endeavor--A Spiritual Enterprise

By Gladys M. Spice, General Secretary

Most everyone is ready to acknowledge that the Christian Endeavor society has proven to be a power of influence over the lives of many. It, no doubt, has meant various things to various people. Some have thought of the words "Christian Endeavor" merely as the name of an organization,—there are always those who fail to see the deep significance of anything.

But these two words, Christian Endeavor, suggest many things which should characterize our living. For instance, they should carry the idea of Christians endeavoring to DO things. James 1:22, reads, "Be ye DOERS of the Word, and not Hearers only." Certainly the highest endeavor we could undertake is to live our own lives in obedience to the will of God, and in so doing to win others to our Lord, and if every one who has named his Name were doing this, what a different world this would be. There certainly would be more "happy" Christians and fewer unsaved folks!

So with this thought in mind, we proceed with our subject, "Christian Endeavor, a Spiritual Enterprise." A Divine undertaking! It seems to me that from the heart of the founder of this great organization, comes the warning that unless this society HAS been influential in deepening the convictions of its members, and broadening their knowledge of the Word of God, and heightening their desire to live for him who died for them, then Christian Endeavor has failed in its purpose.

Those of you who remember the deep spiritual convictions which marked all of Dr. Clark's writings, as well as his works, know that the desire of his heart was to make the LIVING WORD, the Lord Jesus Christ, REAL to young people; and to make the Written Word, the Bible, a book of authority in the guidance of their lives. We praise God that many, many young men and women have responded to that "real purpose" of Christian Endeavor and have felt its effect in their own lives to the extent that they have surrendered all to live for "Christ and the Church."

One of the things that has been used of God in this Spiritual Enterprise is its pledge. In it we learn to trust in HIM, of whom Paul said, "I can do all things through HIM that strengtheneth me." In it we agree to live up to the admonition given to Timothy in the words, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, RIGHTLY DIVIDING the Word of Truth." (Although if we follow all of the programs that are presented to us these days, we would NOT be rightly dividing the Word,—but in spite of the modernism that has crept into the leadership of the organization, God can and will use those who are being true to its original purpose). In this pledge we agree to follow Paul's advice to the Thessalonian Christians when he said, "Pray without ceasing," and also the words of the inspired apostle James, when he wrote that we should show our faith BY OUR WORKS.

Through the Purity Department. I am convinced that young people have been enabled to keep in mind the words we find in 2 Corinthians 6:19-20, "What, know ye not that YOUR BODIES are the Temple of the Holy Ghost, which is IN YOU, which ye have of God, and ye are NOT YOUR OWN, FOR YE ARE BOUGHT WITH A PRICE, THEREFORE glorify God in your BODY and in your spirit, which are God's." And Romans 12:1-2, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your BODIES a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service, AND BE NOT CONFORMED to this world, BUT BE TRANSFORMED by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

Sometimes we think that these pledges made in Christian Endeavor and other places do not mean much. - Some time ago, in a S. M. M. meeting in Canton, we had a testimony which PROVES that many times the very things we think do not amount to much are very helpful to someone,—and if they only help one individual, they are worth while. Our topic was regarding the walk of Christians. We had a round table discussion about some of the world practices which are prevalent among a lot of so-called Christians today. About two or three months before, the S. M. M. girls had signed purity pledges, and at the time it appeared to a few of us that the girls did this with a degree of indifference and even carelessness. But this particular program proved to us that that very pledge had meant a great deal in the life of one girl. She was working in an office and was being tempted daily to smoke and indulge in unclean story-telling and such things. Finally one day, after her continued refusal to have any part in these things, her employer asked her just why she took the stand she did, and she immediately reminded him that she was a Christian and had pledged herself to keep her body and mind clean and free from the many things which just get hold of a young person's life and sap the very desire to live for God, from their lives. She was laughed at, and ridiculed,—but nevertheless the fact that she had taken that pledge at S. M. M. was one of the very things that kept her strong in her convictions NOT to yield to these daily temptations.

Let us not be discouraged in our work with young people, when it apparently is not accomplishing all our heart's desire. Who knows how many are being helped daily and as I said before, if only one person is strengthened through our efforts to serve God, our lives have not been lived entirely in vain.

Then through the QUIET HOUR pledge we learn the meaning of Christ's Words when he said, "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father in secret, and Thy Father who seeth in secret will reward thee openly." Only those Endeavorers who have taken this pledge and have lived up to it, have any idea of the wealth of meaning and truth in the following song:

"In the secret of his presence, how my soul delights to hide!
Oh, how precious are the moments which I spend at Jesus' side.
Earthly cares can never vex me, neither trials lay me low
For when Satan comes to tempt me,—TO THE SECRET PLACE
I GO!

When my soul is faint and thirsty,—neath the shadow of his wing
There is cool and pleasant shelter, and a fresh and crystal spring,
And my Savior rests beside me as we hold communion sweet,
IF I TRIED I could not tell you, what he says when thus we meet.
ONLY THIS, I know I tell HIM all my doubts, my griefs, my fears,
OH, how patiently he listens, and my drooping soul he cheers!
Do you think he ne'er reproves me? What a false friend he would be

If he never, never told me of the sins which he MUST see.
Would YOU like to know the secret of the sweetness of the Lord?
GO AND HIDE beneath his shadow, THIS shall then be your reward;—

And when e'er you leave the silence of that happy meeting place, You MUST mind, and bear the image of the MASTER in your face."

"In the keeping of the quiet hour, we learn that much needed lesson that fruit-bearing, as commanded by Jesus in John 15, comes as a result of "abiding in the Vine", and not by any effort of our own. Just as we look at beautiful, luscious grapes and realize that they had only

ONE duty in order to develop into their marvelous state,—that being TO FEED ON THE LIFE OF THE VINE,—so we must learn that if we would bear the fruit of the Spirit,—love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness (humility), faith and self-control,—we too MUST FEED CONTINUALLY (daily, not just once in a while) upon HIM, who is the VINE, and this is done through prayer, meditation and Bible Study.

I have heard some say, "Well, I have tried to read the Bible, but it seems so dry. I can't understand it. Why should I force myself to read something I do not care about?" If this has been YOUR experience, then there is just one thing that can possibly be the trouble,—YOU have not learned to "know" God!

Of course, people who have never been "born again" and who do not have the Holy Spirit indwelling them, cannot understand or appreciate God's Word. 1st Corinthians 2:14 very clearly states that the "natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, BECAUSE they are spiritually discerned." But if you have learned to KNOW GOD, you WILL love him, and if you love the Author of the Bible, you will also love his message!

Possibly you have heard the story of the girl who had received a book as a gift and who had found this book very dry reading. One day she met a young man who was destined to become her life companion,—after some months of very enjoyable companionship she was asked by this man if she had ever read such and such a book. She recalled that the title given was the title of the book she had received and never read. After a little discussion it was revealed that this very young man was the author of this book and needless to say, it was not long until it had been read by the girl, and with a great deal of pure delight. It makes a difference, young people, when you are in love with the author,—and it makes a difference when we love the Author of the Word of God!

Dr. Clark made the following statement regarding our devotional reading: "I am almost tempted to say that a LITTLE devotional reading, like a little learning, is a dangerous thing. Surely the scanty, hasty, hop-skip and jump, duty method often leads to distaste for God's Word, and no wonder! But, if my friend will take a good, full half-hour tomorrow morning and every morning for a week, spending at least half of it quietly with his heart open to God for light and guidance, and the other half reading God's morning message to him, with the help perhaps of some devout author to illumine the message, I do not think he will ever again find the Bible dry reading nor an uninteresting Book."

The story is told of a salesman who was compelled to be away from his home most of the time. At the time of the story he had returned home on a Christmas Eve. Being late, his only child, a small boy, had been put to bed and the nurse finally came down and told them that something seemed wrong with the child,—he was crying as though his heart would break. The father said that the nurse should take some candy to the boy—so she did this, but returned saying that this did not satisfy the child, he even refused to eat it—much as he had always loved candy. Then the father sent up some of the toys which she had kept for the next day,—but still the nurse said that she could not console the child, nor stop the flood of tears. Finally, the father arose and tiptoed up the steps into the room. Standing over the bed, he spoke, "Son, what seems to be the trouble?" Immediately the child jumped up and grasping the father about the neck, cried, "It's all right now, Daddy, I JUST WANTED YOU."

Endeavorers! CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WAS MEANT TO BE A SPIRITUAL ENTERPRISE! And if it has not kindled in your heart a passion to get alone with God, your heavenly Father, and allow his Spirit to have absolute sway in your heart, and your head and your home,—then I say, that you have failed to grasp the blessings offered by this SPIRITUAL ENTERPRISE.

Christian Endeavor--The Need of Young People

By Miss Mary Kellogg

There are certain things a young child needs in order to develop into a normal healthy boy or girl. In like manner, we young people have certain needs. Food and exercise are necessary for our physical well-being, but there are other things necessary for the growth and happiness of a Christian young person. I have listed a few of the more important ones and will try and show you how Christian Endeavor in a few ways meets these needs.

1. Fellowship

Every young person craves the fellowship of other young people of his age and this is as necessary, at least to him, as his food and clothing, because it is human nature.

Christian Endeavor more than meets this need in that it not only provides fellowship, but fellowship with the right kind of young people and, above all, fellowship with Christ.

The Apostle John writes, "that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may fellowship with one another and with us and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ."

2. Social Life

Youth will have social recreational activities. If youth can't have them properly and helpfully, youth will have them improperly and harmfully. The vast majority of young people that go wrong, do so not because of willingness or set purpose, but because of false social ideas, base companionship and improper social activities.

To pre-occupy the time and wisely to engage the social interests of young people is to prepare them for Christ and to leave no foothold for evil. This is what Christian Endeavor does with its prepared yearly social program. Moreover (1) it endeavors to create a broadening, socializing spirit within the individual; (2) Wisely uses his leisure time; (3) Improves his moral judgment; (4) Develops definite traits of Christian character such as unselfishness, honesty, courtesy.

3. Training

Those who would serve well must train themselves to think accurately and choose wisely. Without knowledge and wisdom it is impossible to please God or to serve men. Our churches today not only need consecrated young ministers of the word but faithful and loyal young people who are trained leaders. In connection with this young people should not be considered and talked of as the church of tomorrow. They are a vital part of the church of today and should be led to assume their share of the responsibility for service that rests upon all of Christ's followers.

(a) Christian Endeavor trains in many ways, a few of which can best be shown by examples. In the first place it trains the mind through the topic discussions and devotional meetings, along certain subjects which we receive little or no Christian training in elsewhere. A few of these subjects, as I recall them, are the study of missions, evangelism and youth problems of our church and how to solve these problems, our vocation-making our life count, and God's will in our lives, and stewardship.

(b) Christian Endeavor trains in that it allows us to test our knowledge by experience and practical church and Endeavor work, such as leading a meeting, assuming duties of an officer, leading in prayer, scripture reading or supervising the work of committees. As you know, we learn by doing.

(c) Christian Endeavor also develops leadership through training by doing, thus preparing for future service in larger responsibilities in the church and other fields.

4. Knowledge of the Bible

Our training must also include this, for to serve effectively there is a need for the vital knowledge of the Bible and this comes only as we study. No life is complete without this, nor truly successful without systematic daily study of the Bible. There is no place in God's Kingdom for ignorance.

In Christian Endeavor we learn to think of Bible reading not as a routine of faith but as our windows opening out to the virtues of the Christian life. We observe the life of Jesus and learn to know him as a companion and leader. In addition we learn how to study our Bible, conduct Bible study classes which give a carefully planned study, commit to memory portions of the Bible, and become acquainted with the history and doctrine of church. Moreover each active member pledges among other things to read the Bible every day, for aren't we as newborn babes to desire the true milk of the word that we may grow thereby?

5. Devotional Spirit

One of the greatest needs in our churches in general and our young people's meetings in particular is a deepened reverence for, and a consciousness of the presence of God. Worship is the very heart of religion and of life. Worship is the cry of the soul for God, it grows out of the hunger of the soul for God. Some of the elements of worship are reverence, trust, hope, love, praise, adoration, gratitude, humility.

It is the purpose of Christian Endeavor to make these elements of worship more vital and real in the experience and life of the young people. In addition Christian Endeavor promotes the devotional spirit of members by (1) Devotional study of Bible. (2) Secret and public prayer. (3) Reading of devotional literature. (4) Use of great hymns. (5) Participation in family worship. (6) Participation in devotional meetings of Christian Endeavor. (7) Participation in devotional meetings of the Sunday school. (8) Participation in preaching, communion and prayer services of the church.

6. Christ

The highest service that Christian Endeavor renders is to promote evangelism. This is the heart of all Christian work. Evangelism in its larger sense means the winning of people to life of saving fellowship with Christ, resulting in Christlike character and life, and inducing people to cooperate with the program of Christ.

By cooperating with the local church, and Sunday school, conducting campaigns, organizing of personal workers' groups and Gospel Teams, our society endeavors to

- (1) Win unsaved young people to Christ.
- (2) Win young people to church membership and
- (3) Win young people to Christian Endeavor membership where they can have fellowship with Christ and his workers, be trained for his service, receive a knowledge of his word and be kept in close communion with him through devotion and worship and prayer.

THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH

Editorials from Ministers and Laymen

HOW ABOUT THIS ANGLE OF THE MATTER?

Back under the "Good Old Days" when John Barleycorn held forth in all his glory (?) the churches and other charitable and benevolent organizations were called upon constantly to care for the wives and children of the men who drank the products of brewery and distillery. Many a wagon load of supplies,—food, clothing, shoes and even furniture the writer helped deliver to homes of poverty where the husband, father or head of the home made good money but wasted it all in the grog shops. I even helped do some of this kind of work in the city of Ashland, Ohio, which at the time was "dry" under local option, but nearby Mansfield gave plenty of opportunity for the boozers to get all they wanted. I can well remember on one occasion when we refused to supply food for a family at the home but gave them permission to get their meals at a nearby house, the drunken father refused to let them get the food, demanding that it be brought to the home and then he could get some of it too. Right there I hung up the sign and went off the committee of supplies. That man made more money than I and was I to provide for my family and his too, while he at the same time was drinking up his income?

Well, Congress is monkeying with the machinery controlling the liquor traffic. Would it be proper to tell them somehow that if and when they make it easy for men to again become drunks and put their family up against the privations noted above, we will immediately have such cases noted and have congress, or those men who vote for such devilish work, to provide for the families so impoverished? The churches and benevolent societies are united against the revoking of the liquor control laws; why then under heaven should they be made to care for the wrecks caused by the action which they so strenuously oppose? For one, I am "agin" it, as the deacon said. The righteous thing would be to make the excise tax high enough to make full provision for all wives and families brought to want by the devilish business. "Enuf" before I lose my patience. E. L. MILLER, Maurertown, Va.

THE CHALLENGE OF 1933

Tonight, officially, we recognize that we are one year nearer the glorious consummation of all things. It sobers us when we are in this meeting tonight called upon to give an account of our stewardship. It points us to the day when every living soul shall give account of the deeds done in the body. When we think of this, and see so clearly our failures we come forcibly to the conclusion that it is not our merit, but God's mercy by which we stand.

The year 1932 has been a great year, great in challenge, great in blessing, and great even in leadership. We have been able to put to test that verse of Scripture "The trial of your faith worketh patience." ... But what of the future? We face it courageously. We know not what it is but we do know who Christ is. We do know that God cares for his own, and that in Christ we are more than conquerors. People in many quarters, even those who see things far differently than we are saying, "how like the conditions prior to the coming of Christ, are the conditions of today." May it mean that the Christ who came once during such conditions, shall come again in our day? We are taught to watch and wait. "If Christ should come today ...?" I am sure of one thing, I should like to see this church different than it is today, that is, more earnest, more faithful, more honest in every relationship of life. I should like to see every inactive person active, and every unsaved person saved. I challenge myself and I challenge you to live in 1933 as though each succeeding day was the last before the blessed Lord should come. If we shall do this I am sure that whether he comes or no we shall be happy.

ary 3, 1933, and reported for the "Voice of the Church" department by the church secretary.—Lawrence C. Ridenour.)

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Malachi

The last of the books of the Old Testament is Malichi. Being the final sweet-singer of the prophetic love song of Jehovah, we naturally expect a unique message before the dawn of the dark centuries of history and the day break with the advent of Christ.

THE SONGS OF THE MINOR PROPHETS

But all of the Minor Prophets are harbingers of a new day and of a new faith. The heartbroken Hosea shows how God restores backsliders; the terse Joel points out the value and importance of repentance; the fiery Amos condemns sin and predicts national judgment; the lowly Obadiah warns his day concerning Anti-Semitism and pride; the enterprising Jonah forsakes his narrow provincialism for the larger conception of the God of the Gentiles; the peace-bringing Micah reveals the Lord's hatred of ritualism and injustice; the vigorous Nahum proclaims the tragic doom of the apostate; the questioning Habakkuk vindicates Jehovah's consistency in the midst of permitted evil; the pious Zephaniah utters the fact that God is a jealous God; the consecrated Haggai demands that the Lord must be first in life and in service; the far-seeing Zechariah finds that Jehovah has a deep concern for men and women through all the days—past, present, and future, while Malachi, the subject of the present study, sees nothing in the world or out of it which is so important as the manifestation of the undying love of God to a dying people.

The chief burden of the prophetic lies in the solemn announcements—serious, somber, and sublime—of Jehovah through the mind of his servant, and in the clever Socratic-like questioning of the people. Let us observe the announcements first, then the questions.

THE DIVINE ANNOUNCEMENT

1. "I have loved you, saith the Lord." 1:2.
2. "If I be a father, where is mine honor?" 1:6.
3. "Ye offer polluted bread upon my altar." 1:7.
4. "Ye have wearied the Lord with your words." 2:17.
5. "Ye have gone away from mine ordinances." 3:7.
6. "Ye have robbed me." 3:8.
7. "Your words have been stout against me." 3:13.

THE HUMAN RESPONSE

1. "Wherein hast thou loved us?" 1:2.
2. "Wherein have we despised thy name?" 1:6.
3. "Wherein have we polluted thee?" 1:7.
4. "Wherein have we wearied him?" 2:17.
5. "Wherein shall we return?" 3:7.
6. "Wherein have we robbed thee?" 3:8.
7. "Wherein have we spoken against thee?" 3:13.

THE DIVINE ANSWER

1. "I loved Jacob. 1:2.
2. "O priests, that despise my name." 1:6.
3. "The table of the Lord is contemptible." 1:7.
4. "When ye say," . . . "where is the God of judgment?" 2:17.
5. "Return unto me and I will return unto you." 3:7.
6. "In tithes and offerings." 3:8.
7. "It is vain to serve God," etc. 3:13.

THE MODERN APPLICATION

1. Have you heard of men who wonder if God loves the Jew?
2. Have you read of modern preachers who traffic in secular affairs.
3. Have you known why some never frequent the communion table?
4. Have you listened to men who feel that no God of judgment exists?

5. Have you wondered why prosperity does not return?
6. Have you any or many Christian friends who do not tithe?
7. Have you ever thought it was vain to serve God?

Some have wondered if Malachi was an angel, a person, or whether he was "My Messenger" as the Hebrew suggests. The evidence is scanty, but the angelic message of the Lord's prophet is divine, permanent, and universal. It applies to men in every age and in every clime. Who is strong enough to gainsay that fact?

I THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Malachi. (See Davis Bible Dictionary).
2. When and Where Written? Between 440-400 B. C., probably in Jerusalem.
3. To Whom Written? To the Once Captive Remnant of Restored Jews.
4. Why Written? To Correct the Secularized Condition of the People.
5. Authenticity. The Book is a Genuinely Prophetic Work.

II THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The Love of Jehovah Announced. 1:1-5.
2. The Degeneracy of the Priests Condemned. 1:6-2:9.
3. The Sins of the People Enumerated. 2:10-3:18.
4. The Day of the Lord Heralded. 4:1-6.

III THE NATURE OF THE BOOK

Here is a book—a dialogue in style—which reveals the nature of God, the concern of Malachi, and the conditions of the people. God's love is spurned, Malachi is concerned, and the people are hyper-critical in their back-slidden state. They question everybody and everything, even God. But God is seen combatting their statements and Malachi is predicting the course of the future concerning the Jews and even Gentiles. God's love in the Old Testament is for the Jews, whereas in the New Testament it is for the World. The priests and people Malachi rebukes and comforts them with a many-sided prophetic message.

IV THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. "Wherein." "Ye say."
2. Key Verses. 3:8; 4:2; 3:1; 1:11.
3. Key Chapters. 2 and 4.
4. Key Ideas. "Remember, Repent, Return, Rehearse."

V THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

Malachi was probably a contemporary of Nehemiah. Even such a liberal scholar as J. M. P. Smith admits: "The book of Malachi fits the situation amid which Nehemiah worked as snugly as a bone fits in its socket." The book, therefore, has a historical, as well as a prophetic value.

The style is noteworthy also. Malachi's Hebrew is forceful, direct, and clear. It is the famous question and answer method which is employed, and, to the mind of the writer, the truest and highest and best method of teaching, if properly done. In the book of Malachi, the teaching is effective and permanent.

VI THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

The final picture of the Christ in the Old Testament is that of the rising Sun of Righteousness. (4:2). He is to dispel the world's darkness in the day in which John the Baptist is to announce the "Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." That was during the time of his first advent when the world was steeped in darkness.

At some future time, known only to the Father, the prophetic vision of Malachi will be realized in the Second Advent of Christ upon the earth. He will find a faithful remnant of people living in the blessed hope and no terrors will exist for them in the hour in which he shall arrive.

VII THE MESSAGE OF THE BOOK

1. A modern religion of ritual—expressing a form of godliness, yet denying the power thereof—is as bad as the false worship of the Old Testament.

2. Cheap religion and cheap sacrifices in the name of Christ are despicable and unworthy. The tithe and offerings represent our privileges under the present dispensation of grace and truth.

3. Divorce and intermarriage breaks up the family in the world; it also tears asunder the family of God as a peculiar people.

4. The Law was a good discipline and a "school master to bring us to Christ;" but today it is the love of God in Christ which constrains us to come to him.

Cooperating Sunday School Teachers

Not long ago, our editor was kind enough to publish an article of mine about Rebellious Sunday School Teachers. I believe the article did some good and I wish in this to bring another picture. It is just exactly the opposite. There are a good many good teachers who know why I want to pass on this picture. They have seen and noted the improved appearance, content and arrangement of the Boys' and Girls' Quarterly. That came about by the suggestion of a pastor who was registering to me the suggestions of his Junior Department which was using them and did not believe that they were all they should be. He since says that he was afraid that he was too plain and outspoken. But that was just the reason he got results. He did not run out and buy of another publisher or try to make his teachers make "bricks without straw;" he went straight to the editor and suggested certain changes.

In the meantime, the time came for the change to be made. It was the first of the year. All our lessons were beginning with the gospel of Mark and the editor believed it to be the right time for a change he had been contemplating. You see they were cooperating. Not kicking, deserting, grouching. They knew what they wanted and asked if it could not be given.

Not long ago the editor received a letter from this department of which I shall quote very interesting parts:

"I was greeted on last Sunday morning by a group of happy-faced teachers and you may guess the cause—the new quarterlies. "Don't you like them?" "Such an improvement over the old ones," etc., etc., That made me feel glad because I have been sponsoring our own literature in the Junior Department." * * * "The one publishing them is willing to help us meet our requirements. We thank you from the bottom of our hearts for this splendid improvement and trust through the years . . ." etc. * * * We want you to know we do appreciate your effort." THAT LETTER WAS SIGNED BY NINE TEACHERS AND THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THAT SUNDAY SCHOOL.

I wish I might have space to quote that entire letter. But I have the letter for any who wish to inquire further. So much for that help.

Our YOUTHS Quarterly also has a new feature. But we have a lot of schools who do not know it because they do not get it and action seems like the progress of a snail. In the mail a bit later came this letter:

"I want you to know how much my Sunday school class enjoys the tests after the lesson. They are of the high school age but several are not in school. The tests have awakened interest. The pupils have asked for an examination at the end of the quarter. They will be graded."

Now, my dear Sunday school people, you can see what cooperating teachers can do and what they can get and how they react when all is done. I have no pet ideas to force down the throats of our sacrificing teachers. If there are good things possible to be obtained for them, I shall be glad to try to meet the needs of teachers. But I can not just guess what they are. We do need cooperation. We crave it; beg for it; pray for it. The most expensive thing our superintendents and teachers can do is to order from other houses, materials we make and which they should use. I have stacks of commendations. Let us work at this together. Remember, Cooperation.

Recently the editor sampled all the schools with the YOUTH'S and Boys' and Girls' quarterlies and we surely expect many schools to fall in line and order for their young people, literature that is our own. When the new blanks are received. It is time to move.

CHARLES A. BAME.

A Teacher's Hymn

*"Soft is the blush of dawn
In heaven's serene repose,
And bright the dewy lustre gleams
Upon the opening rose;
But clouds may dim the day,
And evening skies may lower,
The dewdrop vanishes away
And cankers kill the flower.*

*"Sweet as the dawn, and pure
As rose in early dew,
The light of innocence doth shine
In childhood's heaven of blue;
Oh, never may the light
Be quenched in cloudy gloom;
Oh, that no cankerworm may blight
That rose's crimson bloom!*

*"As lilies by the waves
Thy childhood grew to man,
In loveliness and graciousness
Thine early summers ran;
So may Thy children grow
To be forever Thine,
Till onward to noon's perfect glow
Their golden dawn may shine.*

*"And oh! to us, dear Lord,
May grace and aid be given
To save Thy little ones for Thee,
And guide their feet to heaven;
To love, as Thou didst love,
Their tender early days,
Till in Thy Paradise above
They join our song of praise."

JESUS CHOOSES THE TWELVE

(Lesson for February 5)

Lesson Text: Mark 3:7-19a; Golden Text: John 15:16

Daily Readings and Suggestions

A Multitude of Followers. Mark 3:7-12

From the beginning, the "common people heard him gladly." Too often we think of Jesus as rejected by ALL the Jews of his day; rather, it was their leaders who hurried him away before his stunned followers could prevent. Some of those early followers, as Jesus himself put it, were following merely for what they could get out of it, but doubtless many followed because he satisfied their spiritual needs. The "upper crust" may be satisfied with the cold formalism of the Pharisees, but the common people have ever despised such shams and gladly followed him whose teachings gave evidence of reality. Pray that our lives may show the reality of our belief and win still more followers for him.

TUESDAY

Twelve Apostles Chosen. Mark 3:13-19

Jesus must have called each one of those who heard him to take up his cross and follow him; but for these Twelve he had a special work. They were not chosen because of any special educational qualifications; he called them because they were most ready to hear his voice and because he saw that his own power and spirit could work in and through them with least resistance. Pray that our own spirits may be so yielded to him, so ready to hear his voice that he may be able to use us for any work he may have for us—and above all, pray that we may in no wise betray him.

WEDNESDAY

Jesus' Work Opposed. Mark 3:20-30

"Nothing succeeds like success"—and nothing stirs up envy and opposition like success. His own kinsmen thought he was crazy, while the religious leaders declared he was endued with Satanic power. This, of course, was great blasphemy; yet we ourselves need to heed the caution of Jesus that he that is not with him is against him. Let us be careful that we in no way oppose his work—and let us not be discouraged if we meet with opposition while engaged in his work. The servant is not greater than his Lord, and if we suffer with him, know that we shall also reign with him.

Moses' Helpers. Exodus 18:13-24

God once had occasion to show Elijah how presumptuous he was in supposing that he alone was left and that all depended on him. No greater person than our Lord ever worked among men, yet he needed helpers. After Jesus, Moses might well be considered as the next great leader of all time, and he too found he sorely needed helpers. Note their qualifications: they were to be "able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness." What a "new deal" the world would get if we had such leaders today! Pray that in every church today such men may be raised up to help in the Lord's work.

FRIDAY

Paul's Helpers. Phil. 4:1-3; Col. 4:7-14

Paul here calls by name some of those who have been his most faithful helpers through his afflictions. One, at least, he mentions as a fellow-prisoner. This willingness to share even in the sufferings of another that the cause of Christ may go forward is the "earmark" of the true Christian. And best of all, the names of all fellow-laborers in the gospel are in the book of life! What a blessed privilege just to help!

SATURDAY

The Promise of Enduement. Acts 1:1-8

If the apostles had gone forth in their own strength alone, failure must have been the inevitable result, for flesh and blood cannot strive successfully against the spiritual forces of evil. Jesus empowered the Twelve (Mark 3:15), and he has graciously provided that we also may have power. But let us not forget that the power is for a purpose: he sent the Twelve forth to preach and to do good, and his commission to us is that we shall be his witnesses throughout the whole earth. Pray that all may be willing to be empowered for this service.

SUNDAY

A Universal Invitation. Isaiah 55:1-11

The call of Jesus was not just to the Twelve, nor to the few of his own day, but the "promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off!" May we faithfully and gladly carry this message to those that are still afar off, and they who hunger and thirst after righteousness may be filled. This is the best way to praise him that his invitation has included us!

Why You Need a Junior C. E.

By Mildred R. Deitz, Junior Superintendent

It is no longer an experiment. It has stood the test of time and experience. The Junior society does a very definite service for the child. It more than doubles the time given to religious instruction. The Sunday school hour is all too short for the task and the Junior society adds another hour. The effect of this extra training, especially in view of the character of it, is a distinct advantage to the child, and the benefit is to be seen on through the older societies.

The Aim—The aim of Junior Endeavor is Christian nurture, the increasing of the child's knowledge of the Bible, the establishing of desirable habits in the habit-forming age, the setting up of worthy ideals in the period of greatest tendency to imitation, arousing and educating conscience, leading to the acceptance of Christ as Savior. It is the beginning of the service and the practice of the principles that guide the older societies—learning to do by doing. The society is not so much an attempt to do something for the child, but rather an attempt to get the child to do something for himself. The aim is not to make children grown up before their time, but to give them an opportunity to practice in childhood's way what they can of Christianity.

You need a Junior Society in your church because Juniors are given more and better religious education with it than without it. It provides expressional work for which there is not time in the Sunday school. It helps to develop a spirit of reverence and worship. It lays the foundation of a good conscience in after years. It teaches children that they have responsibilities and duties. It trains them to pray, to testify, and it is a splendid and altogether necessary preparation for the work of the older societies.

Hagerstown, Maryland

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society of the First Brethren church, Hagerstown, Maryland, since reorganizing for the year 1932-33, has been making fine progress. Very interesting prayer meetings are held every Sunday night, and much interest is being shown. This society finds both the Christian Endeavor World and the Christian Endeavor Quarterly very helpful in preparing programs. Posters advertising the meetings are used to very good advantage quite often. An unusual asset of this society is an orchestra, the members of which volunteer their services.

Many enjoyable social times are had by this group. A Hallowe'en Social was given by the society, to which all young people in the church were invited. On a Sunday afternoon in October the members took a Nature Hike, at which time a silver C. E. pin was presented to the person displaying the most knowledge of nature. One skating party has taken place so far this season. They are now making plans for another social in the near future.

The society distributed baskets of groceries to the needy of the church on Thanksgiving. The annual pledge to the State Union has been reported, and the last Local District Meeting was held at their church, at which time the local society was in charge of the social period.

In a few days the members will have the unique privilege of organizing a new Christian Endeavor Society in a rural church of the Brethren denomination. They are also making plans at this time for the observance of Christian Endeavor Week.

Signed,
JANE ARTZ, President.

Warsaw, Indiana

Dear Christian Endeavorers:

Two active Christian Endeavor societies are working steadily in the Warsaw, Indiana, church. The Senior society includes the young people and a group of older members, who are fine workers, as advisors and "fillers"—when there is a need. The officers are all young people. The Junior society under the charge of Miss Helen Miller have a fine record in attendance. It is interesting to note, how many of those young children under the age of twelve years will voice sentence prayers or give verses of scripture.

Two of the services of the Senior society which proved very interesting were the Christmas service conducted by Miss Luella Long and the New Year candle lighting service conducted by Mrs. Albert Hartman. At the Christmas service the leader used a small lighted, decorated tree, which was placed in the center of the room. The members were seated in a circle around the table and were asked each to draw a package or roll from the tree. These "gifts" contained the number on the programme which the receiver was to do. The New Year candle lighting service was one of consecration. After a short special programme, the leader placed a large lighted candle on the table and asked each member to come forward and receive a small candle, light it at the flame of the large candle and return to their places. Each was also given a slip of paper containing an original consecration pledge prepared by Mrs. Hartman which was read in unison by the candle light. The pledge was as follows:

Lord, while we're standing here tonight,
With our candles burning bright,
May we pledge ourselves to thee
This New Year of Thirty-three.
Make our lives shine out each day,
As we pass along life's way.
Like a candle in the dark,
Giving light to some poor heart.

The Juniors had been brought up for this service which ended with a very impressive prayer by the pastor, Reverend Lindower.

Active Christian Endeavor in our church is a means of keeping our young people in a closer fellowship with the church and its ideals. Let us labor for the building up of his Kingdom. MRS. C. H. BENNETT.

C. E. at Berlin, Pennsylvania

Dear Christian Endeavorers:

The Christian Endeavor Society of the First Brethren church of Berlin, Pennsylvania, says "Hello."

We are sure you will be interested in hearing about our Christian Endeavor work. Our society has three divisions: Junior, Young People and Adult. As our Junior Superintendent is writing about her phase of the work at this time, this report will deal only with the Young People and Adult divisions.

We have a very wide awake group of young people here in our Christian Endeavor. Each and every one is willing to work and to cooperate with the rest in the interest of the Kingdom.

We meet every Sunday evening at six o'clock in a joint opening service. The young people having charge of this one evening and the adults the next. Then we separate for a study of the lesson. We use the Standard Christian Endeavor Quarterly along with the Christian Endeavor lesson given each week in the Angelus.

At each Sunday evening meeting we take up an offering, and on Consecration night the roll call is answered with a favorite verse from the Bible.

With an enrollment of forty-nine, in 1932 we paid fifteen dollars to Krypton, Kentucky, and paid for fifty hymnals when our church purchased new books.

One Sunday afternoon in September we went about thirty miles to The Old Folks' Home of the Church of the Brethren and conducted a service for them. The service consisted of singing, prayer, scripture reading and a play given by some of the girls of our Young People's division. We have been conducting a service for these aged people every summer for several years and it is appreciated very much by them.

Will you, Endeavorers, pray that we may be faithful in all things, and that our society may grow spiritually as well as in numbers? If opportunities do not present themselves, may we seek them out and be ready to do all we find to do.

May each Endeavorer do all and give all possible that others may come to know Christ, is our prayer.

Yours in his service,
MRS. FRED W. BRANT,
President Adult Division.
MR. GLENN P. LEHMAN,
President Young People's Division.

As it was we landed without seeing anyone we knew and had our baggage carried to the customs house, where we sat upon our boxes for perhaps two hours, waiting for some one in authority to appear.

Mrs. Adams finally returned from the boat with our letters, Mr. Chevalier, a young Swiss missionary assistant, made arrangements for our hand baggage to be taken through customs, and we were soon off in a car to the Mission.

Our letters revealed that the Fleid Council had made arrangements for us to come in with the S. E. A.—"Societe d'Entreprises Africaines," an African transport company.

As our boat was late, the S. E. A. truck had already been waiting for us for some time. However, taking our baggage through Cameroun customs and making the purchases requested by the missionaries required a full day, so it was not until Wednesday, November 16th, that we left Kribi for Youunde, where we were due to arrive the same evening.

We passed the Presbyterian Mission stations at Lolodorf and called for a few moments on the four ladies there, the men being away at a meeting of the Presbytery.

Four kilometres from Lolodorf our chauffeur announced he was in a "pagne"! Sure enough, a broken spring and no repairs! Fortunately we had still one vestige of civilization, a telegraph office two kilometres beyond. So we telegraphed to Youunde for repairs. While making these arrangements, the car which we had hired for excess baggage passed us. The Greek who was driving had small sympathy for our predicament—said we had overloaded—should have let him have more! He could not return us to the Mission, on account of traffic laws which permit cars to pass in only one direction in the forenoon. Cars proceed in the reverse direction in the afternoons only. So we walked back to the Mission, I going first, Miss Myers and Miss Crawford remaining at the car until the chauffeur returned from sending the telegram.

We had a most wonderful 24 hours at Lolodorf Mission station. Miss Crawford was entertained by Mrs. Whittier, Miss Myers and myself by Mrs. May. We had opportunities to visit the French school, the vernacular school, the hospital, and to see the theological seminary and other evidences of advancement on this older mission field.

All of this we greatly appreciated, and felt we were more than compensated for our accident. The following day we walked between 12 and 2 back to our car, which was now repaired, only to find that in conformity to traffic regulations it had been taken on across Lolodorf bridge two kilometres farther. Again I was walking alone as I had been supposed to ride in the "pousse" which, alas, proved to have a puncture. The others had already preceded me, so with a native guide I followed. Walking between 12 and 2 in the tropics is not according to the prescribed rules of health for either old or new residents. The natives were full of pity. One woman with a shining face, whom I knew to be a Christian, came up to me, and though we were unable to speak a common language, pressed into my hand, a stalk of sugar cane, her sole refreshment for her own journey. I received it for she would not have understood a refusal. I doubt not she will be remembered among those who receive the reward for having given "a cup of cold water" in the name of a disciple.

We reached Youunde that night without further mishap and were domiciled at a December 5, 1932.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Since I last wrote you in November, I have had as I then hoped the privilege of spending Thanksgiving Day in Oubangui-Chari.

The remainder of the voyage after Lagos was uneventful. A few more hot days of lying in port at Harcourt, Fernando Po Victoria, etc., a few more passengers disembarking, a few more coming on for a brief coast trip to Kribi and return, a few more hot days and restless nights and the voyage was over (November 14th.)

On the 27th day after leaving Boulogne we put into Kribi harbor. The boat anchored at considerable distance from shore just before lunch. The captain invited us to remain on board for lunch. We then waited for the immigration officers to come on board. They did not come. Meanwhile the tide was rising and as it was necessary to descend by means of a "mammy-chair" into a surf boat as we had done at Accra, we were anxious to be off. On making inquiries we found that we were free to go, and after seeing our somewhat numerous pieces of baggage, large and small, put down into the boat we followed.

The chair carrying the three of us swung perilously down, the native boatmen gesticulating wildly, and the officers above (we feel sure) looking on with bated breath!

We would gladly have remained in the chair as it at last landed safely in the center of the surf boat. But for some reason it must be drawn up again. So we scrambled out as best we could. Miss Myers and I landed on Miss Crawford's big trunk. Miss Crawford landed in a crevice in the baggage on the other side of the boat, and we were off, towed part way by a launch.

Unknown to us at the same moment, embarking by means of a ladder on the other side were a group of Presbyterian missionaries, among whom was our hostess-to-be, Mrs. Adams, with letters for us, which, had they been received would have relieved us of some hours of suspense.

hotel. The following morning was spent in arranging for our departure, making purchases unobtainable in Kribi, calling on Youunde missionaries, etc.

At 2 P. M. we left Youunde with two trucks, on one of which we had the baggage destined for Yaloke with various freight arrivals picked up at Kribi. On the other truck we had the rest of the baggage and freight with the three missionary passengers. Two native passengers, an "informier" and his wife, rode with the chauffeur of the larger truck.

Our chauffeurs were very competent, far more so than our trucks. When Miss Emmert and Miss Tyson went in with the same company less than two years ago, they made the whole journey without accident. It was supposed that we would be able to do the same.

Yet the rapid deterioration of automobiles in the tropics due to difficult roads, lack of service stations, and the extreme heat of the dry season, coupled with the extreme humidity of the rainy season, can scarcely have a better demonstration than the contrast between their experience and ours.

On the first day after leaving Youunde we had three flat tires and one minor adjustment. We reached the rest house where dinner was to be served to us at 10 P. M. It was perhaps fortunate for us that it was necessary to return the car to Youunde for "new feet" (in this country wheels are feet and tires are shoes) for we ourselves were unable to proceed further without rest.

The following day, now with three cars and the assistant director of the company to escort us, we left Nanga Eboko for Batouri. We rested at Bertoua at noon and arrived in fairly good season, about 6 P. M., the only day of our trip without serious accident.

The following day we crossed the frontier into Afrique Equatoriale Francaise, where we had to pass customs again. This required three hours, and, alas, three thousand francs. New customs regulations were passed September 6, 1932, which make it impossible to bring in anything for another without paying customs.

And the amount one can bring in for one's self duty free is very small indeed. A small amount of lingerie, a few dresses, a few sheets, etc., is now all that is counted personal. Formerly the word personal could be interpreted to mean, personally owned—now it must be interpreted wearing apparel and bedding, and a very limited amount of each!

It is fortunate that the Fosters who were carrying such a quantity of gifts for others—two tons instead of two hundred weight (as I had) were enabled to pass customs before these new regulations came into effect. The percentage varies on different articles but averages 13% of the purchase price or estimated value.

The most thrilling experience of our trip was also reserved for this day. This was the crossing of the Boubia barge. Five cars crossed in succession. The one which preceded had an accident. We arrived just in time to see the car, recovered, move on. We sent what we called our freight-car next on the barge. It was 5 P. M., a beautiful time of day to cross a barge. The people were Baya. Miss Myers and Miss Crawford gathered the children around them and Baya songs were sung. I felt led to pray the truck across and sat on a board on the bank and watched and prayed. The barge was floated across, then came the test of driving off the narrow platform and up the steep bank. The boatman who had so valiantly done their part in getting the barge across the river waited breathlessly to see the car safely off the landing-platform. Then a shout of thanksgiving went up from them all. Prayer was answered, our largest truck was safely over, and we breathed a sigh of relief and thanksgiving.

It was our turn next. Our chauffeur drove skillfully on the barge. We walked on and went across safely. There was considerable difficulty in making the adjustment of the barge to the platform, but finally it was accomplished and we walked off and up the bank. The most difficult part of a crossing is the driving off up the bank. As we saw the narrow platform we felt the more need of prayers. The chauffeur started the car, but the platform was perhaps inaccurately adjusted. The wheels swerved toward the edge of the platform. The chauffeur saw his danger and stepped on the accelerator. With a sickening lunge and swerve the car went forward. There was hardly time to be thankful that it landed on dry ground, for the sparks flew as the springs broke and we knew we were necessarily to have another long delay. The director's car crossed next without accident and by eight o'clock our damages were repaired. Three hours' run covered the ninety kilometres to Berberato, where we arrived at 11 P. M., hungry and tired. Dinner was served at 1 A. M., and we were glad again that we had arranged with the director to rest the following morning. The morning was extended to a full day for it was discovered there was no rest house furnished at Carnot, as formerly. Therefore we decided to leave at 5 A. M. the next day. We were actually off before this time, crossed the Mambeli at Carnot about 8:30, lunched in a rest house by the way, and sped along past the new Poste at Bayanga Didi, and the new aeroplane port a little farther on. We thought we were making wonderful progress when the rear wheels of our auto went through a bridge. This meant unloading and extrication by a whole band of villagers, who gathered around us during the hour of reloading and heard the gospel in Baya.—F. N. Gribble.

MAURERTOWN

Since last writing the Evangelist I can say I have had one of the busiest fall and winter seasons of my pastorate here. After getting back from Winona and the good time we had at conference, I went almost immediately into meetings with an outpost church, twelve miles from here. I had just finished a meeting with the Mathias, West Virginia, folks before going to conference. While there we surely enjoyed the two weeks of service and fellowship with good Brother Snider and his folks. My two younger daughters had a most enjoyable time there also. They and daddy expect to return to Mathias for another meeting some time in the future. Well, after the meeting at the outpost church noted above, we had our Rally Day at the Maurertown church and it went across in good order. This was followed by communion on the third Sunday of October, and again we had a good time even though the weather turned out most disagreeable that afternoon.

The day after the communion Sunday we went into our revival services, held by the pastor at the call of the church. We held forth for only two weeks and baptized five as an immediate result of the meeting. After one week respite we went up to the Mt. Olive church, near Harrisonburg, pastored by Brother John Locke, and there held forth for two and one-half weeks. Brother Locke had the meeting under way when we arrived and one young man had already made the stand. This made it rather easy to get going. We have been with these folks on occasions before and it was like going home. I would like to say right here that Brother Locke has surely done a fine piece of work with these folks and he is liked by everybody. They show their appreciation of his good work for them. And since he is now running in double harness they all the more like him, for there is now more of him to like. And what seems especially nice to them is that he got his other fifteen-sixteenths not more than three miles from their church. More success to Brother John and his good help-meet.

The immediate results of the Mt. Olive meeting were eleven confessions, ten of whom we baptized and received into the church before leaving the place. The other, a young lady, intended uniting with the Mill Creek Church of the Brethren, located about a mile away from our church. We closed the Mt. Olive meeting with a communion service and all felt that it was an especially fine spiritual feast. Brother Charles Bowman and wife gave us a home while in the community and they surely did it in fine shape. Brother Bowman is a member of the Reformed Church, but he learned to like a Brethren girl and he likes the Brethren preachers and attends the services of the Brethren church very regularly. I like Brother Charley as do all our folks. Thanks to them and all the good folks who so graciously entertained us in their homes during our stay at Mt. Olive. So in spite of a very rainy season and the election coming right in the middle of things, we had a good time in the Lord and his service.

After these meetings, during which time Brother Locke very capably filled our pulpit at Maurertown, we went into the Thanksgiving service and offering for Home Missions. Then came Christmas preparation, with three services on the way, and also other communal things to look after. We had a sunrise service on Christmas morning and this was enjoyed by quite a few. The Beginner-Primary-Junior groups put on a program Christmas morning and a pageant was presented by the older groups in the evening. It was a day to be remembered. We had the usual watch night service on New Year's eve, and the next day were off to a good start for 1933. The pastor here preaches three times each Sunday, excepting the third Sunday of the month when he preaches twice, and on two of those Sundays teaches two Bible classes. He teaches one Bible class every Sunday, the Men's class in our own Sunday school. So along with prayer meeting and pastoral calling over a whole county and more, we find enough to keep the grass from growing under our feet or wheels. May the good Lord prosper his work and may our prayers be mutually one for the other.

Mauertown has suffered her losses, but withal she is determined to push on. With the passing of our Brother Funkhouser we sustained another of those losses that cannot be fully made up. We have sustained several severe losses of that kind within the past two or three years, but we must be brave and others must be raised up to take their places. I served at seven funerals in the past six weeks, not all of them our own folks, but that is also an item in the service one has to render. We have had an epidemic of a mild type of flu in our community and that crippled church and Sunday school work for some weeks, but we are getting back to form again. It is a pleasure to work with these people here, for they seem to appreciate what one does for them and they stand for nothing but the real old-fashioned Gospel. It must come straight here or the preacher will hear from somebody soon. Even though the Word may tread heavily on their toes at times, these folks want nothing else. And so long as we are permitted to work with them or any other people there will be nothing else served up. Remember us in your prayers as we ever and always remember the church of God in ours. And with the passing of the Repression we should all be ready for a forward movement that will put the Brethren church on the map as a true leader in the work of the Kingdom. More power to our preachers and faithful laymen.

SEMINARY NOTES

Prof. Stuckey's Week of Prayer lectures, in our Ashland city-wide movement, were very well received by a large congregation each evening. His good work has made many friends for our Seminary.

Last week Prof. DeLozier addressed about fifty people of the Men and Women's Gospel Teams on the work done by such teams on the college campus and elsewhere. At the same meeting a report was given by the team which conducted meetings during the Christmas vacation in five of our Johnstown churches.

The California quartet brought back a very fine report of the two weeks' evangelistic meetings at Leon, Iowa, during Christmas vacation. They had charge of both singing and preaching. There were 68 confessions and re-confessions, 8 life-work recruits and 25 were baptized the last Sunday afternoon. Of course, figures do not indicate the only results of such a meeting.

Our second semester opened January 10th, with all the old students back, except one, Rev. Raymond Gingrich of our Fair Haven church, who had been taking some post-graduate work. In his place we have one of his members, a young man who is a graduate of a nearby college, who is taking special work in the Seminary.

This semester there are sixteen men in the Seminary House.

Dr. Shively is planning on giving two illustrated lectures on Pioneers of the Brethren Church before the Men's Gospel Team in the near future.

We desire to thank the Peru Missionary Society for sending a comfort to the Seminary House.

Professor McClain, who has been ill with the influenza for the last two weeks, is now regaining his strength, and hopes to be back to his work shortly.

a shoulder to the wheel the finances are coming along too.

The Sunday school has just closed the best year for attendance in the history of the church. Brother Walter Shim has just been elected for his 22nd year as Superintendent. This record proves his efficiency and loyalty.

The Christian Endeavor has also been very active. They have read the Old Testament through and conducted a Bible study class each Tuesday evening the past year. You can count on them for loyal support.

The W. M. S. is also doing their share. They have just purchased new song books for the church and are helping in many ways.

We have reported many good revival meetings since being on this field but still we have another to tell you about. For some time we have been starting our meetings with our Christmas program and find that it is a good time for this place. Consequently we secured the services of Brother C. C. Grisso of Lanark, Illinois, to act as our evangelist. Starting the first night, in spite of much "flu" in the community we had a good attendance and interest.

Brother Grisso preached some wonderful gospel sermons, gave some good Bible lectures and also led the song service most of the time, as the pastor was not able to take charge of this as he had planned.

Brother Grisso preaches the word with power and the people hear. There were 19 who confessed Christ as their Savior. Two whole families. There were 9 men, two boys, 6 women and 2 girls. Seventeen have already received baptism. Two others are ill and will be baptized later. We are praising the Lord for answered prayer.

MRS. D. A. C. TEETER.

LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

Greetings in the Name of our blessed Lord! May all spiritual blessings abound to youward through the year 1933, if the Lord tarries!

A report is due the Evangelist for the past quarter before the new correspondent, Mrs. Starr Minor, takes up her work. Unworthy though we are, the Lord has showered blessings upon us again, as a church during this period.

Our fall communion service was held on October 14. This proved to be the largest in our history and, we believe, the most blessed. There were over 160 participants and hardly an eye was dry when, just before partaking of the emblems of his death, the room was darkened and a picture of our bleeding Lord on the Cross, was shown on the wall, while a baritone voice sang "He was Nailed to the Cross For Me."

Three weeks later the church went into a two weeks' series of special meetings which we prayed would be a revival of the whole church. This prayer was granted as on the "Lynn Anniversary Sunday," and under Brother Lynn's able preaching and earnest invitation, over 150 church members felt compelled to go forward and confess their need of a closer walk with the Lord. It was an impressive sight as folks left their pews, and one by one their choir seats, until the congregation continued to sing without a member in the choir, and finally without even piano accompaniment, as the pianist, too, felt the necessity of joining in reconsecration. The Brethren preachers of the Southern California district each graciously preached one evening of the first week and our own pastor, Brother Lynn, for the second. We praise the Lord for the few souls saved too—but the burden of need seemed to be for a revival of the church at this time. May we each one now, by our daily devotional life, allow him to keep us revived!

We rejoice too, in the demonstration of God's power to heal three of our members, near death's door, in answer to prayer—not instantaneous healing but a continuous process in which the means was blessed of the Lord. Among this number was our faithful pastor's beloved wife.

The general health of the church continues good. During the four years of Brother Lynn's pastorate here, each quarter has seen some accessions to the church—and the treasurer also reported that we have gone into the New Year with a clean slate financially—$6,000 having been raised this year.

The Sunday school is averaging around 200 in attendance and is promoting pupils quarterly now. A good Christmas program was sponsored by the Sunday school. Four Christian Endeavor meetings are held simultaneously each Sunday evening. The Junior C. E. started the fund for an auto for one of our church missionaries, Chauncey Sheldon, and others contributing, has brought the total to near $800.00 now. This perhaps accounts for our apparently reduced missionary offering this year. Four prayer groups meet weekly and we understand the Bible Class is to be resumed.

A Deacon's Board has been functioning efficiently this year and our beloved deaconess, Sister Margaret Lapp, has been kept busy in prayer and distribution to the less fortunate. The sum of this year's work is as follows: 56 boxes of groceries, over 600 pieces of clothing and bedding, 200 pounds fresh fruit and vegetables, 100 quarts of milk, 68 loaves of bread, besides dozens of rolls, pies and cakes, $60 in cash, Bibles given to families asking for one, 35 washings and ironings done in the Name of the Master. This work is not done with the thought of earning or meriting salvation, but only out of gratitude for the salvation already so freely given us, through the shed blood of our precious Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The Word says we are to provoke one another unto love and good works, and I believe somewhat detailed accounts from various churches, serve to do this almost better than anything else. It forms a medium of exchange for ideas and new vision. We enjoy hearing from other churches. Is your reporter working? Praise God for the offices of service given us in the church, through which we may express our love to the Savior!

May we each be found faithfully laboring for him when he comes for his own. And may we especially be feeling the responsibility, as a brotherhood, of evangelizing the 61 yet unenlightened tribes in Africa, assigned to us, and of our work in South America,—as this Easter season again comes on apace.

Yours in prayer for a victorious foreign missionary offering.

MRS. HARRY L. GOOD.

THE EDITOR IS A HIPPO?

I would not care to be a hippopotamus—and yet I'm an editor, and I recognize that the hippopotamus and the editor have a good deal in common, and if ever they could get together and have a heart-to-heart talk they could both shed large tears on the same tablecloth. We are told that the brain of the hippopotamus is very small, and its life a very dull one. But at that it is capable of learning after a while. A certain amount of carminess must be developed by the hippopotamus if he cares to live—and how about an editor? When you are out in mid-Atlantic and a whale rises near your boat you are often startled by the snort with which the whale reveals his presence, making him a good target for folks who have a harpoon, but the hippopotamus uses that diminutive brain of his and comes out of the water quietly. When a hippopotamus is put in captivity he learns the face and customs of his keeper, and exhibits special affection for the fellow who feeds him. How dearly does the editor love the subscriber, and, oh, the affection for an advertiser! White men hunt the hippopotamus for pure sport—and his hide. You can make a good trunk out of the hide, convert it into bullwhips, and it is so thick and hard that they use it for polishing-wheels instead of emery. Which again causes us to marvel at the similarity. No one has any right aspiring to an editorial job unless his hide is so thick it can be used to put a shaving edge on a cold-chisel. —William Hamilton Nelson.

Amateur astronomers are taking interest in a clock that "makes the earth turn over." It consists of a globe of the earth geared to an electric clock in such a manner that the globe keeps step with the earth's axial rotation. The globe is translucent and an electric lamp within it produces a contrasting light on its surface, showing as it rotates the position of the sunrise and sunset lines.

The value of medicines manufactured in the United States yearly totals $500,000,000. The 1930 imports of raw materials amounted to $114,934,000. During the last year $3,046,000 worth of licorice root alone was used in the manufacture of various medicines.

Offering—February 26th

THE BRETHREN'S HOME EMERGENCY CORNER

The Brethren's Home is one of the newest departments of the Church. Time and experience usually are necessary in getting a new department running smoothly. From the first the Brethren's Home has developed in a commendable manner and had reached a stage of real efficiency without calling upon the brotherhood for large sums of money. However, it should be remembered that the gifts which have made the Home possible have come from people without much material wealth. In fact money has been invested in the Brethren's Home which the donors could be using right now to supply the ordinary comforts of life according to the living standards of the present day.

The Board of Trustees think, that knowing the facts the brotherhood will help in the running expenses by gifts and contributions so this space is being used just as a reminder of the need. If you have noticed the articles by the other members of the Board and have delayed sending the offering you intended to make please attend to it at once. Perhaps no one in your church or school has thought to be responsible for presenting this need. Will you not do this at your first opportunity?

There are yet several months before we can get help from the gardens or market the next crop from the farm. At the same time interest comes due and the first of the month bills for food and fuel keep coming in with surprising regularity. Just remember to pray about this and ask the Lord what you can do to help. There is a blessing in giving to this as well as to other causes.

"GREATER WORKS THAN THESE"

By Arthur R. Baer

Who, now has power to cause the dumb to speak?

And bring life back to the departed dead; Sight to the blind, healing to all who seek?

'Twas greater works than these, the Master said.

What faithful saint will then receive this power?

Will he with learned speech and gifted tongue

Be hence endowed with learning more profound?

Nay! Learning claims not power for old or young;

But faith is honored wherever found.

What does he mean by, "Greater works than these"?

Could he have said those blessed words to me,

With joy those simple tasks I once despised I'd seize.

And abler hands from simple chores I'd free.

Nor envy them the richness of their life

But struggle patiently this power to grasp.

This one thing Lord to know I feign would ask;

That by doing faithfully my appointed tasks

"Greater works than these" might in my lot be cast.

Muncie, Indiana.

OUR READERS' VIEWS

USE THE TERM "BRETHREN"

"All ye are brethren." So reads in part Matthew 23:8. Spoken to the disciples by Jesus. Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! Psalm 133:1.

I am fully persuaded that any congregation, whether of the Brethren fraternity or not, will be a better congregation if they salute each other as brethren. Individual members will be better members and have more love for each other if they call each other brother so and so or sister so and so.

It has become quite noticeable among our younger preachers. Many of them never pretend to say "brother" when speaking of certain of the membership. Who is at fault for that? Our older people call each other "brethren," and most of them love the brethren as brethren should love each other. But what of our younger people; should they not be exhorted to call each other "brethren?" It sounds a lot better to say "Good morning, Brother Brown," than to say "Good morning, Mr. Brown." And it means a lot more. I have a warm feeling toward my friend when I can call him brother, and so do you. Let's teach our membership to speak of, or salute one another as brethren.

I have a lot to say along this line but don't know just how to express it; so just think it through for yourself and perhaps you will see the point.

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE BIRD THAT SOLD ITS WINGS

A little boy named Robert once came home from Sunday school looking very glum.

"I wish I had a fortune," he said. "I'd give anything for a fortune." Just then his mother came in and overheard what he said.

"Bobby, my boy," she said, "would you give anything for a fortune? Ah, Bobby," said his mother, "I don't think you could ever have heard the story of how the skylark sold his wings."

"Oh, mother, do tell me," said Bobby. And his mother began:

"Once there lived a skylark who was the finest of his race. One day as he flew over a wood he looked down, and there, traveling over the wide road that ran through it, was the strangest little coach ever seen. It was painted black with yellow stripes, and was drawn by six horses as black as pitch. But what interested him most was the fact that he saw sticking out of the windows of the coach the tails of some worms, and so he flew down to see what this thing might be, and as he drew nearer he heard the coachman calling out; 'Three fine, fat, juicy worms for two feathers. Who'll buy?'"

"That's cheap enough," the skylark thought. 'I'd give anything for worms, especially big ones.' So he nibbled first at one wing and then at the other, and pulled a feather out of each, bought the worms and hurried away into a dark corner to eat them all by himself.

"Next day he saw the coach again and had another treat. And the next day, too, and the day after that, and the day after that. In fact, he grew fonder and fonder of worms. But oh! his wings. Soon he lost a sunward race in which he had always been first. Then he was only able to fly just above the trees, then not even as high as that. At last he could not fly at all, but could only hop about in the undergrowth and he could sing no more because of the darkness and chilliness of the wood from which he could not escape.

"When things got as bad as this, he thought upon a good plan for making them better. He worked hard hunting worms and got a large heap of them by the roadside, and when the coach came along he cried to the coachman: 'Please sir, I have here a lot of worms: how many feathers will you give me for them?' and, would you believe it, that hard-hearted coachman simply answered: 'My business is worms for feathers, not feathers for worms,' and he whipped up his horses and drove away. The poor, foolish little skylark rolled over and died of broken wings and a broken heart.

"When he was found, and the other skylarks saw what had happened, they buried him in the woods by the roadside, and over his grave they placed a warning to all other birds, never, never, never to sell one feather of their wings for worms, or for anything else.

"And, Bobby," his mother continued, "Jesus said, What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

Bobby had been following his mother's words carefully. He looked at her when she ceased speaking.

"Mother," he said earnestly, "I think after all I would not give anything for a fortune."—A. D. Belden, in "Stories of the King."

JUST A SUGGESTION

Since the churches have been released from their obligation to take up an offering this year to apply to the debt on the building of The Brethren Publishing Company, and are given the opportunity to use the day to care for their own obligations to the Publishing House in the payment for their Evangelist subscriptions, etc., some of our isolated members may feel left out in the cold.

A good "Mother in Israel" who has been contributing regularly to this cause from her scanty store has solved the problem for her sisters in isolation by sending a contribution as usual with the suggestion that it be used to pay for The Brethren Evangelist for some one who is not able to pay for their own.

That Unconscious Contest

Last week we announced receiving six more subscriptions from Long Beach which put California four subscriptions ahead of Pennsylvania. This week we received four more from Philadelphia which tied the score. Then Brother Nielsen sent in two more which again puts California two points in the lead; but the whistle has not yet blown for the close of the game. We are anticipating further results.

TO MAKE OUR SAVIOR KNOWN

* * * * *

By Edgar Cooper Mason

Christ came for every race and tongue,
For every tribe and nation;
Let anthems of His praise be sung:
"In Him is our salvation."
God's fulness dwells in Him alone,
Beside Him is no other.
Let all who know Him make Him known,
As Savior, Friend and Brother.

If Jesus Christ were truly known
By all whose lips acclaim Him;—
If His true teachings clear were shown
By golden deeds that frame Him;
The tongues of men would cease to scoff,
The proud would kneel before Him—
All sham and pretense rended off—
To worship and adore Him.

Not thru discussion shines the Light,
That men may see our Savior;—
But deeds of kindness in their sight;—
His Gospel in behavior:
Cold water given to thirsty lips;
Warm love to lift the prone;—
Such life all argument outstrips
To make our Savior known.

Good Lord, deliver me from cant,
Vain show and selfish pride!
The formal and the arrogant
With Thee cannot abide.
Give me a lowly, contrite heart;
In me make Thou Thy dwelling;
Let lovingkindness be my part,
When grace and love I'm telling.

USEFUL Toys for the Depression

A rather pathetic story is told by one of Ohio's newspapers. In a poorer section of the city of Cleveland a school teacher found that her children had no toys at home. So she sat up late one night making bean bags, and distributed them the next day with instructions how to play the game. A few days later she asked one of the little boys whether he was having fun with his bean bag. "No," he answered, "mama opened it and cooked the beans for supper."

As I read the story, I could not help but feel how unfortunate it is that more of the amusements of our modern world are not eatable. Many of them are food for neither body, mind, nor soul. Even a bean-bag is worth more than a movie ticket. Yet the movies have prospered throughout the lean years. "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread?"

WANTED: A Man

A hundred and fifty years ago men were intoxicated by their splendid visions of a world ruled by democratic government. But the experiences of the past few years have caused the vision to fade. And today men have become frankly pessimistic about the situation. Some very able thinkers are suggesting that some form of dictatorship is the only way out.

Walter Lippmann, regarded as one of the keenest minds in America, recently said, "There is no magic in a mere change of political machinery. The more important lesson is that popular government is unworkable except under the leadership and discipline of a strong executive. Any group of 500 men, whether they are called Congressmen or anything else, is an unruly mob unless it comes under the strict control of a single will."

Why is it that men cannot work together for the good of all, without all the petty log-rolling and selfish obstructionist tactics of the average body of politicians? The answer is twofold: First, men are sinners. Second, they are ignorant. Men need righteousness and wisdom, and these must come from God through Jesus Christ.

There is coming for the world two experiences of what Mr. Lippmann calls "the strict control of a single will." The first will be that awful time when the Antichrist will for a brief season wield universal power over all the world. The second will come when the Son of God descends from heaven to establish his Kingdom on earth.

LET us Tell the Truth

One of the marks of humanity is its tendency to proclaim as truth what it wishes were true. How many times, for example, have we heard preachers under the emotional spell of delivering a patriotic address refer to the American government as "Christian." How wonderful it would be, if true. But here is the last clause of Article VII of the Constitution of the United States: "No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States."

As long as that clause stands in the Constitution our government can in no sense be called "Christian," for the essence of Christianity is the confession of Jesus as Lord and God. More than that, if the Constitution be followed, the atheist has the same right to hold office as the Christian.

Yet strange to say, the government requires the taking of an oath on the part of those elected to office. I have often wondered, if an atheist should be elected president, what kind of an oath he would take.

THE Rebellion Against Preaching

A novelist whose books are at present the best sellers in America is Pearl S. Buck, who has lived nearly all her life in China, and whose parents and husband were missionaries there. Having acquired national fame as a novelist, what she says on any subject is first page news. Naturally she has been asked to speak on the subject of Foreign Missions, and she has unfortunately chosen to become a rabid propagandist for the destructive "liberal" view of Missions.

I quote one of the closing paragraphs from an address of Mrs. Buck's which is being circulated widely in pamphlet form:

"Above all then, let the spirit of Christ be manifested by mode of life rather than by preaching. I am wearied to death with this preaching. It deadens all thought, it confuses all issues; it is producing in China at least a horde of hypocrites. . . . Let us cease our talk for a while and cut off our talkers, and let us try to express our religion in terms of life. The spoken word ought to be only a bit of fuel added to a flame already burning."

Now it is a well known fact that no true preacher of the Word ever questioned the necessity of living as Christians ought to live. Preaching, we all admit, is a poor thing without a holy life behind it. But Mrs. Buck should be reminded that God saves men by preaching. "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

One notices that Mrs. Buck does plenty of "talking," both in her books and from the platform. But she would like to have the missionary "talkers" cut off. Is it worse for the missionary to "preach" the Gospel to the Chinese than it is for Mrs. Buck to write Chinese stories for Americans? The devil must laugh. And by the way, Mrs. Buck sells her stories for a good stiff price, while the missionary gives his message to the Chinese without price.

MR. ROGERS Ceases to be Funny

Will Rogers is very enthusiastic about Mrs. Buck's publications, and not long ago he expressed great pleasure over her views of Foreign Missions. At the same time he rather sneeringly referred to the missionary converts as "rice Christians." A former missionary in Cleveland answered Mr. Rogers in a public letter, administering a scathing and well deserved rebuke. I clipped the letter intending to reproduce it in this department of the Evangelist, but mislaid it.

And all this leads to the remark that when Mr. Rogers turns aside from humor to utter dogmas in the field of religion, he ceases to be funny. Laugh at him, if you like, but don't get your ideas on religion from Mr. Rogers.

THE Missing Factor in Education

Seventeen applicants for entrance to the United States Naval Academy, young men who were the pick of seventeen Congressional districts, turned in examination answers which were alike. They were dismissed and forever barred from reapplication.

A writer from Beloit College suggests in the New York Times that in spite of all the so-called progress in State controlled education, "evidently the field of citizenship and character-forming is yet untouched."

The only kind of character that stands the test of time and experience is Christian character. But state controlled institutions forbid the introduction of a program to produce this kind of character. And that, by the way, is why the Roman Catholic Church opposes public school education for her children. We may not agree with Catholic theology, but there is justice in her contention that education divorced from Christian Truth will at last bring disaster.

ANSWERS to Prayer

Ever since taking up our work here in connection with the reorganization of the Seminary work, three special things have been upon our hearts. We have prayed first that our students might become industrious and enthusiastic students of the Word of God, believing its Truths without reserve and preaching them with power. Again we have prayed that all we do might be bathed in an atmosphere of prayer. And finally we have prayed that the spirit and passion of evangelism might sweep through the entire institution.

We have reasons to believe that God is answering prayer. We have a group of men who love to dig in the Word for its treasures and who are finding joy in the mastery of its truths. Our prayer meetings, led by students, are seasons of blessed fellowship. I shall never forget some of the meetings we have had during the first semester. And the love for souls has been burning like a flame in our midst. A number of the students have been recently engaged in special evangelistic efforts, and God has given some wonderful victories. We thank him for answering prayer.

The Fulcrum of Greater Spiritual Power

Men know the immense value of the fulcrum. It multiplies a man's lifting power many times. The straight lift is puny beside the power of the pry resting on wedge or prop. It has a parallel in the spiritual realm. There is a triangle of characteristics that constitute the fulcrum of greater spiritual power which the church may exercise.

The first is a richer fellowship among the brothers and sisters in Christ. In most churches the members need to know one another better. It is true even in the smaller churches. Very often there isn't much real fellowship because there isn't much knowledge one of another. Knowing names isn't knowing persons. Nor is it enough to know where people live, or the kind of work they do. It is a knowledge of the aims, the purposes, the characteristics, the spirit of the life, the friendliness of the heart, the good intentions,—these are the things that count. Such knowledge one of another makes for intimacy, mutual understanding and sympathy, and encourages a desire for helpfulness. But in all too many churches there isn't much of such knowledge. There is coolness, reserve, stand-offishness, suspicion and crabbedness. Such attitudes are barriers to fellowship and make for weakness and division. In unity there is strength; in fellowship there is life; in cooperation there is power. "We be brethren" ought to be the feeling of every member; mutual love and sympathy ought to dominate every heart. That is not only the secret of power, but the characteristic of discipleship—"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one for another."

The second part of the triangle of characteristics that makes for greater power is stronger loyalty to the church. The church is the greatest institution in all the world, and it deserves our best, our first, our utmost. Give the church the best of your strength; not the fag-end. Give it the best of your thought; not the weary leftovers. Put the church first in your loyalties. It is the body of Christ and the bride of Christ. Nothing else can compare with it. You may have formed alliances with other institutions that are entirely worthy in themselves. But they must not be allowed to sever or divide your loyalties to your church. Nothing else should be allowed to stand along side your church in its claims upon your life. It must be sincerely and truly first. Make it not only first, but give it your utmost. It is divine; it is Christ's church; it is the instrument of salvation and the inspiration of all that is good and lasting. Its success is the most important thing in the world. Nothing else really matters compared with it. Give your church such loyalty and you can make it what you wish.

The third side of this triangle of power is deeper devotion to Christ. That is the broad base of the triangle, the most important part of the fulcrum. A vital relation to Jesus Christ is fundamental to everything else. If your mutual fellowship is to be wholesome and helpful; if your loyalties to the church are to be strong and persevering in good report and ill, in prosperity and in adversity, all must be based upon a real heart love for the Lord Jesus Christ. Without that your fellowship with your fellow members will be insincere and superficial, and your protestations of friendship will be but acted parts in a drama. Without that love your pretended loyalty to the church will be a farce. It will lack vitality and staying power. It will be fitful and shifting and undependable. If your loyalty is not resting upon the Rock, Christ Jesus, it is sand-founded. And if your social contacts and spiritual fellowships are not based upon a love for and utter devotion to your Lord and Savior all your religious activities and alliances are but sentiments of the moment and will be as fleeting. There is nothing that can give stability and reality and effectiveness to religious emotion and service but sincere devotion to Christ. Keep your contacts alive with him, and you will have power, power that is inexhaustible and never weakens, because its source is in the Infinite.

Alcohol a Dangerous and Habit-forming Narcotic

The Bible has much to say against drinking and drunkards, pronouncing woe after woe upon those who thus indulge. Nor is it without condemnation on him who encourages another to drink: "Woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink." There is certainly Biblical warrant for all religiously minded people taking a strong and determined attitude against strong drink, and there is need of instruction being given from that point of view. But in these scientific days when youth is encouraged to fairly stand in awe of scientific learning, and especially when men who know a great deal about the human system are listened to with a respect that is almost akin to reverence, we can well afford to put great stress on the scientific aspect of liquor drinking, re-inforced by the opinions of outstanding scientists and physicians.

There has been a let-up in instruction concerning the physiological effects of alcohol and some of those who once were taught are coming almost to believe that their former instruction was an unpleasant myth. How else can the popular indifference be explained? Even now when Congress has become so beer-minded that these distinguished legislators seem determined to flood the country with beer and light wine in the very face of the Prohibition Amendment, there seems to be scarcely enough sentiment on the question to raise a decent protest. It looks as though we would have to begin all over again in the matter of education. At any rate there is need of some intensive reviewing of the subject and refreshing of the mind with the facts about the danger and viciousness of alcoholism.

The facts have not changed one iota notwithstanding the deluge of wet propaganda. Alcohol is still a dangerous, habit-forming narcotic drug, and physicians are still declaring it, when politics or appetite, or both do not deter them. But the public press is not reporting them. There is very little information broadcast about the real nature of alcohol. The opinions of men who really count are seldom quoted against the drug. Consequently we can quote the following statements by outstanding authorities almost as a bit of news, to the average reader of the daily papers, though such statements by high-minded specialists are not new at all. The following testimony by Professor Yandell Henderson is all the more significant in view of the fact that he was called as an expert witness on the wet side at the recent hearings of the Collier Beer Bill. Dr. Henderson said:

"I wish to testify as an expert on poisons, and particularly on that class of poisons which include alcohol. ALCOHOL IS A VOLATILE POISON ... The saloon will certainly come back unless the Federal Government controls spirits somewhat along the lines that it now controls narcotics. ... Spirits are as intoxicating as narcotics. ... Alcohol drunkenness and morphine addiction are from the federal and social standpoints equally great evils. THEY ARE THE TWO MOST DESTRUCTIVE DRUG HABITS OF WHICH WE HAVE ANY EXPERIENCE. ... The cocktail habit is a form of drug addiction. Distilled spirits are narcotic drugs and their use should be controlled along somewhat the same lines as morphine and cocaine."

Dr. Haven I. Emerson of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University is certainly worthy to give expert testimony. In his monograph, "Alcohol a Food, a Drug, a Poison," he says: "Alcohol, ether and chloroform are all narcotic drugs. Alcohol is distinguished from these other two narcotic drugs by the fact that it is a habit forming drug the use of which in small and apparently pleasant and harmless amounts tends commonly to create a desire for a frequent repetition of the drug effect, the use of larger doses and doses of greater concentration." If the popular mind were saturated with such facts, the present "repeal" agitation would not be considered with such indifference.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Business Manager writes about the Annual which has been published and mailed out to the churches. The local distribution and payment now rests on the shoulders of the local church.

You will enjoy the continuation of Dr. Florence N. Gribble's letter this week. Having gotten back on the field, she finds herself very busy with her medical work, and every patient is to her an opportunity to tell the Gospel story.

Brother J. L. Gingrich, pastor of the Third church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, informs us that their revival under the leadership of Brother W. C. Benschoff, "is being blessed of the Lord. Large crowds attend every meeting."

Brother Freeman Ankrum, pastor at Flora, Indiana, writes of some of the residents of the Brethren Home at that place, and calls the brotherhood's attention anew to the obligation that we have assumed to these elderly saints of God. We must, indeed, keep faith with them.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter, pastor of the church at Smithville, Ohio, informed us the other day when he called at the editor's office, that the morning merged service is proving very satisfactory and is being rewarded with good attendance. The last Sunday, he said, the record stood at 144 in attendance, the largest yet, whereas the average attendance for 1932 was 128 and for 1931 it was 91.

Young people of the Pennsylvania and Southeastern districts will be interested in an announcement sent in this week by Brother N. V. Leatherman, general secretary of the National Sunday School Association. See the "Announcement" department. He wants your help in giving a suitable name to the proposed young people's camp to be launched near Johnstown.

The Brethren church of Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, is cooperating in a union revival meeting, held one week at a stretch in each church and the pastors taking turns in preaching each a week at a time, their purpose being stated, "to continue until the Lord gives us a mighty revival in Conemaugh." Brother W. H. Schaffer informs us that the meetings were launched with marked enthusiasm and great crowds, and that three confessions were had up to Wednesday night of the first week.

The splendid church at Elkhart, Indiana has realized such continued growth during past decades, or more has now experienced another outpouring of the Spirit of God in a recent revival conducted by their pastor, Brother H. F. Stuckman. During the meetings fifty-two stepped forward for Christ, forty-three to make first confession and eight to enter the church by relation or letter. Twenty-five were baptized before the close of the meetings. The Gospel was preached in simplicity and with power and the Word did not return void.

Dr. I. D. Bowman, on his recent trip to his Delaware pastorate, preached to good audiences over three Sundays and conducted several prayer services in homes on week nights. The Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society are doing good work, and the Endeavor society is attracting attention by the training in religious activity it is affording. At the annual business meeting the pastor was called for another year of service. The membership has been steadily growing until it has reached seventy. Though rather widely scattered Brother Bowman says there are at least fifty active members.

We are taking the liberty of publishing a letter from Brother D. R. Murray, pastor of the Cooperative Brethren church at Columbus, Ohio. This letter came to the editor in his capacity as president of the Ohio Mission Board, and is a sample of the reports he furnishes to the Boards represented. We want other members of our Ohio Conference to know the situation there, and to understand something of the hard work that Brother and Sister Murray are giving to this struggling church, while Brother Murray at the same time is teaching in one of the high schools of the city. The Sunday morning merged service is keeping up an encouraging attendance.

February is Benevolence Month. The last Sunday in the month is the stated time for lifting an offering for the support of the Superannuated Ministers and the Brethren Home. And there is no possibility of moratorium being granted on the February offering as was the case with the January offering. These aged ministers and their wives, or widows must eat and be clothed, and the aged residents of the Flora Home must be cared for, even though a depression is abroad in the land. The members of our churches do not have as much as usual to give, and in many cases giving will mean real sacrifice, but sacrifice it must be rather than permit members of our own spiritual household to go hungry. We must share what we have with those who have not.

The First church of Philadelphia entered into the new year with enthusiasm and a bright outlook, and they report having recently had "the best annual business we have ever known." One secret of the success of this splendid church, judging from the report, is the readiness of all to do faithfully the job assigned to them, and another is the prevalence of the evangelistic spirit among them. It could hardly be otherwise under the capable and zealous leadership of Brother A. V. Kimmell, who finds time to teach in a Bible Institute besides feeding his own flock. And "like pastor like people", these good people are busy at other things besides building up their own church, they are giving frequent service to city missions and other needy places. Such unselfishness is bound to be rewarded with spiritual enrichment and growth.

Dr. W. S. Bell, whose home is now Milledgeville, Illinois, was a recent caller at the Evangelist office. Having gotten about the country a great deal as field secretary of the college endowment fund, he has had opportunity to observe conditions rather widely. He says he sees as yet no signs of any general turning to God on the part of the people, as some have thought the depression would cause them to do. He thinks men have been hardened rather than mellowed by their sufferings and hardships. Perhaps they have not suffered yet enough, and still have confidence in their ability to extricate themselves from their deplorable situation. But real relief will not come until men in large numbers turn to God. Sometimes man insists on going to his extremity before giving God his opportunity.

Brother N. V. Leatherman, pastor of the church at Berlin, Pennsylvania, writes that there were twenty-one baptized last fall as a result of the revival and also that the communion was largely attended. The Sunday school is doing good work under the leadership of Brother A. B. Cober and attention is being given to the discovery and training of young leadership, a thing which any church is wise to do. These people have a church building debt that need not frighten them at all, nevertheless it is sufficient to add considerable to their current expenses in the pay of interest, and the fact that their treasurer was able to report all bills paid at the close of the year, indicates a splendid spirit of cooperation and sacrifice in giving. It is rather unusual for one church to have so large a number of Octogenarians, or near-octogenarians, and still more unusual for so many such persons to be called home from one group at so nearly the same time.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

"The Brethren church at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, requests the prayers of the brotherhood for their evangelistic meetings beginning Sunday night, January 29th. Rev. R. Paul Miller will be the evangelist.—Wm. H. Clough, Pastor."

"We request the prayers of the Evangelist family for our union revival," writes Brother W. H. Schaffer of Conemaugh, Pennsylvania.

Pray that a Benevolence Day offering may be taken in all churches of the brotherhood. The date is February 26th.

The Glory of His Grace

By Herman Hoyt

Ps. 85:10

There is one characteristic of civilization which haunts a man from the day of his birth until the day of his death. As a principle it may be comprehended in these words: "You don't get something for nothing." Or similarly stated: "You pay for all you get."

It is not my purpose to expound this principle to you. It is enough to know that the principle is in practice, inextricably bound up with every act and move of our lives. Today is the Lord's Day, and in keeping with everything that is of God, my desire is to turn your thoughts in a diametrically opposite direction; from the things of earth and of men, to the things of heaven and of God.

My heart leaps up when I behold
A rainbow in the sky;
So it was when my life began.
So it is now, I am a man.
So be it when I grow old
Or let me die.

So wrote the poet Wordsworth. His heart was stirred with the external beauty of the rainbow. But with a deeper meaning, I can say that my heart leaps up when I behold that rainbow in the sky. And my prayer is that it shall be so all the days of my life; for it is the seal of the grace of God written across the canopy of heaven, pledging the eternal freeness of his grace to all.

The 85th Psalm is the revelation of the grace of God to a man who has grown weary staggering under the burdens of the weight of this world. The demands of the world are too much. The world cries, "PAY", for all you get. The struggling farmer is faced with a burden of taxation. The half-paid laborer is faced with exorbitant prices. The beggar must wander on in search of food. It is the man who has searched the world over for happiness; who has spent his last dollar for abiding pleasure; who has frittered away his last hour for a moment of peace,—who finally faces the miserable conclusion that his search was too soon ended, that his last dollar was not enough, that his last hour was too brief. It is that man who cries out in despair: (Ps. 85:7) "Show us thy mercy, O Lord, and grant us thy salvation."

Last spring a group of some 5,000 people in the city of Philadelphia, made their way to a football field, and there sent up their wailing cry to God, "Show us thy mercy, O Lord, and grant us thy salvation." Ravaged with hunger, facing starvation, unable to meet the financial demands of the world,—thus they were forced to their knees. It is told of a prominent saloon keeper of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, that during that historic flood, he was seen on the top of his saloon, being swept on to destruction. His posture was that of one in anguish. He was on his knees invoking the powers which he thought to be, for mercy and a present salvation.

The Psalmist in this case is rewarded, and God answers his petition with a revelation of his mercy and grace, for he says in verse 8, "I will hear what God the Lord will speak; for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints."

You will be astounded to note that the Psalmist whose experience with God has always been the most favorable, takes it upon himself to inject at this point a warning note of exhortation: "but let them not turn again to folly." I can add nothing to the warning, save to say that it is timely, appropriate, and needed. Men need to be warned lest they spurn the Grace of God and turn to folly. If God be pleased to reveal his grace to any man; woe be to that man who rejects it in favor of the foolishness of this world.

The first element of his grace is its characteristic nearness to all who love HIM. But the great accomplishment of God's grace is set forth in the 10th verse: "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other." But remember: this verse will mean nothing to you, if you do not grasp the inflexible character of God's truth, and the unattainableness of God's righteousness. There is no mercy and peace if these do not obtain. There is no grace of God, if God is not righteous in his being, operating under the standard of his own eternal truth.

I. The Inflexible Standard of Truth

During the stormy hours of anguish, when Christ prayed to his Father in Gethsemane, he uttered a statement which is characteristic of God: "Thy word is truth." On another occasion Jesus Christ said of himself: "I am . . . the truth." He himself was the Living Word and as such, he was the personified truth of God.

God's word is a standard; the standard of God. Christ is the living standard. Accordingly, by the word of God all things are measured. In Washington, D. C. there is a standard yard-stick by which all the yardsticks in the United States are measured. There is a pound weight by which all pound weights are compared. There is a quart measure by which all quart measures are gauged. So it is with God. There is a standard by which all things are gauged, compared, or measured.

God is measured by his own standard and is declared to be righteous. God is the zenith of holiness. He is righteous in all his ways. He is the pinnacle of perfection. With him there is no variability, neither shadow of turning. By the same standard man is measured and declared to be a sinner. Paul expresses it in this way in Romans: "There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulcher; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips: whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness; their feet are swift to shed blood: destruction and misery are in their ways; and the way of peace they have not known: there is no fear of God before their eyes. . . . For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." (Rom. 3:10-18, 23).

At this point justice steps in and demands the punishment of man for every aberration from the standard of God. It is a horrible contemplation, but it is an inescapable demand, that every sin must reap its reward. The justice of God demands that every sin be punished. Judgment stares every man in the face. The inevitable consequences of sin are unshakable. The self-righteous complex of the self-deluded sinners will not avail, for he will carry the inward premonition of sin and its judgment to his dying day.

In the presence of such ominous and constant reminders, the human soul in mental anguish can do nothing but cry out to the Father of Lights for mercy. Notice the fearful meditations of the Psalmist in verses 4-6 of the 85th Psalm. Is it any wonder that he cries out in the 7th verse: "Show us thy mercy, O Lord, and grant us thy salvation." I remember so distinctly when I was somewhat younger than I am now, that the knowledge of misconduct at home with its judgment worked no end of misery in my mind, and forced me to cry out for mercy many times. No doubt many of you have had similar experiences. Occasionally I escaped the dreaded punishment. But with God, his justice must be satisfied. The punishment must be applied, for the wages of sin is death. It is an immutable, unalterable law.

II. The Unattainable Perfection of Righteousness

According to the standard of truth God is righteous. In his being he is righteous. His thoughts are righteous. His deeds are righteous. His laws are righteous. His decrees are righteous. He is altogether righteous. Being what he is, certain laws determine what his relationship shall be. Since God is righteous he will not tolerate sin in his presence: "For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?" (2 Cor. 6:14). Therefore, men must possess righteousness to stand in the presence of God, "For without holiness no man shall see God" Heb. 12:14). Since truth declares that men do not possess righteousness, and cannot attain it by themselves, the justice of God demands eternal enmity and separation from God. When men look the righteousness of God in the face, attempt to measure up to its standards, fail utterly and miserably in the effort, then they cry out: "Grant us thy salvation," give us deliverance.

Humanly speaking, men cannot satisfy the standard of truth; nor produce the righteousness of God; but in the extremity of man, the grace of God performs the most marvelous, most unthinkable, and most unspeakable task of all eternity. The Psalmist refers to the work of creation, as the work of God's fingers. But when Isaiah mentions the work of redemption, he talks of the arm of the Lord. Here in the words of the text is the marvel of grace: "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other."

III. The Supreme Accomplishment of the Grace of God

We are so ready to declare the love of God and ignore the justice of God. But there is no love of God, if there is no justice. Because the justice of God makes its just demands, and they must be satisfied, then the Love of God comes to the front, and by grace supplies all the demands of justice. And herein is love: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." Before the foundations of the world, God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ made a covenant in heaven. In their plan, Christ the Son was to become the servant of the Father, and he was to be sent into the world to do his Father's bidding. Time after time in the Gospels you will hear Jesus say, "I do the will of him that sent me."

The first thing he did was to lay aside the garments of glory and be made in the likeness of sinful man. The independent use of his heavenly attributes was no longer his privilege. As a servant he was sent into this world, and throughout his servanthip he obeyed the will of him who sent him.

Out of the Ivory palaces
Into a world of woe,
Only his great eternal love
Made my Savior go.

This servanthip of the Lord Jesus Christ is the governing principle of heaven. It has baffled the sages and the wisemen of all ages. They could not understand it, so they denied that it existed. But the inability of the finite mind to understand the mystery of his Grace does not annihilate the grace of God. Daniel Webster made the assertion to a group of assembled guests that if he could understand Jesus Christ he would no longer worship him. We marvel at the love of mother. It is sometimes true that we are astonished at the love of a wife or a husband. But face to face with the Grace of God manifest to us in the incarnation of his own Son in human flesh, defies astonishment. It is an ineffable, unspeakable, wordless manifestation of the Grace of God. The sacrifice of a missionary, who leaves home to go into heathen lands commands our admiration; but Jesus Christ, the first missionary, left heaven to journey into this wilderness of sin. The incarnation is the Grace of God.

By the decree of Grace, Jesus Christ was to be the mercy of God to a lost world. He was to go to the Cross and there bear in his own body, the punishment of men, that men might escape punishment. In love God sent Christ to satisfy his justice. In this manner, mercy might be extended to miserable humanity, whose wailing cry had gone up: "Show us thy mercy, O Lord." In a certain school, the law had been laid down that anyone caught doing wrong, or breaking the rules, should be subject to a punishment of so many strikes with the birch rod. Unfortunately, a small lad was caught soon afterwards in the very act. He was arraigned before the whole school for punishment. The little fellow sensed his danger and feared the consequences. The teacher, calling him to the front, ordered him to remove his coat. The little lad, shivering with fright, could scarcely move. He pulled the coat up closer around his neck. The situation became so tense, that a young lad who could stand it no longer, threw off his coat, marched between the small boy and the teacher, and demanded to be whipped instead of the small boy.

This is a miniature of the grace of God. Shivering humanity faces punishment, but Christ, the Son of God steps forth in our place, throws off the mantle of his glory, and giving himself to be rent with cruel nails, and pierced with a sharp spear, and lifted upon a Cross, suffered the punishment for all humanity. Jesus Christ who knew no sin, became sin for us. But that is not all of grace.

"For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him" (2 Cor. 5:21). Clothed in a robe of righteousness which is by faith in him, we are no longer at war with God, but there is peace between us, and we may look forward to the time when we shall stand in his presence unashamed and without blame. By Grace, he came to take away our sin and give us in exchange his spotless robe of righteousness. He wore the crown of thorns but he gave us a crown of glory. Wonderful, marvelous, matchless grace, that can achieve the impossible, fulfill the demands of justice, and yet release the hands of God to bestow eternal life on whom he wills. Thus in the Cross of Christ—"Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other."

As we review the marvelous record of Grace in God, In Christ, and in us, we see plainly two things. It is a gospel for the sinner. It excludes all human merit, renounces all human claim, and centers in God alone. If anyone should say, "It is too cheap," let him look at Calvary and see the cost to God. If anyone should say, "It is too easy," let him look at Calvary again, and realize what was needed to put sin away. It is cheap. It is easy for us, because it is without money and without price. If it were not so, there would be no salvation at all. But to God it was unspeakably costly, because sin was so hideous and awful as to necessitate it. But the precious Blood of Christ is the glory of his grace, and now to us who believe it, he is indeed precious and will be through all eternity. It is also a gospel for the saint. It not only provides redemption, but it humbles pride, guarantees holiness, inspires to service, incites to hope, pledges heaven, and glorifies God. No wonder we are invited to receive this grace and are warned against receiving it in vain. Grace does not work apart from our responsibility. We must use it, believe it, respond to it, and reproduce it.

In this closing poem, you will find in the first two verses, despair,—the condition of a man outside of Christ. The last two verses were written when the same man had found hope in Christ Jesus.

I've tried in vain a thousand ways
My fears to quell, my hopes to raise;
But what I need the Bible says,
Is only Jesus.

My soul is night, my heart is steel;
I cannot see, I cannot feel.
For light, for life, I must appeal
In simple faith to Jesus.

He died, he lives, he reigns, he pleads;
There's love in all his words and deeds;

There's all a guilty sinner needs
Forevermore in Jesus.

Tho some should sneer, and some should blame,
I'll go with all my guilt and shame;
I'll go to him because his name,
Above all names is Jesus.

In the Cross of the Lord Jesus Christ, the convergent event of all history, "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other," accomplished through the grace of God. "Let them not turn again to folly." Ashland, Ohio.

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humberd

Study Number Nine

The Tree of Life

The Overcomer at Ephesus is given right "to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Mortal tongue cannot convey the blessedness of this promise. If eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, in the Garden of Eden, brought all of the sin and suffering about us, what joy and peace will come from eating of the tree of life.

A Suffering Humanity

God sometimes hangs a great spiritual truth on a very small peg of facts. The eating of the tree of knowledge of good and evil brought the human race to a depth of degradation beyond all tongue to tell. There are, at this moment, probably nineteen hundred millions of human beings on this earth, not one of which but has its sorrow and its heartaches.

Some are mourning the loss of a loved companion, others are pining away because of betrayed love; some are in the bog of despair, others are crossing the burning sands of shame; some are hungry and sick, others are naked and cold; some are homeless, others are friendless; some are wedged in between unweildng circumstances, others are pressed down with the cares of daily toil.

A Suffering Creation

Even creation about us is groaning because of the curse of man's sin. The little mouse must be alert for the cat; the hawk spies the nest of the song bird and the world loses some of its joy. Every acre of ground is a scene of fear, strife and death, as millions of ants pounce upon the wounded grasshoppers and bug eats bug. The lowing of the cattle is in the minor key, while the wind sighs a mournful tune as it whirls around the corner of our house.

At this present moment the sufferings of the world are mountain high. Yesterday it was the same. Not one moment of last year that did not bring its dreadful toll of suffering and sorrow. Multiply this by all the centuries since Adam ate of the forbidden fruit, and it staggers the human mind. If this is the result of eating the fruit of that tree, what will it mean to eat of the tree of life? The answer to that question must wait until our Lord returns, but we have the assurance that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us (Rom. 8:18-20).

Death and the Overcomer

"He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." The faithful at Smyrna may be ground under the heels of physical death but they will be far beyond the range of the second death. Persecution and physical death will come to them, but that is of such little consequence, in comparison to the horrors of the second death, that they are exhorted to care nothing for it.

Death a Dread Enemy

There is no making light of death. Funeral homes may be furnished with all the gay trimmings of paint and brush; flowers and perfumes may put forth their efforts to hide the fact of a decaying corpse, but the terrible fact remains, all that we know of that loved one is there. The hands that once prepared our meals are cold and lifeless now; the eyes that so lately answered our smile with a warmth of love and joy, are dark and glassy now. Soon the fluids of that body will stain the silken linings of the casket; the flesh will soften and slip from the bones. A few years and a ghastly framework of white bones is all that we can see of that beloved companion. Yes, death is a terrible reality, its horrors are unspeakable, but make it as bad as you can and it is as nothing compared to the horrors of the second death. If the reader of these notes is an overcomer through our Lord Jesus Christ, he need not fear for he will be beyond the reach of the fangs of that dread monster, the second death.

Time and space does not permit us to go into detail in considering these messages but no doubt each reward speaks of glories beyond the capacity of mortal man to understand.

The Application

Love to our Lord Jesus Christ is the root of true Christianity. Let a man be alive in love to God and make it his joy to give him his whole heart, and his title is sure. He can, however, look for persecution. But this will keep him ill at ease in this world and better prepare him for the world to come. A true overcomer will live a martyr's life if not die a martyr's death. Let us dwell upon the standard set up by our Lord in these messages and animate ourselves to the zeal and self sacrifice and devotion that alone can win the prize.

After the Church is Removed

We have been considering Christ and his relation to the church on earth. We have seen him walking amidst the golden candlesticks, inspecting their light and giving warnings of failure and directions for a closer walk. These messages take us up to the close of the church age. At the beginning of chapter four, the church is removed from the earth and God begins to clear the scene for the Kingdom Age. Satan fights to the last ditch and this brings a time of tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be, (Matt. 24:21).

Chapter Four

"After this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven; and the first voice I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter" (after these) that is, after the church age (Rev. 4:1).

According to the signs of the times we are very near the close of the church age when the trumpet of the Lord shall sound and in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye we shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air (1 Cor. 15:52 and 1 Thess. 4:14-18).

When the Christians are removed from the earth they will stand before the Judgment Seat of Christ and receive rewards according to their works. This will take place in the clouds. (For a fuller study of this subject, send for my booklet, "The Rewards of Christians," (price 10c). During this time the Great tribulation will run its course upon the earth.

John Caught Up to Heaven

"And immediately I was in the spirit" (Vs. 2). Paul had a somewhat similar experience (2 Cor. 12) but he did not know whether he took his body with him or not. When John was caught up to heaven, he saw a throne and the indescribable deity upon the throne. The terrible purplish light, blazing with blood red rays; the voices from the throne; the flashing lightning and the crashing thunder, remind us of the terrible display at Mount Sinai.

But there is something more. Upon those black and threatening clouds of wrath he sees a rainbow. Although it is a scene of judgment, the rainbow speaks of mercy. In chapter twenty we see another throne set for judgment but there is no rainbow. It is the Great White Throne, before which the unrighteous dead must stand. There is no mercy at this judgment for the day of mercy has passed for them, but in chapter four there is a judgment with mercy. Terrible things are to happen on earth, but they are purifying judgments. God will redeem and bless the earth until even the desert will blossom as the rose.

THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH

Editorials from Ministers and Laymen

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEED

It is not material prosperity. There is plenty of bread and butter for every mouth. Our harvests have been abundant. And yet some have had to go hungry because of improper distribution. We just came through a period of almost unprecedented material prosperity. One hundred twenty millions of people are now suffering the after effects of universal indulgence in a prosperity spree. Everybody was more or less drunken, staggering along, thinking they were going up hill when in reality they were speeding down the toboggan slide to the individual, state, national and world failure. The arrival has been a hard bump to man's pride and the wreckage of the modern Tower of Babel is strewn everywhere.

It is not more secular education. Schools and colleges and universities have been crowded. Increasing efficiency has marked the educational programs everywhere. We have an abundance of so-called educated people.

It is not more efficiency in industry. The machine is here in its glory, accomplishing that of which our fathers never dreamed. Men have too much leisure and still the technocrat promises him more.

It is not more pleasure. The world has gone pleasure mad, and in the wrong direction. Why is there such a tendency on the part of man to go down hill rather than up hill? The world's pleasure program is corrupt to the core. Listen in or look in and the godly must be ashamed.

It is not a return to our land of legalized beer and wine and whiskey. That would mean increased drunkenness, forbidden by God. That would mean the spending of bread money for drink. That would mean untold suffering of cold, hunger and brutality by wives, mothers and children. That would mean a partnership between Uncle Sam and Satan.

It is not a change of political administration at Washington. Democrats are not angels, only mortal men, not unlike the rest of humanity. May those who will soon take up the reins of government at Washington be not unmindful of God's law that "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Politics will always be more or less selfish and corrupt because unregenerate man is selfish and corrupt.

A VITAL PARTNERSHIP BETWEEN MAN AND GOD IS THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEED. That means more belief in and faith in God the Father, God, the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. That means more of genuine Christianity. That means more genuine loyalty to Christ and his Church. That means a return on the part of man to his humble position of dependency upon God. Man apart from God has always been an utter failure, and always will be. Let man turn in repentance to God and to "The Old Time Religion," and many perplexing problems will be solved. Let man turn again and build a temple that shall reach to God's throne. Let man enter into a VITAL PARTNERSHIP WITH GOD THROUGH THE SON and true prosperity will be at hand.

THE APPEAL OF THE CROSS

(1 Corinthians 1:18-31)

Under the Cross is the sinner's sanctuary. This is one spot on earth where the fear of death, of sin, and of judgment, need never trouble us; the only safe spot on earth where the sinner can stand—blessed Calvary. The cross was the background for punishment for vilest slaves; it has become the symbol of self-sacrifice; it indicates the depth of Christ's humiliation; the secret of reconciliation and is the object of shame. Many have cherished the Cross while others have been ashamed of it. One thing must be remembered by all believers, viz., at the foot of the Cross the ground is level. This is the only place to find peace, joy, salvation. It is the only way home.

True disciples and servants of Christ take up the cross daily, deny themselves and follow him. They submit to all afflictions God may lay upon them. The Cross of Christ removed the curse of sin. Christ changed the cursed tree into the precious Cross. He makes cross-bearing easy. He shares the yoke and takes the heavy end. The Divine message to the Church is, "Ye are my witnesses." The Divine commission is, "Preach the Gospel." The Gospel centers around the Cross. The Church bears testimony to the power of the Cross. Paul voices the clergy in declaring, "God forbid that I should glory save on the Cross of Jesus Christ." The worldly wise sneer at the Cross and official dignity deny its power.

Those who are perishing regard the preaching of the Cross as foolishness. Carnal wisdom labels it as irrational. One thing must be remembered, the Cross stands between the saved and the lost. Christ's arms are outstretched to receive both. The Cross is God's power to save. Eloquent, rhetorical and philosophical preaching may inform the intellect; please the taste; appeal to the senses. It may convict, but only the preaching of Christ crucified can save man and bring pardon, peace, justification and power over Satan.

Unbelievers are to be saved by the foolishness of preaching but not by preaching foolishness. Christ on the Cross properly preached and appropriated becomes wisdom for the mind; righteousness for the heart—"Not I but Christ"; sanctification for works—God's workers should be clean in mouth, for our conversation betrays us. They should be clean in walk. We should bow in faith with Abel at the altar, catch up step with Enoch and walk with God. They should be clean in heart for such have the assurance of seeing God. "Welcome, welcome, cross of Christ, if Christ be with it."

JOS. L. GINGRICH, Johnstown, Pa.

Finish each day and be done with it. You have done what you could. Some blunders and absurdities no doubt crept in; forget them as soon as you can. Tomorrow is a new day; begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. This day is all that is good and fair. It is too dear with its hopes and invitations to waste a moment on the yesterdays.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

BROTHERHOOD

Of all things beautiful and good,
The kingliest is brotherhood;
For it will bring again to earth
Her long lost poesy and mirth;
And till it comes these men are slaves,
And travel downward to the dust to graves.

Clear the way, then, clear the way;
Blind creeds and kings have had their day;
Break the dead branches from the path;
Our hope is in the aftermath.
To this event the ages ran;
Make way for brotherhood—make way for man.

—Edwin Markham.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

NINETEENTH CENTENARY OF CALVARY

As one of the more interesting items of news released during the closing week of 1932, we would cite the announcement of Pope Pius XI, that 1933 would be recognized as the nineteenth century of the crucifixion of our Lord. In the report of his communication to cardinals, bishops, priests and "religions," the Holy Father seems not quite sure whether our Lord's death should be credited to the year thirty-three or thirty-four A. D., but he considers a mistake of one year in the date capable of future correction, should new information come to hand as to the Christian calendar's adjustment to its predecessor accepted by the Caesars.

Naturally the recognition of the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem as the pivotal year of human history could only occur after Christianity had acquired dominant authority. "It was not until A. D. 532," we quote from Larned's History, "that the Christian era was invented by Dionysius Exiguus, a Scythian by birth and a Roman abbot, who flourished in the time of Justinian." Dionysius considered the birth of Christ to have occurred in the year 753 after the founding of Rome. This was altered to the year 754 by the Venerable Bede of the next century after Dionysius.

More modern computations have assigned a greater and an opposite error in our present calendar. The claim is made that an addition of years not less than three nor more than ten was made in dating the nativity by the early authorities. Most of our Bibles give the year 4 B. C. as the date of Jesus' birth. This would make 30 A. D. the time of his crucifixion. The Protestant world authorized this assignment when it made 1930 the nineteenth century of the Christian Church.—The Lutheran.

LOCUST SWARM 300 MILES LONG DESTROYS ARGENTINA CROPS

According to a press report of December 26 the relentless advance of a swarm of locusts, estimated 300 miles long and five miles wide, down the banks of the Bermejo river was causing a panic among the farmers. The insects were completely destroying the cotton, maize and tobacco crops. Farmers strenuously dug trenches and constructed traps in an effort to save their crops. Available supplies of arsenic dust and other locust killing products were soon exhausted and the farmers appealed to the government for aid.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

WAR DEBTS AND PROSPERITY

This short article is being written on the 15th of December, the day instalments are due the United States on war debts. Great Britain has met her obligation of $95,500,000 in gold, but all the other debtors to the U. S. have defaulted in their payments. It has become perfectly obvious to every thinking person that the question of war debts has become inseparably bound up with the return of better times and world peace. One does not need to be a financial expert to see that. Great Britain has kept faith strictly to the letter and while staggering along under desperate burdens of taxation has scrupulously honored her word as her bond. For that we believe God will honor her. But it can hardly be expected that with nations behind in their payments to her, and seeking and receiving further extensions of time, like Rumania and others, Britain should be called upon to meet further obligations. In the present situation there are unlimited possibilities of trouble between the nations, and what the outcome of the whole business will be does not appear. It is clear to every thoughtful person that the present situation cannot continue indefinitely with the depression and misery of the people getting worse and worse each day.

The war debt problem is only one of the human angles of the present strange times in which we live. As a matter of fact the complexities of the situation in the world today baffle the keenest minds or combination of minds to see the way out. We are frank to state what we have said before: that the quickest and surest way out of this morass and Slough of Despond is by a return of the people to God. One day of real prayer on the part of the nations would do more to solve the world's problems than one year of conferences. There is nothing too hard for God, however far beyond the reach of man's wisdom a solution of our present distress may seem.—The Evangelical-Christian.

PRODIGAL BAPTISTS

It seems according to the handbook, which comes out of the Nashville headquarters, that the Southern Baptists spent $166,000,000 for their own pleasure and amusement last year, and gave their church only $32,618,125, a per capita contribution of about $8.27, which some others think is not so bad.

The handbook compiler goes on to say that "the great losses and 'hard times' which have come upon Southern Baptists by reason of the present prolonged depression have not stopped them from wasting their substance in riotous living. Southern Baptists waste sufficient money, along five or six lines of extravagant living, every year to finance the whole program of Southern Baptist's work."

They spend, the report says, over $40,000,000 a year on tobacco, from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 on moving-pictures, more than $21,000,000 on once-a-week automobile outings, $35,000,000 for soft drinks and chewing gum, and more than $43,000,000 for cosmetics and beauty-parlor bills.

For church work the Southern Baptists contributed in 1931 $32,618,125.56, which is smaller than the contribution for 1930 by $4,870,892.72, a decrease of 12.99 per cent.

"God pity us and help us!" comments Dr. E. P. Aldredge, secretary of the department of survey, statistics, and information of the Sunday School Board, as he signs the outspoken handbook.

But before the other denominations consign the Southern Baptists to pity, let them read that in 1931 the very same Southern Baptists achieved one of the greatest records in all their history.

The membership gain, the largest annual gain reported since 1923, was 94,288, bringing the total membership to 3,944,566. Baptists totaled 211,253, the largest number since 1925. And for the first time since 1925, gains were reported in the number of churches and Sunday Schools—Seventy-five for the former, and 325 for the latter.—Literary Digest.

CHRISTIANITY OUTGAINS OTHER RELIGIONS IN INDIA

According to Stanley High the three principal religions of India and Burma—Hinduism, Mahometanism, Buddhism—increased ten per cent during the past decade, but Christianity has far outstripped them with its total of 32.5 per cent. In the same time, since 1921, India's population has increased 10.6 per cent to a total of 352,837,779. This is one-fifth of the world's total. The census reports that 225 languages are in use among the Indians, that 66.4 per cent of the people are farmers and that only 28,000,000 are literate.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

CONFESSIONS OF POVERTY

Financial losses are practically universal these days. People who once spoke with some pride of their sufficient funds now very generally plead poverty. The trouble is that many do it to escape their duty in aiding good causes, and that is not commendable. One person bemoaned losses continuously and talked like one on the way to a charity home. The fact is that securities, wisely chosen, have depreciated in sale value, but the income therefrom has not decreased but a small per cent. That person has practically the same income that was received three years ago. Another wealthy person complained bitterly of great loss of income, but a question brought a reply that the income still received was twice the amount needed to care well for him and his. The cut seemed large, but the amount still flowing in was also larger than most of us ever had in the high-tide of prosperity. We are sorry for anyone who loses money or income, but the thing to think about is the amount that still comes in. If one uses a decrease to lessen gifts to good causes, he makes an unpleasant situation very much worse. We believe it was Robert Lenox, many years ago, who, having met great losses in both principal and income, immediately made a very generous gift to the cause of the Lord. In a few years he had more money than ever before and used it in a noble way.—The Presbyterian.

All truth is mysterious. The religion that had no mystery would not be worth believing. Wherever man thinks, mystery finds him, mystery besets him, mystery holds him in its hand. . . . So far from mystery being a reason for unbelief, it is a reason for belief. The system that has none knows nothing of truth; the system with no mystery can know neither God nor man.—Andrew H. Fairbairn.

Bible Study for Personal Spiritual Growth

By R. P. Wilder, Esq.

I THE PREPARATION FOR BIBLE STUDY

1. The Inner Preparation

(a) Let us come to the study determined to do hard thinking, for God places no premium no indolence. One has well said:—"The natural powers of man are to be mistrusted, as too often the willing instruments of the Evil One; but they are to be honored as the necessary instruments for the Spirit of God, whose operation is but a dream, if it be not through reason, conscience, judgment, and action." But let us in reading heed the warning of Sir Walter Scott, who wrote:

"Better had he'er been born,
Who reads to doubt or reads to scorn."

(b) Let us come to the reading determined to put into practice any truths that may be revealed to us, remembering the word of Jesus, "If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them."

(c) Let us come humbly remembering that it is God himself who speaks to us through the pages of this Book. It is said of the writers of the Bible: "Men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit."

(d) No one knows a book as well as the author, so let us come to the daily reading with the prayer: "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy Law."

In the last chapter of St. Luke's Gospel we read of Jesus that he opened to his disciples the Scriptures, but we also read "Then opened he their mind, that they might understand the Scriptures."

On one of my journeys, I tried to speak to a fellow passenger about the Bible. He replied: "I have read it, and there is nothing in it," and to prevent a discussion he added "you know how scientific my people are." He did represent a very scholarly people in Europe, but in my humble judgment this particular man was not scientific. According to St. Paul: "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; and he cannot know them, because they are spiritually examined" (margin). If a man said that microbes do not exist, and yet he has never looked through a microscope, would he be scientific? If one said the Milky Way in the heavens is not composed of stars, and yet he has never looked through a telescope, would he be scientific? "Things which eye saw not, and ear heard not, and which entered not into the heart of man, whatsoever things God prepared for them that love him. But unto us God revealed them through the Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," even as the telescope searches the starry heavens, and the microscope searches microbes. According to his own testimony, my fellow passenger had not the instrument necessary for a proper examination of the Bible.

If tonight we look up at the cluster of stars called the Pleiades, six or seven stars will be visible to the naked eye, but if we turn one of the larger telescopes unto the constellation, we shall see 2,000 where the naked eye revealed but six or seven. One reading the sacred Scriptures without the aid of the Holy Spirit can find the six or seven truths; but under the guidance and inspiration of the Holy Spirit, he could find 2,000 more.

2. The Outer Preparation

Is it not well that in approaching the Word of God we should have paper and pencil, so as to jot down at once the results of our study? One helpful thought secured each day will mean more than 300 helpful thoughts in the course of the year,—thoughts, which have helped us in our own character building, we can pass on to others with confidence. Frequently I am asked if I use devotional books during the Quiet Time. I have received much help from such books; but in my Quiet Time I like to have no book before me but the Bible and a Concordance. At one time Martin Luther wished that all the devotional books he had written might be destroyed, because he found the German people reading his books to the exclusion of the Book of books. We are certainly thankful that Luther's wish was not gratified, as some of his books are most helpful. But one has well said about the devotional books:—"They make us think that we are thinking when we are only locking step with the thought of someone else, and when they help us to think they make thinking too easy." Easy thinking results in flimsy thought."

It is said of the eagle that it will never eat prey that it has not itself caught. The vulture will. Let us imitate the eagle in our Bible Study. Surely truths secured first hand from God's Word mean more than those secured second or third hand from devotional books.

My reading of devotional books is left to some other hour of the day than my Quiet Time, but I may be wrong in this. Each one must decide for himself.

II THE TIME FOR BIBLE STUDY

In each place I visit, the people seem to be busier than any other place visited; but however much one has to do, time must be given to the securing of nourishment. Is it not true that to keep fit physically one needs food, air, and exercise—so for keeping fit spiritually one needs food, air, and exercise. By food, I mean getting nourishment from the Word of God. By air, I mean breathing in the breath of heaven through prayer, and by exercise I mean helping others in their fight for character.

At a conference of university students, one said: "I was present at a similar gathering a year ago, but it did not last." I asked what she meant by "it." Did she expect to live for a whole year on the inspiration received at a week-end conference? One might as well say: "I had a good meal a year ago and it did not last." "Day by day the manna fell." Our Lord taught the disciples to pray: "Give us this day our daily bread." Is it not true that many people are starved spiritually because they receive only once a week at some religious service the nourishment on which they expect to live.

What time of the day is best for Bible Study? Personally I prefer to take the first hour, or hour and a half, of each day. Is it not wiser to put on the spiritual armor before we go into the day's battle rather than after we have entered the fight and have been wounded? My own experience is that if I do not use the first hour of the day, work crowds in upon me to such an extent that later on in the day I cannot find an uninterrupted period of time to meet God in prayer and Bible study.

It was said of Chinese Gordon that he had a special period of each day when he was alone with God, and people were not allowed to interrupt him during that period. In one of his letters to his sister he wrote that he had just been "heaving Agag in pieces," by which he meant dealing firmly with self under the searchlight of God's Word.

JESUS TEACHING BY PARABLES— FOUR KINDS OF HEARERS

Daily Readings and Suggestions

Parable of the Sower. Mark 4:1-9

There are many sermons that seem to have little purpose other than the multiplication of high-sounding words. Jesus abhorred such practices, and particularly warned against them when he spoke of the prayers of the scribes and pharisees. How we ought to praise God daily for the clear and unmistakable revelation that is ours in Christ Jesus! He was forever drawing comparisons between spiritual things and everyday things, trying to help us understand; and when he left us to return to the Father, he sent another Comforter who continues to guide and instruct. Truly, grace came by Christ Jesus!

TUESDAY

Meaning of the Parable, Mark 4:10-20

This parable and its simple interpretation have been so long familiar to us that it seems hard to understand how the disciples could have failed to understand it. Probably every Christian worker who has passed through even one evangelistic meeting has observed all four classes of hearers. It is not necessary to spend much time today on the first three kinds, unless it is to inquire to what extent we have allowed the "cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things" to enter in and choke OUR lives into unfruitfulness." Let us be sure that we represent the fourth kind: "such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit."

WEDNESDAY

Hearing the Word. Nehemiah 8:1-8

These Jews, who had forgotten the LAW, might be likened unto the third kind of hearer in our Lord's parable, since they had allowed the burden of their captivity to choke out much of the word they had previously received. But now they heard the word and received it gladly again, and it bore much fruit in their lives: they had now become the fourth kind of hearer. And herein lies one of the greatest miracles: God can remove the stones from the stony soil; if we ask him he can pluck out the weeds and briars, and save from the forces of evil. However barren our natural state. ALL may become fruitful soil. Let us praise such a Husbandman!

THURSDAY

The Word Enlightening. Ps. 119:97-106

The wisdom of this world is as foolishness when compared with the wisdom that comes from above. An ignorant soul well grounded in the truths of the Scripture is wiser than the most educated who know not the things of the Spirit. It was in recognition of this that a great college professor stated that he would rather have the Bible without a college education than a college education without the Bible. God's Word is a lamp unto our feet in dark places where the light of this world can never shine. Around our Family Altar this day let us renew our covenant to observe his righteous ordinances.

FRIDAY

The Word Sanctifying. John 17:11-21

That the unrighteous might be made righteous, sanctified, Jesus had come; now that he was about to depart unto the Father, it was still his chief concern. If the unrighteous art ever to be sanctified it is through the God-breathed word which reveals unto us the things of God and the way of life. Let us give more time to reading and meditating upon the sanctifying word.

SATURDAY

Building on the Word. Matt. 7:24-29

This parable might be entitled, "Building according to God's Plan." God's word tells each one how he ought to build his life; some build according to the plan, while others disregard the plan and build according to their own ideas. Now our own ideas may seem right in our own eyes, but the end thereof are the ways of death. The greatest work of the believer is to try to show others God's plan for them, and to encourage them, by word and example, to build according thereto. God help us all to build aright.

SUNDAY

Cleansing Power of the Word. Ps. 119:9-16

How we may cleanse our ways, our life—that is still one of the greatest questions for us all. We may not cleanse our way by following out the precepts of any earthly teacher, nor even by attempting to keep the Law. The Living Word has showed us the way and given us the power—and the record thereof God has caused to be made for us. At the Last Supper Jesus said to all but Judas: "Ye are clean." Let us praise God for the cleansing Word!

"help in its work and worship"; but they were not really doing much in the way of fulfilling that promise.

There was need for something larger and better than social and literary work with young people. There had been a young people's prayer meeting, and it had been fairly well attended; but it was rather an elderly young people's meeting, and the younger folks took very little part in it except to help in the singing.

The Week of Prayer at the beginning of the year was always observed in that church with much earnestness and deep devotion. As a result of the Week of Prayer in January, 1881, supplemented by the Sunday school prayer meetings and the minister's class, many young hearts were given to the Lord Jesus Christ; and their eager impulse was, as is always the impulse of new converts, to do something for him whom they had begun to love. After the Week of Prayer was over special meetings were held, and a number of young converts were born into the family of God.

It was felt that this was a very serious and critical time. The new converts would receive impressions and form religious habits during the first few weeks after conversion which would never be lost. The first three months would set the stamp of consistent devotion to Christ or sluggish indifference to his claims on the whole of their subsequent Christian lives. The minister and his wife resolved that these new converts must not be left to haphazard growth and spasmodic service, but that the way must be made plain and easy for them to confess their Lord before men and to renew this confession often enough to make sure that they should not forget their obligations, and that something should be given to each of them to do for him whom, with trembling aspirations, they had thus begun to follow. Frequent public confession of Christ and constant appropriate work for him, they believed, were the two panaceas for spiritual idleness and inactivity.

That church had the usual means of grace, the ordinary appliances of a church, all vigorous and vital, but still there was not in that church, nor was there in any other church at that time, a sufficient opportunity for young people to express their devotion or to utilize their enthusiastic love and abounding aspirations in their service for Christ.

The great problem of that hour was how to change this state of affairs; how to provide some natural outlet for these young energies; how to furnish appropriate work which should be not merely playing at work, but actually accomplishing something for Christ and the church.

So, it was that a number of the young people were invited to come to the Williston parsonage in the evening of February 2, 1881. Mrs. Clark has told me how on that day she spent a busy morning in the kitchen preparing a repast for the young people in the evening and wondering how much such a group could eat. The minister was in his study, writing his sermon as usual, but earnestly thinking about his young people and how he could help them to a more earnest and more useful Christian life. While his wife was busy in the kitchen, he made plans in the study.

Mrs. Clark says that she was just putting her fourth batch of cakes into the oven when she heard footsteps on the stairs, and the minister appeared with a paper in his

The Story of Christian Endeavor

By Rev. Knight Chaplin

When the first Christian Endeavor Society was formed, there were very few distinctly religious societies for young people. Now, as we look about there is scarcely a Protestant church in the five continents without a society for its young people. A vast number of them all over the world are Christian Endeavor Societies. Every year there are held not fewer than four millions of young people's meetings, adopting the methods, principles and topics of the C. E. society.

How did all this come to pass? "Tall oaks from little acorns grow." It is hard to say when the "acorn" that eventually became the Christian Endeavor Society was first planted. The revered founder of the society, Dr. Francis E. Clark himself, frequently declared that it must not be supposed there were no Endeavorers before the first Endeavor society was formed. There is evidence that a multitude of Christian people all over the world were imbued with the spirit of this idea long before it was formulated. Thousands of ministers were eagerly desiring some method, better than they had known before, of reaching and training their young people for Christ's service. "Just as the ore lies in the mountains for hundreds of centuries before it is discovered, so the ore of consecration and pledged service has lain in the lives of young people in all the Christian ages. It was only waiting for the Christian Endeavor society to unearth it and mould it into many beautiful forms for the Lord's use.

On October 9, 1876, Francis E. Clark, was ordained and installed as pastor of Williston church at Portland in the state of Maine. The church thrived amazingly and at the end of 1877 had so increased in membership that it became necessary to erect a new church building in the western part of the city. Two or three years later records in the young minister's diary tell of various kinds of work with the young people in social, musical and literary organizations, all of which the young people seemed to enjoy. They were interested and entertained, but they were not being led into active work in and for the church. The minister's class had helped to lead many of the young people into the Christian life, and a number of them had joined the church, promising to hand, which he asked her to read and tell him what she thought of it. Hastily closing the oven door, she opened the paper and read as follows:

CONSTITUTION

NAME. This society shall be called the Williston Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor.

OBJECT. Its object shall be to promote an earnest Christian life among its members, to increase their mutual acquaintance, and to make them more useful in the service of God.

MEMBERSHIP. The members of this society shall consist of all young people who sincerely desire to accomplish the results above specified. They shall become members upon being elected by the society and by signing their names in this book.

By the kindness of Mrs. Clark I am fortunately able to report to you the substance of the conversation that ensued in the parsonage kitchen that February morning in 1881.

"That is very good," said the minister's wife. "I like the name and the object of the society. I believe it is just what you need; we must try it." Then she read on, suppressing a sigh as she came to these words: "It is expected that all members of the society will be present at every meeting unless detained by some absolute necessity, and that each one will take some part however slight in every meeting."

By this time her mind was so perturbed that she had no thought for her cakes merrily burning in the oven.

"Do you expect the young people to promise all that?" she asked.

"Yes," said the minister, "it is not too much; it is only what a Christian should be willing to do whether promising it or not."

"But how can they promise it?" said his wife. "How many of the older members of the Church are doing as much as that?"

"Not as many as I could wish," he replied; "it would be a wonderful thing for the church if they would do it."

"And do you really mean that you would expect us all to speak in meetings, and speak every time?"

"Yes," replied the minister, "that is just what I am hoping they will all be willing to promise."

"Why, they will never promise that," said the minister's wife. "I could not promise that myself. Why, I have never taken part except in our own ladies' prayer meeting, and I find that very hard. I just dread it every time. I simply couldn't do it. I have never heard women talk in any such meeting. It isn't done. I think Paul was right when he said, 'Let the women keep silence in the churches.' I don't believe the young people will promise that. If their minister's wife cannot do it, how can you expect it of them? The rest I will promise, but this I can never do. I'm sorry, but I just can't. You had better leave that out." And she turned away in a spirit of finality, considering the discussion ended.

Now that minister was not only a very good man, but a very wise one; and without further discussion he laid the paper on the table, saying, "Well, you can think it over," and returned to his study, helping himself to cakes as he went, leaving his wife to her cooking and her conscience.

The minister's wife stood in the middle of the kitchen, fighting a losing battle with her conscience, leaving Christian Endeavor on the table and the cakes in the oven. The battle ended as both the minister and his wife knew it would. Conscience conquered, and the cakes burned.

It was a very sober minister's wife who took those coal-black cakes from the oven, and mixed some more, and began again, thinking all the time of the promise she would make, and praying for help to keep it.

That evening a happy crowd of young people came ploughing their way through the snow, laughing and chatting and wondering what new plan their minister had to propose. They little thought how serious a proposition it would be, and what it would mean for their after-lives and for the lives of millions of young people the world around.

After a short talk the minister presented his plan for the new organization, to be called a Christian Endeavor society. The young people listened quietly while he read the proposed constitution, and as he closed there was a dead silence. They looked at each other, and they looked into their own hearts and I suppose they all felt as their pastor's wife had felt. They could not do it. What! go to meeting every week whether they felt like it or not! And promise to speak at every meeting! They had never done such a thing. They couldn't! Nothing of the sort had been heard of in that church, or to their knowledge in any church before.

For awhile it seemed as though the society would die still-born, and be simply a creature of the pastor's imagination. But God had ordered it otherwise. In that company were two who were especially influential and helpful in launching the little craft. These were Mr. W. H. Pennell, leader of the young men's Bible class, and the minister's wife. To a few of the young fellows sitting near to him Mr. Pennell said, "I'll sign it if you will." After a few moments they said, "We will if you will." Then (as does sometimes happen in America) the young women followed the young men. When the covenant came back to the minister's hands the second time that night, there were not fewer than fifty-seven names attached to it. And so the Christian Endeavor society was born, born for that one church, and without the slightest idea that it would ever be heard about beyond the bounds of that one church. But so wonderfully was the good hand of God upon it that in a very little while there were societies literally belting the globe in fellowship and service for Christ and the Church.

Any story of Christian Endeavor that did not set forth its ideals and aims would be incomplete. Let me summarize them very briefly. They are:

1. Personal devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ and the confession of his name.
2. Covenant relation with Christ, embodied in a pledge.
3. Training in religious service through the work of the committees. Definite standards of service, and definite commitment to them.
4. Loyalty to the local church and denomination.
5. Interdenominational fellowship.
6. Cultivation of the devotional life through prayer and Bible study.
7. Generous giving to Christian work.
8. Christian citizenship and participation in social service to make our communities better places to live in.
9. The promotion of peace and good will among the nations of the earth.

Missionaries Arrive on the Field

This delayed we foresaw a late arrival at Bozoum, but more trouble awaited us. We were soon flagged with flaming torches and told there was a dangerous bridge ahead. For ten bridges we dismounted and walked across, while the chauffeur drove cautiously with his lightened load. Then came the really dangerous one—over which however, the Director advised us to make the trial. It was a dangerous experiment to cross before repairs, but an interminable wait would have been necessary to accomplish them. We were indeed full of praise to be at last safely across. Very fortunately our heaviest load had preceded us by some hours, and had crossed before the bridge broke. It was 9 o'clock P. M. when finally we reached Bozoum. Then came the rearrangement of the trucks and by 10 we were off for Bassai. We had difficulty in getting quickly across this last barge, and it was one A. M. before we reached Bassai. At the sound of the auto, the missionaries were awakened. Mrs. Kennedy was the first to rush out to embrace us, with Miss Byron a close second. The Fosters, who are now at Bassai, followed quickly. The Jobsons were last but not least in the Bassai force to welcome us. Mrs. Kennedy served supper and at 2 A. M. we were in bed. Some, however did not close their eyes that night. Miss Myers was now at her destination. Miss Crawford remained at Bassai until the following Monday when Mr. Jobson took her to Bellevue, Miss Myers accompanying them for the trip and the pleasure of greeting the Bellevue missionaries.

It was necessary for me to continue my trip the next day, weary as I was. Shortly after 9 o'clock I was off, part of the S. E. A. convoy awaiting me at Bozoum. We arrived at Yaloke at 4:40 P. M.—to receive one of those ovations which only a returned missionary can know. It was Thanksgiving Day—and dinner was served at the Hathaway home shortly after my arrival.

Both houses are now reconstructed after the fire. Miss Emmert and Miss Tyson had moved in about the 1st of November and had my room ready for me. Except for the ceilings, our house is now completely finished. On Saturday the Hathaways moved in with us, as their composition roof, which while non-inflammable was not waterproof. is being taken off and replaced with tile. Tile, we believe, has solved Yaloke's roofing problems. Whether or not a suitable clay will be obtainable at the other stations we do not know.

Some of the other events on the Yaloke news sheet since my arrival are:

- The visit of the Boali administrator.
- The visit of a traveling veterinarian.
- The re-roofing of the Yaloke schoolhouse with tile, as well as of the Yaloke Storehouse.

The killing of a leopard, which was caught in one of the mission traps and shot by Mr. Hathaway.

Yesterday we had a love feast. The thing that impressed me most, since newly returned, was the substitution of the native for the Oriental kiss. (The native blows in one's ear.) Native foods are served for the feast. Cassava root is the bread. Pineapple juice is the wine in season!

I spent the Friday and Saturday after Thanksgiving in unpacking and settling.

Monday I commenced routine hospital work, although we had a fracture case Sunday, which required our presence at the hospital.

I brought back with me from the Camerouns one of our native nurses, Abada Andre. His passage with the S. E. A. was made possible by a gift from a passenger on the boat. Who can doubt but that God who foresaw this need and provided it will continue to provide the funds necessary for his support? He and David Remy, government nurses from the same tribe, are helping to put the Yaloke hospital on a basis of real service for the Lord. We will gladly spare one of them on demand for either of the other hospitals.

The early hours, from 7 to 8:30, are spent in taking records. At 8:30 the service begins, Elie, our Banou nurse in training, being our native preacher. Miss Tyson and I also preach. Immediately after the service the treatments begin simultaneously in all departments of the work. Abada Andre cares for the yaws cases, Tinguende washes and Elie dresses the numerous ulcers. David Remy works in what might be called the "Eye and Ear" department. Meanwhile I am prescribing internal remedies, and Miss Tyson is here, there and everywhere, superintending and advising the native nurses. We have made much progress in diagnosis since having our boys to devote their extra time to microscopic work. They are surprisingly expert. Saturday morning I asked Andre to make a blood-test and had scarcely turned to another task, when he said "Madame Doctor, come and see the filaria." There they were—in great numbers!

One of the very sad things which has occurred is the departure of our native Christian Jean Mbo because his wife is a leper.

The sad part of it is that they are tempted to feel that the medicine of the village sorcerer has more power than our own. We trust God will overrule to his glory—any failure on our part and will mercifully provide adequate facilities for treating and curing our lepers.

Miss Emmert and I have both had birthdays since my arrival. We celebrated on the evening of December 3rd. It seemed hard to realize in the old environment and with the same missionary personnel in part that I had been away on furlough. We are now five each at Bellevue and Yaloke, and seven at Bassai. We thank God for health and life spared in the last thirteen months.

I trust soon to be able to visit Bellevue station and hospital and to make a visit of greater length at Bassai.

One of the great sorrows in my return has been the death of my personal boy, Paul Tigara. I am writing more at length concerning him for the "Missionary." He died while I was in England. There have been many deaths during my absence, three of which have touched me very deeply in a personal way. Our dear Brother Kennedy who was to me as a son, my chauffeur Mangou, and now my boy Tigara.

Mr. Sheldon is bringing my little car down about the middle of the month, and

Mr. Hathaway plans to complete the training of Joseph Nguede so that he may act as my chauffeur.

I hope to be out much after these events transpire, out much for the sake of the people and the work and for my own health—as the time which I pass in the car is almost invariably free from pain.

The long hours without food and sleep recounted on the trip were naturally exceptional, but happily they need not be repeated in one's own caravan.

Please pray that the needs of the medical work, of the school work, of the evangelistic work per se or connected with both, as well as of the building work on all our stations, may continue to be supplied.

Very faithfully yours,
F. N. GRIBBLE.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

BERLIN BRETHREN, PENNSYLVANIA

Our last report was prior to our evangelistic campaign in October. Hence we believe it well to begin with that meeting. This was one of the best meetings the pastor has ever had in cooperation with the church. There was a mind not only to attend but a mind to work as well. The people yielded to the suggestions for Bible readings, quotations and prayer. Each auxiliary had some part during the meeting and these features were means of special interest. Although there was no entertainment, no big excitement or stir, there was manifest a real spiritual interest in the prosperity of Christ's people and church. The results as summed up on the last Sunday, October 30 were twenty-one baptized and received into the church and one hundred and eighty-four around the communion tables in the evening.

There is a fine spirit of cooperation among the church people of Berlin. This is a conservative community and the fruits thereof tell for happiness and I might say as well for prosperity among the churches. There are two services each year in which the churches cooperate; the Thanksgiving service and the week of prayer services. The latter was held the first week of January of course, and was well attended each night. Renewed interest was manifest in all our churches as a result.

We believe special mention of our choir is particularly fitting. We have an excellent organist in the person of Mrs. George Dively. And now for the past six months the choir by the good judgment of our music committee has chosen as director Miss Thelma Saylor, a graduate of Hood College the last year. The choir rendered a most excellent cantata and pageant at Christmas time. We appreciate their splendid cooperation.

The Sunday school interest and attendance is keeping up well under the able leadership of our Superintendent, Prof. A. B. Cober. New leaders are continually being discovered and developed. A training class will be started soon. A social of importance not only to our church but to the community, one held annually and of note will be held again this February. Last year the social room was crowded to capacity.

At the annual business meeting held at New Years, this year on the Saturday prior, the treasurer reported all bills paid. And that means our people sacrificed. Special effort on the part of John Glessner and others who assisted in visiting the membership of the church, as well as the fine spirit in which they were received and the response on the part of the members made this fine report possible. The church here has an excellent new church edifice, dedicated in 1926 on which there remains an indebtedness of $11,000.00. The Sunday school cares for the major portion of this remaining debt. Yet the Sunday school is made up of the church members in the main and the giving is largely from the same source. These are difficult times. Yet our people are not complaining. And we praise the good Lord for that. We praise our people too.

Somerset county is noted for its many aged people. Indeed our church has its share of these fine hearted and physically well persons who may be spoken of as octogenarians. Yet the time comes for all of us when we must lay down our earthly tent and await that new occupancy which our Lord has gone to prepare for us. Since last reporting we have laid to rest from our number: Mrs. Sarah Crissinger, October 26, aged 80; Mrs. Laura Coleman, October 30, aged 74; Jacob G. Kimmel, brother of our deceased elder J. L. Kimmel, December 18, aged 82; William H. Miller, December 22, aged 82; and Mrs. Louisa Meyers, December 25, aged 89 years, 9 months and 23 days. Doubtless the time is not far distant when the Lord himself shall come and the reunion of the faithful shall be perfected.

THE WORK IN DELAWARE

Dear Evangelist: I am just returning from our Mission in Delaware. The distance being so far away I stayed down over three Sundays. We had very good services at Mt. Olivet church Sunday afternoon and night each Sunday. Last night we had one of the best meetings we have had for a long time. The largest crowd and best interest.

We drove 125 miles after the service to Camden, New Jersey, and tonight will go home for over two Sundays. We hope to have preaching one, if not both Sundays I am away. We have had several good local preachers in the community who are very willing to help out.

We also had cottage prayer meetings at Ocean View, twenty miles from Mt. Olivet, two Friday nights. These were the largest and most spiritual we have had for years. They will continue them while I am away.

We are also having one cottage meeting a week near Mt. Olivet preparatory to our evangelistic service which we hope to begin some time after the middle of February.

Our Christian Endeavor society and Sunday school are doing good work although increasing but little in attendance. None of the churches have a young people's society, hence ours is attracting much attention in the community. Some of the best of the other churches are saying they wished that their church would drill their young people to pray and testify and sing like ours. We hope that ours may be the means of others training their young.

We had our annual church meeting the 14th of January. They reelected the Sunday school and C. E. officers for another year. Also unanimously accepted the same pastor. We have accepted the Envelope System of finances and are trying to work a small budget system. We have as good and willing a people as I have ever preached for but the hardest pressed financially I have ever seen. The only slight in some that some of these farmers had has been entirely cut off. Eggs have fallen in price 14 cents in two weeks—selling at a cent apiece. I told them I would share the hardships with them—they said they would do the best they can.

We have a membership of 70 including the four that were taken in this last trip. They are scattered very much but we count at least fifty active members. As the membership has been increasing wife and I have transferred our membership from the Third Brethren church to Mt. Olivet.

We also accepted two very faithful members who once belonged to the Whole Gospel Mission Brethren church. These will help the church a little financially and much spiritually.

Please pray for this needy field.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA

The Philadelphia church is still on the map even though she hasn't reported through the columns of the Evangelist, for some time.

We have entered the New Year with enthusiasm and a bright outlook and January has been a time of business meetings, annual reports, election of officers, appointment of standing committees and reorganization. We had on Tuesday evening, January the tenth, the best annual business meeting we have ever known, that is, best in attendance and in spirit and the reports from all of our auxiliaries show splendid achievements during the year of Nineteen hundred and thirty-two.

On Thursday evening, January twelfth, our annual Sunday School Board meeting was held and we are glad to report the same intense interest and good spirit at this meeting as at the previous one. Our Sunday school has had an unusual record of good attendance during the past year in spite of the many handicaps.

On Sunday morning, January the twenty-second, we had an installation service, for all newly elected officers of the church and Sunday school. We are blessed with a fine corps of workers in Philadelphia, clean cut men and faithful women, in whom we can place the leadership of our church with confidence. We would not forget in this capacity the main leader, our good pastor, who faithfully feeds the flock with the best of spiritual food. Our own people often say there should be a thousand people to hear some of his forceful sermons, instead of a few hundred. We are proud of him for he is president of the "Fundamentalist Association" of our city and teaches regularly at the Pennsylvania Bible Institute and along with these two he is often invited to speak over the radio where many other folks have the privilege of hearing his messages. We are glad he stands true to the faith and in these different works he advertises the Brethren church and we would not forget to pray for him daily.

All of our organizations do good work continually, both in and out of our local body. The Young People's Society of the Christian Endeavor has had charge of a meeting at one of the rescue missions each month for a number of years and has been used of God to lead souls from the depths of sin to real Christian experience and have thus helped to develop their own lives. We think of Proverbs 11:25, "He that watereth shall be watered also himself."

Our fine Sunday school superintendent has been a helper in another mission of our city and each month he invites a number of our people to go with him to hold a service at this mission. The Women's Missionary Society recently visited this mission with Brother Seitz and members took active part in the service with one of them delivering the message for the evening.

Our "King's Daughters", a society of girls, visit the "Florence Crittenden Home" every other month and hold spiritual services and often take small gifts for the inmates and endeavor to bring some encouragement and better living for these unfortunate girls.

Offering—February 26th

Our choir is always ready for each church service and ready to lend assistance at the various missions, singing unto the Lord faithfully and well.

We must not forget our young men who are ushers for us and who render a real service to the church and congregation in a most pleasing manner and are ready to be called on at any time.

We could go on and on mentioning other who help with the great work and want to thank God for past blessings and usefulness and pray very earnestly, that as we enter another year, he may continue to bless us and use us for "HIS" glory and the saving of many souls.

COLUMBUS COOPERATIVE CHURCH

Just a few lines concerning the work of the Cooperative Brethren church in Columbus, Ohio.

We all realize that we are living in unusual and trying times for Church work. The economic situation has, of course, been felt by our church people here like all church people everywhere. A large number of the fathers of our Sunday school children are among the unemployed and depend upon the few days work per month the city gives them for their living. Also some have moved away. But our attendance has been keeping up very good. Last Sunday there were 74 at Sunday school and church (our morning service is a combined service). The average attendance will be around 60. Mrs. Murry and I have been doing quite a bit of visiting each week. We have gotten into several new homes. We are urging others to visit their neighbors and friends and bring them to church also. Some good has thus been accomplished.

The finances of the church are all that could be expected or hoped for. The offerings are not quite as large as the last several years but that is true everywhere, I suppose. We have all our running expenses paid up to date and have given $40.00 to the Ohio Mission Board of the Brethren Church and $40.00 to the Southern Ohio Mission Board of the Church of the Brethren. We hope to be able to give more soon.

During the Christmas season we had a White Gift Service at the church and were able to bring a little Christmas cheer into 7 homes by gifts of food or clothing. I secured from Crestview school, where I teach, 4 bushel baskets heaping full of provisions for the poor. These we distributed to some of our most needy homes. Also an offering was lifted at our White Gift Service in order to buy coal for several families. All these gifts were deeply appreciated and have perhaps made a warmer spot in their hearts for the Church and the Christ whom it serves.

We are planning on holding a Communion service around Easter, most likely on the Sunday evening of April 9. This will not be a very largely attended service, for there are not many active members of either church here. But we need a Communion service although we are but few in numbers.

Our Sunday school boys and girls are already looking forward to and asking about a Vacation Bible School this summer. I think, by some hard work, we will be able to finance and conduct our fourth Vacation

Bible School here next summer, sometime in July.

We are hoping and praying that it will be possible for the Mission Boards to arrange for us an evangelistic meeting early next fall. We certainly need a revival meeting some time this year. We will do our best to make such a meeting worth while.

Continue to remember the work here in Columbus in your prayers.

In his Service,
D. R. MURRAY.

ELKHART, INDIANA

We have just closed one of the most successful revivals we have ever experienced—successful because so many of the essentials were present—unity of purpose, loyalty, prayer and effort, then added to all this, the message brought by our pastor, Brother Stuckman, was the important thing of each service. This message was presented in its gospel simplicity and so forcibly that no one could mistake its teaching or fail to understand that salvation is a personal matter—accept or reject.

There was a tenseness and quietness in the hour of service, and in this quiet hour of waiting, boys and girls, young men and women, fathers and mothers confessed their Savior. An unusual occurrence, a mother and her daughter of about ten years came hand in hand. In this quiet hour of prayer the Spirit worked among our people until fifty-two followed his leading—forty-three by confession, eight by relation and one by letter. Twenty-five were baptized ere the meetings closed.

These meetings have been avenues of strength to the church. We do thank him for the wonderful victories—through him victories are won. Victories won mean work, greater service to hold what has been won for him. MRS. EDNA NICHOLAS.

PASSING OF A PIONEER

An Appreciation

On the first of December last there passed away at Strasburg, Virginia, the first member of the Brethren Church of the South-eastern district. Madison Monroe Funkhouser was the first Progressive Brethren in this district and a man who knew his Lord and enjoyed the church and its services. Had he lived until the thirtieth of December he would have been eighty years old. He made his stand for the Lord in the year 1884 under the preaching of the late S. H. Bashore, who held a meeting of revival at nearby Toms Brook. At the time elder Bashore was still a member of the Church of the Brethren. At the call for converts, Brother Funkhouser and his good wife, who survives him, made the good stand. They were followed by others, among whom were Brother George A. Copp and Sister G. Harry Haun of the Maurertown congregation. The year following this meeting, under the direction of Elder H. B. Shaver, who in the meantime had also cast his lot with the Progressives as they then were called, the First Brethren church of this district was organized and Brother Funkhouser was among the charter members, and always accepted as the first member of the Brethren Church in the South-eastern district.

Brother Funkhouser had retired from the farming business for some years prior to his departure, and quietly with his beloved wife he lived in Strasburg, but attended the services of the church at Maurertown as regularly as his health would permit. An affliction, the loss of an eye, made it rather difficult for him to drive a car at night but he did drive by day until his health and strength would no longer permit when he hired a driver to bring him to the church which he loved so well and which he served as trustee for more than forty years and of which he was a deacon for more than thirty-five years. The immense throng at the services in his honor held in the church at Maurertown on Sunday, December fifth, was an eloquent testimonial of the place that Brother Funkhouser had in the hearts, esteem and affections of his townsmen and neighbors as well as his brethren in the church. I loved Brother Funkhouser and I am sure he knew it. I feel also that the love was mutual and feel that it will be a grand thing to be able to renew the associations that we had established here, but which for the time being are sundered, when we meet again in the glorious Presence.

We quietly laid the remains of the brother to rest in beautiful Riverview cemetery at Strasburg, there to await the day of days when the Lord shall call forth those who have fallen asleep in him. Besides the wife there are three daughters and one son and several grandchildren and other more distant relatives to mourn the passing of this man of affairs, for he was interested in the welfare of his community, and had a part in its financial affairs, etc. Anent the latter, the financial matters, it is noteworthy that the departed was a stockholder and trustee of the First National Bank of Strasburg of which Elder George A. Copp, a convert at the same meeting with Brother Funkhouser, is the President. All these years they had worked and served together. In a word, Brother Funkhouser was one of the solid, earnest, religious type of men that made the passing generation look up to them. Would that God would raise up others to take their places as they are being called hence. We believe that he is doing so and will continue the good work. I might add that the church has already filled the vacant place on the board of trustees by electing the son of Brother Funkhouser, Frank, to fill the place made vacant by the death of the father. We unite in extending our sympathies and continued prayers to and on behalf of Sister Funkhouser and the family as a whole. Services in honor of the brother were conducted by his pastor, the undersigned.

what one feels most grateful for as one looks back on student days, is not so much the information acquired, as the methods and habits of study acquired. One man's methods may not be of any help to another, but the recounting of these methods may be suggestive. In my own personal Bible study, I have followed six methods:

1. The Paragraph Method: by which is meant going through a Gospel or an Epistle one paragraph each day with three things in mind; (a) What is the main thought of the passage? (b) What is the main teaching, that is, what lessons can one draw to help in one's personal life and in service for others? (c) What verse should be selected as the theme for special meditation during the day?

If those following this plan belong to Bible Study Groups, they can take as the subjects for their group study the results of their individual study during the previous week. Thus, no special preparation will be required for the members of the group other than faithfulness in daily study.

The readings begin with Mark's Gospel, which is the shortest, and is regarded by most Bible students as the oldest Gospel. Since Peter and Mark labored together Peter's letters come after Mark's Gospel. For a similar reason Paul's epistles follow Luke's Gospel and the Acts, since Paul and Luke were companions in travel. Following John's Gospel come his epistles and the Revelation. Matthew's Gospel, which was written primarily for the Jews, is preceded by the epistle to the Hebrews, the epistle of James, and the epistle of Jude.

2. The Book Method. The first Book I took up was the Epistle of Philemon because it is so short. I wanted to begin by trying out my method on one of the smaller books. First I studied it intellectually, e. g., who wrote it, when, whence, why and to whom? Then I studied the argument and divisions of the book and any special matters of style, such as the play on words

THE BRETHREN'S HOME EMERGENCY CORNER

WHAT WOULD THEY DO?

The above question may not mean much to the average member of the Brethren Church whose eyes may wander to this corner of the Evangelist. However, it means a lot to eight inmates who are now in the Brethren's Home at Flora if the Church breaks faith with them. The Home has accepted their money and the obligation of their keeping. Since coming some have lost every blood relative that they possessed. Perhaps the brotherhood may be unaware of the fact that the widow of Elder P. J. Brown is an inmate of the Home. She has no other. Day after day, almost a helpless invalid, seventy-eight years of age, she sits in her room, looking out her windows upon scenes that change but little. She calmly and patiently waits the final Home Call. In a room not far away is a little woman, 79 years of age, who had spent nearly fourteen months in bed because of a broken hip. "Tiny" she is called and she is tiny, she is weighing perhaps not much over fifty pounds. She is a little bundle of cheerfulness and her real name is Jestina Brenner. Like the last leaf upon the tree, there are none through whose veins runs blood of her blood. She has no other earthly home. The morning sun peeps through her one window which furnishes her only view of the out of doors.

Times may be difficult, and unexpected things have come to pass, but our obligation is there. Mistakes no doubt have been made, but there have been things worth while accomplished. The Brethren Church has in the Brethren's Home that which should some day not far off be all that it was meant to be.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Flora, Indiana.
Pastor Flora Brethren Church.

(e. g. verse 11); also the courtesy, skill and confidence shown in the book.

Secondly I studied it devotionally to try and get from this wonderful story something that would be a help to me spiritually. Onesimus was a slave who had evidently robbed his master and fled to hide in the slave quarter of Rome. There he met Paul and through the preaching of the Gospel his life was changed, and Paul sends him back to his master no longer as a slave but as a brother in the Lord, writing: "If he hath wronged thee at all, or oweth thee ought, put that to my account." "Receive him as myself"; and so the sinner alienated from God meets Christ and is changed and is reconciled to God by him who says, "Put that to my account," "Receive him as myself." Here we have suggested redemption and intercession. The key word is in verse 17. The subjects which can be used for devotional study are peace (V. 3); love (3, 25); praise (4); prayer (4, 22); grace (5, 9); faith (5); joy (7, 20); obedience (21).

Thirdly I studied it for application to others. At the time when I was working on this book I was in one of the British universities and felt keenly the way in which certain of the undergraduates acted towards people of the servant class, and so I talked to the undergraduates from this Epistle on how St. Paul, who was a University man, treated a runaway slave, calling him "my very heart."

Next I took up the Epistle to the Hebrews, which was a much bigger task.

3. The Study of Characters in the Bible. Three of us made a careful study of Joseph in the Bible and found it most profitable. Again I spent several weeks reading all I could find in both Old and New Testaments on David and have written down the results of the study in my study Bible, so that if I were to meet David on the street I think I would recognize him. Of course the study of the character of Jesus will yield more than any other.

4. Topical Study. At one time in India when the climate was very trying and the work exceptionally difficult, one was tempted to worry. Accordingly I went through every reference in the Old and New Testaments on anxiety and care and have kept the results of that study, so that when temptation to be anxious comes I have the antidote in God's Word. Possibly the topic which has helped me most has been the topic of the Holy Spirit; some 86 references in the Old Testament and over 200 in the New Testament.

A CHRISTIAN'S INFLUENCE

It is only by coming into touch and contact with the great and real busy life of the world that the Christian life can exert to the utmost of influence in the world. The Christian life must stand upon the earth in the midst of earthly affairs, interests, duties, ambitions, pleasures, and yet must somehow find a pathway clear and open to things above the earth, to joys that do not perish, to hopes that do not die, to faiths that do not fail, to riches that do not rust, to great and eternal realities beyond the world.—Bishop Greer.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WANTED—A NAME

A name for our new Brethren Young People's Training School and Camp for the East. You see, it has taken eleven words for me to name this new project. We need a name that will cause everybody to think of our new project which I have named in my first sentence. But this name must be short, meaningful, attractive and characteristic of our purpose.

To secure this name we are inviting all the Brethren young people of the Pennsylvania and Southeastern Districts, of high school age and older, to enter our contest for suggestions. Each person may suggest any amount of names. Write your suggestions on a sheet of paper clearly, together with your own name and address and the church of which you are a member, and mail to N. V. Leatherman, Berlin, Pennsylvania, at once.

As an award for the one who suggests the name that shall be chosen by the committee, all meals will be paid for during our camp and training school this June.

THE BRETHREN ANNUAL

Last August the General Conference at Winona Lake VOTED to have one thousand copies of the minutes of the Conference and the Brethren Annual printed and distributed among the churches according to their membership, each church to assume the cost of the number sent to it for distribution, and thus lighten the burden of the Conference.

Later a committee was appointed to collect the various addresses delivered at the Conference and prepare them for publication in connection with the minutes. This committee made a careful survey of the situation and decided that such an undertaking would not be practical at this time.

This left only the Minutes and Annual to be published, which was done as soon as the material for the same could be secured from the various conference districts.

The work has been completed and the Minutes are now being mailed to the pastor, or some member of every church in the brotherhood, with an effort being made not to miss a single one; yet such might be the case that a few would be missed. We will gladly supply any that have been missed, if we are notified of the omission.

The cost to each congregation is approximately ONE cent per member, and we trust a proper settlement will be made by all, as the Publishing House is greatly in need of all funds owing it. The price of the Minutes and Annual is twenty-five cents per copy.

What church will be the first one to make a remittance?

The grave church was filled with sympathizing neighbors and friends of her dear one. She was a life-long member of the church and one of the most faithful and exemplary Christians of this fine church and neighborhood. May her fine example be emulated by all her friends.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Winning the World to Christ

By John R. Sampey

President Southern Baptist Theological Seminary

THE life of every Christian should be keyed to the winning of the world to faith in our Lord Jesus. The prayer of every believer should constantly be, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven." We need to remind ourselves of the greatness of the task in which we are called to participate. The smallest details of our daily life will be invested with rich meaning if we hold ourselves to the sublime task of persuading all men to accept Jesus as Saviour and Lord. The Great Commission challenges the humblest believer to do his best to win every human being to living faith in the Son of God.

The local church should key all its work to the marching orders of the Lord Jesus. All expenditures of money should be made in the light of the Great Commission. Sanctified common sense should be invoked to pass on all plans involving the investment of money and effort. How can the congregation of baptized believers best promote the enterprise of winning the whole world to faith in our Saviour? We should offer our lives to any form of activity that will give the gospel to the perishing millions of our fellow men. Our goal should always be clearly seen and we should press toward it at top speed.

Cooperative work on the part of churches and individual believers should keep in the foreground the aim of all Christian effort. We must bear witness of the saving grace of our Christ in all lands until every hamlet on earth knows the story of God's love in Christ.

Christian education and Christian philanthropy must also be keyed to the central task of making Jesus King of Kings and Lord of Lords.—The Christian Index.

WHAT Makes it Go?

You have all read the story of the "town fool" who shut himself in the barn and worked on a queer contraption with all sorts of wheels, squirts, gadgets, springs, pulleys and what not. It was to be, when finished, a machine that would run without power; in other words "perpetual motion." The people of the town tapped their foreheads and smiled when they spoke of the "inventor" and his project.

Many of the present day philosopher-scientists are trying to do the same thing. They try to make a model or picture of a universe which will run without anything to make it go. A wiser man, James Clark Maxwell, once said that "There never was a theory of the Universe that did not need a God to make it go."

The philosophy of the atheistic scientist is at bottom identical with that of the "town fool." The distance between merely worldly wisdom and foolishness is short. "Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools," Paul says. With God ruled out, the step is easy.

THE Proper Form of Baptism

Dr. Conant, a noted Biblical scholar, in discussing the meaning of the Greek word translated "BAPTIZE", cites examples of its use "drawn from writers in almost every department of literature and science; from poets, rhetoricians, philosophers, critics, historians, geographers; from writers on husbandry, on medicine, on natural history, on grammar, on theology; from almost every style of form and composition, romances, epistles, orations, fables, odes, epigrams, sermons, narratives; from writers of various nations and religions, Pagan, Jew, and Christian, belonging to many countries and through a long succession of ages. In all, the word has retained its ground-meaning without change. From the earliest age of Greek literature down to its close, a period of nearly two thousand years, not an example has been found in which the word has any other meaning. There is no instance in which it signifies to make a partial application of water by affusion or sprinkling, or to cleanse, to purify apart from the literal act of immersion as the means of cleansing or purifying." (Quoted from Strong's Theology, page 953).

The Brethren position that BAPTISM is IMMERSION is based upon facts which cannot be refuted. The real controversy, you will discover, between immersionists and the sprinklers is not over the question of whether the New Testament teaches immersion, but whether some other form may not do just as well. To this there is but one reply, "God hath spoken. Whatsoever he saith, do it."

CAN Europe Keep the Peace?

Under the above title, Dr. Frank H. Simonds, famous news correspondent and student of European conditions, has recently produced a remarkable book. His survey of the situation is realistic and objective. Some of his conclusions are as follows:

"Universally convinced that a new conflict would insure disaster without limit, post-war mankind has easily adopted the conviction that such a war is at once impossible and unthinkable. But those who lived in the years between 1905 and 1914, when the last war was approaching with steady and unmistakable steps, must recall that the same conviction, and the same words, were equally common. Today, the purposes and policies which made the last war inescapable survive unmodified..."

"In 1914 war came, not because any people desired it, but because the policies which all peoples were pursuing and the objectives which they were seeking, could be realized only through victorious conflict. In 1932 the situation is unchanged."

"Absence of armed conflict upon the European Continent, which in America is described as peace, results simply from the fact that peoples, who find the existing order intolerable, are by reason of economic exhaustion and financial weakness incapable of resorting to war..."

"The truce of exhaustion may continue, but it is nevertheless clear that the prostration which today prohibits deliberate war may tomorrow provoke a conflict of despair."

Dr. Simonds' analysis of the situation may seem gloomy, but the Christian will remember the words of the prophet Isaiah, "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."

THE Danger of Peace Conferences

Dr. Simonds, himself a firm believer in the value of international conferences under proper conditions, points out in a striking chapter how that such conferences may actually bring evil results. The statesmen who meet are inevitably bound by the policies of the nations which they represent. And if the policies of these nations are irreconcilable, the conference is doomed to failure in advance. Agreement is impossible as long as the statesmen cling to their instructions. On the other hand, if these men abandon the policies of their respective nations, any agreements made are certain to be repudiated. The failure of conferences, which have raised the hopes of men, only plunges them deeper in the pit of despair and resentment. Each nation blames the other for the failure. "This fact," says Dr. Simonds, "explains the Geneva axiom that no disarmament conference is more disastrous to world peace than three battles in a local war." And he cites the prayer of a London preacher, offered following the Naval Conference—"Give us peace in our time, O Lord, peace without conference!"

What is the solution for the lamentable situation? Dr. Simonds answers that no such conferences should be held without preparation in advance. This means that the irreconcilable ideas of the participating nations must be modified before the Conference. It also means that until the citizens of the various countries change their minds on certain points, international conferences are both futile and dangerous.

Our Lord once said to the people of his day, "Except ye repent, ye shall all perish." The word "repent" means literally "to change the mind." This is going to the heart of the problem. You cannot get right action apart from right thinking, whether in individuals or nations.

THE Stars of Heaven Fell

Reputable scientists of the University of Oklahoma declare that traces have been found in South Carolina where a comet struck. A comet, they say, is simply a cluster of meteorites; and they have found more than 1500 craters or "scars" caused by the striking comet. Some of the craters are two miles long. Part of the shower hit the Atlantic ocean, fortunately. The area covered was about 400 by 630 miles in extent. And the evidence seems to indicate that all the meteors struck within the space of a minute. Such a catastrophe would probably destroy all human life within the area struck. It would be accompanied by terrific shock.

Doubtless something like this is involved in the awful judgment which is predicted in Revelation 6:12-13 at the opening of the sixth seal. "And lo, there was a great earth-quake ... and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth ... and every mountain and island were moved out of their place."

The word translated "earth-quake" is not the ordinary word, but means literally a tremendous "shaking" of things.

PHYSICIAN, Heal Thyself

The story is told of an old-time evangelist who, at the close of a Sunday night service, was informed by a young theological student that the "after-meeting" was not conducted properly. "I did not like it," said the student. "Neither do I," answered the evangelist, "I always feel as though I have missed it at some point in my after-meeting. I never go home without feeling that I might have done the thing better." "By the way," he said to the student, "how do you conduct your after-meeting?" "Oh," said the young man, "I don't have any at all." "Well," said the old warrior, "then I think my way of doing it is better than yours."

An expert, a friend of mine used to say, is a man far from home telling other men how to do what he cannot do himself.

Buchmanism, or the Oxford Group Movement

A new religious movement making the popular appeal that Buchmanism is, deserves careful study. If it is of God, if it has the power and possibility of revitalizing the church, if it is indeed a revival of "First Century Christian Fellowship," as some of its adherents prefer to call it, we ought to know it and to embrace it. But if on the other hand it is just another religious fad, a humanly devised scheme whereby men would attempt to secure for themselves some of the thrills of the Christian experience without giving full acceptance and obedience to the whole Gospel message and method, then we ought to know that and be warned against it. It possesses some characteristics that would tend to lead one to believe that it has come from God as a means of giving new life and power to the church, but a closer scrutiny reveals weaknesses that separate it by wide reaches from first century Christianity.

The movement gets its most distinctive name from the man who founded it, Dr. Frank N. D. Buchman, a Lutheran minister of German stock, born at Emaus, Lehigh County, Pennsylvania, and educated at Muhlenberg College and Mt. Airy Seminary. It is also called the "Oxford Group Movement", as it was at Oxford, England, that the movement that was refused shelter at Princeton University gained respectability and prestige, and it is there that the fellowship now centers. For the most authoritative setting forth of the Movement one must read the book entitled "For Sinners Only", by A. J. Russell, an editor of one of London's foremost dailies, and who from starting out to get a "news" feature ended with writing a semi-official interpretation of the Movement as an enthusiastic convert. Besides many appraisals are being presented in magazine articles, but we have formed our judgment primarily from personal observation of Group demonstrations and from personally participating in the questioning of Group leaders.

We must confess that we discovered in the Movement certain qualities that we could wish the church possessed in larger measure,—namely, a deep personal consecration to the Lord Jesus, readiness to testify to the goodness and power of God, emphasis of divine leadership, and a real evangelistic passion. At the beginning of our inquiry it seemed that these people must be leading in a movement that was destined to revitalize Christianity and rekindle the fires of evangelism. When we considered the slow pulse of our own spiritual life and contemplated the coldness and indifference abroad in the churches, we were made to feel ashamed in the presence of this demonstration of devotion and zeal.

But back of the zeal we discerned certain deficiencies and in their public testimonies we noted certain inconsistencies that made us shrink from taking a stand with them. "Sharing" proved to be an important word in their vocabulary—they must share their religious experiences with their fellow-members and must share also with those whose lives were not "changed." But their "sharing" seemed to consist almost wholly in sharing their own experiences. No one seemed to have in his consciousness any definite sense of the preciousness of the Word and the necessity of sharing it and its truths. No one made any reference to any new appreciation of the Word of God, nor to any particular Scripture passage or Bible truth they had shared, but many personal experiences and confessions were related. They were stressing the importance of getting this new experience, this changed life, forgetting all the while that Jesus placed the Word as the means of this new and sanctifying experience, when he prayed: "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy Word is truth." They of course urged daily Bible reading, but they did not seem to give the Bible or its truths any prominent place in their consciousness. Their minds were primarily on what they must do rather than on what Christ had done. There was no place in their program for definite Bible instruction, but there was large place given to experience sharing. Doubtless the latter ought to be done, within proper limits, but the former, ought not to have been left undone, if the religious experience is to be rounded and the heart is to know the blessing of a full Gospel message.

They put great stress on "guidance," and certainly divine guidance in the affairs of life should be desired and sought by every Christian. But sitting quietly, with the mind passive, and a note book in hand, ready to write down any impulse or "hunch" that may come to mind has its dangers. It is hardly a safe means of securing divine guidance. Too often it runs into radicalism. John of Leyden during the Reformation thought he was "guided" when he introduced polygamy; John Wesley was "guided" when he resorted to lottery; Thomas Muenzer was "guided" while he reviled all who opposed him and caused them to be suspected as enemies of the Gospel. And some of these Buchmanites thought they might be "guided" to card playing or dancing. Very often our supposed "guidance" is merely a pious excuse for insisting on what we want to do. More often the one who really seeks God's guidance gets it through the maturer judgment, or more impartial judgment of others, the counsels of elders, or the expressed will of the church, and by prayerful meditation on the word of God. That is the attitude of mind more readily "guided."

They were a fine group of people, these members of the Oxford Group, but numbers of them seemed quite conscious of their spiritual attainment and were unable to avoid giving the impression that they were in a class by themselves. That religious caste spirit is a big temptation to any Christian, but the danger is all the greater with those who are encouraged to use the term "absolute." Back of the admonition to "absolute honesty, absolute purity, absolute unselfishness and absolute love", these initiates have the Lord's admonition, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," and, to their credit, we heard none laying claim to having attained, but we did see need of keeping strongly in mind that other admonition, "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation, . . . the flesh is weak."

Confession of sins which they continually encourage in others and engage in themselves warrants criticism from two points of view. First it savors too much of Roman Catholic practice of the Confessional. Confession of sins is to be made unto God who alone forgives, and not necessarily to men, except in case of anointing for healing or when a wrong has been done against some person in particular. Second, in the confessions there is frequent reference to conditions that are embarrassing and improper. One young ministers' made a confession that made one think of divorce court troubles. It just didn't fit the occasion; it was repelling. Even "absolute honesty" is against it. Honesty requires the keeping of confidences sacred. So do all the other "absolutes." Such confessions are not the Christian way. Nor is such a Movement.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. L. S. Bauman began on January 22, a week of meetings in the First Mennonite church of Upland, California, giving Bible lectures in the afternoon and evangelistic sermons in evenings.

We learn through a member of the Goshen, Indiana, church, that the revival being conducted by the pastor, Brother S. M. Whetstone and assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Richer, is proving a splendid success, more than three dozen having taken a stand for Christ at the time of the report.

The church at Muncie, Indiana has a new pastor in the person of Rev. Delbert B. Flora and we are informed that the people like his messages. One member of the congregation also wrote just recently to the editor personally, saying, "We have two preachers now, as Rev. and Mrs. Flora were blessed with a baby boy on Tuesday, January 17th." And we are informed that he has been named Jerry Rees. We congratulate Brother and Sister Flora.

Brother Homer Anderson gives us a word about the community Sunday school at Gritter, Iowa, where Brethren people are participating. He doesn't say that he has been preaching there, but he reports six conversions, four of which were baptized by apostolic immersion, but only one of which united with the Brethren church at Pleasant Grove, Iowa.

Brother Fred C. Vanator, pastor of the church at Peru, Indiana, says the church has gotten considerable relief from the wave of "flu" that has been troubling the work there for a number of weeks. "Practically every family in the church has been touched in some way." And now they are rejoicing that improvement has come, and with it increased interest in the activities of the church.

Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the church at Waterloo, Iowa, writes of a forward step in the field of church music undertaken by his congregation. They have a Minister of Music in the person of Mrs. Owen McCartneysmith, a member of that church, who, with her assistants, is developing several choirs and choruses among the different ages and groups of the membership. There are large possibilities in the service of church music, and our Waterloo Brethren have launched a program designed to make the most of it.

We have a report of progress from the South Gate church in California, where Brother Leo Polman is the efficient pastor. Twenty-five have been added to the church during the past six months, and most of them by confession of faith and baptism. Some of these are the fruit of Bible classes conducted in homes in different parts of the city. The pastor has an evangelistic passion upon his heart and naturally he passes that spirit on to his people. The Sunday school is steadily increasing in attendance, the average for the last quarter having risen eighteen above the same period a year ago, and the Rally Day attendance of 206 having broken previous records.

We appreciate the good newsletter of Brother John F. Locke, pastor of the Bethlehem and Mount Olive churches in Virginia. The former mentioned church, located in the country from Harrisonburg, is to be host to the Southeastern district conference this coming June. We appreciate Brother Locke's personal interest in behalf of the Evangelist and the new subscriptions received from his church. The Bethlehem church is one among that comparatively small group that was able to close their year without a financial deficit. The reorganization of a Christian Endeavor society is reported for Mount Olive. Both congregations have in past months enjoyed the leadership of Brother E. L. Miller in an evangelistic campaign, and were much strengthened thereby, as previously reported in this paper.

THE LAST SUNDAY IN FEBRUARY is Benevolence Day, according to the calendar arranged by National Conference, the time when the churches are asked to make a contribution for the support of the Superannuated Ministers and the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana. We have some obligations that we have assumed, obligations so binding and sacred that we cannot escape them, even in a time like this. Large numbers of our people will not be able to do what they have been wont to do along this line, but every member who can possibly do something is duty bound to do what he or she can. This is a time when those who have, should share with those who have not, and especially with those who are of our own household of faith.

Brother J. M. Bowman, of near Bethlehem, Virginia, wrote to the Business Manager, when renewing his subscription to the Evangelist, that he had been "taking the paper since its very beginning or very soon after." The Evangelist is in its fifty-fifth year and so must have been making weekly visits to Brother Bowman's home for more than half a century, at the least. We are not surprised that he finds it essential to his home. He is seventy-four years old, and we extend to him congratulations, both on having reached that age and on having been a member of the Evangelist family from its beginning. We are wondering how many others there might be who have a church paper record equal to Brother Bowman's, or very near approaching it. Write us about it.

Brother R. I. Humberd, pastor of the churches at Martinsburg and McKee, Pennsylvania, writes of special meetings he has held at a number of places, as well as meetings held in his own churches. First he gave his Bible Chart lectures in Brother J. L. Gingrich's church. Then Brother E. S. Flora assisted him one week in a two weeks' series of meetings at McKee, following which he assisted Brother Flora in a two weeks' meeting in the Yellow Creek church. A short series of meetings at Cumberland resulted in three baptisms, two received by letter and two reconsecrations. In his Martinsburg church he was assisted in a three weeks' meeting by a Church of the Brethren minister, Brother Earl Bowser of Juniata. Twenty-one confessed Christ as a result of this campaign, seventeen of which had been baptized at the time of the report.

Brother E. L. Miller met with a serious automobile accident, we are sorry to say, on Wednesday, January 25th, according to word received at our office on February 2. We are publishing this week Brother John F. Locke's report of the accident (See the News department.) With two cervical vertebrae broken, lying in a cast, and looking forward to not less than two months of absolute inactivity, even though no unfortunate complications should arise, his condition is both serious and trying, and he will need our prayers. As Brother Locke requests, we too urge members of the Evangelist family to remember him earnestly before the throne of grace, and an occasional message would no doubt cheer him up and be much appreciated.

We told our readers last week about the union revival in which our Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, church is cooperating, the plan being to hold one week of services in each church, the pastor of each church doing the preaching in his own church. A note just received from Brother W. H. Schaffer informs us that the week of services held in the Brethren church with himself doing the preaching, closed January 27th with eighteen confessions for the week, most of which desire fellowship in our church. Then he relates this interesting incident: The last night of the meetings in our own Conemaugh church, the lights went out just as the services were about to begin, with over 300 people present. They waited awhile, then started the services by the use of flashlights. Eventually a neighbor resurrected an oil lamp (the lights were out in the entire town), which was brought into the church and placed on the pulpit. The service was proceeding and the preacher stood up to preach, not being able to see more than a dim outline of the faces in his audience. The service was near its close when the lights came on. When Brother Schaffer gave the invitation, nine souls came forward to confess Christ as their Savior, and many others, he says, were under conviction. Even so, the darker the gloom surrounding us, the more real becomes our sense of the need of Christ as the Light of the world.

The New York Bible Society, an organization having as its sole work the distribution of Bibles in the city and harbor of New York, reports 802,563 volumes of the Scriptures distributed during 1932. These were given to crews of steamers and freighters, to immigrants upon arrival (both those who are permitted to land, and to those who are compelled to return to their native land), to hotels, hospitals, prisons and other institutions and to the homes of the needy of all races. During the Society's 123 years of existence, a total of 18,177,452 volumes have been given out. Four new languages were added by the Society during 1932 to its list of unusual tongues and dialects in which the Bible is circulated, making a total of seventy-nine foreign languages in which the Bible was distributed in New York last year. Dr. Millard L. Robinson, the General Secretary, says that his correspondence "showed conclusively the increasing dependence upon the Bible during this most trying year of financial depression." It is to be hoped that this conclusion is well founded. There has not appeared much evidence of such a revived interest in the Bible on the part of the more influential sections and classes of New York's citizens as yet, particularly those classes that make news for the newspapers. Such people, however, are not the kind to whom a Bible distributing organization could satisfactorily minister. For them the churches must be held responsible. For their spiritual welfare there needs to be a revival of passion and intensity of preaching—a preaching of old fashioned righteousness and repentance of sin, such as was proclaimed by Amos and John the Baptist.

“The First Shall Be Last”

By Raymond F. Burch

God, the Chief Architect and Master Builder, is still at work. He is daily adding to “the building fitly framed together that groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord.” And it would be intensely interesting were it only possible to examine each bit of human material that God takes in his hands and skilfully shapes into some necessary furnishing for this flawless temple.

We occasionally see him sending out into the forests on the towering peaks of Life to select the tallest, strongest, proudest tree among mankind for some very specific need in his building. After the “tree” has been definitely selected, the double-bladed axe of the Word is applied and the outer bark of indifference is carefully trimmed away. Then the saw of Conviction is patiently set in motion. Back and forth it drags at the utterance of every sincere prayer, but not a vibration is seen in this strong giant of the forests of humankind, until the sharp teeth of the saw begin biting into its heart.

It is then, and not until then, that one can observe any semblance of quivering, that tells of a weakening Will. Slowly, slowly the saw eats away and the huge tree slightly sways in a state of indecision. On and on creeps the saw. The swaying becomes more pronounced and then this towering symbol of strength, with a mighty lunge, crashes to earth, helpless and undone,—a penitent sinner on his face before God.

The “tree” now lies separated from the roots of Sin and Death that held it firmly fixed to earth, but there are branches of pride, selfishness, bad habits, worldly companions, love of money, a career out of the will of God,

SANCTUARY

*Be near me, God
Here at this forest shrine;
Let my chilled heart be warmed
By fire from Thine.*

*Grave-rooted priests
Perform the seasonal rites,
The altar candles lit
By acolytes.*

*The city's threat
Shall not defeat me here;
My reborn strength shall slay
The gorgon, Fear;*

*And peace from heaven
With filtered sunshine drift
Between the leafy fingers Druids lift.*

—Minnie M. La Huis.

etc., that still remain as a part of the “tree.” Perhaps a few or many of these branches were broken in its earthward plunge, but there are always a certain amount that need to be trimmed, for such a “tree” is entirely useless for strong spiritual timber until it has been shorn of all the branches that might cast a shadow over its Christian growth.

When this is accomplished it is taken from its habitation and completely “Separated from the World” as it enters the mill of Christian Experience, where it is cut into the desired dimensions by many trials and sore afflictions.

From here it is carried through the door of Consecration into the Temple. Oftimes, because of its supreme strength, it is placed down out of sight, to become one of the underpinnings of this huge Building of God. The Master Builder makes no mistakes.

This portion of his work completed, we oftimes see him return to the very spot where once stood this stately “tree” of the forest of Life and turn back the roots and earth, only to remove a rough, ordinary-appearing “rock” that has lain hidden from view in the depth of sin all its life.

This dirty, uninviting slab of “rock” he washes in the water of Regeneration, patiently cuts and polishes it by the Word of God, and then sets it firmly and squarely upon the huge hidden “beam,” to become a beautifully engraven “portal” to grace the Temple throughout eternity.

“... Many that are first shall be last ... for the ways of God are past finding out!”

Church Music and Great Hymns of the Church

By Robert E. Kline, Organist for First Brethren Church and for the National Cash Register

In accepting the invitation which I received to contribute several articles to your valuable paper, “The Evangelist”, I consider it a privilege to discuss a subject which is very much in my mind and which I know is of vital importance to the Brethren Church, our own beloved denomination: namely, Church music and the use and history of the great hymns of the Church.

The musical program of the Church service can be arranged to inspire reverence and worship. On the other hand, if it is neglected or taken as a matter of fact as a fill-in, it is bound to react unfavorably and eventually will tend to break down the dignity of the service built up by the pastor.

The subject of music in the Brethren Church today is important because of the fact that our branch of the church is comparatively young, and only in the last ten or fifteen years has there been any serious thought given to the importance of the musical program. In discussing this subject I realize there are many smaller churches in our denomination, consequently I will endeavor to make suggestions which will be of help to those interested in music in both the smaller and larger churches.

Music in the church service should be an act of worship. It is important that serious thought be given to both the vocal and instrumental portions. In the first several articles of this series I will deal more specifically with the vocal portions, especially the selection of hymns for congregational singing and the type of solos and anthems for the special music.

I realize that each congregation presents its particular problem in arranging a suitable musical program. I should like to especially emphasize the importance of endeavoring to please the congregation, at the same time seeking to educate them to appreciate the better anthems and hymns.

In the Dayton church we plan the morning service carefully, using good standard hymns and the very best anthems, keeping the service more or less formal, dignified and reverent. The evening service we make very informal, the evangelistic type of service. In planning the services in this manner we appeal to all personalities.

This plan might not be successful in all churches, however, it is always important that we strive to give the best in music.

In endeavoring to educate the congregation to appreciate the great hymns of the Church, it is well to give them the historical background of the composer and the hymn. Take for instance the history of the life of Dr. Isaac Watts. He may be called the inventor of hymns in the English language, which are sung by all people. Dr.

Watts never wrote but for a good purpose. Few men have left behind such purity of character as he. A study of Dr. Watts' hymns is both interesting and educational. Every congregation should know of the consecrated life of this great man, in order that they may better appreciate and enjoy the hymns he wrote.

In succeeding articles I will endeavor to discuss all phases of the musical life of the Church, hoping that our readers may receive helpful information that will raise the standard of music throughout our entire brotherhood. Dayton, Ohio.

What I Know About Beer

By S. J. Duncan-Clarke

(As the invited guest of Bob and Harve, creators of the series of economic dialogues on The Alcohol Problem, conducted weekly over Chicago Station WLS by the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation, S. J. Duncan-Clarke, an editorial writer on the Chicago Daily News, spoke at the regular broadcasting hour, 1:30 P. M., Thursday, December 29, 1932. The Editor is glad for the privilege of passing on to his readers this exceptionally strong and timely address.)

Beer is coming back, we are told. There is a jubilant note in the announcement. Beer is to balance the budget. Beer is to banish the depression and restore prosperity. Beer is to revive the discouraged souls of men and renew happiness in human hearts.

Well, I know something about beer. Back in the so-called good old wet days when beer was lawful, I was a police reporter for awhile on a morning newspaper in an American city of about 300,000 population. Beer was plentiful then. I doubt if there was a point in that city from which you could not find your way to a licensed saloon or a beer garden in less than five minutes. It was my business to gather the news of crime, of vice, of underworld activities. I remember that lawful beer played a large part in making that news. It was inseparably mixed up with the brew of lawlessness, of violence, of indecency and corruption out of which came the happenings that made sensational items for the newspaper.

The Record of Beer

I did not notice that beer was making anybody prosperous but the brewers and the saloon keepers. I did notice that it was making a lot of folks poor. I did notice that it was breaking up homes. I did notice that it was destroying the worth of fatherhood and demoralizing the value of motherhood. True it was contributing revenue to the government, but it was canceling that contribution by reducing the earning power of workers, eating up their possible savings, preventing them from acquiring property and homes, creating slum neighborhoods and non-taxpaying citizens.

That is why all this talk about the blessings which are to come to us from the return of lawful beer makes no impression on my mind. It may carry some weight with persons who have short memories, or persons who were born too late to know by experience the good old wet days. But to a newspaper man who was a police reporter in times when beer was legalized and made semi-respectable by government sanction, the loud advertising of its virtues sounds like the silliest nonsense.

Beer, Intoxicant?

Let nobody tell you that beer is not intoxicating. I have seen men drunk on beer, and nothing but beer, much too often to fall for that fable. It may take several bottles to produce obvious results, but several bottles is no impossible quantity for a man. I have seen men become morose, quarrelsome, ugly tempered and fightingly stupid on beer. Moreover beer, with its milder alcoholic content, is the appetizer for more ardent liquors. Alcohol is a habit forming drug. In beer it stimulates the desire for something with a bigger kick.

You are all familiar with the little pilot light on the gas range. It is a small flame. You cannot boil the kettle on it. But that small flame will set all the big burners ablaze. Beer acts as the pilot light for possible greater alcoholic conflagrations in the human system.

What Law Cannot Do

Congress proposes to call beer non-intoxicating. Our wet friends are fond of saying that you cannot change human nature by legislation. They are probably right. But if you cannot change human nature by act of congress or parliament, no more can you change the nature of alcoholic beer by a like process.

If 3.2 beer does not have kick enough to produce the sort of feeling which those who want beer want to feel, it will not satisfy them; and if it does produce it, then it will create the desire for stronger liquors. Lawful beer will become the effective screen for bootlegged spirits. It will not end bootlegging. It will not close the speakeasies. It will only make bootlegging easier, and the speakeasy for whiskey and its allied intoxicants more secure from detection.

Our wet friends say they want beer and other liquors made lawful again because prohibition of their manufacture and sale led to all sorts of lawlessness.

If they think they are going to escape liquor lawlessness by licensing the traffic they have either forgotten history of the days not so long past, or they are too youthful to know the record of the traffic when it had the law behind it.

Experience

My newspaper experience taught me that the most persistent lawbreaker in the community was the liquor traffic. It violated every regulation made to govern it. It would not observe restricted hours of sale. It would not obey the Sunday closing law. It sold liquor to drunkards and minors contrary to law. It was the nursery of crime and criminals. My best source of crime news in the old reporting days was the saloon and its bartenders.

Liquor is inherently lawless. It cannot be made to obey any rules. Its part as a factor in demoralizing society, in promoting violence and murder, in encouraging vice was so commonplace that it had ceased to be a matter of news. County option and statewide prohibition were the answer of people in revolt against the law-breaking traffic. Logically they came to the conclusion that a traffic which persistently disregarded the law and fostered crime ought to be outlawed. What can be said for the logic that now argues for legal recognition of a business inherently lawless?

Leaves Statistics to Others

I am not strong on statistics. Too many tricks can be played with figures. I am willing to leave the statistical argument to those wiser than myself. But my newspaper training taught me to observe, and to draw conclusions from my observations. My newspaper experience brought me in contact with every phase of life. Although I am no longer a reporter I have not lost touch with the conditions which surround me. For years as a public speaker I have been accustomed to travel about my city—this big city of Chicago—at all hours of the day and night, and by every means of conveyance. Comparing what I have seen since the liquor traffic was outlawed with what I saw in the days when it was lawful, I am convinced beyond all possible contradiction that things are better now than they were then; that vastly less liquor is being consumed and that much less of woe and poverty and crime are due to its consumption.

In the old days it was seldom that I traveled home at night from a speaking engagement, using train or trolley, that I did not encounter among the passengers one or more persons who were disgustingly and disturbingly drunk. Since the enactment of the eighteenth amendment it has become a rare thing in my experience to see such persons. I have seen perhaps half a dozen in the last dozen years. In former times I would see that many in a week. Where have they gone? The street drunk is now a rare sight. He used to be commonplace.

When Beer Ran Free

I recall in those good old wet days that the newspaper for which I worked—it was not in Chicago—used to pay off its men on Saturday after the banks had closed. Newspaper men were proverbially spendthrift. By Saturday morning their pockets were empty. They could not wait for Monday to cash their checks. The kind saloonkeeper on the opposite corner realized their urgent need and made provision to accommodate them. Each man, as he left the cashier's window in the office, took the shortest cut across the street and vanished through the swinging doors. Behind the mahogany bar stood the friendly saloonkeeper, with an extra staff of bartenders. He smiled a cordial welcome, greeting each man by his name, and cashed the proffered checks. Of course that service called for some recognition. Part of the cash received was spent on drinks. Everybody bought drinks. Treating became general. Conviviality grew. The week's pay diminished. The kind saloonkeeper was happy. He whistled a tune to the accompaniment of the tinkling cash register. I knew fellows who have never been in a saloon never tasted liquor until they were given that excuse for entering a bar and sampling its wares. But it was all legitimate—perfectly legitimate. The law sanctioned it. The respectable newspaper proprietor encouraged it by his pay-off methods. He figured that he saved one day's interest on his bank deposits. It did not seem to occur to him that he lost much more than that in the decreased reliability of his staff. He probably deplored the fact that some of his employes drank to excess at times, but in those good old wet days, it was traditional that newspaper men and printers drank. He accepted that tradition as one of the settled facts for which allowance must be made.

Contrast that picture with what became familiar to me after the liquor traffic was outlawed. About nine o'clock each morning the milkman would arrive at the office, and a distribution of pint and quart bottles of milk would begin in the composing room and spread through the business office and editorial floor—scores of bottles. Milk had taken the place of beer as a lunch hour beverage.

I stood the other day at a drug store soda fountain, enjoying a soft drink. Touching my elbow was a burly truck driver contentedly disposing of a cup of hot chocolate. I thought to myself how strange that sight was as compared with the old days. And yet that sight has become ordinary since the eighteenth amendment was enacted.

The outlawed liquor traffic is lawless. Of course it is lawless. But even so, conditions are vastly better than they were under the lawful liquor traffic that was no less lawless.

But they say they are going to restore lawful beer in order to create better conditions. That is a tragic jest.

Beer and Prosperity!

They say this country will drink itself back to prosperity.

Look at any country that has lawful beer today and then tell me is there any evidence that it is prospering through consumption of the amber suds.

Great Britain has lawful beer, and dire poverty stalks in its streets.

Germany has lawful beer, and unemployment threatens the life of Germany.

Economic salvation is not to be found in beer, or else these countries would be in better shape than the United States, and the fact is they are worse off than America.

Employment

Breweries will create employment, they tell us. That is not true. They will shift employment. They will lower demand for soft drinks and milk, and throw dairymen out of jobs. They will, in time, create the unemployable, just as they did before. They will decrease the efficiency of workers, just as they did before.

But the crusade to bring back lawful beer is merely preliminary to the bringing back of lawful spirits, lawful whiskey and gin and all the rest of the bottled trouble that is now an outlaw.

If one could forget for a moment how serious the problem is one would be moved to mirth by the difficulties in which the wets find themselves involved now that they have the promise of the two big political parties to open the road for beer and "repeal."

It is evident that now that the wets have their opportunity to improve conditions they are losing confidence in their ability to make good on the loud promises which have been shouted up and down the land. And they will may lose confidence. They cannot make good. The beer that looked to them so desirable last July when they sickened sensible people by their sordidly maudlin demonstrations in the party conventions looks less like a great white hope now. But we can leave the wets to their worries.

The important thing for us to recognize, it seems to me, is the fact that lay behind the prohibition movement, and that is still a fact challenging our civilization—Intoxicating beverages are an evil and only an evil, and the traffic in them whether sanctioned by law or forbidden, is inherently a lawless traffic, the enemy of individual welfare and social security.

Whatever happens in the next few months that fact will remain unchanged. I am not nearly as much concerned about defending prohibition, as I am about fighting the evil of intoxicants and the traffic that deals with them. I believe it is important to shift the emphasis now from the virtues of prohibition to the evils of liquor. Let the enemies of prohibition say what they please about it—the accusation they cannot answer is that the substitutes they propose will not lessen the evil of intoxicants, will not cure the lawlessness of the liquor traffic. Civilization must face those evils if it is to be able to tackle its other tasks which crowd upon it and threaten its existence.

What Made the Trouble

Our wet friends piously declare they are against the return of the saloon. What of it? It was not the saloon that made trouble. It was the liquor the saloon sold. There was no mischief in the bright lights of the old-time bar-room; no perils in the mahogany bar and the brass rail. Some of the pictures on the walls were undesirable, but they drove no man to crime or violence.

Rape and arson and murder were not in the cheer and comfort of the saloon; they did not hide the free lunch; but they were in the liquor that the saloon sold.

When a man proposes abolishing the saloon but restoring liquor, and thinks himself virtuous, I begin to wonder about the sort of mind he has. It is not the return of the saloon that gives me anxiety. It is the return of liquor, bearing the sanction of law.

I would be in favor of retaining the saloon and abolishing liquor. I think one of the places where we failed was in neglect to provide cheery, comfortable resorts, where there was warmth and light and music, and chance for social gatherings and entertainment, as substitutes for the licensed saloon. Man craves those things; they are good things. It was stupid to leave the provision of them to the liquor traffic, which made them traps for men, instead of sources of help and encouragement.

We must not be led astray by the idea that banishing the saloon as one sort of dispensary for liquor, and substituting some other sort of dispensary is going to help the situation. The fight that has meaning is not against the saloon, not against any particular method for selling liquor, but against the liquor itself and all methods of lawful traffic in it for beverage purposes.

And we must bear in mind that if beer comes back before the Eighteenth Amendment is repealed—should it be repealed, which is far from being a certainty even in the minds of the wets—it can come back only on the theory that it is not intoxicating; that it is, in fact, a soft drink. That theory is utterly false, but law may be passed to give it support.

And if that is done, what safeguards can be placed around the sale of beer, alleged to be a soft drink, that is not placed around the sale of other soft drinks—of ice cream sodas and malted milk and the like? On what theory will soda fountains be prevented from selling it? How are we to avoid the danger that it will be drunk by children as well as adults? There are no safeguards in the so-called Collier Beer bill passed by the House at Washington.

Beer with 3.2 per cent alcoholic content may be as easily obtainable by children and grown-up as orange juice now is. The alcoholic habit may be cultivated under sanction of law in the school children of America. If the distillers of ardent spirits wanted to find a way to create a demand for their destructive decoctions they could ask nothing better.

That is a subtle and dangerous phase of the present situation which demands earnest consideration and vigorous effort.

A New Crusade

I am convinced that one thing we can do, and must do, is to renew the educational warfare against the evils of alcohol as an element in beverages. The crusade of education must be carried into every section of the land. The help of science must be enlisted as never before. This is a scientific age. Our boys and girls are laboratory trained. They respect science. Modern science indicts alcohol. The ablest minds denounce it as a beverage. In the schools, in the homes, in the churches, by spoken word and written word, the inherent dangers of intoxicants must be attacked. Informed sentiment must be created that will deal with the liquor evil more effectively than by any method yet tried or now proposed. We cannot accept defeat in this battle. The war must go on, more intelligently, more vigorously, more persistently than ever.

WHY STARVATION WHEN FOODSTUFFS ROT?

We need a more just distribution. There are millions on the verge of starvation in the presence of abundance of food. Some one, somewhere, is to blame. We are rapidly approaching the time when those who control production and distribution of food-stuffs cannot live peaceably in a land where so many are hungry for a morsel to eat.

A docile majority seems to have been frightened into submission by threatenings from a hypocritical minority, which has actually destroyed food rather than permit men, women and children, who die in cellars, garrets, coal-rooms, parks and on the streets, to have sufficient nourishment to sustain life.

With the 10 to 12 million unemployed in America alone, and bread lines in every major city, compare these figures, both here and elsewhere: Australia, last fall, destroyed 80,000 sheep because of a very low value. England threw 500,000 herring back into the sea, because they were unsaleable. America burned 2 million of its 6 billion superfluous bushels of wheat. Mexico destroyed millions of rotting bananas. Egypt burned 100,000 tons of unsaleable cotton. Central America heated stoves with corn and barley. Even in our own state, and a few adjoining, people are keeping their own firesides warm with surplus corn which has a value less than the cost of production.

They are starving in China, India, and a few other countries. In Germany 30,000 committed suicide. In the U. S. there is a suicide for every three minutes of the day and night, and multitudes doing without any form of income to help sustain life.

Enough coal to keep everybody warm; enough food for all; enough to use and be used. What is the matter? Its improper distribution. Why? SOMEONE has Forgotten God. May God raise up leaders to show us the way by following him more closely from day to day.

IN HIM THE STORM SUBSIDES

These are perilous days through which we are passing. Angry passions are rising among men. This frenzy is not confined alone to our economic perils. Its streaks of fire are flashing in all directions. Political panaceas just fill the air. Builders of Babel Towers are filling the air with their din. Ecclesiastical nostrums are left at your doors with a new supply every morning. Religious quacks follow them up with their advice on how to use them. Civilization itself is alarmed.

But to those of us who have remained anchored to the dictum, "And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power" (Col. 2:10), we are not unduly alarmed as the breakers roar. To me, in times like these, human pronouncements are like bits of seaweeds, only seen in the swish as some one who is wondering how they are faring, points them out. "AND YE ARE COMPLETE IN HIM." Seaweeds may take care of themselves in a storm like this. The boat that carries the Master can never sink. It's of his own construction and it will not break in pieces NOW, for it has weathered many a storm. Besides, my Captain is on board; we are manning the oars according to his directions. Sometimes, as some faint heart loses hope and expresses a faint longing that we might try something else, the Master with pity remembers the frailty of human flesh, "And he said unto them, Where is your faith? And they being afraid wondered, saying one to another, What manner of man is this! for he commandeth even the winds and the water, and they obey him" (Luke 8:25).

"Lord, as to thy dear cross we flee,
And plead to be forgiven,
So let thy life our pattern be,
And form our souls for heaven.

Help us through good report or ill,
Our daily cross to bear;
Like thee, to do our Father's will,
Our brethren's grief to share.

Let grace our selfishness expel.
Our earthliness refine;
And kindness in our bosoms dwell,
As free, as true as Thine.

Should friends misjudge, or foes defame,
Or brethren faithless prove,
Then, like thine own, be all our aim
To conquer them by love."

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

FROM BAD TO WORSE

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the President-elect, brought upon herself a storm of protest by a statement she made over the radio recently. Characterizing the "average" girl of today, she is reported to have said: "The average girl of today faces the problem of learning very young how much she can drink of such things as whisky and gin and sticking to the proper quantity."

It scarcely is believable that an intelligent woman, especially a mother, could be guilty of such a silly statement, and the good women of America may well be alarmed that one whose mental and moral texture is thus indicated is to occupy the White House for the next four years.

Under the storm of protest, in which the Women's Christian Temperance Union played a leading role, Mrs. Roosevelt comes back with a weak explanation which leaves her in no better light. She claims to be personally dry, but seems to be in full harmony with the wet cause. "It is living in a fool's paradise," she avers, "to imagine that the young girl of good family today doesn't meet a different sort of pressure on the question than her mother or grandmother." It is a sort of vague, weak statement which gains little in clarity or merit by what follows:

"The young man with a flask replaces the hostess with a glass of light wine, which a girl in our own days could either take or refuse without feeling conspicuous." This astounding remark, which one would think might come from the lowest social level, instead of what ought to be the highest, is not only a shock to the better element of American womanhood, but may well lead to gloomy forebodings regarding the sort of atmosphere that is to prevail in the White House throughout the next administration.

But here follows the most damaging part of her so-called "explanation," and which confirms the accuracy of the original report: "Because the young girl of today is offered gin as a matter of course, it is well for her to learn to recognize her own limits!" The idea of teaching a "young girl to recognize her limits" in the matter of drinking gin—well, mothers, use your own language in expressing your contempt for such sordid sentiment.

It may be possible for a person to be dry personally, but wet socially, politically, and intellectually.—Religious Telescope.

CANADIAN MINISTERS DEFEND OXFORD GROUPS

The New Outlook, of Toronto, Canada, official organ of the United Church of Canada, is not sympathetic with the Oxford Groups, who recently visited that city. The editor in his paper took a position against the movement which is the outstanding evangelistic movement of the day. Leading ministers sharply disagreed with him and sent him this protest, which sets forth the position of those who are sympathetic with and supporters of this newer form of evangelism:

To the Editor of The New Outlook:

Dear Sir: In view of the position taken in your last issue toward the work of the Oxford Group, we write to state our profound conviction that the Movement is of God. We do not believe it right to allow differences about methods and forms of presentation to blind us to its central demand for completely surrendered lives and to the effect of that demand on our people. Lives in great numbers are being "changed," often with dramatic suddenness; in other cases fear and doubt and anxiety are being replaced by peace and rejoicing confidence; and many defeated and discouraged workers, including ministers, have become "life changers," in whose hands the gospel is once more "the power of God unto salvation." Already new life is stirring in our churches and our own lives have been quickened. The Movement does not attempt to cover the whole work of the Christian Church, since it is a Movement within the Church. It gives a special message for a special need, and we think that its concentration is its strength. In any case, Christ is preached, and we therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

"In the Beginning."

(No. III.)

By Louis S. Bauman, D.D.

As we have seen, in the first six majestic words written by "holy men of God who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (II Pet. 1:21), we have the source of all things which exist—GOD! Refuse to admit these first six words, and the universe, and all that within it is, remains an insoluble riddle. The difficulties of unbelief immediately surpass the difficulties of faith.

But, admit these first six words, and all else follows in course. For, with the admission of God, naturalism ends and supernaturalism begins. Why belittle the First Cause—God—to the place where all he could do was to vitalize a few molecules about a billion of years ago, and then disappear from the scene? The eminent French infidel, Voltaire, was at least consistent: "If once we are prepared to admit the existence of a God, of a Creator who could make this wonderful universe, what is the use of cavilling at minor miracles, as surely the greater involves the less."

Where Faith Steps In

The faith of the Christian is not a blind unreasoning faith. It is true that it accepts many things that the mind of man cannot comprehend, but it accepts those things because they are, and because the deepest research of the reasoning powers of man fails to give a more reasonable reason than that which faith accepts.

"In the beginning—God,"—the God who, by his own incomprehensible power, spake, and it was so! And God said, "Light be!" and, light was! "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. . . . For, he spake, and it was done" (Ps. 33:6:9). We shall not attempt to reason it out. There are a few things, at least, in this universe beyond the domain of reason. The power of Omnipotence is one of them. So, "through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear" (Heb. 11:3).

We shall not attempt to "reconcile science and Genesis." How can we reconcile man's knowledge, much of it presumed, with that which is beyond man's comprehension? We have no desire—in fact, time is too valuable for faith to be spending its precious time on this earth trying to reconcile the uncertain "science" of man with the revelation of an Omnipotent God. Let the authors of "science" reconcile their "science" with God's revelation. If they cannot,—well, God isn't worrying over this particular failure of man!

The Creative Word

God "spake, and it was done"! One feels a sense of brevity in these words. It does not sound exactly as if God carried a shovel and pushed a wheel-barrow up and down through his universe for some hundreds of millions of years. The omnipotent Word "spake," and "in six days" the heavens and the earth, the land and sea, and "all that in them is"—were! "Six days"—interpret them as you will. When done, you will have time enough for all the creative work attributed to Elohim in Genesis.

The Creative Word of God! Wisdom beyond the ken of all the keen! Power beyond the prowess of all the strong! With what surpassing majesty it steps out of the fathomless eternity behind us to speak into existence the marvels of our present universe,—to throw galaxy upon galaxy of glittering worlds, whirling as in serried ranks through limitless space. Verily, "The heavens declare the glory of God!" (Ps. 19:1). Little wonder that the great shepherd king of Israel, who so often fell asleep beneath the covering of those same mighty stars, should cry out in amazement: "When I consider Thy heavens, and the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars which Thou hast ordained; what is man that Thou art mindful of him?" (Ps. 3:3, 4).

The Greater Work of the Creative Word

And yet, as we shall see, the great glory of God lies not in these glittering orbs that roll in splendor above us, but in the man who seems so insignificant beneath their covering. The greatest of all the creative acts of the creative Word, came when God took of the dust of the earth and fashioned a temple for a living soul, and crowned his whole creation once again with the Word of his power: "Life be!" And, with that word, life from Elohim sprang into that temple of glorious dust, and the one to have dominion over all the wondrous works of the creative Word was here!

The almost unbelievable story of the fall of this new lord of creation is ahead of us, together with the yet more amazing story of his recreation—of a day when the Omnipotent Word shall again speak, and life eternal shall spring from the Immanent God into a new creation in Christ Jesus. Almost surpassing belief indeed is the birth, the fall, and the rebirth of a universe! Wonderment is only increased in the record of the birth, fall, and rebirth of the lord of that universe!

SEEKING GOD

Dear reader, take this word into your heart! Think over it! Pray over it? Speak out before God until you feel, "I really mean what I say, and I have the assurance that God will hear my prayer." Say it each morning as you approach God in prayer, "I seek thee with my whole heart." You will by degrees feel the need of waiting in holy stillness upon God that he may take possession of your whole heart, and you will learn to love him with your whole heart and with all your strength.—Andrew Murray.

The Book of Supreme Influence

Address of William Jennings Bryan on the occasion of the Tercentenary Celebration of the King James Version of the Bible, in Orchestra Hall, Chicago, Ill., May 4, 1911, under the auspices of the American Bible Society.

For nineteen hundred years the battle between the spiritual and the material conception of life has raged around the Bible. "Search the Scriptures" was the command of Christ, and to the Scriptures the Christian world has turned ever since for their authority.

Atheists and materialists have assailed the Bible at every point; they have disputed the facts which it sets forth and ridiculed the prophecies which it recites; they have rejected the account which it gives of the creation, and scoffed at the miracles which it records. They have denied the existence of the God of the Bible and have sought to reduce the Savior to the stature of a man. They have been as bold as the prophets of Baal in defying the Living God and in heaping contempt upon the written Word. Why not challenge the atheists and the materialists to put their doctrines to the test?

When Elijah was confronted by a group of scorners who mocked at the Lord whom he worshipped, he invited them to match the power of their god against the power of his, and he was willing to concede superiority to the one who would answer with fire. When the challenge was accepted he built an altar, prepared a sacrifice, and then, to leave no room for doubt, he poured water upon the wood and the sacrifice—poured until the water filled the trenches round about. So firm was his trust that he even taunted his adversaries with their failure while his proofs were yet to be presented. The prophets of Baal, be it said to their credit, had enough confidence in their god to agree to the test, and their disappointment was real when he failed them—they gashed themselves with knives when their entreaties were unanswered.

Why not a Bible test? The Book of Books has lived and grown through the centuries; we are celebrating the three hundredth anniversary of the King James translation. The Christian world has confidence in the Bible; it presents the book as the work of God, but the attacks made upon it by its enemies continue in spite of the growth of the Bible's influence. The Christian world, by its attitude, presents a challenge to the opposition, and this is an opportune moment to emphasize the challenge—the moment when Christianity around the world is celebrating the triumphs that the Bible has won during the past three centuries.

Is the Bible the work of man, or is it an inspired book? Is it the product of human wisdom, or did its authors speak as they were commanded by the Lord?

Atheists and materialists declare that it is merely the work of man—that it was written under the limitations that apply to human wisdom. Taking this position, they must necessarily contend that, unless man has degenerated in ability and declined in wisdom, he can now produce a book equal to the Bible. Let them produce it.

Judged by human standards, man is far better prepared to write a Bible now than he was when our Bible was written. The characters whose words and deeds are recorded in the Bible were members of a single race; they lived among the hills of Palestine in a territory scarcely larger than one of our counties. They did not have printing presses, and they lacked the learning of the schools; they had no great libraries to consult, no steamboats to carry them around the world and make them acquainted with the various centers of ancient civilization; they had no telegraph wires to bring them the news from the ends of the earth, and no newspapers to spread before them each morning the doings of the day before. Science had not unlocked Nature's door and revealed the secrets of rocks below and stars above. From what a scantily supplied storehouse of knowledge they had to draw, compared with the unlimited wealth of information at man's command today! And yet these Bible characters grapple with every problem that confronts mankind, from the creation of the world to eternal life beyond the tomb. They have given us a diagram of man's existence from the cradle to the grave, and they have set up sign posts at every dangerous point along the path. We turn back to the Bible for the Ten Commandments, which form the foundation for our statute law, and for the Sermon on the Mount, which lays down the rules for our spiritual growth. The Bible gives us the story of the birth, the words, the works, the crucifixion, the resurrection, and the ascension of him whose coming was foretold in prophecy, whose arrival was announced by the angel voices, singing Peace and Good-will—the story of him who gave to the world a code of morality superior to anything that the world had known before or has known since—the story of him who is the growing figure of all time, whom the world is accepting as Savior and as the perfect example.

Let the atheists and the materialists produce a better Bible than ours, if they can. Let them collect the best of their school to be found among the graduates of universities—as many as they please and from every land. Let the members of this selected group travel where they will, consult such libraries as they please, and employ every modern means of swift communication. Let them glean from the fields of geology, botany, astronomy, biology, and zoology, and then roam at will wherever science has opened a way; let them take advantage of all the progress in art and in literature, in oratory and in history—let them use to the full every instrumentality that is employed in modern civilization; and when they have exhausted every source, let them employ the results of their best intelligence in a book and offer it to the world as a substitute for this Bible of ours. Have they the confidence that the prophets of Baal had in their god? Will they try? If not, what excuse will they give? Has man fallen from his high estate, so that we cannot rightfully expect as much of him now as nineteen centuries ago? Or does the Bible come to us from a source that is higher than man—which?

But our case is even stronger. The opponents of the Bible cannot take refuge in the plea that man is retrograding. They loudly proclaim that man has grown and that he is growing still. They boast of a world-wide advance and their claim is founded upon fact. In all matters except in the science of life, man has made wonderful progress. The mastery of the mind over the forces of nature seems almost complete, so far do we surpass the ancients in harnessing the water, the wind, and the lightning.

For ages the rivers plunged down the mountain sides and exhausted their energies without any appreciable contribution to man's service; now they are estimated as so many units of horse-power, and we find that their fretting and foaming was merely a language they employed to tell us of their strength and of their willingness to work for us. And while falling water is becoming each day a larger factor in burden bearing, water, rising in the form of steam, is revolutionizing transportation methods of the world.

5. Chapter Study. The division of the Bible into chapters is often arbitrary, and on one or two occasions the chapter ends in the middle of a paragraph. Yet I like to put over each chapter a few words which will remind me of the contents of the chapter. These headings serve as stepping stones which enable one to pass rapidly through the book and master it as a whole. I also like to jot down any word which arrests one's attention, to keep for future word study, also any topic or character which should be reserved for further study.

6. The Study of the Bible as a Whole. This of course is a life study. One has well said: "The Bible should not be treated as a wood-pile, from which one can take a fagot or an armful at random, but it must be regarded as a structure." Through the Bible three thoughts run—Ruin, Redemption, Regeneration. Both the Old Testament and the New Testament fall naturally each into four divisions, namely:—Manifestation, application, experience, and outlook. For example; the first division of the Old Testament gives us the Books of the Law in which God manifests his will through Moses.

Second—the application of this manifestation is found in the historical books—Joshua, Judges, Ruth (books of the commonwealth), 1 and 2 Samuel, 1 and 2 Kings, 1 and 2 Chronicles (books of the Kingdom), and Ezra, Nehemiah and Esther (books of foreign dominion).

The third main division embraces the books of experience. The Poetical books: Devotion (Psalms). Piety without Prosperity (Job). Piety and Prosperity (Proverbs). Prosperity without Piety (Ecclesiastes), until we come to the last chapter: The experience of Love—the Song of Solomon.

The fourth division consists of the books of outlook: The major and minor Prophets.

In the New Testament we have the same four-fold division. The manifestation of God's will as revealed in the person of Jesus Christ is found in the four Gospels. The application of this manifestation is found in the one historical book—the Acts of the Apostles, beginning from Jerusalem unto Rome and possibly beyond. The third division consists of the books of experience: St. Paul's letters, in which the major emphasis is on Faith; the letters of St. John, Love; St. James', Works; St. Peter's letters, Hope; Jude, Perseverance unto the end. The fourth division consists of but one book of outlook—the Revelation, from the Isle of Patmos to the Heavenly Jerusalem.

Some years ago, at the time of a coal strike, a friend of mine in Scotland said there was no real scarcity because people were living on surface coal; but had the strike continued a fortnight longer the surface coal would have been exhausted and real scarcity would have followed, as there were no men mining in the pits. He said: "I wonder if the young people of this generation are not living on surface truths, so few are going down daily into the shafts digging for the hidden treasures found in God's Word.—The Inter-Varsity Magazine.

JESUS TEACHING BY PARABLES—THE GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM

(Lesson for February 19)

Lesson Text: Mark 4:21-34; Golden Text: Isaiah 11:9

Daily Readings and Suggestions

A Law of Growth. Mark 4:21-25

"Unto you that hear shall more be given"—not hear as the first three kinds of soil in the parable of the sower, but as the part of the gospel of Christ which we have already learned to do serves as a foundation upon which we may build further. We do not really have anything unless it has become a part of our very soul, which is the only thing that survives eternally; and when the truth which we have received becomes a vital part of us, then further truth is revealed: to him that hath shall be given. But he who does not live up to his knowledge of the truth soon becomes hardened and loses what little light he had. Pray that we may so live as to grow.

TUESDAY

Parables of Growth. Mark 4:26-34

These parables especially refer to the growth of the kingdom, but they apply with equal force to the growth of individuals. In the parable of the growing seed, it is true that God himself gives the increase, in ways that we may understand only in part; but like Paul and Apollos, we must plant, and water, and cultivate, if the fruit is to be as perfect as God intends. Also, like the grain of mustard seed, many of God's greatest leaders have sprung from humble beginnings. They have become great, of course, only through that which they have received from God. May our beings ever be ready to drink in the rain and sunshine that comes from above.

The Growth of the Kingdom. Isa. 9:1-7

Like the leaven in the parable recorded in Matthew and Luke, the Kingdom of God is even now working mysteriously in the world, through the lives of believers. But Isaiah looks forward to the glorious day for which Jesus taught us to pray, the day when the Prince of Peace himself shall come, and his kingdom shall be established forever in the earth. This is indeed a blessed hope, and it is certain, for the "zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." What a privilege to have part in it!

THURSDAY

The Path of the Just. Prov. 4:18-27

Verse 18 is commonly supposed to mean that as one goes further and further along the way of truth, his life becomes more and more blessed. This in itself is true, but we believe the verse also teaches that as the just walk to and fro in the earth from day to day, their pathway sheds light upon those around them who sit in darkness. Are our own paths shining more and more each day? Let us ponder the paths of our feet and see that all our ways are established in him.

FRIDAY

Growing in Grace. 2 Pet. 3:11-18

In the scriptures are many things hard to be understood; we may, in our ignorance, wrest these things to our own destruction, or we may, if rightly led, grow in grace and knowledge. God's most important means of grace is a knowledge of his word, with his Holy Spirit to guide and instruct us therein, together with real communion with him. Let us spend much time in these two labors, that we may grow and "be strong in the Lord."

SATURDAY

The Glorious Progression. 2 Cor. 3:7-18

From day to day the child of God who keeps his thoughts centered upon the Lord is changed from glory to glory, ever becoming more and more like unto the Lord himself, until that glorious day when he shall return and we shall in very truth be like him, for we shall see him as he is! Such statements are almost beyond human comprehension, but such is the matchless promise of God.

SUNDAY

A Prayer for Understanding. Psalm 119:33-40

This prayer for understanding really outlines the great laws of growth. For example, in v. 33, if we are to grow we must not only be taught in the way of his statutes, but we must keep it unto the end. With this in mind, read the remaining verses and note the laws of growth which they teach. Then pray that we may understand those laws, and that we may find in Jesus Christ the incentive for living in accordance therewith. Pray, too, that we may be used in helping others to this same understanding; that they, too, may grow in grace and in that knowledge which shall make them like unto our Lord.

When You Plan Worship

By Betty Sholl

You are to plan and lead worship? Fine! When your service is over will the members of your group feel that they have experienced God? Will they feel refreshed because of the reverence and beauty of your service?

You will need to spend moments alone in which you yourself worship again and again through the service you have planned. You must feel it, let it become a part of you. You cannot give to the group what you yourself have not found in the service. Then when you lead you will have the poise necessary in every good leader of worship.

Your poise will partly depend upon your preparation. Have every detail arranged well in advance if the time you are to lead. Be sure that every one who is to share in the service, including the pianist, has an outline of the program and understands fully what his part is. But be so prepared that if any interruption or break comes on you can carry on with ease and graciousness.

Even when you have planned and led many worship services, you cannot put together a good program in fifteen minutes. Two hours is not too long to spend in collecting, arranging, and rearranging your materials, and sometimes you will not be satisfied even then.

Unless a theme has been given you, make your selection carefully. Do not choose some broad subject such as "Service." If your group needs to think of service you might take as your theme "Service Through My Job" or "To Know Thy Will, to Serve Thy Cause." The theme should always relate to some need of the group and should be to the point.

In order that your theme may be most effective, material must be wisely selected so that the service will rise to a climax and accomplish its purpose. If you have not been keeping a scrapbook of poems and miscellaneous material, start one now. In assembling material for a worship program, list all possible Scripture, all poems, stories, and prose selections that could be used. Look at the topical index in front of the hymnal and decide what headings might include usable hymns. Go through these sections listing those hymns best suited to your theme. With your material conveniently at hand begin to compile your service.

Begin with a prelude to make the transition from what may have gone before and to give the worshipful "set" to your service. Then build up the program using the best of the material you have listed. Let one element lead naturally to the next. In choosing hymns use only the stanzas which are appropriate, and if the hymn is long use only part of it. Seek to maintain a high level of quality throughout. Be sure to time your service before you lead it, so that it will not be too brief or too lengthy when you do give it.

Copy all your material on paper or into a notebook, five by seven inches in order to avoid the confusion of books and many papers. A loose-leaf notebook will be a good thing to keep a record of your services in.

Consider the atmosphere of the place of worship. Orderliness should be given thought. Scattered books, papers, disarranged chairs are not conducive to a worshipful attitude. Try using some symbolism—a picture, flowers, candles, a cross, but avoid constant repetition of one symbol. In everything try to create reverence and an appreciation of the beautiful.—Forward.

the back of my head, but his eyes were directed to Mabalive who was aiming at him. He gave a spring toward him but in a moment fell dead." Livingstone escaped marvelously, but the bone of his arm was crushed into splinters. For thirty years all his labors and adventures, entailing much exertion and fatigue, were undertaken with his arm so maimed that it was painful for him to raise it above the level of the shoulder.

Livingstone taught the natives the way to Christ and also instructed them in how to make gardens, raise cattle, and build houses. He taught their young people everything practical from carpentry to taking care of the sick. After his marriage to Doctor Moffatt's daughter, she taught the girls dressmaking. She was as brimful of bravery as her husband. He says of her, "When I took her with me on two occasions to Lake Gnome, and far beyond, she endured more than some who have written large books of travel."

Doctor Livingstone gives the following catalogue of his necessary accomplishments: "Building, gardening, cobbling, doctoring, tinkering, carpentering, gun-mending, wagon-mending, preaching, schooling, lecturing on physics, occupying a chair in divinity, and helping my wife make soap, candles, and clothes."

He continually fought the nefarious slave-trade, the horrors of which were beyond description. Three times Livingstone built his home, only to have it destroyed by slave-traders who hated him. After that, he was always homeless. It was necessary for his wife to go to England to plan for the education of their children. For three years he had no news from them; for two years the world heard nothing of him.

He returned to England after fifteen years. On this trip to the coast he had the fever thirty times. His wife sailed back to Africa with him, but in 1862, the dreadful fever took her away. "Oh, my Mary, my Mary how often we have longed for a quiet home, since you and I were cast adrift," he sobbed. "For the first time in my life I felt willing to die, yet am sustained by Christ's promise, 'Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end.'"

In 1864, Livingstone returned to England for the second and last visit. All kinds of honors, medals, and degrees from England, Scotland, France, and Italy were bestowed upon him. The Queen sent for him, having a private interview. He returned to the heart of Africa. In 1871 he had become almost a skeleton, and all his goods had been stolen. It was at this time he was found by Stanley, who had been commissioned by the New York Herald to find Livingstone, sparing no expense. It was a dramatic meeting.

"Tell me the news. It is two years since I have heard a word." Stanley urged him to return with him, but no, he felt Africa needed him.

On a May morning in 1873, his faithful black servant found Livingstone kneeling by the bedside with head bowed, but life was extinct. His faithful black friends laid his heart to rest in Africa, but his body, encased in tree bark and sail cloth, they carried over a thousand miles through the jungle to the ship that would bear it home.

David Livingstone traveled twenty-nine thousand miles in Africa and added to the known part of the globe about a million square miles. He discovered Lakes Ngami,

David Livingstone

By May Genevieve McGee

David Livingstone grew up in an humble home near Glasgow, Scotland. His birthday was March 19, 1813. It was a merry home of five boys and two girls. It is said that not an hour was lost during the six weekdays; that the day of rest was welcomed and honored; that books were read and loved; and that God was revered.

At the age of ten, David went to work in a cotton factory, as a piecer. Later he was promoted to a spinner. He had to be at the factory at six. With just a short time to rest and eat, his little hands would tie broken threads until eight at night. Fixed to the spinning-jenny was a Latin grammar so that while his fingers were busy, his brain could keep pace with the boys at school. He had purchased the grammar with part of his first earnings. By working at Latin, until midnight, he mastered Virgil and Horace by the time he was sixteen.

When he was twenty, a great conviction came to him and he decided to surrender his life to God and to give to the cause of missions all that he earned beyond his actual living expenses. He soon went to Glasgow to study for the ministry, where, as Doctor Hillis puts it, "He hired a garret, cooked his oatmeal, and studied, and made a little tea, and studied, went forth to walk, and studied ever."

During his second session at Glasgow, David Livingstone came to the great decision of his life. He decided to offer himself to one of the missionary societies for foreign service. He chose the London Missionary Society. In 1838, he traveled to London to appear before the Mission Board. The examinations were satisfactory and he was committed to the tutorage of Rev. Richard Cecil, to give proof of his preaching ability. One Sunday evening he was sent to preach in a nearby village. He gave out his text deliberately. That was all the congregation got. Midnight darkness came upon him in his nervous embarrassment.

"My friends," he said, with frank straightforwardness, "I have forgotten all I had to say," and hurrying out of the pulpit, he left the church.

Doctor Cecil reported that he feared Livingstone had mistaken his vocation. His probation, however, was extended, and he continued medical studies in London hospitals. In 1840, he returned to Glasgow, and qualified as a licentiate of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons.

When he decided on Africa, as the land for his work the whole world tried to scare him, with the exception of his own family. Death, they said, would meet him at every turn; between African fever, savage natives, and the merciless power of the sun, he would be cut off in his prime. But the strong, brave heart of David Livingstone was unshaken. A steamer would sail for Africa almost immediately and on that steamer he would go. He hurried home to say good-by to his father and mother, reaching home in the evening. At dawn, he left for a seven-mile walk to Glasgow.

David Livingstone was as daring and adventurous as the bravest explorer, but never, for one moment, did he falter in his great purpose which was to help redeem Africa, with a saving knowledge of the living Christ.

In five months he reached Africa, and by ox cart, traveled seven hundred miles into the interior to Kuvamau, Dr. Robert Moffatt's station. He isolated himself absolutely from all Europeans, living among the natives to learn their language and study their habits and laws. He made friends with the Bechnana chief Sechele, one of the most interesting and intelligent of the many great natives who surrendered to the charm of Livingstone.

He was directed to locate at Mabotsa and it was there that a lion nearly killed him. The lions would often come near the camp and roar. It took tremendous courage to lead lion hunts, but Livingstone was the man who could do it. They formed a circle one day, around a group of lions, but were afraid to throw their spears. Someone fired. Three animals roaring leaped through the line and escaped. As the attack seemed dangerous, the circle broke up, and they were about to return to the village, when from the other side of the hill Livingstone made out the outline of a tawny foe. He took aim and fired.

"He is shot!" the men shouted. "Let us go to him."

"Stop a little till I load again," warned Livingstone, for he saw the lion's tail erected in anger. He then heard a shout and looking half around saw the lion spring upon him.

"He caught me by the shoulder," reads his vivid account, "and we both came to the ground together. Growling horribly, he shook me as a terrier dog does a rat. The shock produced a stupor. He had a paw on Shiviva, Nyassa, Moero, and Bangweola, the upper Zambezi, and many other rivers. He made known the wonderful Victoria Falls.

He was a missionary traveler, geographer, genealogist, physician, but the most fundamental fact in his whole career was the absolute surrender of his will and mind to "his fair Captain, Christ."

England gave him a place in Westminster Abbey, with her poets and kings. On the slap she inscribed:

THE GRUDGING SPIRIT

"Rejoice with them that do rejoice." Little thing as this seems, it still is exceeding great, and requireth for it the spirit of true wisdom. And we might find many that perform the more irksome part, and yet want vigor for this. For many weep with them that weep, but still do not rejoice with them that rejoice. . . . So great is the tyranny of a grudging spirit.—Elizabeth Waterhouse.

generosity in serving the churches of this district. His contributions in time and energy and money to the welfare of the church have been very large. Greatly beloved by all, his services with us at the Mount Olive church were well attended. He spoke to a house well filled with good listeners almost every night. He was with us three weeks. There were eleven confessions and ten baptisms.

A Christmas program was prepared but not given in the Mt. Olive church due to the prevalence of "flu" at the time. The Bethlehem church presented a program but the pastor had the "flu" and so cannot tell it from first hand knowledge.

Both congregations at special programs showered Mrs. Locke and myself with a multitude of useful and attractive gifts for our new home. Our people have endeared themselves to us in many ways of which these showers are fair examples.

One of our folks from the Mount Olive church though living several thousand miles distant, remembered the entire church with a Christmas gift, a copy of "Undaunted Hope," which is being passed from home to home. Part of the good results of reading this valuable work we hope may be seen in the Easter Offering for Foreign Missions.

One of the features about the Mount Olive church which has pleased me greatly of late is the fine attendance of young people at our evening services.

A Christian Endeavor society has been reorganized at the Mount Olive church.

At Bethlehem there is an active Sisterhood of Mary and Martha.

S. M. M. girls of Maurertown visited us at Mount Olive not long ago with a playlet entitled "Missionary Arithmetic." It was an impressive way of bringing the truth and was greatly appreciated by our people here.

We made a promise some time ago to report on the Music Department of our church. At the beginning of the conference year, the Music Committee secured Mrs. Owen McCartneysmith, member of this church, to become the Minister of Music for the church.

A complete organization of the Music Department was effected. Because of this effort, we have a Senior choir, a Junior choir of High School students (who sing every Sunday at the opening of the Young People's division of the Sunday school), a Children's choir called "The Jewels," and a Men's Chorus, with ten voices.

The music of the church has been of very high order, wonderfully selected and full of inspiration and devotion. Our director is assisted by Mrs. Vernon Schrock and Mr. Graham Hay, also with Mrs. Harold Patterson as pianist and accompanist. Since the beginning of the new year there has been a class in methods and conducting.

At Christmas time the choirs of the church presented a very beautiful service—"The Messiah's Coming," choral, pictorial and dramatic. It consisted of three parts—(1) A King Is Promised, (2) The King Is Born, (3) The King Is Worshiped.

Music properly selected and presented becomes a real asset to the services of the

E. L. MILLER IN ACCIDENT

(The Editor is passing the following letter entire to the brotherhood that all our readers may know all that we have learned of the sad accident and be the better able to pray intelligently, as Brother Locke requests.)

Dear Dr. Baer:

It is my unhappy duty to inform you of the serious accident sustained by our Brother E. L. Miller. Brother Miller narrowly escaped sudden death last Wednesday night when the car driven by his brother-in-law, Mr. James B. Sunday skidded on a bad curve near Hogestown, Pennsylvania. Two of his cervical vertebrae were broken and he faces a month or two of absolute inactivity looking straight up at the ceiling of the Harrisburg Hospital, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Sunday were also slightly injured but are not confined to the hospital.

I visited Brother Miller yesterday and though he could scarcely open his mouth enough to speak for the cast, yet I found him to be his usual cheery self. He found all manner of things to be glad about. If no unfortunate complications aggravate his very serious condition he looks forward to being in a little more comfortable position after 3 weeks or more. For a man of Brother Millers' tremendous energy to be so very closely confined is a real hardship.

He has given me the responsibility of looking after his work as best I can. Brother George A. Copp ably filled the appointment last Sunday morning. It being the fifth Sunday (my Sunday free) I preached at night. When I announced the news of his accident there was many a moist eye. Brother Miller has been with us some time and he gets better and is better beloved all the while.

Brother Copp has graciously offered his services as preacher, excepting such times as he has another stated preaching appointment. Brother Copp is well known and well beloved here and his help at this time is much appreciated. I am hopeful that Brethren everywhere will pray earnestly for the speedy recovery of this noble man of God and that many who know him intimately throughout the brotherhood will remember him with letters. His address: A 2, Room 27, Harrisburg Hospital, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

Yours truly,
JOHN F. LOCKE.

NEWS OF BETHLEHEM AND MOUNT OLIVE BRETHREN CHURCHES

The Bethlehem church will be the meeting place of the Southeastern Conference of our churches this year in June. Already our people are beginning to prepare for that event. We are hoping to make the conference delegates' stay with us a very happy event for all concerned.

During the past year we enjoyed the ministry of Brother E. L. Miller in a revival. Additions were made to our membership and every one was strengthened. Our people frequently call upon Brother Miller and he generously responds.

Our church suffered the loss of a faithful leader in Brother Lee A. Logan, who had served as superintendent of the Sunday school for almost 20 years. Brother Timothy D. Swartz has been selected to carry on the work of superintendent.

Despite the hard times our folks have carried forward the work of the church without any deficit. We are hoping to do better than ever for Foreign Missions at Easter time and we hope and pray that the church as a whole will beat last year's record.

A few new subscriptions to the Evangelist have been secured. We consider the paper ably edited and following after things which make for peace and mutual edification.

At this time some are sick among us but are faithfully trusting HIM.

Elder J. M. Bowman whose faith was rewarded by his being made whole of a grievous physical affliction is a faithful member of Bethlehem church. At the time of this writing he is enjoying good health.

The Mount Olive church enjoyed in November a series of Evangelistic sermons by our beloved brother, previously mentioned, i. e., the Rev. E. L. Miller. It is difficult to pay sufficient tribute to Rev. Miller's church. We have been invited to broadcast from the Waterloo station at an early hour some Sunday evening soon. We will try to inform our readers of the date.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

EVANGELISTIC ITEMS Johnstown, Pennsylvania

For five nights, the latter part of October, I gave my Bible Chart lectures in the Third Brethren church of Johnstown, of which Brother Joe Gingrich is pastor. Although I had never worked with Brother Gingrich I had often noted his expert advice in the district conference.

We were glad for the presence of Brother Ashman and a delegation from his church and also Brother Schaffer and his people from Conemaugh. In our time so many churches have turned to politics and social service, but Brother Gingrich is determined that his church will be famous for the Gospel, and I believe that he is succeeding in drawing the attention of the goodly element in the community.

McKee

November 13 we began a two weeks' meeting at the McKee, Pennsylvania, church. Brother E. S. Flora preached six nights and I gave my Bible Chart lectures on the other nights except Thanksgiving evening, when I spoke at the union meeting in Martinsburg. Brother Long, pastor of the Church of the Brethren in Altoona, spoke at McKee on that evening.

We spent a busy and happy week with Brother Flora, calling in homes in the forenoon and in the afternoon attending a Bible class in Altoona, taught by Mel Trotter.

Yellow Creek

November 28 I began a two weeks' meeting with my Bible Chart lectures at the Brethren church at Yellow Creek, Pennsylvania, where Brother E. S. Flora is pastor. It was exactly two years before that we worked together in a meeting in Spokane, Washington.

These people love their pastor and show forth their love in a practical manner. Not only was there a continual inflow of the necessities of life and invitations out for meals, but one evening when we returned from church we were surprised to find the kitchen table overloaded and one room filled with people from the Raystown church.

Believing that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, I have tried to make full use of the remaining time in my pastoral work. In meetings, in writing articles for papers and in getting out my booklets and tracts as I receive orders from far and near. During the meetings at Yellow Creek, it became evident that I was to the end of the strength of my nerves. On Sunday evening, I fully determined not to preach the next week and told some of the people at Martinsburg but on Monday I felt stronger and preached that night. On returning to my home in Martinsburg, the W. M. S. were in the parsonage making bandages for Africa. As I entered the room they asked how I felt and I told them that I was much stronger. Immediately Sister Mary Klepser replied, "Well, maybe the Lord has answered our prayers." Certainly, like Paul when the brethren met him at Appii forum, I thanked God and took courage, (Acts 28:15). There is a real conflict in the air between the mighty fallen princes of Satan and the holy angels of God and the outcome often depends upon the prayers of God's saints here on earth (Dan. 10:13).

Cumberland, Maryland

I began a three nights' meeting with my Bible Chart lectures with the Brethren at Cumberland, on December 14. I made my home with the pastor, Brother C. H. Wakeman and family, and a most hospitable home it was in every way. Brother Wakeman is one of the most universally beloved men I have ever met.

In pastoral work and meetings, three have been baptized two reconsecrations and two added by letter.

Martinsburg, Pennsylvania

January 9 we began what we thought was to be a two weeks' meeting, at Martinsburg, under the leadership of Rev. Earl Bowser, pastor of the Church of the Brethren at Juniata. Brother Bowser is almost a local boy and his presence attracted attention far and wide.

An earnest soul, preaching a pure fundamental message, winged on its way by the Holy Spirit, was too much for stolid indifference and the audience increased until there was a full house on Sunday night. We had planned to close on the second Sunday evening but a packed house (many turned away) and several conversions convinced us that the Lord was leading for another week. Martinsburg and community have seldom if ever seen such an awakening. One woman living in the country became so convicted while she was doing her ironing that she drove to the parsonage one forenoon.

Among those coming forward were both children and adults. We do not make the mistake, that is often made, of apologizing for the children. Certainly they are worth just as much in the sight of the Lord as any adult, and we thank God for those who remember their Creator in the days of their youth.

Some of those coming forward came to join this church, others to be baptized and join another church, etc. In the book of Acts, baptism was an immediate act and during this meeting we tried to carry out the same plan. A baptismal service was held the second Sunday evening when three were baptized, the next evening ten partook of the same ordinance. Tuesday evening two were baptized and Wednesday evening there was one and another on Sunday. In all there were twenty-one that came forward.

"To God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ for ever."

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF SOUTH-GATE, CALIFORNIA

The Lord has greatly blessed and honored his work at this place.

In the past six months 25 have joined our group; most of which came through confession and being baptized.

Our pastor has led into a more faithful study of the Word. Many have expressed their desire to read the Bible through this year, aside from the study for the regular services. Two Bible classes a week are being held in the homes of a part of the city where there are no churches, and many are being reached in this way. Eight of our new members were first contacted through the Home Bible classes. We have just finished a study of the book of Daniel in the Wednesday night prayer meetings and are now starting Paul's Epistle to the Romans. We thank God for a pastor who loves the Book and can teach it.

In November we received a great spiritual blessing from two weeks' meetings with Brothers Lynn, Leinhard, and Bauman; also Drs. Isaac Ward and William Pike.

Our Sunday school record was broken on Rally Day with 206 present. The average Sunday school attendance during October, November, and December was 149 against that of 131 over the same period last year.

We celebrated our third anniversary the last Sunday in October with an all day meeting. At the close of the afternoon service many rededicated their lives to Christ. We thank him for the blessing and strength we received at our last communion service. There were several attended who had never before been to a Brethren communion. These all testified to the joy and blessing it gave them. The whole service was one of quiet and reverence.

We ask for your prayers that we might be found faithful as a church and as individuals.

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA

The National Convention of Evangelists and Christian Workers has just closed at Indianapolis, Indiana, being held in the Cadle tabernacle seating ten thousand and in the eight days sessions nearly one hundred thousand people attended. The Convention Director, Evangelist Elmer C. Miller, of South Bend, Indiana, states it was the most successful convention and most largely attended of any ever held.

Reports from every part of the U. S. by leading evangelists indicate that pastors and churches everywhere are preparing for great emphasis on evangelism and arranging for revivals during the year. A number of evangelists report they are engaged for many months ahead and some for over a year. The imperative need of a nationwide revival is apparent to all.

Many prominent speakers were heard on the program among whom were Dr. Robert G. Lee of Memphis, Tennessee; Dr. J. C. Masee, of Atlanta, Georgia; Lou Hill of New York; Harry W. Vom Bruch of Long Beach, California; McKendree Long, of Statesville, North Carolina; Howard Williams of Hattiesburg, Mississippi; Dr. Chas. A. Brewbaker, of Dayton, Ohio; Dr. Earl Naftzgar, and Dr. John S. Hamilton of Winona Lake, Indiana; Mrs. George Dibble of Bloomington, Michigan. Among the noted musicians were Homer Rodheaver, Arthur McKee, Walter McDonald, Virgil Brock, John Troy, George Dibble, Paul White, James Kindig and numbers of others.

Meetings were held all over Indianapolis and suburbs by the visiting delegates and over two thousand decisions for Christ in conversions and renewals were reported by the pastors and evangelists. The whole city and community were deeply stirred and a number of revivals began in the churches immediately at the close of the Convention and others are being arranged.

This Convention is held annually under the auspices of the Interdenominational Evangelistic Association, of Winona Lake, Indiana, of which Dr. W. E. Beiderwolf is President, Billy Sunday, Vice-President, Dr. Elmer C. Miller Executive Secretary, R. Hayes Willis, Treasurer.

Invitations were received from New York,

Chicago, Detroit, Washington Philadelphia, Indianapolis, Toronto, Long Beach, New Orleans, and other cities for the convention next year.

GRITTER, IOWA

This community Sunday school was organized one year ago. Brethren, Methodist and Christian church people are those who worship at the Gritter school house. The average attendance was about twenty for the year 1932. Six persons were converted, four of whom were baptized by trine immersion and two were baptized by the Christian church. Five went to the Christian church and one to the Pleasant Grove church.

It seems rather strange that some Brethren churches will go pastorless when there are preachers of their own faith to be had, and preachers who are willing to share conditions with them. Sunday schools are good, but they never can take the place of the preaching of the Gospel. And the church that tries to get along without a pastor will soon find itself losing out.

There is another thing that is helping to make churches weak. People are getting too worldly. The movies, card parties and dancing are having too large a place among church people. Some preachers say nothing against these things, and some do, but those who do are having trouble over it. This pleasure seeking gang is leading the church away from Christ instead of the church leading them to Christ. . . . It's time we were following Christ, and not our own ways.

MRS. FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT TOLD AVERAGE GIRLS DO NOT DRINK

An Open Letter of Protest to Wife of President-elect

Dear Mrs. Roosevelt:

An article in our morning paper saying that a statement of yours brought forth a "shocked protest" from a group of women leaders in Topeka, brings forth an equally shocked protest from me. You were quoted as saying that "the average girl of today faces the problem very young how much she can drink of such things as whisky and gin and sticking to the proper quantity." If you have been correctly quoted, you surely do not know the "average girl of today." I would not undertake to inform you were I not an "average girl of today."

I am eighteen years of age. I was graduated from a standard high school a little more than a year ago and I am now attending the Nashville Business College. I cannot remember one instance when I have seen a girl of my own age under the influence of liquor, and I can remember seeing but three boys of my own age intoxicated, or even "drinking." I am a member of no dry organization. I am no prig. I am merely an "average girl" who is indignant at hearing girls accused of something of which they are not guilty.

Instead of drinking, we "average" young people are planning in due course of time to run our respective communities and the United States, while the drinking low-down-high-ups are reaping their crop of wild oats.

Drinking went out of style with the "post war" group of young people. Drinking and many other such things of which we are accused are frightfully old-fashioned. The young people of today are interested in athletics and many other things that require a strong body, a clear brain, steady nerve and quick thinking, and all of those things drink destroys. The girls and boys of today enjoy sports and games that challenge the mind. Girls of today are going into the business field because they like it. You can't be successful in the business field if you are in the habit of drinking. No stenographer who has a "hang-over" headache can take dictation or do typing, nor can she perform many other duties well. Our pride makes us want to do things well.

It is true that in some groups in thickly populated sections, in some large cities, in some communities, such conditions as you spoke of do exist—but you said "average."

Some wet agitators have said that they want legal liquor for the sake of the young

PRAY—GIVE—GO

*Three things the Master hath to do,
And we who serve Him here below
And long to see His kingdom come
May Pray or Give or Go.
He needs them all,—the Open Hand
The Willing Feet, the Praying Heart—
To work together and to weave
A threefold cord that shall not part.
Nor shall the giver count his gift
As greater than the worker's deed,
Nor he in turn his service boast
Above the prayers that voice the need.
Not all can Go; not all can Give
To speed the message on its way,
But young or old, or rich or poor,
Or strong or weak—we all can Pray;—
Pray that the gold-filled hands may Give
To arm the others for the fray;
That those who hear the call may Go,
And pray that other hearts may Pray!

people—that they are drinking any and everything now—that at least it would be pure if it were legal, government-inspected liquor. Let me tell you, we don't need liquor for the sake of the young people. We don't even like the taste of it. We don't like the effects it produces. If the older people want it, let them say so; but they should at least have the courage to say they want it, and not try to hide behind a false statement that it is for our sakes. If we, the young people, were allowed to vote on the question, the proposition to legalize alcoholic beverages would be defeated by an overwhelming majority. If the people of voting age can withstand the wet wave just long enough for us, the average boys and girls, to get our vote, you may be sure that alcoholic beverages will never again be legalized. We cannot afford to hazard our future for drink. We do not want it.

You don't know the "average girl," Mrs. Roosevelt. To get the average, you must take all of us the country over, and doing that you will find that we may not be saying much, but we have our opinions—and they are NOT in favor of legalizing alcoholic beverages, and they are not in favor of the illegal stuff used now. No, the "average girl" does not have to learn early how much she can drink, and she doesn't keep within that quantity, because there is no need. We do not drink the stuff at all.

OSTA M. UNDERWOOD.
Nashville, Tennessee.

Would you make your life count? Then do good.

In manifesting the nature of God, it is significant that Christ did not stand afar off and forbid approach to his holy presence. His supreme revelations were expressed in the midst of men, in group association, not in aloofness. They expressed the ideal of unity, not discordance; of progress, not retrogression; of faith, not doubt; of love and sympathy, not hate and harshness. And he bids us to be like him.

"Abraham Lincoln was brought up in a Christian home. No boy ever received more definite Christian training than that given to him by Nancy Hanks and Sally Johnston. He knelt at the family altar. He went to church. He was swept by the emotions kindled at camp-meetings. He heard the great revivalists like Cartwright and Akers. There never was a time when he was not interested mind and heart in Christian preaching and in Christian experience. His old friend, Billy Brown, said in 1896:

"I never knew anybody who seemed to me more interested in God, more curious about him, more anxious to find out what he was drivin' in at the world than Mr. Lincoln. I reckon he was allus that way. The Bible was the whole thing, and there ain't any doubt he knew it pretty near by heart, knew it well before he could ever read."—Ez.

of the human arm and supplied the masses with comforts of which the rich did not dare to dream a few centuries ago. Science is ferreting out the hidden causes of disease and teaching us to prolong life. In every line, except in the line of character-building, the world seems to have been made over, but the marvelous changes by which old things have become new only emphasize the fact that man, too, must be born again, while they show how impotent are material things to touch the soul of man and transform him into a spiritual being. Wherever the moral standard is being lifted up—wherever life is becoming larger in the vision that directs it and richer in its fruitage, the improvement is traceable to the Bible and to the influence of the God and Christ of whom the Bible tells.

The atheist and the materialist must confess that man ought to be able to produce a better book today than man, unaided, could have produced in any previous age. The fact that they have tried, time and again, only to fail each time more hopelessly, explains why they will not—why they cannot—accept the challenge thrown down by the Christian world to produce a book worthy to take the Bible's place.

They have prayed to their god to answer with fire—prayed to inanimate matter with an earnestness that is pathetic—they have employed in the worship of blind force a faith greater than religion requires, but their almighty is asleep. How long will they allow the search for the strata of stone and fragments of fossil and decaying skeletons that are strewn around the house to absorb their thoughts to the exclusion of the architect who planned it all! How long will the agnostic, closing his eyes to the plainest truths, cry "night, night," when the sun in his meridian splendor announces that noon is here.

The Bible has stamped its impress upon the map of the world; its boundaries are clearly marked, and the light that emanates from the Christian nations is flowing outward toward those who sit in darkness. Back of the progress that marks the present day is the code of morals that Christ proclaimed, and back of that code of morals is the divine character of him who is both Son of God and Savior of Mankind. It is not necessary to rely upon his birth as a virgin's child, or upon his mysterious resurrection, to prove his claim to our worship. "He walks today along the shores of every sea," and performs that continuing miracle which we behold when a man begins "to hate the things he loved and to love the things he hated"—that mysterious exercise of mysterious power that converts the selfish, self-centered human being into a center from which good influences flow out in every direction.

The followers of Buddha may look upon life as a misfortune, if they will, and see escape only in the loss of individual identity—"the dewdrop melting into the sea;" those who believe in the Bible will still regard life as a great opportunity to be crowned with a heavenly reward.

The followers of the Arab prophet may put their faith in force and rely upon the sword for proselyting power; those who believe in the Bible will still trust in the persuasive influence of love, and depend upon its manifestations to bring recruits to the army of the Prince of Peace.

The followers of Confucius may content themselves with the negative philosophy of their teacher; those who believe in the Bible renew their strength in proportion as they embody in their lives the precepts of him who would make man a positive force for good—an overflowing spring.

The materialist may confine his thoughts to the things that the senses can weigh and measure; the Christian's faith reaches out toward the throne above and takes hold upon the verities that the mind cannot grasp.

The atheist may delude himself with the thought that he has driven God out of the universe; the Christian sees the Creator everywhere, hears his voice in the promptings of conscience and feels his presence in his heart.

To the doubts and "I do not know's" of the agnostic, the Christian, Bible in hand, answers: "I believe."—The American Bible Society.

THE SHORTEST WAY HOME

"Let's take a short cut home from school this afternoon," said Dave to his younger brother, Joe. "It's most a mile and a half around by the road and takes us half an hour, but I'm sure we could get there in fifteen minutes if we went straight across the lots."

"All right, let's," said Joe. "Are you sure mother won't care?"

"I asked her this morning," replied Dave, "and she told me she didn't think it was a very good plan, but we could try it if we wanted to. And then she said that sometimes the longest way around was the shortest way home. I don't see what she meant by that. The longest way couldn't be the shortest."

"Maybe when mother sees how much sooner we get home this way she'll think it's a good plan, after all," said Joe.

They left the road and crossed the fields in the direction of their home. It was easy walking at first: across a smooth meadow, then over a plowed field. It was April, but spring was late and the ground still frozen.

Over the fence from the field was a stretch of woods. The underbrush was thick, and the boys were forced to go slowly.

"Ouch!" exclaimed Dave, as a climbing green brier scraped across his face. "I'll be glad when we get out of here."

"So will I," said Joe. "My legs are scratched most to pieces, and I've torn a big hole in one stocking."

The woods soon thinned out into a scattered growth of trees, but here the boys found themselves in new trouble. The ground had been sloping down for some time and now might fairly be called a swamp. Here for the first time the boys found ground that was not frozen. Pick their way as carefully as they could, still they made a misstep now and then. In a few minutes both had feet that were wet and muddy to the shoe tops.

"How're we going to get across here, I'd like to know?" demanded Joe. "It's too wide to jump."

"If it were warm weather, we could wade; it isn't deep," said Dave. "But I don't want to get my feet any wetter. They're most frozen now. We'll go along the bank a ways, and maybe we'll find a log we can cross on."

"Wonder what time it is?" said Joe. "Seems to me our short cut isn't so very short. I'm getting tired. We'd have been home long ago if we'd gone around by the road."

"You're right, Joe," agreed his brother. "I begin to understand what mother meant about the longest way around being the shortest. But cheer up, I see an old tree trunk across the stream ahead, and I guess we can get over on that."

The tree trunk proved to be rather small and did not look very strong, but Joe managed to get safely across. Not so with Dave, however. Though only a year older, he was much heavier than his brother. He only was halfway across the stream when there came a sharp crack, and the next instant Dave found himself up to his knees in icy water. It was only a few steps to shore and he soon scrambled out; but in his excitement he dropped the spelling book and arithmetic which he had been carrying. Before he could get them out they were soaked through and through.

"Well!" exclaimed Dave, putting the dripping books into his lunch box. "Let's hurry up and get home before anything else happens."

They hurried through a short stretch of woods and came out on the edge of a large cleared field.

"Oh, I know where we are now!" cried Dave. "That yellow barn is Mr. Ryder's. The road is just beyond it. But say," he continued, "I guess we haven't come very straight. We're most a half a mile past our house."

"Oh dear," sighed Joe. "I thought we were most home. Well, come on."

They were hardly ten yards from the fence, however, when Dave stopped short; then, seizing his brother by the arm, he whirled him about. "Run!" he shouted. "Run! Back over the fence! Quick!"

The boys threw themselves over the fence with not a second to spare. Mr. Ryder's big white bulldog was scarcely a yard behind.

"I forgot all about him," panted Dave. "He won't let anybody go across the Ryder farm. We've got to go around."

And go around it they did, over sticks, stones, and briars. They were both tired at length two cold, wet, scratched boys now, and they stumbled and fell often; but tumbled over the fence and into the road.

"Most home now," said Dave, "and I guess we won't try that short cut again very soon."

"I know I won't," said Joe. "And maybe next time you'll believe mother knows best, even though you don't understand."

"I certainly will," agreed Dave.—Sunday School Times.

OUR READERS' VIEWS

Excerpts from our Correspondence

Dear Brother Baer:

I heartily agree with everything Brother J. C. McBride said in the Brethren Evangelist, number 4, about the importance of the family spirit amongst us, and of greeting one another as "Brother" or "Sister So-and-So." I too have noticed with a pang of regret the very things he referred to. May we all adhere strictly to our Master's spirit, teaching and example of our blessed Lord and also the teachings and examples set by those who were instructed by him.

SCIENTIFIC Heresy

For some time it has been impossible to read a newspaper without running into a hot discussion of Technocracy. It appears, now that the smoke of battle has cleared away, that the chief Technocrat, Mr. Howard Scott, has been found guilty of departing from scientific orthodoxy. One by one, most of his associates have repudiated his much publicized conclusions. He has been formally disallowed by Columbia University and cast out of the scientific synagogue.

One thing is certain: Mr. Scott's declaration that with proper management and distribution of wealth each of us could have the equivalent of $20,000 per year by working four hours a day, stirred up a lot of excitement; especially, I noticed, among those who own the factories. But we might have known it was too good to be true.

To revert to my first paragraph:—If the scientific groups sometimes feel it necessary to excommunicate a heretic, why should not the Christian Church be granted the same right?

THE Magic of Words

A famous lawyer, writing in the Saturday Evening Post on the causes of our increase in crime, believes that the most important factor is THE LOSS OF THE SENSE OF RIGHT AND WRONG. "People don't believe in sin any more," he says. Wrong actions are no longer called "wicked." Instead they are called "antisocial." Criminals are not "sinners." They are "introverts" and "extraverts." But the writer points out that "Scientific terminology does not alter facts. Elegant words are a frail shield against lawless thugs. Murder, burglary and kidnapping are doubtless antisocial; we submit that they are also desperately wicked."

It is quite well known that superstitious and primitive peoples sometimes have believed that by giving a name to something mysterious it could be controlled. It would seem, at times, that the shadow of this ancient superstition has not been wholly banished from the realm of modern science.

You cannot solve the problem of sin by giving it new names.

PREPARE Ye the Way

Before God's Messiah appeared in public ministry, he was preceded by a forerunner whose work was to prepare the way of the Lord. Likewise, there will be false prophets whose work will consist in preparing the way of the Antichrist. They will make it their business to gradually identify God with humanity, and so direct the eyes of men away from the "God of heaven" and toward the "values and ideals of humanity." Such prophets are becoming both plentiful and popular.

Professor G. B. Smith says: "The worship of God in a democracy will consist in reverence for those human values which democracy makes supreme."

A British writer insists that God must be thought of as "The Common Will of all living creatures."

Another says: "Do you ask me whether God is simply the spirit of humanity? I reply that God is essentially and simply just that."

These are but echoes of what President G. Stanley Hall of Clark University used to teach, that "God is the truth, virtue, beauty of man"; and that the real atheist is only he "who denies these attributes to man."

Such utterances are only a bit of the tide which will at last sweep the world, and (when the restraining power of the Church is removed) enthrone a Man in the place of God. (2 Thess. 2:1-12).

THE Horrors of the Next War

The Hon. Stanley Baldwin, former Prime Minister of England, some time ago delivered a speech in Parliament for the purpose of making clear to his hearers what will happen when war breaks out again among the major nations of the world.

He said, "In the next war you will find that any town within reach of an aerodrome can be bombed within the first five minutes of war to an extent inconceivable in the last war, and the question is: Whose morale will be shattered quickest by that preliminary bombing."

"It is well for the man in the street to realize that there is no power on earth that can protect him from being bombed. The bomber will always get through. The bombing airplanes will be at least 20,000 feet high in the air, and perhaps higher. The only defense is offense, which means that you have got to kill more women and children more quickly than the enemy if you want to save yourselves."

"Will any form of prohibition, whether by convention, treaty, agreement, or anything else, not to bomb be effective in war? Quite frankly, I doubt it. . . . If a man has a potential weapon and has his back to the wall, he will use that weapon whatever it is."

"As far as the air is concerned there is no way of complete disarmament except the abolition of flying. That, again is impossible. It might be a good thing for this world if man had never learned to fly."

What a pessimistic conclusion! After man's long and painful climb to the heights of scientific discovery, a climb which promised so much for the well-being of humanity, we find now that perhaps it had been better if we had not climbed so high.

LAYING the Blame on Machines

Observing the advance of scientific discovery and mechanical invention, men have noticed two things: First, that the machine in times of peace has displaced thousands of laboring men; and, second, that in time of war it has made possible the destruction of civilization. Hence some very thoughtful men are wondering whether, after all, science and invention may not be a curse instead of a blessing to humanity.

Such an opinion misses the mark entirely. The evil is not in the machine; it is in man. Inventions are good, but the men that use them are sinners. The fatal weakness in civilization is not in things, but in the hearts of men. The Apostle pointed this out accurately 1900 years ago. Men in that day and before had thought the moral law was sufficient to produce a perfect society. When it failed, they were inclined to blame the law. Paul, in a striking passage, points out that the difficulty is not with the law, but with man. "What the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh—" (Rom. 8:3) There was nothing wrong with the moral law; its impotence was not due to any inherent defect in itself, but to a fatal defect in man.

The same distinction should be made in the case of science and the machine. We might say today, as Paul said of the Law, that science is good and holy. Why then does that which is good become death unto men? The answer is: "I am carnal, sold under sin." Man who is a sinner uses the gifts of God to destroy himself.

The world's greatest need in the present hour is not better machines but better men. And only Christ can supply this need.

THE ignorance of the Learned

Buchmanism, which was in vogue in certain places some years ago and then largely died out in this country, has recently acquired a new lease of life. The so-called "conversion" of the son of Harvey Firestone has given the movement wide publicity here in Ohio, and a campaign is being carried on in the cities to secure adherents. The pastors should acquaint themselves with its methods and ideas so as to be able to meet it successfully. Dr. Bingham, editor of the Evangelical Christian, has a splendid article in the last issue. There is not a great deal of literature on the subject. The Philadelphia School of the Bible has two good tracts.

A prominent Unitarian preacher of Cleveland recently discussed Buchmanism. After commending it for several things, he severely criticized it on the ground of its theology, saying that the "Theology underlying the movement is of a fundamentalist variety."

One cannot help but think that this Unitarian preacher is either not acquainted with Buchmanism or else he knows nothing about "Fundamentalist theology." Certainly the movement as manifested in Ohio has displayed no convictions on the fundamentals of Christian faith.

Sharing With Others in Need

Times like these have taught us what sharing means. When no one has much and many have nothing, those who have even a little are constrained, even if for no other reason than mere human sympathy, to share with those who have nothing. No decent attitude toward our fellowmen will allow us to stand unmoved and unconcerned while they suffer from lack of food and clothing. No proper respect for the personality of others will permit us to pass by on the other side while they lie helpless and suffering from the robbers of these times. A normal, natural concern for those of our kind will move us to divide our loaf and to share our warmth and protection.

But far more strongly and unselfishly is the Christian made to feel for those who are in need. Into his life has come a spirit of sympathy, a sense of responsibility and an attitude of helpfulness that is new and distinct. This kindly spirit is inescapable; it goes along with the very nature of his religion. He who has been captured by the spirit and power of Christ, is by that very fact inflamed and motivated by love, and love is sympathizing and helpful.

Here is the evidence from John's first epistle: "Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit." Again we read: "And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us." And love and kindness characterize the spirit that he gives. That is the spirit that comes into our hearts when in all sincerity we confess Jesus as our Savior and take him into our hearts. For John writes: "Whoso shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God." Then comes this wonderful testimony: "And we have known and believed the love that God hath for us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." "Beloved," he appeals, "if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." And we must and we will, if our love for God is sincere and our knowledge of God is real. For, "he that loveth not, knoweth not God."

And what is the simple evidence of the presence of that love in our lives? Is it not that we be found faithful in the very thing that we are asked to do at this season? We are being asked to share what we have with those who have not. That is the plea of this approaching Benevolence Day. John could not have written more to the point if he had been asked to contribute definitely to the plea for this occasion. Hear him: "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and slutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Truly, "the love of Christ constraineth us" to share of our abundance or of our meagre supply with those who have need.

And if we are willing, and only want a method, we may turn to Paul and get good counsel from him. He was engaged in doing this very thing we are attempting to do at this season—raising an offering with which to care for some of the poor saints of his day—people who lived in Jerusalem. To the church at Corinth he wrote: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." The only way by which we shall be able to collect a respectable offering this year, one that will meet the needs of our distracted Boards, is by some such method as Paul suggests, and we will not do that unless we are led to take the task seriously. And it becomes the responsibility of the leaders of God's Israel to lay this duty upon the hearts of his people. All must be brought to share a feeling of responsibility and then to share of the substance God has given us, whether it be much or little. "Freely ye have received," in varying measures, "freely give."

Bearing of Arms and Religious Conviction

The question is becoming daily more serious and doubtful as to whether a citizen of the United States may have good standing and at the same time exercise his conscience against war and the bearing of arms. The militarizing groups in our country are steadily driving the issue to more embarrassing proportions to the conscientious objector, and the oath of allegiance is steadily being interpreted more and more widely and definitely to require a pledge to combatant service. And all this in the face of a steadily increasing number of churches to declare definitely and positively against war and the bearing of arms. Right now there are several instances of pressure being brought to bear on the issue that may well give concern to those who cling to the New Testament teaching concerning war.

Two students were recently suspended from the University of Maryland because of their refusal to take military training. One of them, Emnis H. Coale, took the matter to the courts, and Judge Joseph N. Ulman of Baltimore, has decided in his favor, granting a writ of mandamus ordering the University to accept Coale as a student and exempt him from military training. It seems that this University had been allowing exemption from military service to members of the Friends church and the court held that Coale was sincere in his religious convictions and was entitled to the same consideration as a member of the Friends church. The judge said: "The Court has no difficulty in finding that, tested pragmatically, the rule of the Methodist Episcopal Church, (of which the student is a member) and the rule of the Society of Friends are identical. An analysis of the resolution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a comparison of said resolution with the quotation from the Book of Discipline of the Society of Friends, reveals no essential difference between the religious tenets of the two groups on this question. Both religious organizations deplore war and the preparation of war. Both support their members in refraining from such activity." This court's decision is encouraging for the conscientious objector, but it is likely that the decision will be appealed.

Another judge shows a similar respect for conscience in his interpretation of the oath of citizenship in permitting Prof. John P. Klasson of Bluffton College to take the oath with a reservation on bearing of arms. It is likely true that Judge E. E. Everett of Lima, Ohio, in making this decision, lays himself open to a reversal by the United States Supreme Court which in the Schwimmer case of more than a decade ago and the McIntosh-Bland cases of 1931, apparently "closed the door of citizenship to those who will not admit the obligation to bear arms," as the Cleveland Plain Dealer thinks. But it indicates the trend of the unutilitarian minded officials. Prof. Klasson is a Mennonite, served as a Red Cross worker in the World War and is a respected and useful member of the community. Yet the naturalization bureau of the government is determined to make a formidable fight to defeat him in his effort to secure citizenship rights.

Also the courts have before them the case of Rev. T. F. Rutledge Beale, of St. Paul, Minnesota, who is seeking to become an American citizen without pledging himself to fight, on the basis of the Kellogg pact outlawing war. The naturalization bureau officials are discounting the force of that document, while Former Secretary of State Kellogg is defending it.

But more significant is the case of Martha Jane Graber, who was denied citizenship because she refused to take an oath to kill, though she said she was willing to pledge herself to give her own life if need be for her country if granted citizenship rights. As a trained nurse she was willing to go to the front in war to relieve suffering, but she was not willing to fight, to kill, to bear arms. Her religion forbade that. God bless her for her courage. Do we have the same courage?

These "Don'ts" are Wise

Pedagogs have been drilling into our minds that it is unwise to be telling folks, "Don't do this, and "Don't do that." But there are times when "Don'ts" are perfectly in order and wise. And we believe the present is just such a time. When we tell you what we have in mind, possibly you will say, But you have told us that before, and so we must admit that we have, in our own way, but we have found some one else who has said it in a different way, and it looks good. When we read these "don'ts" they seemed to stick, and we are passing them on with the hope that they may make as strong an impression on Evangelist readers as they did on us. They appeared first in an editorial in the Michigan Christian Advocate and we noticed that the Reformed Church Messenger liked them, too. Here they are:

"Don't kill the preacher to save the church building.

"Don't take the interest on your debt out of the preacher's salary. There is enough coming out of that now.

"Don't turn aside from real stewardship and tithing in frantic efforts to raise money out of others.

"Don't talk poverty all the time. The community depends on the church to keep it out of the slime of pessimism."

And we would add one more "don't" to this collection:

Don't forget that preaching is the most important part of your church program, and anything or everything else can afford to be dispensed with before you decide you cannot afford preaching.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The best suggestion we have yet seen as to the way out of the depression, is a revival of the study of the Word of God,—and to be effective, it would have to be a devotional study.

A letter from Brother I. D. Bowman arrived too late for publication, but we are holding up the paper long enough to get in this item. He asks that the brotherhood unite in prayer for the speedy recovery of Brother E. L. Miller, who lies in the Harrisburg Hospital, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, as a result of an auto accident (as previously reported) and that the hour for special prayer be 9 P. M. daily. Let us unite.

We are sorry to have to omit this week the new department, "The Voice of the Church," which has met with wide approval. But we must give right of way to the appeals for the Benevolence Day offering. Next week the department will be resumed. Both ministers and lay leaders are invited to make use of it. Help to make it expressive of the thought and life of the brotherhood.

This is Benevolence Day offering number. The time for lifting the offering is February 26 and the object is two-fold: The support of the Superannuated Ministers, and of the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana. And do not forget that you are to send the amount you want to give to the Superannuated Ministers' Fund to Rev. G. L. Maus, Secretary, Nappanee, Indiana, and the amount for the Brethren Home should be sent to Henry Rinehart, Treasurer, Flora, Indiana.

Brother G. L. Maus, secretary of the Superannuated Ministers' Fund, to whom offerings for work are to be sent, is anxious that offerings be sent promptly, as these aged brothers and sisters have been without their checks for months already. Also he asks us to warn you not to make the mistake of sending your money to some other member of the Board, as some have done, as this will both incur extra expense and add to the delay. Also remember his change of address, he is now at Nappanee, Indiana.

Our good people of Ellet, Ohio, are rejoicing in a very successful evangelistic campaign recently conducted under the leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller, resulting in 100 confessions and reconsecrations, as well as much inspiration and encouragement to the church people. Brother Grant McDonald is the earnest pastor of this flock and in very truth, as both he and Brother Miller remark, he has led them forward on their knees. They have been faced with a most serious financial situation, as well as other enemies from without, and they were aware that only God could lead them through. And God is proving faithful and sufficient, as he always does to those who trust him. One of the most significant evidences of the growing spiritual life of this people is to be found in the increased attendance at the mid-week services from fourteen to ninety-three. In view of this faithfulness in prayer and Bible study, it seems scarcely to be wondered at that they should have been granted this great harvest of souls. This is one of our splendid mission churches and both the state and the national mission boards have reason to thank God and to be encouraged over the progress being realized.

Dr. A. D. Gnagey, pastor of the church at Altoona, Pennsylvania, writes an interesting newsletter this week and incidentally gives some suggestions as to what constitutes "news," and few persons in the brotherhood have given so much thought to such matters as Brother Gnagey, who for many years handled the news of the churches as editor of this paper. He knows there is a great variety of activities that properly belong to the church and that make "good news." We too have learned that there are many happenings in the average congregation, if it is at all awake to its task, that would make real news and ought to be reported several times during the year for the inspiration of other members of the brotherhood. Brother Gnagey gives us some interesting news concerning his work. Twenty souls have been added to the church during the past ten months, besides several reconsecrations. The various departments are doing good work, and the attendance and spiritual tone of the church are encouraging. A fine lay leadership has been developed and a loyal and instructed group of young people give bright outlook to the work. The confidence of the membership in their pastor and his constructive leadership is evidenced by the fact that he has been invited to remain in charge indefinitely.

The California Quartet, an evangelistic team of Ashland Seminary students, who are enthusiastic preachers as well as singers, recently conducted a week's meeting at Olena, near Norwalk, Ohio, resulting in nineteen confessions. The quartet is composed of Ernest Pine, Paul Bauman, Donald Carter and Ed. Colburn. Brother Carter is the student pastor of this little rural church and naturally rejoices in this victory achieved through the assistance of his fellow-members of the quartet. It seems to have been a rather difficult field and they hammered away with singing, preaching, and personal work until the week was nearly gone with no visible results. Then on Friday night the first break came when three souls stepped forward for Christ; Saturday night nine more made confession and Sunday night the number had reached nineteen. Then on Monday morning the same quartet gave a concert of classical and sacred music and conducted chapel services before the high school of Sterling, at which place Brother Paul Bauman is pastor of the Brethren church. He reports an attendance and interest in both Sunday school and church services that lend encouragement to the outlook of the field.

Brother Charles H. Ashman, pastor of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, gives us a splendid report of activity and his program for the past five months well illustrates the value of effort toward the centering of the thoughts and energies of the people along particular lines that are especially timely as the months come and go. The successful "witnessing revival" during January was preceded by a month of preparation, and when people faithfully prepare themselves for the outpouring of the blessing of God for the saving of souls, God never disappoints them. The pastor did the preaching, the services were exceedingly well attended in spite of depression handicaps and there was much real "witnessing" done by the faithful. Now they are rejoicing in having witnessed sixty-five confessions, forty of whom have already been received into the church. Four had previously been added to the membership, making forty-four new members received during the five months. Another important feature of the report is that concerning the newly merged Sunday morning service. Both the order of the new service and the effect on attendance are of interest. The pastor is highly satisfied with the benefits derived and stands ready to share with others further particulars concerning the merged program.

"Give, and It Shall Be Given to You"

By Dr. Martin Shively, Member Brethren's Home Board

"As ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

"With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

"Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom, for with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again." The quotations are from the sayings of Jesus, the matchless Teacher, whom we profess to love and serve. The words quoted have a direct bearing upon the opportunity to which our attention is directed by this number of the Evangelist. Of course we know that few of our number, if indeed any, have escaped the economic storm which has descended upon the whole world, and with so many fixed charges which have to be met, and so many appeals for assistance which are brought to our attention, many will no doubt say, "I can give nothing in support of the Benevolence program of the church this year." I wonder what would have happened to the widow of Zarepta to whom the prophet Elijah came, requesting that she make him some cakes from the last morsel of meal and the last bit of oil which she had in the house, from which she told him that she had intended to make a few cakes for her son and herself, that they might eat them, and then wait for the death which starvation threatened to bring upon them speedily. You know that that fate would surely have fallen upon them if she had pursued the selfish course. But she looked upon the man of God, and no doubt decided that he was what he appeared to be, and thus she said, "Nevertheless at thy word, I will do as you request." And lo, the handful of meal and the spoonful of oil fed all three for months, until the famine ended. Now it is your Board of Benevolences which comes asking that you share your little with their charges, in The Brethren's Home, and the Superannuated Ministers, knowing that their plea is just, and believing that the Lord in whose name we come, will keep the promises he made, both as they depend

"Lest We Forget"

By Rev. Fred C. Vanator, President of the Benevolent Board

No long article is necessary to tell the readers of the Evangelist the need of the Benevolent Board. Year after year we have been coming to you at this season of the year, asking for a portion of your money for the support of the Benevolent work of the church. Too many times we have been "forgetful hearers of the word." We are not unmindful of the many who have each year sent in their offerings for the support of the aged ministers and their dependents. But far too many have forgotten.

Let me tell you a little story.

Once upon a time (all good stories begin this way), there was a little newsboy who roamed the streets of a city trying hard to make an honest living for himself and his little crippled brother. One day a beautiful lady came along and took time to engage this little merchant in conversation. She asked concerning his parents and found that several years before they had died and left him with the care of this little brother who was never to walk. Being a kind hearted woman she began at once to make plans as to how she might assist this manly little fellow. Of course one of the first things she thought of was the getting this boy in the Sunday school. This was not a hard matter, for he craved companionship and as they were a friendly crowd they supplied the need. They made little sport of his poor clothing and street language and sought to bring to him the love of Jesus. In his quiet, confident heart there sprang up a very sincere and lasting love for the Savior and he became an earnest follower of the Christ.

Very early in the Sunday school lessons he learned the lesson of trust and confidence in the helping power of the Master. This trust was not easily shaken in his Lord and he rapidly came to expect that his prayers would be answered.

But a long and severe winter came on; business became worse and worse; until at last there was nothing in the house for the boys to eat. The lad, still trusting, waited patiently on the Lord for help. But, strange to say, none came. Down on his knees, he prayed to God that assistance be sent, and in this posture a worker for the city relief

GROWING OLD

"Softly, oh, softly the years have swept by thee,

*Touching thee lightly with tenderest care;
Sorrow and death they have often brought nigh thee*

*Yet have they left thee but beauty to wear, Growing old gracefully,
Gracefully fair.*

"Far from the storms that are lashing the ocean,

Nearer each day to that pleasant home light;

Far from the waves that are big with commotion,

*Under full sail and the harbor in sight,
Growing old cheerfully,
Cheerful and bright.*

"Past all the winds that are adverse and chilling,

*Past all the islands that lured thee to rest
Past all the currents that lured thee unwilling Far from thy course to the land of the Blest;*

*Growing old peacefully,
Peaceful and blest.*

"Never feeling of envy or sorrow

*When the bright faces of children are seen,
Never a year from the young would'st thou borrow—*

*Thou dost remember what lieth between;
Growing old willingly,
Thankful, serene.*

"Rich in experience that angels might covet, Rich in a faith that has grown with thy years,

Rich in a love that grew from and about it, Soothing thy sorrows and hushing thy fears;

*Growing old wealthily,
Loving and dear.*

"Hearts at the sound of thy coming are tightened,

*Ready and willing thy hand to relieve,
Many a face at thy kind word has brightened,
'It is more blessed to give than receive,'*

Growing old happily, Ceasing to grieve."

found him. Strange to say, she was not a Christian and in a rather deprecating manner said, "What are you doing?" "I am praying that someone will come and bring food for my brother and me," was his ready response. "But maybe he has not told anyone about you and your need," she said, as if to test him. "Yes," came the reply, "I am sure he has told someone, BUT SOMEONE HAS FORGOTTEN."

Brethren, has HE told you of this need, and HAVE YOU FORGOTTEN? February 26th will tell the Benevolent Board whether you HAVE REMEMBERED. Our Aged Brethren are waiting and praying that their claims may be allowed. At least three deserving applicants have filled out their blanks and are awaiting the result of this offering to see if we will have money enough to pay them only that which is their due.

Information--The Brethren Home

By Dr. J. Allen Miller, President Brethren Home Board

This information relative to the Brethren Home is sent out with our appeal for support. We are anxious that all our people know about the Home. If there is anything further you would like to know, write either Sister Cyrus Myers, Matron, Flora, Indiana, or any of the officers named below.

General Statement

Location of home—Flora, Indiana.

Supt. and Matron—Brother and Sister Cyrus Myers.

Treasurer—Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana.

Members and officers of the Board of Trustees: J. Allen Miller, President, Ashland, Ohio; C. G. Wolf, Secretary, North Liberty, Indiana; G. W. Brumbaugh, Dayton, Ohio; L. V. King, New Lebanon, Ohio; Dr. Martin Shively, Ashland, Ohio; M. D. Kerr, Bryan, Ohio; Eph. Culp, Goshen, Indiana; Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana.

The Properties

The Main Building, a large and modern Home, erected originally at a cost of over $35,000; and on the same farm a good barn and other necessary out-buildings. Farm lands originally valued at over $40,000; two residences valued when secured by Home at $9,000. This represents the original outlay of the Home.

Support

When originally planned it was thought that farm income should largely support the Home. Accordingly, the investments of the Home were made in farm lands. Just now, as with all farmers, these lands are a burden. Yet we must make the mortgage payments and we have so far kept them up. This requires $562 per year. The income from the land will not pay this.

Our only other sources of income for the maintenance of the Home are the gifts of the friends, the offerings of the churches and bequests. These gifts and farm earnings have not been enough to meet our running expenses. Accordingly we appeal all the more to you for your help.

History

A good many years ago, Sister Lydia Fox and her brother, John Early, both of Miamisburg, Ohio, gave the original gifts with which to found such a Home. To these original gifts others were made. However, the Home was finally made possible through the gift of Henry Rinehart. It is on some of these gifts that the Board must pay annuities, or interest. Please note report of our Treasurer as printed in Brethren annual of 1933, page 7. Most of this annuity paid by the Board is returned as gifts to the Home. Note that, please, And remember that the Home is yet in the process of acquiring not only the Home but its endowment.

For Whom?

The Home is open to any member in good standing in the Brethren Church. For information write the Matron or the President of the Board. Also, the Home solicits Boarding members. Elderly people wanting a place to live and at a very moderate rate can live at the Home.

The Offering

Will you not see to it that your church has all the information needed and that the Offering will be taken? Send all the offerings either to Henry Rinehart, Treasurer, or if more immediately intended for the running of the Home, send to Mrs. Cyrus Myers, both of Flora, Indiana.

Ashland, Ohio.

An Appeal from the Secretary of Benevolent Board

By Rev. G. L. Maus

On February 26th the brotherhood is asked to remember our Benevolent work. As secretary of the Superannuated Board, I make this appeal to our churches that we do not forget our aged ministers. This board is the servant of the churches of the brotherhood. You have asked us to do this work for you. We have done our best with what you have given us. We are behind in our payments and these dear brethren would like to have the little sum that we give them each month. It is not much but it helps them in a wonderful way. I do not know what we would have done this year if it had not been for the different Women's Missionary Societies sending their offerings they set aside for benevolent work. To all these societies and churches and individuals that have responded so nobly we want to say, Thank you. Those who did not lift an offering last year, will you not see that your church lifts an offering this year?

We hear a great deal these days about the depression. This is God's business and God knows no depression. We are so apt to think of self at a time like this. This to be sure we must do, but let us not forget those who made it possible for us to enjoy the church home we now have. Send all offerings for the superannuated ministers to the undersigned address. Remember his address has been changed from Roann, Indiana to Nappanee, Indiana. Let us receive your offering as soon as it is lifted in your church.

451 W. Walnut Street, Nappanee, Indiana.

It is not accusation but proven guilt that counts as condemnation except when foes such as Jesus had are in control.

A Plea for the Brethren Home

By L. V. King, Member Brethren's Home Board

Having been selected as Publicity Agent by the Brethren's Home Board to see that articles would be on hand for our Brethren's Home Corner, I have endeavored to get other members of the Board to furnish these articles, knowing well that they could make a better appeal than I, a new member of the Board. I want to take this opportunity to thank all who have contributed these articles. Now we are approaching the time for our special offering for this worthy cause. Your response on this day will be a testimony of how faithfully you have followed these articles and how loyal you are to this cause.

We have been wont to complain as members of our beloved church that there are so many special offerings. Yet through the kindness of the Publishing Board there have been no special offerings for national needs since Christmas. This ought to be an incentive for a very special offering on February 26th from all the churches.

The saying, "people just can't give during these hard times" has been repeated so often that we are beginning to hide behind it as an excuse for not doing our duty as followers of the Lord. True, those who have no income whatsoever, cannot give. But there are too many people using this for an alibi. Let us at least challenge those who are in a position to give, to do their best. Surely these should feel an added obligation and thank God that they can give while others cannot.

Let me just state a few principles which I am sure are true: Surely, the Lord knew of depressions like this one when he planned his program for the Church. And surely he would make ample provision that his work might not falter in any stress of the times. And we are not, therefore, surprised to find that he has.

What provision has he made to meet the needs of the Church under any conditions? If it were as easy to get folks to practice his way as it is to answer the above question, the problem would be solved. Will you, dear reader, pledge now that you will take his way? If you will, then you will lay aside and give through the channels of the Church, the Tithe of your income. Not part of that Tithe, but all of it through your local church that from there it may be distributed to all the needy causes of your own denomination first, and then to other causes. Not one cent of this however should go to the support of the poor.

And if you will pledge to take the Lord's way, in addition to your Tithe for the Church, you will lay aside as the Lord has prospered you free-will offerings upon the first day of the week for the support of the poor and less fortunate than you. In a sense these aged Mothers of Israel, now at our Home and our aged ministers, now dependent upon the Church, are our poor. If you have been following the Lord's way, you have laid aside and will now be ready for this offering on February the 26th.

It is always safest and best to do things the way the Lord has planned. How ample, even in hard times, would be the provisions for his work, if we only followed his way! We boast as a Brethren Church of our heritage and our message. And yet when it comes to the way the Lord has provided for the upkeep of his Church and the poor, we take our own ways. No wonder we fail, so often. No wonder institutions like the Home are facing such tremendous problems.

If Christian people would only take the Lord's way, the different Boards of the Church would not have to sit in Conference, worrying and planning how to meet the needs with but little finances. Our time and efforts could be spent in the salvation of the lost both at home and abroad. Let us take the Lord's way in this offering February the 26th. And the institutions of the Church will be blessed and you shall be laying up treasures in heaven.

New Lebanon, Ohio.

The Benevolent Board Treasurer's Appeal

By Frank Roscoe,

The time of year is at hand that we have anxiously looked forward to, due especially to the fact that our treasury is exhausted, and our dear folks on the Super-annuated list are still waiting for their checks for November, 1932, and all months since. It is a trying time for all of us, and it does seem sad that these dear folks have been made to suffer with us. Many of these aged folks cannot understand why they do not receive their gift from the church, and it is with aching heart, that we try to explain to them that they will have to wait until the February offering is taken. How we wish we had been financially able to pay them personally and carry over until this offering is taken. We recall Brother Kimmel making the same remark when he was treasurer. When letters are received with contents thus: "On account of severe illness and the long, cold winter days, our cash has gotten very low. We thought you might have some money in the treasury that you might send us a little, we would be so thankful." And another, "My eyes are getting so I can hardly see, and I must get new glasses. Thought maybe you could send me a little." Also—"I don't see how I can get along much longer, surely the church will not give up this fund." Of course we would not have received these inquiries had there been enough money to carry over. We do want to appeal to you who are the treasurer of your church, that you be very prompt in mailing out your offering to Rev. G. L. Maus, Nappanee, Indiana, so that we may get payments to these dear people.

We are publishing in these pages letters received from most of the folks on our list; they would like to personally extend their gratitude to you for your interest in them. Since writing them, we have learned of the deaths of Rev. J. E. Shope and Mrs. Mary Spanogle. We shall miss them. Mrs. W. C. Teeter who is ill, could not write. Remember her in your prayers. Rev. Kiehl is 95 years old, Rev. Glenn is 85, and Rev. Flora is 79. These are some of the old veterans of the faith, who have made it possible for many Brethren churches to be organized, some of which have grown to be among the big congregations of the day. We owe much to these men, and we are glad it is possible to care for them, and also the wives of a number of ministers, who gave their time gratis or for small salaries and were unable to prepare for old age.

A few words written by Rev. G. C. Carpenter several years ago could be very fittingly used again at this time. He stated in the Evangelist of February, 1929, in part as follows:

What Father Time does is written upon the lives of many of our aged ministers of the Gospel who have given their lives to the Lord in his service but with little material recompense. Ask them if "Time flies" and they will tell us that three score and ten or four score or more years seem but as yesterday since they are past.

We need not ask them if "Time tests." That fact is written indelibly upon their lives in terms of Christian character and in marks of love and loyalty and peace and victory and scars and sacrifices. Doubtless scars will count for more than degrees in the final day of accounting.

Look upon our beloved aged ministers and the fact that "Time tells" is very evident, but the marks of age only help to emphasize that these are among God's noblemen, God's chosen priesthood. God's faithful undershepherds, servants of Jehovah, worthy of their hire.

Shall the church of today, richer because of the service rendered by these faithful ones, fail to meet their needs? God forbid! The Golden Rule and "as God hath prospered" demand it. Brotherly love in Christ requires it. May our Christian gratitude be manifest in material gifts sufficient unto the need. And may the church go forward to greater victories lifting high the cross of Christ. Let all the faithful servants of Jehovah rejoice in him forevermore!

New Paris, Indiana.

Appreciation from Aged Ministers, Wives and Widows

93 AND FULL OF GRATITUDE

Dear Brother Roscoe:

Your kind letter of January 10th received. Our Heavenly Father in his Infinite Wisdom has given to me a long life, far beyond my usefulness. What the help from the Church has meant to me in my declining years, cannot be expressed in words of gratitude and thankfulness. It has given to me a sense of independence, a feeling of security, and, most blessed of all, an assurance that to those who have served the Master in their humble way, to them shall be "the peace that passeth understanding." To my dear Brothers and Sisters in the Faith, who have given of their limited means in these days of stress, my heart goes out in gratitude and love, and may "the bread cast upon the waters" be returned to them in life abundant with spiritual love and joy. May the Lord bless you. Your brother in Christ,

SAMUEL KIEHL,
Charleston, West Virginia.

BLIND AND WOULD BE DESTITUTE WITHOUT OUR GIFTS

My Dear Brother:

Your letter of the 10th at hand, and contents noted with pleasure. My husband, Rev. Glenn, is crippled and eleven months ago went blind, so he is not able to write, and he requests me (his wife) to write the Evangelist for him. We sure do need the help from the Church. Rev. Glenn preached for over 50 years for the Brethren Church, and we certainly do appreciate the help they send us, as we have no other income and without it we would be destitute. We sure hope the Church will insist that the Superannuated Fund may be kept up for the help of the ministry.

Sincerely,
MRS. HESTER GLENN, Fairmont, West Virginia.

HIS SALARY AVERAGED $500.00

Dear Brethren Friends:

Mrs. Flora and I have celebrated our 56th wedding anniversary. I am 77 years old, and Mrs. Flora 73. Together we have served the church for nearly 50 years. Our salary averaged about $500.00. We never lived in a parsonage, except six years in Chicago. Many have been the "God bless you," many appreciated presents have been received. Recently a beautiful silk quilt from the little Teegarden church.

The disturbing question has always been—how shall I provide the comforts of life when I am old. Paul said, "My God shall supply all your needs according to his riches in glory, by Jesus Christ the Lord." Is he doing it? Certainly, yes. And how? By his servants, through the Superannuated Board of the Brethren Church. That check makes it possible for us to care for ourselves, in our own way, and in our own home. Thank you all.

REV. AND MRS B. H. FLORA,
North Liberty, Indiana.

A RECIPIENT BUT SHE ALSO GIVES

Dear Superannuated Ministers' Board:

I cannot tell you in words the joy and comfort it gives me to receive this love gift from time to time, which keeps me from being absolutely dependent upon others for all my support.

My husband and myself always desired to give to all such causes, even though his salary was meagre, and I want to give toward this in February, praying that the Lord may richly bless all who give. Always in his Name,
MRS. J. F. KOONTZ, Washington, D. C.

OUR GIFTS MAKE THIS HOME POSSIBLE

The Gift I receive through the Benevolent Board, from our dear brothers and sisters of the different churches is very much appreciated, and were it not for this, I could not remain in my home. Our pastors are not overpaid, and many of the early ministers served gratis, hence were not able to save anything for old age. So the creating of such a board is a splendid way of taking care of our retiring ministers and their wives. I trust our offering may be the best yet, and I shall help as much as is possible to make it so.

Sincerely,
MRS. J. L. KIMMELL, New Paris, Indiana.

JOSIAH KEIM'S WIDOW PAST 79

To the Members of the Superannuated Ministers' Board:

We realize, at least to some extent, how you feel when the time comes to pay the monthly payment and cannot, because of lack of funds. And we appreciate the concern you manifest in us, who depend so much on this help. Many of our older ministers gave their time and money preaching without salary, that Brethren churches might be established. And now that some of us are still here, how fine that the Church is giving loving consideration for their care in old age. We appreciate it more than we can tell. Our heart goes out with thankfulness every time we are remembered.

Sincerely,
MRS. SARAH KEIM, Ashland, Ohio.

APPRECIATION FROM MINISTER'S WIDOW AND SON

Dear Superannuated Board:

Words cannot express my appreciation to the Superannuated fund, for the help given me and my son, in providing the necessary things needed in our home, such as fuel and clothing. With grateful hearts we wish to "Thank all" who have helped in this way, and pray God's richest blessing to be ever with them.

Sincerely,
MRS. ORPHA BEEKLEY AND SON, Ashland, Ohio.

FAILURE OF OUR GIFTS WOULD MEAN HARDSHIP

Dear Superannuated Board:

I am glad to express my appreciation for the help given me from the Superannuated Fund in these past years. It has materially aided in the care of those dependent upon me. And due to ill health it has often compensated for the small amount that was possible to be earned. If it could no longer be expected, I can truthfully say that it would surely be a hardship.

Sincerely,
MRS. ETHEL HARLEY, West Salem, Ohio.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

"FOR THE DAY"

"Watchman," in the British Weekly, expresses the feeling of many others when he says:

"I confess I am getting a little tired of books and articles, of books especially, with some such title as 'A Faith for Today'; or 'The Church's Task for Today'; or 'The Problem of Today.' I know what is intended and that the formula may serve a purpose; but I don't like the phrase. 'A Faith for Today!' Who wants a faith for today? A faith for today is no faith at all. It is but a makeshift, something to get us round some immediate corner. It may sound foolish to object, and I am not going to argue the point; but I am quite sure that we talk in this way far too much. It has become a habit, and not a good habit. I am quite sure there is an increasing number of people who would welcome, in connection with faith and behaviour, a form of speech which bore the marks and had the tone of deeper and remoter considerations."

AN UNDYING NAME

In the Deutsche Theater in Berlin a play called, "God, Emperor and Peasant," was recently produced, dealing with the personality of John Huss, the Reformer whose courage and devotion brought him to the stake as fuel for a bonfire. The play, by Julius Hay, represented the Emperor Sigismund and Pope John XXIII as worldly-minded oppressors of John Huss, and mediaeval profiteers. There were such serious disturbances at the theater, however, that the show had to be stopped.

As John Huss is held in high honor among us, our readers should be interested in the following comment which the above incident brought out in the New York American: "More interesting than any political part of Huss' career was his own character. Strapped to the execution post, with soldiers piling wood around him, he exclaimed 'Sancta simplicitas' ('sacred simplicity') when a tiny child, anxious to help, brought a small piece of wood and added it to the bonfire. You may burn a man like that, but you cannot obliterate his name. It is no wonder that the Bohemians are proud of such a man. It was the treacherous emperor, Sigismund, who gave Huss a 'pass' to the 'Council of Constance' that should have guaranteed his safety, and then allowed him to be burned."

Yes, it is true (in more ways than one) that lives lived for God defy the grave.—Reformed Church Messenger.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

"In the Beginning."

(No. IV)

By Louis S. Bauman, D.D.

Before we pass on from the story of the original creation, told with striking brevity in the first six Hebrew words of the Book, we must not fail to note that these Spirit-chosen words set forth the supreme duty of the Lord who was given dominion over all the works of God.

"In the beginning—God"

All the bitter failures of men have resulted because man has neglected or forgotten that—just that—"In the beginning, God!"

FAILURE IN HUMAN WISDOM—WHY?

Man has failed lamentably in wisdom because "in the beginning" of his wisdom he has failed to welcome God. Man is ever staggering about in the fog, seeking for the way in which he should behave toward divinity, toward humanity, and even toward himself, because he is ever planning without God. At this very hour there is "Upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity" (Gr. without a passage out), and "Men's hearts" are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth" (Luke 21:25, 26), for the simple reason that men have forgotten this: "In the beginning, God." Only recently, Viscount Lee of Fareham, noted British soldier and statesman, with Lady Lee, came from England to spend a brief vacation in America. He said:

"Fear, the most unreasoning force in either world politics or human emotions, today has the whole of continental Europe in its grip. Consequently, Europe is arming to the teeth and so long as this situation continues, I can see no hope for arms cuts. We don't know what is liable to break out over there. Fear many times has chased a people to the bayonet."

What a marvellously exact fulfillment of our Lord's words describing a world condition of human hearts just before his return to earth! Lord Lee, whether he knows it or not, is simply saying: "I can see no hope except for the peace that shall follow Armageddon!" And why? Because the nations have politely "excused" God from all their counsels. "There is no fear of God before their eyes!" (Rom. 3:18). No "fear of God"? Then—fear of man! Verily, verily, "(Their) mouth is full of cursing and bitterness: their feet are swift to shed blood: destruction and misery are in their ways: and the way of peace have they not known" (Rom. 3:14-17).

FAILURE IN SOCIAL RELATIONS—WHY?

All social life today is fraught with tremendous and momentous problems. The whole world is bogging in a moral quagmire. Why? Because God is forgotten in our social and pleasurable relations with each other. "In the beginning—God!" Let him have a place—yes, first place in the pleasure of life, and mothers will not lie awake to mourn, and wives will not wake to weep, over those far astray from the pathways of peace.

FAILURES IN THE BUSINESS WORLD—WHY?

Men sometimes say: "I can no longer honor God and succeed in business. Competition is so keen, and seemingly accepted business methods are so utterly wanting in Christian principles, that I am at a loss to know what to do!" Friend of mine, any financial success that comes as the result of moral and spiritual breakdown, is not success—it is dismal failure, no matter how many golden eagles may jingle in your jeans. What matters it if you amass a million, if your son comes staggering home in the early hours of the morning, a drunken thief; or if your daughter comes back from a night's debauch, a harlot? What matters your accumulated houses and lands, if your soul passes on to eternity's gates a spiritual pauper? The whole world of business today has crashed like a house of cards, and why? It is no secret that God has long been a very embarrassing Presence in the world of business; and, that, in its greed, "Big Business" also politely bowed God out of its doors. "Business" will once again do business only when it writes above its doors: "IN THE BEGINNING GOD." The Alpha of divine revelation was: "In the beginning God." And in the Omega of divine revelation, it is written: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6:33). When will the world of business find wisdom?

THE CRASH OF THE HOME—WHY?

Crash! Crash! Crash! What these falling timbers, these despairing groans, these wailings of little children that we hear? What but the collapsing of homes and the crashing of marriage altars that fill the land! Of all present-day events, the most ominous! Listen for the voice of prayer that once ascended from an altar in the American home. Hear ye it? Or is it the jazzing screech of the radio you hear! Listen for the fond whispers of conjugal love and tenderness which once made Edens out of the American home. Hear ye it? Or, is it the silly, sickening, contemptible, suggestive bawling of sex-sick crooners which now pollutes the once sacred atmosphere of the home? The first, and one indispensable gift to young men and women who walk forth to the marriage altars these days should be a flaming motto for the walls of the newly-built love-nest—"IN THE BEGINNING GOD." If this were done and heeded, the love courts would not be emptied almost as rapidly as filled, into the divorce courts, as is now the order of the day. Have we not all but invited God to take his holy altars and move away from the fireplace of the home? Then marvel not that the whole world is aquiver with fear as it senses impending judgments?

"Be not deceived! God is not mocked! For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Standard of Excellence for Brethren Sunday Schools

I. HOME EXTENSION

1. An Active Cradle Roll. To associate the child from birth to the Sunday school; to interest his parents in his spiritual nurture and to prepare the child for class membership in the school. The department will be in charge of an alert supervisor who will keep an enrollment of the children; make known their names to the school; visit occasionally their parents, sharing suggestions and literature with reference to the religious nurture of the child.

2. A Working Home Department. To enlist persons denied the privilege of Sunday school attendance; to assist them in Bible study at home; to win them for and to build them up in Christ. The department will be in charge of a capable supervisor, assisted by such visitors as necessary, who will keep a record of those enrolled; distribute literature for study and seek to have Home Department members present for the regular school session on special days.

II. ORGANIZED CLASSES

1. One or more organized classes in Young People's Division.

2. One or more organized classes in Adult Division.

To relieve the teacher of so much responsibility; to distribute labor and to share responsibility among the pupils; and to become identified with the larger fellowship of the organized movement. The class will elect a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and create devotional, membership, social, and suggestion committees as desired. This organization including the class name, age and sex of the pupils will be certified to the National Association by the divisional or general superintendent and receive a certificate.

III. LEADERSHIP TRAINING

1. A training class registered with the National Sunday School Association and using any approved text. To provide informed and skilled leaders for the school; to extend and complete the religious training of the pupils; to cooperate in securing more and better workers for kingdom building. This training may be carried on in connection with the Sunday school or community institute or both. Texts approved for the following courses, outlined in the new Handbook, will be recognized. They are as follows: (1) Certificate Courses, (2) The Short Course for Sunday School Workers. The certificates and diplomas are awarded on the completion of each of the above-mentioned courses. These are issued by the National Association which also provides questions for examinations or makes satisfactory arrangements with the teacher in charge relative to the procedure which shall be followed in the administration of teacher training work. Consult the Handbook for further information.

2. Twenty-five percent of the teachers graduates in some approved course. To recognize those persons who have already completed some training course, and to encourage the school to use trained teachers. This point includes those who have graduated from the earlier courses.

IV. GRADATION

1. Graded school organization with annual promotion. To enroll pupils according to recognized age grouping; to provide classes for all ages and to encourage application for the purpose of making progress. This contemplates a division for children, young people, and adults with as many classes in each division as the pupils require. Each division should be supervised by an appointed, capable person. Where possible and feasible the divisions may have separate worship programs.

2. Graded lesson instruction in at least one department. To supply lesson material suited to the interests, capacities and needs of the pupils; to assist them in the cultivation of fruitful knowledge, right attitudes, and necessary skills. The graded lessons published by The Standard Publication Company, Cincinnati, Ohio are the most Biblical of all the graded series now before the public. They are the most beneficial, therefore, for our denomination. They are pedagogically sound and seek to provide "milk for the babes and meat for the adults." No graded series will be found wholly satisfactory to Brethren people; extra Biblical and doctrinal teaching must be added by Brethren pastors and Brethren Sunday school teachers.

V. MISSIONS

1. Systematic missionary instruction. To make missionary instruction a normal and integral part of Christian education; to generate the missionary passion in the whole church. Such instruction may be given as a part of the regular lesson, supplemented with monthly presentation before the entire school or a division thereof. Mission study classes may be added. Dr. Yoder's recent book on the South American field is recommended. Dr. Gribble has a book ready on our African work.

2. An annual White Gift Offering. To encourage Christian giving; to extend the fellowship of service, to support worthy objects. This offering is taken at Christmas, the proceeds of which go to the Ashland Seminary, Foreign Missions, the Shishe-wana Young People's Training School, Sunday school institute work, and other miscellaneous items.

VI. CITIZENSHIP

1. Systematic Citizenship Training. To foster Christian attitudes with reference to civic and state obligations; to make the pupils conscious of a growing world citizen-

2. Participation in some form of benevolence. To unite mind and heart and hand in Christian good-will and helpfulness. Sometimes we feel that if we could only go to some far-off field, how we would love and serve him! But here at home—well, let us learn a lesson from Jesus' advice to this man. And above all things, let us pray that we may never sink so low that we consider the souls of men of less value than hogs; that we place material things above spiritual.

THURSDAY

Jesus' Power to Forgive. Luke 7:36-50

This woman, a notorious sinner, had found in Jesus that which healed her sinful soul. Tears of repentance flowed freely, and with her most precious possession she served the Lord. But it was none of the things she did that brought her peace; it was the words of Jesus: "Thy faith hath saved thee." There would be no peace in the hearts and lives of any of us, were it not for a Savior with power to forgive. But "there is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus!" Let us ever love and serve the great Forgiver.

FRIDAY

Christ the Power of God. John 5:15-23

No question here of Jesus' claim to deity! The Jews sought to kill him "for making himself equal with God." The Son quickeneth whom he will, and the Father has committed all unto the Son, that men should honor him even as they honor the Father. In the prayer which Jesus taught us, we say, "Thine is the power;" let us also give him the glory which is his, for without him has nothing worthwhile ever been done (John 1:3).

SATURDAY

Christ's Power Supreme. Eph. 1:15-23

Mighty power, far above all principality and power, and might and dominion, every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: And to think that we can say, "I know whom I have believed!" For all this mighty power is now vested in the man Jesus, who once walked on earth as a man, and suffered and died as a man that we might live and experience his mighty power in our own lives. We should never dare approach unto a Being of such power and glory, were it not for the fact that our High Priest endured all things, even as you and I; but in Christ Jesus we may come boldly to the throne of grace.

Praise for Jehovah's Works. Isa. 12:1-6

Christ's power is supreme in every department of creation and life. O that it might be supreme in every life! May it, at least, be supreme in our own lives! We know whom we have believed, and know that he is able. How we long for "that day" when the glorious deeds of Jehovah shall be made known throughout all the earth, and his name shall be exalted! Then let us do our part to bring it to pass, even as we praise him for the mighty power which now worketh in us.

JESUS SHOWS HIS POWER

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

Jesus Stills the Storm. Mark 4:35-41

Jesus must have been a constant amazement to the disciples. Even from the first, when they left all to follow him, they seemed to understand that he was the long-looked-for Messiah, the Son of God; but it was difficult for them to realize that the man Jesus had such power over all the forces of creation. They had already seen him heal the sick and cast out devils; he had taught them as no man ever before taught, and had performed other mighty miracles. But that even the wind and waves should obey him—little wonder they exclaimed: "What manner of man is this?" Dear Jesus, do thou still the tempest in our souls; quiet our fears; increase our faith, and give us peace.

TUESDAY

A Demon-possessed Man. Mark 5:1-9

This man was completely dominated by a number of evil spirits that made life miserable for himself and for all about him. Let no one question the reality of demon-possession; there are well-authenticated cases of it in the world today, and it will probably increase as we approach the end time. But however completely dominated by Satan, and the forces of evil, no man is beyond the saving power of Jesus Christ, and since that day in Gadara, many have been restored to a sound mind and wholesome body, and to an honored place in society, through his mighty power.

WEDNESDAY

The Demon Cast Out. Mark 5:10-20

When the demons had been cast out from this man, his heart was so filled with gratitude that he longed to follow Jesus and serve him. Jesus told him that his place of greatest service was among his own people.

ORGANIZING THE LOOKOUT COMMITTEE

By Mabel I. Capron

The lookout committee is the sales force of the Christian Endeavor society. As a salesman each member must know thoroughly the product he sells, that is, Christian Endeavor. On the lookout committee, therefore, are needed trained Endeavorers. A majority of the members of the committee should be those well versed in Christian Endeavor work; the minority will be in training.

Christian Endeavor is not a one-man organization; each member of any committee works best if given a specific task. In a lookout committee of five let one member act as chairman. He calls the meetings at regular intervals, presides over them, and sees to the general well-being of his committee. Another member might be the secretary of the committee and the society publicity agent too if none other has been provided. A third member might take charge of the extension work, a fourth of the "look-in" work, and a fifth of the graded work, acting as a connecting link between the various groups.

So organized, the power of the lookout committee would be felt throughout the society. Chicago, Illinois.

A TELEPHONE MEETING

For Prayer Meeting Committees

By Herman Erickson

A telephone was secured from the local telephone company and placed on the leader's table to be used in connection with calling the names.

At a given time in the meeting the secretary left the room and remained just outside to come in later on a given signal, the singing of a hymn. When it was time for the secretary to make the roll-call, I looked around, and, not seeing her, I asked for her, and remarked that I had better call her up. Accordingly I looked in the telephone directory (which had also been brought to the occasion), and called her number on the telephone, pretending that it was a usual telephone conversation. Shortly afterward the secretary came in, and I asked her to call the roll. She had a list of the members, together with their telephone numbers. I also had a copy, and, as she called the members by their telephone number, she responded with a verse of Scripture. I was following the list; and, when the number of an absent member was called, I would say, "They don't answer."

The plan worked well, and seemed to interest all the members.

From the Land of "Thinking Black"

A Message from Mrs. Dan Crawford

"Thinking Black" by Dan Crawford, will be called to mind by this vivid enthusiastic letter from Mrs. Crawford, of the Luanza Mission, Congo Belge. It came in acknowledgment of service that the American Bible Society had rendered. Opportunity is gladly taken to share it with Evangelist readers from the Bible Society Record.

God still has his triumphs among the heathen as great as of old. And, glorious fact, it is not through the hypereducated that he works, but through his life-giving Word told out by these simple, trusting converts who believe every word of it and know it to be the mighty power of God unto salvation.  There is no joy in the world compared with the joy of being in God's appointed place. I am sure God gives of his best to those out in the battle-front. True, the enemies gives us of his worst—hard fights so often. But the battles beget the victories! Thanks! Thanks for our "sword," the open Bible that prevails all along the line.

It is with a pen flourish of exultation that I write to assure you in the homeland that away here in the "long grass" God still makes bare his mighty arm, still works his wonders with unabated power. Just listen to this, and I think you will be thrilled, as were those praying natives who had gathered for the first baptism in their distant district.

"Next Sunday morning will be the time," they had told the whole countryside. But during the week the river dried up! Extraordinary this, as the rainy season had started well. They prayed each day for rain; but no, not a drop! Saturday came. What were they to do? Not to be daunted, they spoke of the far off Lake Mweru; but they knew well that no spectators would follow them such a distance. "So let us not stop praying—the sun is but overhead—think not that the time for help is past." Thus they encouraged each other as they sat in the shade from the fierce noonday heat.

"While we yet prayed (they told me afterward), God started to work." With what result? Away up the course of that dry river bed a shout of alarm arose, "Run! ye builders of the bridge, run! or ye perish—a flood cometh!" Then helter-skelter of the workmen up the banks of the river.

Above the roar of the oncoming water the voice of the chief rang out, "Run, my son, and tell the 'people of God'; for, behold, yonder they still pray for it."

Before the villagers had finished rubbing their eyes with astonishment, the Christians were measuring gleefully their direct answer to prayers—waters up to their knees. By sunset, to their loins. And the night report was "Waters to baptize in." Can't you hear the jubilant songs of praise in the moonlight? While around their fires the people were saying, "This begetteth awe. Today we have 'come of age,' for our eyes have beheld a chilengaleza—a wonder wrought by God. Now know we of a truth that he answereth prayer."

Crowded were the banks of that flowing river next morning, all agog to see this new spectacle of a baptism. But the solemn-faced native pastor is out to teach, and not to tickle, his countrymen. "Give ear, O ye people. In these waters—brought of God—his baptistry, we baptize thirteen new men and women—new, because indwelt are they with a Spring perpetual, that never can dry up. And thou, O river, think not that thy waters can wash away sin, but rejoice that for the first time in all the centuries, we claim thee for thy Maker's service, O thou who hast but given thy waters heretofore for the brewing of the skull-splitting beer."

As that crowd dispersed, many and varied were the excited remarks. "It is this that pleaseth us," said a big group, each wearing a little metal crucifix, "this out-in-the-pon baptism of people, we know, whose life belieth not their belief." "In very truth," said others, with longing in their voices, "these verily are 'new' people. See how happy they are!"

As it is not this first baptism alone which has so impressed them. Acts of neighborly kindness—just doing what they thought Christ would have done had he been present—have often set the natives all a-gaping with astonishment. For instance, —and I delight to tell you about this black Timothy of ours,—a poor Roman Catholic woman, formerly a reviler of the few believers in the next village, lay very sick, deserted by all. Thinking that she must be now near death, her native teacher paid her his first visit and wished to baptize her. "What!" she cried, "thou who hast left me to starve!" He insisted. But while he was bringing water, she fled, and arrived exhausted at our native pastor's hut. He at once took her in, and he and his wife cared for both body and soul, while all about wonderingly watched the daily kindness to a dying "enemy." But, no, she slowly regained health, and with it, oh joy, she began to testify to all around of God's forgiving love made so real to her by the compassion of his saints.

This pastor when but a tiny boy was snatched from his mother by a raiding party, then dumped down on a heap of putrifying heads, his own father's among them, before the great chief Mushidi. Mr. Crawford redeemed the little child from a life of slavery with his next to last shirt. The lad grew up to early manhood in our home, where he gave his heart to the Lord.

But it took a little milk tooth and a murder to make him out-and-out. Returning from a journey, he found that his chubby little firstborn, just six months old, had been thrown to the crocodiles. Why? oh! why? All because, during one night little baby boy's first tooth had "sprouted" on the wrong, that is the upper, gum. With the dawn had come a shriek from the terrified young mother. She had just discovered that what she had tended so lovingly was a thing of horror, a "lutala," a demon in baby form. "Woe! woe! to us," cried the whole hamlet. "Away with it ere it bring dire calamity upon us." So a fisherman, according to tribal custom, "delivered" his townsfolk there and then. A hurriedly paddled canoe, a toss and a splash, and the alarming menace to their peace was gone!

The indignant father thereupon broke utterly with his tribe, publicly declaring himself to be on the side of the Savior who said it was not his will that one of these little ones should perish. He at once sought to train up children in the love of God and abhorrence of these murderous practices. Today his eldest son conducts the Bible school of his big parish. And his wife, now the proud mother of nine living children, stood weeping for joy beside those baptismal waters, as her first six women converts hastened to obey their Lord's command.

Another deed of the "What would Jesus do?" order, which has stirred up that whole neighborhood is this. A desperately sick traveler wearing a crucifix arrived at the hut of one of Rome's agents and begged for shelter. But he drove him off, saying, "Wouldst thou bring death into my house? Begone—die elsewhere." The do-good-untill-men pastor, hearing of this, found the poor man late at night, lying beside the winding trail semi-unconscious, in a lion-raided district. With the help of his son and a long bamboo basket, they managed, with rests in between, to carry him to their home. Here they fed and tended him for three days. But, as he did not improve, they decided to take him by canoe to Luanza. Alas! they had not gone far before he died. So they returned, and digging a grave, they buried him with prayer, while the villagers stood around taking talkative note, amazed at this for an absolute stranger. "Truly these people believe in Christ," they said one to another. "Look how they imitate him." (One for you, O observing Lubans! but marvel not, for faith without works is dead.) Real interest has been the happy result, and many bright conversions.

In this heathen land, where self-love alone is known, where "Nature is red in tooth and claw," where the leopard pulls down the antelope, and the lion the zebra, and the strong man his weaker brother, it is here,—oh! shout for joy,—it is here that the Christ-love, the genuine thy-neighbor-as-thyself-love, is being manifested. And this, not by the big white missionary, but by the self-denying acts of the humble black followers away in lonely outposts.—Bible Society Record.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

ALTOONA, PENNSYLVANIA

Just what is "Church News?" What is here new in the matter that fills these columns? Is it not, week after week, the same thing over, only from a different place? So many confessions, baptized, added to the church, the result of a "glorious revival," followed by a rehearsal of the activities of the church through its various organizations. This constitutes church news, and what is more, it is good news, the kind of news the angels sang about when announcing the advent of the Christ. Always there is rejoicing when sinners are converted and souls are added to the kingdom of God on earth, and not on earth only but in heaven also. Surely all Christian people should be interested in the things in which angels rejoice.

However, it should be remembered that accessions to the church are not the only evidence of church growth. There is, first of all, growth by accretion, that is, increase by external addition, organic growth, an enlargement of the organization by adding to it numbers. But increase in membership does not necessarily guarantee increased spiritual power. When a church launches a campaign against the repeal of the so-called "Blue Laws" in Pennsylvania, or against repeal of the 18th Amendment, or in behalf of civic righteousness and improvement of the social order,—these, and many other activities, are just as truly evidences of growth as the accession of numbers. Indeed, the writer has known instances where the addition of numbers proved a weight instead of a wing. Every member of the church is one or the other, a weight or a wing. I have often been impressed with the way Luke records church news in Acts chapter 2. He had real news to report. Somehow Christ seemed never to make much "fuss" over numbers. Probably Luke knew that, and in reporting the activities of the greatest day in the history of the church he barely mentions the fact of the three thousand confessions: "And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand,"—SOULS, mark you. The writer hesitates to say what he would do if the preaching of one sermon would yield such an increase. In nine words Luke tells the story of the increase then immediately proceeds to tell what followed: "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. . . . And all that believed were together and had all things common." In these days of depression the church has a fine opportunity to minister in the name of Jesus in those things which will make her a spiritual power in the community. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me." And it is just that kind of service that will be made the basis of the last judgment. An orchard has in it twenty apple trees, these trees grow year by year, yet they are only twenty trees, but they are grown larger and fed the hungry with most valuable fruits. They have, during the years, struck their roots deeper into the ground, lengthened out, and strengthened themselves against the coming storm.

The First Brethren church of Altoona has not been heard from through the columns of the Evangelist for a long while. But we have not been idle. There has been real growth, and along all lines, except perhaps financially. Indeed, this growth has been so manifest that at an official board meeting the present pastor was prevailed upon to remain indefinitely. Within the last ten months the pastor has had the coveted privilege of receiving into the church, mostly by baptism, twenty souls, not including several reconsecrations who have given every evidence of absolute sincerity. One, the mother of five children, who had not been in church for five years, whose son is one of the recent accessions, has been attending all the services of the church, with her children. Sunday school, prayer meeting, Christian Endeavor and preaching services morning and evening. Her experience is proving to me a real inspiration. At the beginning of my work here in October, 1923 we had no young people, a few girls but no boys. I immediately began with the children, gathering them into groups and teaching them the word of God. Now we have a Christian Endeavor Society which numbers forty-two members and they are taking care of themselves in a most splendid way. New leadership is rapidly developing and the outlook for this church is brighter at this writing than it has ever been since my acquaintance with it, which dates back more than 25 years. Five of the girls who have grown into young womanhood under the pastor's teaching are having entire charge of the Primary Department of the Sunday school, superintending and teaching the five classes, yet but one is out of the "teen" age.

Four of the boys, not one beyond twenty, act as ushers and regularly receive the offering at both morning and evening services. And they are always there,—never miss. On several occasions these young people have sponsored Sunday evening services and in each case they have "made good." One evening two of the boys and two of the girls gave brief outlines of the pastor's previous sermons, indicating the thoughts which most deeply impressed them. The audience on both occasions was delighted and requested repetitions of such services. We are now planning for another. All of the auxiliaries of the church are prospering in spite of the depression, Sisterhood Girls, Woman's Missionary Society, the Golden Rule organized Sunday School Class, and others have all of them done nobly, their programs having been inspiring and uplifting in helpfulness.

Financially, this church has been "hard hit." This is a railroad town with extensive machine shops and in times of prosperity a flourishing city of eighty thousand people,—when the shops close down, the whole city is next to paralyzed. The pastor's courage fails him when asked for special offerings.

For a number of years we have had a very respectable number of our young people in special training for Christian work, especially Sunday school work. The school is conducted in the First Methodist church of this city, and in at least two years we had in attendance taking special training, more young people than any other church in the city except the church in whose building the school was conducted.

If one were to judge from the reports the Altoona church would seem to have neither funerals nor marriages. However, we have both. Even in these testing times financially, some few make the venture, though it takes courage to do it. Since our last report the church lost one of its charter members, Brother D. E. Furry the Senior deacon of the congregation. Needless to say he was greatly missed, having been a regular attendant at all the church services. Recently Elder J. E. Shope passed away at the ripe age of 85 years, his wife having preceded him by a year or two.

"Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand."

FIRST BRETHERN CHURCH
Johnstown, Pennsylvania

This report covers from September first to February first. September was Rally Month. Although the services were conducted without interruption during the entire summer, there was a slump. September rallied every activity of the church, gradually working up to the climax on Rally Day. October was Sacrifice and Communion Month. Pastebord Chapels were distributed in which to place the sacrifice gifts. They brought in sufficient above the regular contributions, to balance the church budget for that month. Also, during October, we observed Homecoming Day with excellent attendance. Then, there was Harvest Home Day which secured enough food-stuffs to maintain the charity work being done by the deacons and deaconesses. The Communion was a blessed service, largely attended. November was Thanksgiving Month. All the sermons and services during the entire month were studies in Praise and Thanksgiving. In this we sought to build up and maintain the spiritual cheer of the folks. December was Revival Preparation Month. The entire month was given over to sermons on "Witnessing For Christ." Christmas was fittingly celebrated with sermons, a Cantata, and a pageant by the Sisterhood.

Witnessing Revival

On January first, we opened our Witnessing Revival. That was the name we gave it this year. Almost every evening, we gave opportunity for witnessing, either by quotations of Scripture or testimony. Every evening we asked for a show of Bibles and we saw more Bibles at church during these three weeks than ever before in our life. The attendance was good from the beginning. Many were hindered. They did not have money for auto licenses nor for street car fares and were too far away to walk. The average attendance for the 23 services was 306 per service. One Sunday we had 967 in the two services. The spiritual members rallied to this revival with zeal. Much prayer and personal work was blessed of the Lord. There were 65 public confessions, 40 of whom have already been received into church membership. 4 had been received previous to the revival, making a total of 44 new members since September first. The Lord blessed this revival marvelously. The pastor was the evangelist and the local music directors had charge of the music. The choir director and pastor were surprised one evening by the Brotherhood of Alexander Mack. They presented each of us with a pen and pencil set. The choir director and organist were surprised on another occasion in being presented with fine bouquets of carnations.

New Order of Morning Service

Beginning January first, we began a new order of morning service. It opens at 10 A. M. From 10 to 10:30 there is worship. From 10:30 to 11:00 there is the sermon. Immediately we go to the classes for Bible study of one half hour, returning to the church auditorium at 11:35 for announcements, reports, plans, etc. The service is ONE SERVICE without interruption. A comparison of December with January will show how it is working. During December the average church attendance was 296 and the Sunday school was 384. During January the church was 450 and the Sunday school class attendance was 457,—just 7 different in the average for the five Sundays. There was an increase of 154 in church average and 73 in Sunday school classes. Of course the increase in attendance was somewhat due to the revival. But note the closeness of the attendance for the sermon and the classes, only 7 difference. Now, during December 482 folks left after classes, not remaining for the church service. But, during January only 48 left after the sermon, not remaining for class study. So far this new service is doing what we aimed at, namely uniting the two parts of the morning service, balancing the attendance. We recommend it. We will be willing to give further particulars upon anyone writing.

Finally

The depression has hit us another blow, this time beneath the belt. Bethlehem just dismissed 2800 men,—included among whom are many of our most liberal givers. Don't believe all you read in the papers about that corporation. These days challenge faith and courage, but they are marvelous in fulfillment of prophecy looking toward the return of our Lord. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Pastor. C. H. ASHMAN.

ELLET BRETHREN CHURCH

It has been quite a long time since our brotherhood has heard anything from this field. It has been a little over a year since we came here to labor with these people. It has been a year filled with joy, though not devoid of hardships and times of discouragement. But we praise God for the encouragements that come, for they drive us to our knees and, to advance on our knees is sure growth.

Every department of our work is in a healthy condition and a steady growth is manifest. Our Sunday school is on the upward trend. Brother Dwight Braucher is the capable superintendent. He has a fine Christian corps of officers and teachers assisting him in this great work. They meet each Sunday morning for a period of prayer to which is attributed the success of the Sunday school. Under his leadership the record attendance of this school has been recorded, for which we praise him.

The Bible study and prayer service on Wednesday evening has been a great delight to the pastor. There has been manifest a steady growth and interest on the part of our members for the Word of God and prayer. Many have testified that the Bible is a new Book to them. We have seen this service grow from fourteen to ninety-three in attendance.

A W. M. S. has been organized and this is proving a blessing to our women.

We have just closed a very successful evangelistic campaign, with R. Paul Miller as the evangelist. It was the greatest campaign ever held in this church. After weeks of anticipation and preparation our campaign began on Monday evening, January 9th, with fine interest and attendance. The campaign closed on Sunday night, January 29th with a full house.

All the results of this meeting cannot be enumerated for many of them will not be made evident in this life. Many have found a new joy in the Lord; they have been stirred to a greater zeal and passion in his service. Truly the Lord has brought great blessings to his people here in Ellet during these past three weeks.

Brother Miller was fearless in his declaration of the Word of God. His sermons went straight to the hearts of his hearers. Sinners were made to realize they were lost and that they needed a Divine Savior and many responded. Christians were made to realize their responsibility as Christians to their Lord. Many laid their lives on the altar anew for his service.

Brother Miller was tireless in his efforts to win the unsaved for Christ. Scores of personal visits were made by the evangelist and pastor during the meetings. The Gospel was presented to them in the homes. There were many visible results from these visits. It was indeed a real pleasure to work with our brother in personal evangelism. He is very thorough and effective in his appeal to the individual soul. During the meeting he effectively used the question box which helped to solve many problems and questions.

In all there were 100 confessions and re-consecrations during this campaign.

We want to thank Brother A. E. Whitted and his people from Louisville, who encouraged us so much by their presence many times throughout the meetings. Also Dr. J. C. Beal and his people from Canton, for having graced our meetings by their attendance several nights. Also Dr. G. C. Carpenter and some of his people from Smithville. Also the folks from Sterling and Rittman who attended from time to time. We appreciated the attendance of Rev. I. E. Long and his good folks from the Church of the Brethren here in Akron and other local pastors.

We greatly appreciated the faithful service of Brother Miller while he was among us and the prayers and interest of our people will follow him in all his work, both as evangelist and Home Mission Secretary. We heartily welcome you back again, Brother Miller. GRANT McDONALD.

THE REVIVAL AT ELLET, OHIO

This is a church in the midst of the Ohio industrial belt. It was once surrounded by a prosperous, well paid community, mostly employed by the rubber industries in the vicinity of Akron, of which Ellet is a suburb. Since the depression, the bottom has simply dropped out of everything economically, and thousands are actually kept by the public treasury in this vicinity. Many people were forced to move entirely out of the district and this caused a large loss to the work of our church here. The reductions in income reduced the support for the work and this has heavily burdened any progress made. Other divisive influences from outside the church itself made the situation yet more difficult. All these factors faced the church when the present pastor took charge of the work.

Grant McDonald, the pastor, has gone forward on his knees and as a result the Lord has worked out wonders in this place. In spite of all the handicaps and hindrances the church has been growing, troublesome elements disappearing, finances have actually risen higher than ever before, and this mission church which was reported closed, and about to close, by some who would perhaps have liked to see it close, is now seeing its best and most progressive days.

There is one brother in this church who is a real man of God. It is he who has advanced the money to cover the indebtedness on the building. No interest has been paid for years. He is not saying a word by way of complaint. His business is suffering also, but he is not a stranger to sacrifice for his Lord, and is glad he has been able to be a steward for God in a trying time. God give us more such men.

Too much can hardly be said of the pastor and his wife. Their love for Christ, their spirit of sacrifice, their real and deep prayer life, their love for souls, are all a joy to the Lord and those who know them. Our home while in this church was with them and it was a happy time in every way. The church is safe in their hands.

The hospitality of these folks is beyond compare. Their hearts and homes were wide open to us every day and happy indeed were the hours we fellowshiped with these people.

There is a real future for this church. It has a great field. They now have a vision to take that field for Christ. Greater things shall yet be known of the church in Akron.

The meetings were a great delight to all of us. The attendance was good from the first, the interest keen, and the results gracious and abundant. God simply poured out his Spirit upon us all and many were saved and blessed. For it all we thank and praise God. R. PAUL MILLER.

A MESSAGE FROM AN APPLE

A rather striking illustration of the way sin often operates came to my attention some days ago through an apple. Some days previous to this observation I had placed an apple in a bookcase in my office which, at that time, seemed a little too green to eat, expecting, within a few days to reclaim the apple and eat it. When I opened the door of the bookcase, to all appearance from the outside the apple seemed good, but upon examination I discovered that practically the whole side of the apple that was turned from the light had decayed. I do not know whether this rotten condition was the result of that side of the apple being turned from the light or due to some other cause. However, as far as I know there was no rotten spot on the apple when it was placed in the library case.

This little experience calls to mind what Jesus said upon occasion, "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." One of the great truths of this passage of Scripture is to the effect that the rottenness of sin prefers darkness rather than light. Or, in other words, men and women who are given to evil doings prefer to practice their wrong doing under cover of darkness.

There is another point to this illustration, I think, which is similar to the one already indicated, and that is that the weakness and inferior things of our lives are usually kept turned away from the light. We do not choose ordinarily to expose ourselves to criticism and condemnation by exhibiting anything less than the best qualities of our being.

May it not also be said, as in the case of the apple, that as long as the bad side of our nature is kept turned to the dark, that spiritual retrogression and moral decay will continue to increase. This process will go on until sin breaks out into the clear light of life's day.—The Watchword.

You who are letting miserable misunderstandings run on from year to year, meaning to clear them up some day, if you could only know and see and feel that the time is short, how it would break the spell; how you would go instantly and do the thing which you might never have another chance to do.—Phillips Brooks.

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE BUBBLE PIPE

By Ruby Holmes Martyn

"I will blow bubbles on the Castle Terrace, where they will show the bright colors of the sunshine!" cried the Princess Elaine to the Royal Footman. "Carry hither the bowl of suds!"

So he obediently took up the heavy blue bowl of soap-suds and followed the Princess out-of-doors to a table which stood near the vine-covered stone wall that edged one side of the terrace. The Princess herself carried the pretty bubble pipe that the Royal Godfather had given to her only that morning. Impatiently she filled the pipe with suds, and blew at the stem with all her might. But only gurgly little bubbles came out and dripped unpleasantly on the terrace pavement. Again she filled the pipe and blew with all her might, and the same thing happened.

"This bubble pipe isn't any good!" cried Elaine, throwing the pretty toy right over the vine-covered stone wall which edged one side of the terrace. "I'll play something else."

But nothing else suited her, and she stood grumbling about that when she caught sight of a big color-pictured bubble floating up in the sunshine at the other side of the wall. In it she could see a gay reflection of the castle and the gardens and the sky. While she gazed, another bubble, even larger than the first, floated up in the sunshine beyond the vine-covered wall.

"I'll find out where they come from!" cried Elaine, climbing a strong vine-stem to peer over the wall. She saw it was far, far down on the other side to a yard where a girl was blowing the bubbles which rose in the sunny air.

"Fetch me that bubble pipe!" called the Princess imperiously to the Royal Footman. "Mine was not good, and I want to blow bubbles this instant."

A few minutes later the Royal Footman returned to the terrace with a bubble pipe. Elaine grabbed it from him and rushed to her blue bowl of soap-suds. But again when she filled this pipe she got only unpleasant gurgly bubbles that dripped to the pavement. Angriily she threw the pipe over the vine-covered wall, and tried to forget how very much she wanted to blow big color-pictured filmy balls. But before she could forget, another lovely bubble rose in the sunny air beyond the terrace wall.

"That girl must have cheated me by sending a different pipe from what she was using," thought Elaine. "Or perhaps my soap-suds isn't just right to film. I'll find out."

So she climbed a strong vine-stem until she could peer over the wall and call to the girl in the yard far, far down on the other side.

"Bring thy pipe up here!" she cried imperiously.

"Just watch me!" answered the girl, putting the pipe in her apron pocket. "There are steps cut in the stones on this side of the wall."

It didn't take a minute for her to climb those steps and jump down on to the pavement of the Castle Terrace.

"I've always longed to climb up to play with thee, dear Princess!" she cried. "But my father said I must never, never try to climb the steps unless I was asked by thee." "I saw thy lovely bubbles," said Elaine. "My pipe was not any good, and I want to blow bubbles this instant. And it looked just like thine."

"Mayhap they are the very same," answered Rose quietly. "This pipe seemed twice to drop from the sky while I was playing in the yard."

"Oh, I threw it away two times!" gasped the Princess. "Then the trouble must be with my soap-suds."

"It does not seem as if suds in such a lovely bowl could be at fault," said Rose. "Mine was in a cracked cup. Perhaps thou took too much of it into the pipe at once. Take it and try again."

So Elaine dipped the pipe lightly in the suds. "And blow slowly!" whispered Rose.

As the Princess blew, the most beautiful bubble she had ever seen grew and grew until it broke away from the pipe and floated off in the sunny air. It was bright with pictures, and drifted out of sight without bursting.

"Now thou shalt blow one!" cried Elaine, putting the pipe in Rose's brown hand. "Thou hast taught me not to be greedy and impatient; and we will have glad, happy times together!"—Our Little Ones.

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Sunday is the most appropriate time for such a decision, preparing the way for entrance into church membership on Easter Sunday. Decisions, however, may be encouraged any time through the year, and these will result from good teaching as well as from special appeal.

2. Life Work decisions emphasized regularly. To help the pupils to become workers in the Kingdom; to recruit for the ministry, missionary service, and kindred activities of the church. Such decisions will result from regular teaching if properly done. But opportunity should be given for public enlistment. This may be done in connection with the White Gift Offering.

VIII. CONFERENCES

1. Workers' Conferences held regularly, ten recommended, six required. To bring together those workers engaged in common tasks; to enable them to view together co-operative achievements and possibilities; to promote leadership morale and esprit de corps. Such a conference should be held early in the month. If planned for by a wide-awake program committee the meeting will be more attractive and helpful. Suggestions and helps are given, periodically, on the Sunday school page in the Brethren Evangelist.

2. Delegates to some convention, denominational and inter-denominational. To acquaint the school with forward-looking plans and to unite it with a larger fellowship. City, County, and State Conferences or Conventions, which feature Sunday school work, or Brethren Institutes State Conferences and the Winona National Conference are usually informing and inspiring. Enrollment in the Shipshewana Young People's Training School will count also.

IX. DENOMINATIONAL

1. Records accurately kept and statistics sent promptly to the general secretary. To enable the school to be intelligently informed of its own personnel and to assist the denomination in checking up upon its own strength and progress. The individual membership record card kept on file alphabetically supplements the class membership book. Quarterly reports as to enrollment, attendance, offering, and services rendered prepare the way for an annual report and make it easy for the secretary to fill out the statistical blank sent by the general secretary.

2. Use of Brethren Publications. To foster denominational loyalty and to make possible improvement of said publications with general support. Where these publications meet the need of the local school they should be given preference. Graded lessons may be obtained through the Brethren Publishing Company.

X. LIBRARY

1. At least one book chosen from any seven of the ten divisions suggested. To equip the worker with tools and to provide helpful reading for the whole school. The book list given in the Hand Book, published by the National Association, offers a varied selection. Schools are asked to select at least one book from any seven of the ten divisions. A copy of the Hand Book or further information concerning these books may be had on request from the Educational secretary. Books purchased through the Ashland office will mean a saving of postage to the buyer and a slight percent of profit to our National Sunday School Association. Kindly favor us by buying through our office.

AWARDS GIVEN EACH YEAR AT NATIONAL CONFERENCE

1. Schools attaining 100 points will be recognized as Front Line schools and will be awarded a book priced at $1.00.
2. Schools attaining 85 points will be recognized as Banner schools and will be awarded a 60c book.
3. Schools attaining 70 points will receive public mention in the recognition service.

THE NEEDS of The Brethren Home Board are the following:

1. For maintenance of the Home;
2. Meeting the obligation at the Land Bank;
3. For the payment of Interest and Annuities.

THE ONLY SOURCES OF INCOME are the following:

1. Income from the farms;
2. Gifts and offerings from the churches and individual friends and from bequests.

Last year the churches gave less than $700 to this work. That is the reason we could not meet our obligations in full. It is also the reason why this year's offering must be larger.

Why should the Church give to this project?
Two reasons stand out prominently, namely,

1. The obligation to care for poor;
2. This Home property comprises a value of some eighty thousand dollars originally, and in order to conserve it for the Church it must be maintained.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

PERHAPS TODAY

“Occupy till I come.”

—Luke xix., 13.

—Luke xii., 40

I called one day on one of my church members and she was whitening the front steps. She got up all in confusion, and said:

‘O, dear sir, I did not know you were coming today, or I would have been ready.’ I replied, ‘Dear friend, you could not be in better trim than you are; you are doing your duty like a good housewife, and may God bless you.’ She had no money to spare for a servant, and she was doing her duty keeping her house tidy. I thought she looked more beautiful with her pail beside her than if she had been dressed according to the latest fashions. I said to her: ‘When the Lord Jesus Christ comes suddenly I hope He will find me doing as you were doing, namely, fulfilling the duty of the hour.’ ”

Will Repealists Agree to Pay Costs of Drink Accidents?

By Georgia Robertson

Listen to the ceaseless tolling of that phantom bell all day long and all night long for 358 days—a year lacking but seven days! Every 15 minutes tolling for each of the 34,400 persons killed by automobiles in the United States in 1931! An average of one death every 15 minutes day and night for 358 days!

There were but 216 cities in our entire country with over that number of inhabitants—34,400—listed in the 1920 census. Whose imagination can paint that throng of men, women, and children who passed into eternity in 1931, killed by automobiles! It would take that number of people to pass a given point, at the rate of one every minute, 573 hours, or 71 days of eight hours each, or over two months!

Look upon this great throng of automobile accident victims for that same year who survived: some on crutches, or walking with canes, others with a missing finger, hand or arm, or an eye gone; many faces scarred for life, others with shattered nerves—mere physical wrecks unable financially longer to support themselves. Many with all their savings spent for medical and hospital treatment.

See how thronged our city streets and public highways are with motor cars. Everyone knows the inability to stop a motor vehicle even the fraction of a section sooner may transform it into a death car! The ability to stop a car in the shortest possible time depends on keen sight, alert mind, unclouded judgment, and instantaneous response at wheel, accelerator and brake.

The reason one gets a "kick" out of any beverage containing alcohol is because it dulls the senses, making things seem different from what they really are, makes one carefree and reckless about what is said or done. It also slows down the ability to take in a situation and act promptly. Psychologists tell us it is not the man who cannot talk straight or walk straight after drinking who is the great menace in this automobile age, for he will not attempt to run a car; but the man who has had but a bottle or two of beer or a glass of wine and so is a bit reckless and ready to take a chance, or whose response to danger is retarded for a fraction of a second only perhaps in cutting off the gas supply, releasing the clutch, or putting on the brake.

It is undeniable that with alcoholic drinks—even beer—legalized and easy to get, with no stigma attached to purchase, and kept in the home temptingly and conveniently at hand, there would be many more persons at the steering wheel of automobiles whose brains and muscles could not instantly respond to danger.

Suppose Uncle Sam were to try this novel experiment to test the advisability of repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment in this automobile age, how many of those clamoring for repeal would line up for the test?

Take some large city. Washington for instance, where there are over 120,000 automobiles and motor trucks licensed by the city besides the stream of motor vehicles pouring into and out of the city regularly night and morning from both Maryland and Virginia, have stands at convenient places where every one who wished could buy beer and other kinds of liquor freely for one day, after those who are clamoring for repeal had personally deposited with the Government money, or sound securities and made themselves financially responsible for all claims that might be made for damages to cars and their occupants, and property injured in any way, and to pedestrians injured by those who had taken any alcoholic liquor whatever. Who would allow his children to be on the streets alone that day?

After his chauffeur had a few drinks who would allow him to drive his handsome new car or take his family for a drive? What repealist would come forward and offer to underwrite the cost of all accidents that might happen on that day because of drink? Who would expect to get the present insurance rates on his car or liability insurance rates for those he or his drinking chauffeur might injure, if the Eighteenth Amendment were repealed?

Dr. Dick, nationally-known inventor, pastor, and economist, who has put months of study on the relative number of traffic deaths in prohibition and non-prohibition countries states in "An Open Letter to Henry Ford," that had our death rates from automobile accidents in "1930" been at the same ratio as wet Germany's. they would have jumped from 38,929 to the astonishing total of 182,229!

Germany being more densely populated than our country—though having only one-twenty-sixth as many cars in proportion to population—he turned to Canada, less thickly populated than the United States, where he found "the ratio of deaths to number of automobiles operated in the Dominion is exactly two and six-tenths times the ratio in the United States."

In Great Britain, with only one-seventh the number of automobiles we have in proportion to population, their killings were "actually four times as great."

Before the Eighteenth Amendment became a part of the Constitution, many persons were unable to report for work Monday mornings not having gotten over the effects of Sunday drinking. With two extra leisure hours a day and two holidays a week—when we get the "five-day week and six-hour day"—how safe would the streets and highways be without the restraining influence of the Eighteenth Amendment on automobile drivers?

Could anyone look upon those 6,980 little caskets containing the lifeless forms of the 6,980 children who were killed in automobile accidents in 1931 and at those 212,490 children who during the same year were injured in automobile accidents—actually see their crippled, disfigured, nerve-shattered little bodies and hear their cries of pain and moans of distress—and then be willing to take part in the death or maiming of other little victims by voting for the restoration of beer—one or two bottles of which taken by the driver of an automobile makes it even more certain to become a death car? These figures were carefully compiled by the Traveler's Insurance Company.

If those who have thought it "smart" to flout the Eighteenth Amendment could look upon those sights, and could have the spirit forms of just those who were victims of drink because of their example during prohibition years, surround them in their sleeping hours, would they, like Lady MacBeth, see blood stains on their own hands impossible to wash away?

Would they longer think it "smart" to flout the Eighteenth Amendment or work for its repeal?

Think it over.

Dry Church Leaders to Rally in Washington, March 7, 8

Washington, D. C.—Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, resident bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church at Washington, calls attention again to a conference of church leaders representing a number of denominations which will be held probably in Foundry Church, Washington, D. C. on March 7 and 8, to consider the present temperance situation. The call is not issued at the instance of any single denomination, for eminent religious leaders of a number of churches have already indicated their purpose to urge a general and representative participation.

"We do not contemplate any organization to displace any other group," says Bishop Hughes, "but we believe that the time has come when the reserves must be brought up to the line of battle and the churches must adequately assume their peculiar responsibilities in the matter. The churches have their own temperance task to do, and while there are many phases of the matter which can be better handled by independent organizations, there are other phases which the churches themselves can and must handle. It is essential that our religious groups have a common understanding at this critical time for the temperance cause. We must have coordinated action. We must avail ourselves of all responsible Christian leadership. We must make complete use of the entire organization of the Christian Church courageously and effectively.

"In the matter of temperance education, for instance, there has been great delinquency. There are young people in our churches who have not been instructed in the reasons for total abstinence and who have no conception of the social evils which are the inevitable product of the licensed liquor traffic. We must instruct them in the facts, and we must stimulate the thinking of every age group for which the church is responsible.

Some Things that Call for Repentance

A few weeks ago a general call to repentance was sent out to church folks the country over and a certain outstanding city-church pastor decided within himself that he and his church had no need of repentance. and he told right out in public how he felt about it. He was quite positive that they had been guilty of no neglect or indifference or short-coming. They had nothing to be sorry about or to repent of. Then one or two other self-righteous individuals spoke up and said, Amen, that is the way we feel about it too. And an editor thought an example of real courage had been found and commended the brave preacher for taking a stand against such sentiment.

Such religious egotism and self-satisfaction was not the common thing, we were glad to note, but there appeared many other evidences of the need of repentance, and such evidences are becoming apparent to an increasing number of people. Some have been aware of such a need for a long while and have told us that what the country needed most was a revival of real religion. Others discovered the fact and then many others joined in until it became a chorus. But we see no repentance, no evidence of a turning from sin unto God. Maybe the depression hasn't got far enough along yet. At any rate, the outlook is not encouraging, and the things that call for repentance on the part of church people are increasing in urgency and numbers. He is simply "kidding" himself who pretends to see no need of repentance. The necessity is obvious, and among the things that demand it the following are mere examples.

The deplorable financial condition is an evidence of the need of repentance. Most of the money of the country and of the world is in the hands of nominally Christian people, and they dominate the business of the world. If they had been Christian in deed as well as in name there would never have been this breakdown. The fact is that comparatively few of the really influential church people of the world have ever learned one of the most simple yet fundamental principles of Christian doctrine and life, that of stewardship. If Christian men realized and practiced their responsibilities as stewards of God, there would be prevalent an altogether different attitude toward wealth and the places of authority and leadership. Get men right in their attitude toward wealth and they will not exploit their fellowmen nor seek to make money without regard to human life and character. Men of real Christian spirit and motive will not be conscienceless and unscrupulous profiteers in business but will conduct their enterprises as means of service. That is not the prevailing attitude however. Instead it is the profit motive almost without limit that dominates business and the extremes of poverty and wealth are becoming ever more widely separated, with the middle class steadily diminishing and drifting. And all this in the face of the fact that so-called Christian people are in control and determine the standards. Surely there is need of repentance within the membership of the church.

The receding conviction as to the evil of intemperance, and particularly that of the beverage liquor traffic, indicates a need of repentance. Alcohol has not lost any of its harmful effects on the human system that men should be willing to put it within the reach of every boy and girl, nor has the old saloon sluffed off any of its lawless and vicious character that we should be about to return it to the chief corners in every city. What has changed? Not Prohibition, nor the efficiency of enforcement officers. It is a moral stamina, and courage and strength of conviction that has changed. And these men who have weakened are church members in large numbers. Church members in high station and in low. Church members active and inactive, but church members who have lost cast as members of the kingdom of God. Among these there is certainly need of repentance.

The readiness with which church members are participating in the demoralizing and despiritualizing amusements and indulgences of the world points to a real need of repentance, if the church is to have power and vitality. The Christian is admonished to live a life that is separated from the unclean world, to avoid the very appearance of evil, and to think on the things that are "pure", "lovely" and of "good report", yet the vicious movies with their still more vicious bill-boards are daily drawing the attention and the support of multitudes of those who are pledged to the higher life. The dance floor lures them into a compromise of their Christian witness and the card party takes the edge off their spirituality. In many ways church members are taking on the ways of the world and losing their power and vitality. What can be done to regain the values that have been lost, to get back the former keenness of love and devotion, the one-time joy and enthusiasm? There is just one way—repent, repent. Whenever men stray away from or lose contact with their Lord and Savior, the only way back into fellowship and power is by way of repentance. And let every Christian be most cautious about denying that he ever has need of such repentance.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The church at Lanark, Illinois, where Brother C. C. Grisso is pastor, has a live, active Christian Endeavor society. Their correspondent tells of some of their activities on the C. E. page this week. We welcome other reports from our young people's organizations.

Prof. Alva J. McClain has been unable to occupy his department this week because of a trip to Washington, D. C., where he is to give a series of Bible lectures in the Wallace Memorial United Presbyterian church of that city. The pastor of that church was a former classmate of Prof. McClain in Xenia Seminary.

Send offerings for Superannuated Ministers' support to Rev. G. L. Maus, Nappanee, Indiana, and send it promptly, as Brother Maus the secretary states that these aged ministers and their dependents have been without funds for some time. And send money for the Brethren's Home to Mr. Henry Rinehart, treasurer, Flora, Indiana.

Brother Ephraim Culp of Goshen, Indiana, is a member of the Brethren's Home Board and knows the situation and the need. In a straightforward business way he tells us some needs that must be met promptly, and that is a strong appeal for every member to share to the limit of their means that the Board may be enabled to maintain the honor and interests of the church.

The Brethren people of both church groups are having an enjoyable time fraternizing in one section of the great state of Texas. It is to be hoped that they can concentrate, or evangelize enough, to build up a permanent Brethren work in this section. They are to hold a communion service on March 5, with members of both branches of the church participating, thus showing a fine spirit of fellowship.

Brother Guilford Leslie of Ashland, Ohio, whose relationship with the church goes back beyond the days of the deplorable split in Brethrenism, writes that he has been a reader of the Evangelist from its beginning, and was also a reader of its predecessor, "The Progressive Christian", launched by H. R. Holsinger. Brother Leslie appreciates the days in which we live because of their greater harmony over some earlier times he can recall. Now, who else among our long-time readers will favor us with a note?

Dr. Teeter writes in his Business Manager's Corner about Evangelist subscriptions and the close of our campaign. As he says, not everything has been accomplished that might have been desired in the way of new subscriptions, nevertheless we consider the response splendid considering the financial situation. Some of our churches have done extra well in both new and renewals, and we congratulate them. We appreciate also the many expressions of appreciation that have been received, examples of which Brother Teeter mentions.

Our correspondence from Roann, Indiana, reports some events of interest from that field. As the year was drawing to a close they bade farewell to their pastor, Brother G. L. Maus, and his wife, who had been in charge of this work since the fall of 1928, if our memory serves us right. Brother and Sister Maus had done a splendid service there, and left to enter the larger field at Nappanee. They have selected as their new pastor, Brother George Pontius, who has been the faithful minister of the word to the good people of West Alexandria, Ohio.

The revival meeting conducted by Brother W. C. Benschoff in the Third church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where Brother J. L. Gingrich is pastor, resulted in ten confessions and two reconsecrations. It proved difficult to bring the unconverted to the hearing of the Gospel, which is not an uncommon difficulty in the Lord's work. The world has many and strong appeals that hinder people from giving attention to the Word of the Lord. But souls were saved, nevertheless, and the church was still more strengthened in the faith. The pastor is pleased with the stimulating effect, both of this meeting and also of a previous brief meeting by Brother R. I. Humberd, on his congregation.

All friends of Ashland College, and we imagine that includes just about all readers of this paper, will enjoy President E. E. Jacobs' newsletter this week, particularly because of its reassuring note concerning the college and the high type of educational opportunities there offered. We believe he is not merely making a bid for students, but that he is telling the truth about the situation, and the more closely our contacts with the college become, the more convinced we are that it is the kind of a school that the church has a right to be proud of, and that it is the best place to be found where Brethren young people can secure their higher education. And after reading Dr. Jacobs' contributed article the bugaboos about evolution instruction at Ashland ought to be cleared up.

Brother Harold D. Fry, pastor of the church at Sunnyside, Washington, writes that the Lord continues to give victory to his people. During the last quarter he received six new members by baptism and two by reconsecration. Three others were baptized by triune immersion, though desiring membership in another church. Church finances have not fallen behind since last July, he says, and that speaks well for the sacrificial spirit of the members. The church has lost several families by removal, but the suggestion is given that these may be the means of helping to extend the borders of the church into new fields. That is not only New Testament procedure, as Brother Fry suggests, but it is the early Dunker church method of church extension. That is the way the Brethren movement grew in America from Philadelphia westward.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, Sunday school editor, left Friday, February 17th, for Indiana, where he expects to spend two Sundays and the intervening week speaking in the Indiana churches and counselling with groups of church leaders about the more extensive use of our own church literature. The loyalty of our people to our publishing house has been encouraging in many respects, especially in view of prevailing conditions. We are quite certain that the standard of loyalty and support set by Brethren people in this regard is quite above that of many large denominations, and we wish to congratulate the pastors and other church leaders who have given serious attention during past week to the Evangelist circulation also to the larger use of our Sunday school literature. Several hundred subscriptions to the church paper were sent in as a result of our campaign. There were some churches, of course, that were not as successful as others in getting subscriptions, and we hope they will yet succeed in a larger way. There are also some church schools that might use more of our Sunday school publications than they now are. The larger patronage of these churches is certain to be a very important factor in the welfare of our publishing house. We have no doubt our Indiana churches will give Dr. Bame a hearty welcome; we hope they will also give him encouragement by their increased patronage.

Brother R. Paul Miller in his "important announcement" this week, found on the Mission page, makes two statements with emphasis, which ought to be written in large letters that would stand out in the sky, visible to the last member of the entire brotherhood. First he says, "Our Home Missions must be maintained!" Then he says, "Our Home Missions must be advanced!" We can afford to sacrifice much to do that. And even if such a sacrifice seems hard to make, we should bear in mind that it will cost much more in the long run not to make it. We must get right down to New Testament plans of raising money for the Lord's work and must not hesitate to bring the responsibility home to every member of the church. Stewardship and tithing must be taught with conviction and with definiteness and not merely hand out a hint now and then. The New Testament church resorted to emergency offerings as well as systematic giving and systematic giving was urged as a means of promoting emergency gifts. Our Home Mission Board is proposing an emergency measure for promoting increased giving to Home Missions. It occurs to us that these little banks in the hands of the children may, under proper instruction and guidance by the pastors, become "foundation builders" in more ways than one. They may be the means of building into the lives of the children the habit of systematic giving unto the Lord in a manner and in a proportion that will make them worthy Christian stewards. We commend the Home Board in this new project. It has splendid possibilities.

From the First Brethren church of Long Beach, California, of which Dr. L. S. Bauman is pastor, we have an extended report of the splendid achievements of the past year. It is an unusual record and bears witness to the blessing of God upon that church in a remarkable way. During 1932 they received 136 new members by baptism, three by letter and two by relation, making a total of 141. Subtracting the forty-seven lost for various causes, leaves a net gain of 94 and a total membership of 973. The record in finances is as remarkable as that in members, the total amount raised during the year being $32,000 in cash for all purposes. The Sunday school reports an average attendance of 920 per Sunday, which is an increase of 114 over the previous year. Much credit is given to "The Seventy" and to the Transportation Committee for the growing church membership and climbing Sunday school attendance, and when the record of their activities is considered, it appears that these are indeed important factors in the church's growth. Particularly does the Seventy give valuable assistance to Brother Bauman in parish work and in personal soul winning, enabling him thereby to give more time to the preaching of the Word in many places aside from his own pulpit. It is indeed a great church and the record of its many activities is inspiring. What God will do for a big church, he will also do for smaller churches, as many of them can testify. What we all need is the faith to claim God's promises and the consecration to give ourselves unreservedly to his work. That is what is being done where God is blessing our churches in remarkable ways, as he is doing at Long Beach.

A most pleasant surprise came to us as we were about ready to close up the Evangelist for this week. A letter came written by Brother E. L. Miller himself, whom we had supposed would not be able to write for some time to come. He is still flat on his back in the Harrisburg Hospital, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and will be for several weeks yet, but he was able to write us a two page letter, though we are sure it was done with much effort. He

The Teaching of Evolution in Ashland College

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D., Professor of Biology

Reports are current these days in certain quarters relative to the position of Ashland College upon the question of evolution. It is the purpose of this short article to set forth some facts upon this topic.

It should be said, in the first place, that at least so far as I know, those from whose lips the charge so easily comes, have never taken the time to define or delimit the term evolution and therefore, as the matter now stands, it is exceedingly difficult either to deny or sustain the charge. So it will be necessary, first of all, to inquire just what all might with justice be included under the word evolution, which has come to possess such an ominous connotation. In the minds of many, it has a decidedly evil meaning and is confused with Darwinism, with which, of course, it was never identical. To say that a man believes in evolution is at once to brand him as an atheist, a heretic, and more or less of a religious and moral derelict.

So this subject can not be discussed with any degree of intelligence until the word evolution has been delimited and defined. To give a yes or no answer to it would be exactly like doing so with the classical question, "Have you left off beating your wife?" for a yes or no might imply an error in fact. Or it is like asking whether one believes in the Christian religion for the answer would all depend on what is meant by the words Christian religion. The question can not be answered by a simple yes or no.

Now, the DOCTRINE of evolution is a much bigger thing than the mere THEORY of evolution. The former includes in its sweep everything which possesses an element of change, while the latter is much more limited in its scope. Therefore, when we speak of evolution we must first decide whether we mean the doctrine of evolution or the theory of evolution. Therefore, when we use the expression "evolution", shall we include the movements of history? The trends in education? The tendencies in language, which are changing all the time? The fleeting topography of the earth? Inventions, moving as they do towards a goal? If we do want to include these, then by every law of right and justice, we ought to say so, or else we are stabbing a man in the back and in the dark when we say he believes in evolution. The importance of this distinction can not possibly be over-emphasized.

But supposing we narrow down the field to merely organic evolution, then do we mean the evolution of man? To be perfectly specific, do we mean that Homo sapiens has arisen by evolutionary processes from some other order of the Primates? If that is what we mean in all fairness, we ought very explicitly to say so, or else again we may accuse men of believing something which is very far from their minds.

Or, again, do we mean that each succeeding horizon of plants and animals has arisen by evolutionary processes from the preceding ones? Or do we mean the evolution of species under the hand and control of man? Or do we mean the development of varieties, unnumbered as they are,—the very basis of all agriculture, known to every stock-raiser, farmer, and horticulturist, and without which we would lapse back into primitive savagery? Or do we mean the evolution and development of strains within the plant and animal kingdoms? Or do we mean the evolution of genera? Or families? Or pyhla?

Or, lastly, do we mean that there has or has not been an evolution in point of time? Or do we mean in point of structure? Is there an ascending scale in complexity from the unicellular plants and animals on up to and through the metazoa? It is quite important to distinguish between an evolution in a time scale and a space scale and a scale of development. Can all the plants and animals be arranged in an ascending scale of complexity, leaving for the moment, the mode of their origin aside? Not to specify here in all this is to poison the minds of the uninitiated when one speaks of evolution.

So, just what is meant by evolution? Now these rather strange words in the paragraph above, are not intended to confuse or dodge the issue. They ARE the issue. That is just exactly what it is all about, at least insofar as the field of organic evolution is concerned.

Now what is the truth? First of all, so far as the evolution of genera and species is concerned, the question can not even be approached apart from cytology, taxonomy, and mendelism, not to mention (plant) embryology. Of course it is well known that man makes species now as readily as he does any number of other things, and also takes species apart, so that the old dogma of the "immutability of species" is now no longer valid. Of course this was long known regarding varieties but now it is extended to species, not to say genera. And if this were a technical rather than a popular discussion, it would be necessary to define both genera and species in the newer light of the chromosome.

If this phase of evolution is left out, that is, if you leave out the field of cytology, taxonomy and mendelism, with their accompanying microscopy, then you have no

TRUTH

By W. Lonax Childress

*There is a challenge in the character of truth,
Unheeded though it be till its appointed hour;
There is finality in what it has to say,
It is endued with power.*

*The braggart bends the crowd of weakest wills,
His sophistry of foam is of the surface still;
The tide of truth is deep and strong and wide,
It has the victor's thrill.*

*Truth has the triumph of the goal at last,
When drums of doubt are silenced in the night;
It bears upon its brow the morning star,
And ushers in the light.*

*Cowards may wince before the hurtling blast,
And the long line of weak defense may give;
Truth triumphs over tragedy at last,
And only truth will live.*

*It stands serenely in the market place,
When honor bartered finds its price in gold,
Timeless and stainless, its escutcheon clean,
Forever young and old.*

*Truth was not born to die, its purpose sure
Survives the tumbling stars and crumbling sod;
Unfettered, free, it has the wings of dawn,
It is the will of God.*

question left, for it is an integral part of the general question of evolution and until this evidence is reviewed, all discussion is lopsided, partial, and in great part worthless. One can not approach this part of the question until one is familiar with the work done at the Bridges Laboratories, at Pasadena, California, Cambridge, England, and elsewhere.

But with all these ramification of evolution to one side, and confining ourselves to but two phases, viz., (a) the "animal origin of man", and (b) the origin of species in nature and alone, what is the present attitude of the College in this regard? I am asking these questions because I suppose they are the ones in which most of my readers are interested, yet I must insist that they represent but a fraction of the general question.

First let me say, that so far as the various species of plants and animals having arisen in nature from preceding ones, the evidence is imperfect, partial and speculative. I myself have never so taught.

And secondly, so far as man having arisen from some early order of Primates, this has never been taught in this college, at least not since I have been President. But I want to warn my readers against one thing and that is, that there is a world of difference between TEACHING evolution and TEACHING ABOUT evolution. About the latter there is no choice but the former is a wholly different matter. Only the evil-minded or indiscriminate will fail to distinguish this point. There is as much difference between teaching evolution and teaching about evolution as there is between preaching Mormonism and teaching about Mormonism. This point can not be over-emphasized.

Now, upon the above basis, the College is willing to rest its case, at least so far as the writer of this article is concerned. Nothing is easier than to say that an institution is teaching evolution but it is quite another thing to delimit and define the term. The very words, phylum, family, genus, species and variety as well as the words cytology, taxonomy, and many others, must be understood in their technical connotations before one can even begin to survey the field now covered by the word evolution. If however, the crude conceptions often held and generally referred to are meant, then the matter is easily disposed of so far as our teaching here is concerned.

I hope this brief and untechnical article will serve to set the school right before the readers of this paper. The charge that "the college is teaching evolution" has absolutely no weight nor meaning until the statement is defined and clarified and those informed will not be misled. The word evolution appears on practically every page of any biological text-book, sometimes with correct implications, and sometimes not, so let all who read these words keep this one thing in mind, make doubly sure, the properly qualified teacher TEACHES HIS SUBJECT AND NOT THE TEXT. I wonder how many of my readers know this? A man who teaches a text-book only is not fit to teach in an arts college. Any teacher who knows his field disputes his author every day, if need be, and takes delight in doing so. A text-book may not at all represent the teacher's view-point.

And lastly, the church ought to be profoundly grateful, that it has here teachers who are not only Christians but have sufficient training so as to be able to separate the wheat from the chaff and give the best to their students.

The Man with the Yardstick

A Parable

By Thoburn C. Lyon

Hoping that the Holy Spirit might use it as a means of showing Brother Marlin the seriousness of his offense against the church, Brother Lyon prepared the following parable and sent it to him. The one to whom it was sent recognized its purpose and message, for in a personal letter to Brother Lyon he spoke of it as a "clever rebuke." However, he presumed to print it in his next issue of the Postscript (which Brother Marlin himself aptly referred to as the "headache"). Fearing lest anyone seeing the article in the Postscript might suppose that he was in any way in sympathy with its unchristian ravings, Brother Lyon requested that the article itself, with this explanation, be printed in the "Evangelist."

Once upon a time there was a man who made himself a yardstick. It was a nice yardstick, and very well made.

Having made such a nice yardstick, it was only natural that the man should begin to use it, and with it he measured everything he met. If anything seemed all right when measured by his yardstick, then it was very right indeed; if it seemed too large, or too small, it was very, very wrong.

Now there was one Great Building which had been in process of construction for many centuries. The plans for this Building had been prepared by a Great King, who had himself laid the foundation and seen that the Building was started. Then he had gone away, with the promise that some day he would return, to receive his Building unto himself.

Some there were who scoffed; but others, through love of the King, took up the work, and through the centuries the Building slowly grew. As it took shape, men could see that it was indeed a lovely Building. It is true that some portions of the work were imperfect: in some cases, men had failed to understand the plan of the Great King, and the work was therefore not quite according to his design; a few cases there were where men had thought to improve upon the original, for self-glory or other reasons. But still the Building grew, and began to be a lovely thing, already giving shelter to countless thousands who, otherwise, would have been entirely without shelter.

And then came the man with his yardstick. He measured here; he measured there. "This is wrong!" he thundered. "That is also wrong! And whoever built this part was surely unfit to work on such a Building!"

At last, when he had finished his measuring, it was found that only that portion which he had builded himself, in company with a few fellow-workers, was worthy to remain—that is, according to his yardstick.

The man now called upon the people to have nothing to do with such builders or such a poorly constructed Building. Some poor souls there were who left it, and having nowhere else to go, they wandered homeless and hopeless until death overtook them.

Others replied that this Building had provided safe shelter for all who came before them, and they were confident it would continue to do so for them.

Still, the man with his yardstick greatly hindered the work, and by declaring their work unsound and improper he brought much sorrow and dishonor to many worthy workmen.

But still the Building grew, and its loveliness ever increased.

And then one day the Great King returned, and recompensed to every man according to his work.

The man with the yardstick was amazed as the Great King commended one after another of the workmen whose work he had despised. At length he thus voiced his surprise:

"How is it, O King, that you call these men faithful servants, whose work was so poorly done? Even I, with my little yardstick, could see better than that!"

Then spake the Great King: "Know this, O man; you have judged by outward appearance, but I have looked upon their hearts and found them perfect.

"And who art thou, O man, that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth, and thou art inexcusable.

"With thy little yardstick, not only hast thou not built my House thyself, but thou hast even hindered those who builded. And with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again."

Now when the man heard that he was to be measured with his own yardstick, he greatly repented that he had been so exacting in his measurements of others; but his repentance came too late, and availed him nothing.

There was weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Music in the Psalms

By J. H. Hall

Paul speaks of the results of being filled with the Spirit as follows: "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord."

Nothing can be brought forth by the literary world that will set the heart to singing and making melody to the Lord, equal to the psalms of David.

Surely, then, there is music in the Psalms.

King David was the greatest of song writers, the most beautiful rhythm of thought breathes from his songs. He did not only compose psalms, but he took a great interest and part in the performance of music and was styled the "sweet singer of Israel."

David composed a number of psalms and caused his skilled players to set them to music. He required the Levites to devote themselves to the study of music, and distributed 4,000 sacred singers into 24 classes, who should serve at the temple in their turns.

The chief musicians, or directors, were Asaph, Jeduthan and Herman assisted by their sons—24 in all—the latter of whom were the directors of the chorus classes. Asaph was King David's private instructor.

David incorporated in the Psalms so extensively every human feeling and employed such an adequacy of language that we would not seek his rival, for our search would be in vain.

There is practically no emotion that cannot be stirred or given expression through the medium of music. It is, in this, a universal language. Glance through the Psalms and note the moods of mind expressed. There are glimpses into the dark valley of sorrow, of humiliation, of shame and defeat; and then there are wonderful flights of journeys to the topmost peak where the atmosphere is rare and the light perfect. There are dirges of captivity and songs of deliverance; there are fierce appeals for swift vengeance and there are poems of admiration, calling on earth, heaven, and the great deep to praise the Lord.

The Psalms have been quoted more frequently than any book in the Old Testament.

Composers of anthems and cantatas have found the Psalms to be a greater storehouse of material and inspiration than all other sources combined.

"Blessing and glory and wisdom and thanksgiving and honor and power and might, be unto our God forever and ever. Amen."

VOICE OF THE CHURCHES

REVERENCE

Not so long ago there appeared an article in a Pittsburgh newspaper telling of a "Silent Service" to be conducted by an M. E. church in Ohio. There was to be no singing nor talking. No words were to be spoken, not even by the pastor.

I would not advocate such a service for our churches, yet a little more silence in some churches would be helpful. What we need is a spirit of reverence. Reverence encourages meditation, introspection, and worship. No doubt the service mentioned above helped some of the members to meditate—to think of their own sinful condition and need of God—to worship God in silence.

Lack of reverence breeds lawlessness. Lack of reverence in the home causes children to ridicule and disobey their parents. Lack of reverence for the nation fosters a disregard for law, and leads to a trampling on the rights of others under the guise of "personal liberty." Lack of reverence in church shows a lack of respect for God, and deadens the spiritual atmosphere of the service.

ROBERT D. CREES, Kittanning, Pennsylvania.

DOERS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS ARE RIGHTEOUS

John 3:7—"Little children, let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous."

No one will deny that we are surrounded with political corruption, social rottenness and religious chaos until we cannot see clearly the path that lies ahead of us. The whole world seems groping in the mist and darkness, and seeking a way out. We went forth with high hopes and ideals and have at last been conscious of the fact that these hopes and ideals have tumbled about our heads. Every person today is aware of the existing condition. And thousands have offered suggestions as to how we are going to get out, while others see no way out and commit suicide. There are a great many theories as to why we got into such a mess.

We are persuaded that God does not lead his people into such conditions that they may suffer untold misery. Man alone is to blame. History declares that when man forsakes the righteousness of God, he always gets into trouble, and when he walks with God and accepts his righteousness, he walks in paths of peace. The Israelites enjoyed peace and happiness as long as they were obedient to God, and they prospered even in the wilderness, but they suffered untold misery when they no longer took God into their plans. This has been true of many nations. No one doubts or questions that truth concerning individuals, and if true of individuals it is true of nations. As we view the world conditions we are made to believe that there is a lack of righteousness, for "he that doeth righteousness is righteous," and righteousness always keeps us in God's favor.

Then if righteousness is the great need of the world, where shall we seek it? It seems that the church could launch a mighty campaign, and that every preacher could do well to preach and practice righteousness. That can only be done when we are righteous. If we are righteous we will do righteousness. Many times a false piety is mistaken for righteousness, and that piety is paraded in both pulpit and pew, and it is accepted as righteousness. We must have the righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ which is an imputed righteousness (Rom. 4:6). If that is accepted and becomes a part of us, heady high-mindedness, selfishness, suspicion, scorn and all those things that we try to make ourselves believe is zeal for the Lord, will pass from us, and we will fall at the feet of Jesus seeking his power and righteousness, then we will arise and go out with the grace of God crowding judgment out of our hearts and with a message of love and power from God until men and women will with amazement say, behold the righteousness of God.

Our church may not be great in numbers but it can be a mighty power for God in the world and make its influence felt for time and eternity by doing righteousness because we are righteous. If we are not righteous we cannot do righteousness. May we seek the righteousness of the Lord that we may be shining lights "before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."

THE WISDOM OF THIS WORLD AND OF GOD

It would seem that in the extremity of our present need to get back to "normalcy" there would be forthcoming from resourceful minds the prime solution for meeting it. We make this statement with the thought to accredit men of our modern day for conspicuous achievement. As much as we would humanly desire such achievement for our present need there is thus far no genuine evidence to support even a favorable view toward it.

Our depression period has in some respects reminded us of our war time experience. The inconvenience, the dread, the anxiety, the gloom, and the suspense are all a measure of grief in both cases. And we recall also the appraisals, the applications and the adjustments of all the conceivable means of ingenuity to acquit ourselves with victory in that war time epoch. The victory was tentatively claimed and it was accordingly won.

This is in no sense a brief an sanction warfare. But note the comparison. See the difference. The so-called profits of war, if there be any so-called profits, are on the material side only. Land! Money! Wealth! What an acquirement from the god of mammon. It bespeaks the wisdom of men. The wisdom of men is the wisdom of this world. But it has little or no place in a program of justice and equity to extricate the human race from their present predicament. It has no esteem for the soul and places comparatively small value on life. Selfishness predominates. Yes the wisdom of this world is miserably limited.

There is a wisdom that is from above. It is the wisdom of the infinite God. It excels the wisdom of this world. Its measure and power is expressed in the person of Jesus Christ. The supreme need of man was known in the foreknowledge of God and he accordingly supplied it by his wisdom in giving his Son. When God reckoned with man's need he did it on the basis of love. Salvation was not planned only for time, but for both time and eternity on the condition that it be received in the spirit of love from man. The wisdom of this world cannot measure it or acquire it. It can be gained only by obedience and love. Men are in error because they are counting on the schemes and devices of their own to save them just now. They are looking for some new thing to do the work. But the one new thing they need is that which is old but is ever new. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature: old things are passed away: behold, all things are become new". (2 Cor. 5:17) "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: a good understanding have all they that do his commandments". (Psalm 111:10).

is getting along splendidly, has no aches or pains, but must lie still till nature does her healing work. Hundreds of cards and letters have reached his room and he wishes us to say for him that he greatly appreciates them all, but of course cannot answer them all. Here are some of his own words: "I thank all the kind Christian friends who have written me words of sympathy and cheer and have told me they were praying for me. I believe fully in the power of prayer and feel that my convalescence is largely due to that. Of course I have one of the best skilled surgeons of this region to serve me, and he is more than a surgeon; he is a fine, clean-cut Christian gentleman." We suppose no one among the ministers felt more keenly grieved over the serious accident of Brother Miller than did Brother I. D. Bowman, who, as we understand, is the spiritual father of Brother Miller. It was fitting and natural that he should take the lead in proposing united prayer in behalf of our afflicted brother. We made mention of his request last week. We have forwarded his letter on to Brother Miller, but take the privilege of quoting an occasional sentence from him. He said to Brother Miller: "I would gladly come to you if that would help, but Jesus is there and he is the only real help in your need."

"What miserable comforters we are at best," he remarked, but then "we can help you by earnestly imploring the Great Physician to quicken your mortal body, as we are taught: 'Pray one for another that ye may be healed.'" And to the brotherhood, whose united prayers he appeals for in behalf of Brother Miller's recovery, he would say, let us pray in faith. He reminds us how the disciples were upbraided by our Lord for their lack of faith, and how much more do we need his reproof. To quote: "I know there is danger of fanaticism in divine healing, but oh, how much more the danger of the lack of faith. . . . it is the living active faith that really counts with God."

We join with Brother Bowman in asking that prayer be offered unitedly for Brother Miller's speedy and complete recovery, and that 9 P. M. be the hour when all will, so far as possible, betake themselves to their secret places or to the family altar where petitions will be offered up in unison to the throne of grace, praying always, "nevertheless, not my will but thine be done."

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

The Preadamic Earth and Its Inhabitants

(No. V)

(A Popular Idea Rejected)

By Louis S. Bauman, D.D.

The popular notion that Adam was the first spiritual intelligence inhabiting a physical body, to dwell on the earth, is hardly borne out by the Word of God. The same is true as to the popular idea that the present earth was ever aught but a waste of matter prior to the mighty working of God described in Genesis 1:2-31. Genesis 1:1 is the brief story of a creation. Genesis 1:2-31 is the story of a re-creation.

The Earth Created "Not a Waste"

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth;" but he CREATED the earth "NOT A WASTE." "For thus saith Jehovah that created the heavens, the God that formed the earth and made it, that established it and created it not a waste, that formed it to be inhabited" (Isa. 45:18, R. V.) Now we assume, that when we have a "Thus saith Jehovah" back of any statement, we have a more authentic statement that we could get from any Einstein, as to how this earth and its inhabitants came to be. Jehovah says that he created the earth "not tohu", i. e., "not a waste." Tohu is the very same word we have in Genesis 1:2.

It is written: "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. . . . For he spake, and it was done" (Ps. 33:6, 9). Now, if God, by his omnipotent Word, could speak matter into existence, then assuredly, by the same Word of his power he could speak formed matter into existence. Why should it come into being "a waste"? Would it not be more to his glory to bring a beautifully shaped earth instantly upon the scene, rather than a shapeless mass of mud? And this he did! He created the earth "not a waste,"—He "formed it to be inhabited."

"And the earth was"—(Hebrew)—"tohu va bohu." (Gen. 1:2). Jeremiah, "moved by the Holy Ghost," wrote a description of a great vision God gave him of the earth when it was "tohu va bohu." He said: "I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was waste and void"—tohu va bohu. In Isaiah 34:11, we have these very same words (though in another connection), "tohu. . . bohu," and we find them translated in both the Authorized and in the Revised Versions,—"confusion . . . emptiness." Now, it is written: "God is not the author of confusion" (Heb. 14:33). If not, then he created the earth not "a tohu"—confusion, or a waste.

Now, to return to our text in Genesis 1:2 (R. V.): "And the earth was waste and void." We must again revert to the Hebrew, the language in which Genesis was originally written. The verb "was" can be (and we believe should be) translated by our English word "became." It is so translated elsewhere in Genesis. For example, Lot's wife "became a pillar of salt" (Gen. 19:26). "And man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7). See also Deut. 27:9; 2 Sam. 7:24, etc. Frequently, it is rendered "came to pass," as in Gen. 4:14; 22:1; Josh. 4:1, etc. This, then, being a perfectly legitimate rendering, let us read our text fully once again: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, and the earth became a waste and void"—"waste and empty", "a confusion and an emptiness", a "desolation and empty"; or, as Fuerst would render the words, "a ruin and empty."

Upon this text, the famous commentators, Jamieson, Fausset and Brown, make this comment:

"This globe, at some undescribed period, having been convulsed and broken up, was a dark and watery waste for ages perhaps, till out of this chaotic state the present fabric of the world was made to arise. The immediate agency of the Spirit, by working on the dead and discordant elements, combined, arranged, and ripened them into a state adapted for a new creation. The account of this new creation, properly begins at the end of this second verse."

But why was the pristine earth, perfect and beautiful, fresh from the hands of God, permitted to be "convulsed and broken up," while "darkness" settled "upon the fact of the deep" (Gen. 1:2) for "ages perhaps"? Was it, even as the flood in the days of Noah, the result of a judgment upon a world that departed far from a righteous God? Thus it would seem. And was this pre-Adamic earth "formed to be inhabited," actually inhabited by men, or man-like beings? We shall see!

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humberd

Study Number Ten

The Throne Scene

"There were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God" (Ch. 4:5). This does not mean that there are seven Holy Spirits. Seven is God's number of completeness or fulness. This book is full of sevens. The Holy Spirit is present in all of his fulness. The Holy Spirit came to earth on Pentecost to form the body of Christ, the church, and in chapter four his work, in that sense, has been completed and the church has been removed to heaven where we see the Holy Spirit again in all of his fulness. This, of course, does not mean that he will do no more on earth, for the promise in Joel 2:28 has not been completely fulfilled.

The Crystal Sea

"And before the throne, there was a sea of glass like unto crystal." Although the scene is set in heaven, it rests upon something solid. Moses saw the God of Israel and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness (Ex. 24).

There are four living creatures about this throne full of eyes. The eye denotes intelligence. Below man is the animal creation with its numerous and varied forms of life. Above man there are also myriads of marvelous and intelligent creatures; principdoms upon principdoms; thrones upon thrones; angels, cherubim, seraphim—the mighty host of heaven. For a description of these creatures the reader may turn to the first chapter of Ezekiel.

Chapter Five

We now come to a most important part of this book. Anything that can demand such interest and call for such a display, must indeed be of tremendous importance.

There was a throne set in heaven and the indescribable deity was upon the throne. Around this throne was a rainbow and before it a sea of crystal. Countless numbers of intelligent creatures have their interest riveted upon this scene. Cries of joy vibrate and revibrate about the throne; elders sing a new song of redemption, while from far out in the depths of space, myriads and myriads of angels join in the happy chorus.

The Sealed Book

John's attention is now directed to a book in the right hand of him that sat on the throne and this book is written within and on the backside and sealed with seven seals. This book, which is the title deed to our redemption, now becomes the center of interest.

A strong angel proclaims with a loud voice, "Who is worthy to open the book and to loose the seals thereof?" Man became subject to sin and death and lost his dominion over the earth when he ate the forbidden fruit and he would fain redeem himself.

Human Failure

God drops the reigns of men. Can he consummate his own redemption? Medical science puts forth its efforts, but sickness and death still take their dreadful toll; politicians have failed to do away with war and rule the world in righteousness; humanitarians have failed to mitigate the social evils. The result is conspicuous failure on man's part. "No man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth was able to open the book, neither to look thereon." No man is able to redeem himself, let alone redeem the human race.

"And I wept much." Well could John weep and well could we weep if no one was able to open that book and put into effect our redemption. One of the elders speaks to John, "Weep not; behold the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof," (Ch. 5:5).

The Lion and the Lamb

John looks for a Lion and sees a Lamb, and the Lamb has the marks of death upon him. John had seen those wounds before. He had heard the dull thud of the mallets as they drove the spikes through the hands; he had seen the soldier thrust the spear into that side. John had seen him crucified on Calvary and now he sees him alive in glory. In character of a Lamb, he is worthy to take the book and break the seals. In character of a Lion, he has power to take possession of the title deed and make redemption effective.

The Lamb's Credentials

The Lamb also has "seven horns and seven eyes." The proclamation has gone forth. Men have tried and failed. The Lamb presents his credentials. As slain, he is worthy. His seven horns speak of fullness of imperial power to conquer. His seven eyes speak of perfect intelligence direct from the Holy Spirit. No less qualifications could fulfil the requirements. He steps forth and reaches for the book. Immediately the whole creation thrills with joy. The living creatures, the elders and the myriads of angels cry out in anticipation of the consummation of our redemption.

We might expect the angels to rejoice, for they have long looked into the things of our salvation (1 Pet. 1:12) and rejoiced at our conversion (Luke 15:10). We might expect the cherubim to rejoice for their position on the ark of the covenant reveals a special interest in our salvation. Job tells us that the Sons of God shouted for joy when our earth was formed (Job 38:4) but how can we explain verse thirteen? "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." Can it be possible that the birds and even the fish are interested in this book? Yes, the text says, "Every creature."

A Cursed Creation

In the beginning, all creation was in peace and Adam was given the headship. But Adam sinned and fell from favor with God. Creations head had fallen while creation itself was still on the high plane. This was not best, so God said, "Cursed is the ground for THY sake" (Gen. 3:17).

This brought in the present condition of things as Paul says, "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now" (Rom. 8:22). Everything is in bondage to corruption and suffering. The cat eats the bird and the lion kills the deer. But things will not always continue thus. For creation "also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption" (Rom. 8:21). The time is coming when perfect peace will be restored and the curse removed and things will be as they were in the Garden of Eden before the fall. "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid—and the lion shall eat straw like the ox" (Isa. 11:7).

This explains the cry of Revelation five-thirteen. In some way the living creatures realize that their time of suffering is to be ended by the opening of that book and they cry out in joy and praise.

That Glad Day When He Arose

A service that provides a Scriptural program for your Sunday school at Easter Time

By Mary Brainerd Smith

OPENING HYMN BY THE SCHOOL—

"That Glad Day When He Arose."
(Tune, "I Will Sing the Wondrous Story.")

Hail the Christ who comes a Conqueror,
Sing his triumph o'er his foes;
Death and hell's dread power were vanquished

That glad day when he arose.

Chorus

Christ arose! Sing Alleluia!

As a Conqueror sound his fame!

Christ arose! Sing, Alleluia!

Laud and bless his glorious name!

He laid down his life a ransom,
Paying thus the debt man owes;
That same life in power reclaiming,
That glad day when he arose.

Christ himself, the Resurrection
Christ, from whom our true life flows,
Pledged us risen life and glory
That glad day when he arose.

OPENING SENTENCES BY LEADER

Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise (Psa. 100:4).

Sing ye to the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously (Exod. 15:21).
He is risen as he said (Matt. 28:6).

OPENING PRAYER

HYMN BY THE SCHOOL—"Sing Glory to God in the Highest."

(Tune, "The Church in the Wildwood")

Sing glory to God in the highest,
For Jesus, born here among men,
For Jesus, who died for man's ransom,
Has risen, has risen again.

Chorus

Sing Glory to God in the highest.

Join now in the heavenly lay;
For Jesus, who died as our Savior,
Has risen in triumph today.

Sing glory to God in the highest,
For Jesus, in Bethlehem born,
Who died on that cross upon Calvary,
Has risen again Easter morn.

Sing glory to God in the highest,
The song o'er the sheepfolds that night,
Our Shepherd, who shed his own lifeblood,
Has risen in glorious might.

Sing glory to God in the highest,
For Jesus, whom angels adore,
Who died to bring life to his people,
Has risen to life evermore.

Angels watching from the skies
Saw the dear Lord Jesus rise;
Came to earth with joy to say,
"Jesus Christ is risen today."

Chorus

"Jesus is risen," "Jesus is risen,"
"Jesus is risen," the Easter angels say.

Angels rolled away the stone
Till his empty tomb was shewn;
Waited there glad news to say,
"Jesus Christ is risen today."

Chorus

Angels came on Easter morn,
As they came when Christ was born,
Came again glad news to say,
"Jesus Christ is risen today."

Chorus

EXERCISE BY PRIMARY DEPARTMENT

(All the children carry spring flowers.)

First Child—
"Twas in a garden Jesus lay,
And there he rose on Easter Day.

Second Child—
There flowers like these were blooming gay,
When Jesus rose on Easter Day.

Third Child—
From winter's sleep, in fair array,
These flowers have risen for Easter Day.

Fourth Child—
And to our hearts they seem to say,
"We rose like Christ on Easter Day."

Fifth Child—
But fairer, sweeter far than they,
Is Christ who rose on Easter Day.

Sixth Child—

And now in Heaven he lives alway,
Since he arose on Easter Day.
Seventh Child—

And still he loves us all for aye,
The Christ who rose on Easter Day.

ANNOUNCEMENTS, AND OFFERING—

OFFERTORY PRAYER (in concert)—

Dear Father, use the gifts we bring
To spread abroad thy Word,
That others learn of Jesus' power,
And serve the risen Lord.

HYMN BY THE JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

—"They Rolled a Great Stone."
(Tune, "America the Beautiful")

They rolled a great stone o'er the tomb
Where Jesus' body lay;
But Jesus rose; the greatest stone
Could never bar his way.

Chorus

He rose, he rose, our Lord arose;
Broke bonds and seals in twain.
No power could hold him fast in death;
He rose to life again.

They placed a seal upon the stone.

More sure the door to make:
But Jesus rose; his power divine
The strongest seal could break.

They set a watch beside the tomb,
Men armed with spear and sword;
But Jesus rose; no might of men
Could hold the risen Lord.

They bound the graveclothes round his form,

That wounds and nail-prints bare;
But Jesus rose, and left behind
Those empty wrappings there.

The stone rolled back, the helpless guard,
The door with broken seal,
The empty tomb as Christ came forth,
His risen power reveal.

EXERCISE BY THE JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

"As the Flowers Rise."

(All the children carry Easter lilies, and the third child an Easter lily bulb as well.)

First Child—
O'er the earth once more sweet and glowing green,

Like a mantle, so fresh and fair is seen,
And each flower has raised again its head,
Though in winter it seemed they all were dead;

And again to us who have eyes, they bring
God's great, living parable of the spring.

Second Child—
That which thou thyself sowest is not quickened except it die; and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not the body that shall be, but a bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or some other kind; but God giveth it a body even as it pleased him, and to each seed a body of its own (1 Cor. 15:36-38, R. V.).

Third Child (holding up both the bulb and the blossom)—
It was his that seemed but a brown, dead thing,

That I hid in the ground to await the spring.

And lo, it came up in such smiling grace,
I scarce would have known it, save by the place;

For the blossom of beauty so snowy fair
Stood where I had buried the bulb with care.

And again, in God's wonders, his sign I read,
Of his power and promise to raise the dead.

Fourth Child—
So also is the resurrection of the dead. . . . It is sown in dishonour; it is raised in power . . . Christ, the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming . . . God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power (1 Cor. 15:42, 43, 23; 6:14).

HYMN BY THE SCHOOL—"Risen as he said."
(Tune, "Dear Lord and Father of Man-kind.")
"He is not here," the angel cried
To hearts in grief that bled,
"Not here, where his bruised form hath lain,
Not holden by death's iron chain,
But risen as he said."
Chorus

Rejoice and sing, rejoice and sing,
For Christ is risen today!
The Conqueror in that mortal strife,
The King divine, the Lord of life,
Now risen to live for aye.

"Why weepst thou?" the angel spake,
To tears of anguish shed,
"No longer is he lost in gloom,
No longer prisoned in the tomb,
But risen as he said."

"Why seek ye?" asked that angel voice,
"The living 'mong the dead?"
Come see the place where once he lay,
Now empty, for your Lord today
Hath risen as he said."

"Be not afraid," the angel spake,
"Death's terrors all have fled.
The Christ, whom cruel hatred slew,
Hath triumphed over death for you
Hath risen as he said."

EXERCISE BY OLDER PUPILS—"At the Tomb."
(The scholars should be arranged in two groups facing each other, so that the second couplet shall be spoken in answer to the first each time).

First Pupil—
When the Lord's still form to the tomb they bare,
There was darkness like unto midnight there.

Second Pupil—
But when Jesus came from that tomb alone,
There was light and glory that from it shone.

Third Pupil—
When they laid him there in that rocky tomb,
In their hearts there was grief and deepest gloom.

Fourth Pupil—
But when Jesus rose at the break of day,
Their joy chased all shadows of grief away.

Fifth Pupil—
When they brought him there from that cross accursed,
It seemed hate and malice had done their worst.

Sixth Pupil—
But when Jesus rose in the dawn's clear light
It was love that his love had wakened there.

Seventh Pupil—
When they sealed the tomb, keeping watch and ward,
There were blood-stained soldiers with spear and sword.

Eighth Pupil—
When Jesus rose, angels from the sky
Awaiting his call were hovering high.

Ninth Pupil—
When his lifeless form they had there laid down,
It seemed as though death wore a victor's crown.

Tenth Pupil—
But when Jesus rose in the dawn's clear light,
It was life that conquered death's power and might.

Eleventh Pupil—
When they laid him there whom man's sin had slain,
It seemed that man's power was then to reign.

Twelfth Pupil—
But when Jesus rose, bursting bonds and seal,
God's own power divine did he there reveal.

Thirteenth Pupil—
When they brought him there from the cruel cross,
It seemed all was failure and bitter loss.

Fourteenth Pupil—
But when Jesus rose, 'twas to take his throne,
As Victor triumphant, as God alone.

All—Great is our Lord, and of great power (Psa. 147:5).
Sing forth the honor of his name: make his praise glorious (Psa. 66:2).

ADDRESS
PRAYER
HYMN BY THE SCHOOL—"As He Hath Spoken."

(Tune, "True-hearted, Whole-hearted.")
As he hath spoken, Christ Jesus hath broken
All the grave's bonds, and death's power is o'er.

At the day dawning, on Glad Easter morning,
He hath arisen to live evermore.

Chorus
Hail him victorious, Jesus all glorious!
Chant ye his praises this blest Easter Day.

From death's dark prison he hath arisen;
Mighty in triumph, he liveth for aye.

As he hath spoken, the promise unbroken,
"Life on the altar I lay down for men.
No man can take it, Mine own gift I make it;
Mine is the power to take it again."

As he hath spoken doth Easter betoken,
"I am the life," 'tis his own lips proclaim.
In full perfection, his great resurrection
As Lord of life crowns with glory his name.

As he hath spoken, no single word broken,
"In earth and heaven all power is mine."
Then fear ye he ever, but trust him forever;
Death he hath conquered for thee and for mine.

JESUS GIVING LIFE AND HEALTH
Lesson Text: Mark 5:21-24, 35-43; Golden Text: Psalm 126:3

Daily Readings and Suggestions
MONDAY

Jesus Giving Life. Mark 5:35-43
When Jairus' daughter lay at the point of death, it was to Jesus that he came. Well, he knew that no mortal could aid him in that hour. When word came that his daughter had died, it was Jesus who reassured him, and gave him hope, and who finally restored her to him. "They laughed him to scorn" as he spoke, and the world still laughs—but the promises of God are yea and amen. The curious and scornful were not permitted to see the working of Jesus, but only the hopeful and trusting. Let us not wait for our hour of supreme need to seek out him who alone can give life; and let us in no wise doubt his mighty working. Let us "only believe," and we shall be glad for the great things the Lord hath done for us.

TUESDAY
Jesus Giving Health. Mark 5:21-34

This poor woman had spent great sums seeking health through the physicians of that day, but in vain. Yet when all human means failed, she found health in Jesus, the "Great Physician." Lincoln once said that he had been driven to his knees many times by the realization that there was nowhere else he could go for help. It is even so with many of us. In James 5 we read certain rules which he has given for our health, yet we do not avail ourselves of them as a rule, until all other means have failed. Let us make him FIRST in all things.

WEDNESDAY
God the Author of Good. Ps. 103:1-11

The Psalmist here enumerates some of the goodnesses of God, not the least of which is the fact that he has made known his ways to men, through his blessed word. Surely we should delight in it more! It is well to remember, too, that God is the Author ONLY of good; that whatever comes from his hand is for our edification. Read Rom. 8:28. Even adversity and suffering may be the most valuable gifts he could give at times, so let our faith not rest only in the things he does for us, but rather in HIM who doeth ALL things well.

THURSDAY
A Plea for Help. Matt. 15:21-28

To at all understand our Lord's apparent refusal, at first, to help this woman it must be remembered that she was a Canaanitish woman, and that in giving the land of Canaan to the Twelve Tribes God had decreed the punishment of death upon all Canaanites for their idolatry and gross immoralities. At a later time Jesus was to send his disciples into all the world, with his message of forgiveness; but for the present, his mission was to his own people. It is significant of the tender mercy of the Lord that, in spite of his original intention, he could not refuse the plea of this woman. Truly, no one need ever hesitate to call upon him for aid!

FRIDAY
The Assurance of Help. Matt. 7:7-11

Not as the world gives, but as a loving Father with infinite wisdom. Earthly parents, in their lack of wisdom, sometimes give their children what they ask, only to find out later that the gift brought harm to their loved ones. Our heavenly Father gives his children what they need—not what they think they need. Pray for greater faith, that we may more nearly comprehend these great promises.

SATURDAY
Christ our Savior. Heb. 2:9-18

In the words of the old hymn: "What a wonderful Savior is Jesus, my Lord!" Become a little lower than the angels for the express purpose of suffering death in order that he might free us from death, and from him who has the power of death! With such a Savior we need never hesitate to call upon him, for he knows our every need, having actually experienced it himself. Let us praise him who delivered us, who doth deliver us, and who will yet deliver!

SUNDAY
Deliverance from Death. Psalm 116:1-9
"I was brought low and he helped me"— this has been the testimony of countless thousands through all ages. Through sin, sentence of death had passed upon all men, and he delivered us. Through sin we are daily tempted to turn aside, and he still delivers; and in some blessed coming day—which we hope may be soon—he will forever deliver his people from death and all the physical penalties of sin (Rev. 21:3, 4). Let us praise him for this blessed hope which he has given us, and also that we may be faithful stewards thereof.

Haun, are working on a personal system which not many colleges in the North Central area can follow. My own son, Cassel, is now in his second year in Law at the University of Michigan, having taken all his undergraduate work at Ashland. Is he as well prepared as others in his class? Just ask him and see!

If parents want their children to go to a college which possesses facilities for character building—a school with Christian ideals, with teachers trained in the world's best universities, with an activity program of merit,—and at reasonable cost, there is no better school than Ashland.

Two of Mansfield's most representative citizens were here just recently and submitted to me personally in writing their complete confidence in the school and approved of its program.

To return to our academic standards, ask Paul Bauman who took his Master's degree at the University of Southern California, Dr. Ernest Miller of Pennsylvania, who was recently chosen for a place in a hospital over 90 other applicants, Dr. John Miller, now in the department of Biology at Ohio State, his brother Malcolm, now also there in the Medical school, Dr. Kellogg now practicing medicine in Ashland, Dr. Carl Lozier, now one of the two dentists of the Good-year Co., at Akron, Attorney-at-Law Howard Lutz, now prosecuting attorney for Ashland County, Dr. Howard Smith, of Canton, who took the highest honors ever taken in an Ohio Dental examination, ask them about their preparation, just to mention a few who did their undergraduate work here within the last few years, not to mention many, many others in other forms of graduate work. And if you want to turn to athletics, I know of no recent year when Ashland did not have an all-Ohio player in some form of sport.

All of this ought to appeal to young people and to parents alike. If the members of our own church would be as loyal as they expect the teachers here to be, we would have more students from our various churches.

Our Glee Clubs, Gospel Teams, the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A., the Dramatic Club, the Fencing Teams, Hand Ball, Tennis, Archery, The Band and Orchestra not to mention the major sports, give every student an opportunity to develop his peculiar interest and at the same time we insist upon high class work.

Then, there are the Faculty clubs, three of them, which are intended not only for social contacts, but for intellectual improvement. Moreover, we have printed from time to time articles and book reviews in certain magazines, to say nothing about the matter constantly contributed to the church literature, The Evangelist, and the Sunday school literature.

To be added to this is the great amount of speaking being done by the various Faculty members, far and wide, at all sorts of gatherings,—churches, Sunday school gatherings, Rotaries and other luncheon clubs, Parent-Teacher meetings, etc. More than that, several of our teachers teach a Sunday school class regularly.

Then, there are the educational and scientific gatherings to be attended. Dr. Haun is now at Denison attending a meeting of the Physicists of the state. Professor McClain is in Washington for a series of Bible lectures. Professor Putterbaugh was recently at Northwestern University. Meanwhile we have answered several thousand ques-

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Our Home Missions must be maintained! This is apparent to every pastor, every board of our national organizations, as well as to every intelligently informed member of the Brethren Church! This must be done or we lose all that the Brethren Church has achieved to this present time. Closed churches will not support our College, or our Foreign Missions, nor any other part of our work. Some who have been unwilling to admit this fact are now compelled to grant it. No part of our denominational structure is charged with this vital work of strengthening our churches in America as is the National Home Mission Board.

Our Home Missions must be advanced! This is also apparent to all, for some churches are simply bound to close because local economic circumstances force it. In spite of all herculean efforts to save some churches, they simply cannot be maintained because they have been so unwisely started. These losses must be made up by new churches or there is no salvation for us. Home Missions must advance or the Brethren Church has seen its greatest day. These must advance or we will be faced with having failed God before the greatest opportunities for advance that he has ever given us!

Our Home Mission Board has realized this for years. We began a tremendous program to meet this situation three years ago. We reorganized our work on a most efficient basis, equal to any Home Mission organization in the country. We just got started, when the most severe world depression in history struck us. Since then we have suffered reduction after reduction in our income. We have struggled with all our might against it; we have fought with our backs to the wall in the endeavor to lose nothing and save all. We can go no further without severe loss. We have scraped the bottom. We must have an enlarged appreciation of the vital place Home Missions has in all our denominational life and work or we must simply fold up.

To meet this situation, and to begin at the beginning, our Board has decided to start with the children and there begin to teach the essentials of our ministry of the gospel.

Our plan is to distribute small Home Mission Banks among the children up to the Junior age among our churches. These little banks are made of pottery, and are designed to receive such small coins as the children may obtain throughout the year. At Thanksgiving time at a special "Bank Smashing" service in the Sunday school the children will each smash their own banks and thus make up their Thanksgiving offering for Home Missions. These little banks will be labeled "The Foundation Builders", and the idea will be taught that by giving to the Thanksgiving Offering they are laying a foundation for all our work to be built upon.

These banks are to be distributed January 1st of each year, but will be sent at any time they are called for. A special Home Mission Secretary will be chosen by each pastor for his church who will care for this work throughout the year and who will actively plan the special Home Mission service with the Sunday School Superintendent and the pastor. A list of the names of the children in each Sunday school to receive these little "Foundation Builder Banks" will be sent to the Home Mission office at Berne, Indiana, and the name of each child will be inscribed upon a bank designed for him.

The Home Mission Board is not going to give up till Christ returns. We are simply trying to meet a desperate situation with proper and effective measures. We will never surrender to circumstances so long as there are legitimate means left to us which we have not as yet tried. HOME MISSIONS WORKS FOR THE GUARDING AND STRENGTHENING OF THE WHOLE CHURCH. EVERY GIFT FOR HOME MISSIONS IS A GIFT FOR THE WHOLE DENOMINATION! WE ARE FIGHTING FOR THE WELFARE OF ALL! THEREFORE, WE APPEAL TO ALL TO AID IN THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THIS NEW EFFORT WE ARE PUTTING FORTH TO STRENGTHEN THE CHURCH WE ALL LOVE!

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The activities of the second term are well under way. There was a slight decline in the enrollment due to the following causes: some we failed, some finished at mid-year, and some withdrew for various reasons. On the other hand we had a few transfers from other institutions and some just entered.

The Saturday school holds up and the enrollment is bigger for their second term than last year.

The summer school is now under consideration and I have reduced the expected expense for fear there may be a decline in enrollment then. One can never tell.

We are planning a big recruiting campaign this summer both in nearby territory and within the church. We plan to enlist at least 50 more students than we have this year. Every alumnus is hereby asked to send us worthy students if at all possible. There is one alumnus who vowed to send us at least one new student each year and he has done even better than that. What a glorious thing if even a small percent did that well.

The program we expect to put on here for young people is of the best possible type and is better than in any other school I know of, considered from certain standpoints.

The deans, headed by Dean Dr. R. R.

tions in the North Central's Revision of Standards, preparatory to the meeting of the N. C. in March.

Then we must keep the daily Chapel exercises up to standard. Last week we had an art display of several hundred religious masterpieces and had open house all day to the citizens of Ashland.

Then, with all of this there is the personal and moral life of the students and if they do something we do not approve of, criticism sometimes comes down upon our head.

The situation here at Ashland is teeming with life and various interests. It cheers when one (occasionally) receives a good letter. I can not refrain from mentioning one recently received from Dr. L. S. Bauman, speaking, as I suppose he did, for many friends and supporters in the far west.

However, the purpose of this letter is to begin now to ask the friends of the school to assist us both at the time of the Educational Day offering and also to send us good students. Meanwhile we covet an interest in your prayers. EDWIN E. JACOBS.

DOINGS OF THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF LONG BEACH DURING 1932

We have much for which to be thankful. The Lord has blessed us in our work in many ways as you will see from the following reports.

During the past year there have been the following additions to our membership: By baptism, 136; by letter, three; by relation, two; making a total of one hundred and forty-one new members. We lost six by death, seventeen by letter and dropped twenty-four from the roll. This leaves a net gain of ninety-four members. Our membership January 1st, 1933 numbered 973. Since its organization 1636 persons have been taken into the church; 1542 were by baptism.

FINANCIAL REPORT FOR 1932. "And Jesus looking upon them saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God; for with God all things are possible" (Mark 10:27). At the beginning of 1932 the Finance Committee, after much prayer and careful consideration, prepared and submitted to the church for approval a budget estimated to care for the general running expenses and the interest. The budget figure was set at $18,720.00, a staggering sum, in addition to this amount (which we felt must be raised if the program for the year was to be carried out) we were in debt for part of the church furnishings and equipment, a considerable balance was owed on the organ, and we owed the bank for borrowed money. There was also the realization that the main encumbrance of over $70,000.00 still due on our building had to be reduced, if possible. Some of our church funds were badly overdrawn. The call of our mission fields was ever sounding in our ears. The finance committee began to take stock, so to speak. We knew full well that we had no rich among our flock; our survey further revealed the fact that many of those who thought themselves comfortable and safe so far as this world was concerned were suddenly without substance or income. A very large percentage of our wage earners were without work.

Where was the money to come from? We looked down and saw a mounting expense account; unpaid interest on the church mortgage; and discouraged and neglected mission workers in far off heathen lands. We looked down, and praise God, saw ourselves at Fifth and Cherry, Oh! where was our faith? Looking up we saw our heavenly Father, him who marks the sparrow's fall. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." By faith we went to our knees, by prayer talked to God, and laid the matter before him, asking for his guidance and that his will might be done in us and through us. A faith and prayer program was decided upon, and submitted to the church body.

We decided to ask our people for four quarterly cash offerings. The regular Easter offering, Thanksgiving and White Gift offerings, all to be cash. If any of our members wanted to make a short term pledge, that was a matter which was to be entirely between them and the Lord. The finance committee prayed earnestly about the finances of the church. Our people held all day prayer meetings and asked Jesus Christ our Lord and Savior if it be his will, to provide the money that his work might be carried on.

Results? Why, what did we expect? Has he not said, Ask and ye shall receive." He poured out his riches and blessings abundantly. Our every need was met, the budget account paid in full, and think of it, the Easter offering was more than $6,300.00.

More destitute and hungry families were cared for than it was thought humanly possible; all of the current debts paid in full and our mortgage reduced to $69,000.00. Even in these times we can say, Praise God! It has been the most successful financial year this church has ever experienced.

Think of it, God in his mercy poured out to us more than $32,000.00 in cash, and that in a year, such as the financial world has never seen. (Of this amount $2,857.19 came from the Smith Estate). Certainly prayer changes things, he careth for his own, and truly we should say, for by faith are our needs met and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God. "Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say rejoice."

The past year has been one of great blessing for the Bible school. Our hearts overflow with praise and thanksgiving for his manifold mercies. The Bible school consists of seven different departments including the Cradle Roll, Beginners, Primary, Junior, Intermediate and Senior department which has been organized during the past year. Each department has its own superintendent and opening exercises. Besides these there are five organized adult classes.

The Bible school under the general superintendency of A. H. Kent reports an average attendance of nine hundred and twenty per Sunday for the past year. This is an increase of one hundred and fourteen per Sunday over last year. Grand total offering for the year was $4,692.50. The special offerings included Birthday, $91.20; White Gift, $135.54; Building Fund, $913.42; Total offering for Missions, $1,736.81. Unto him be all the glory and praise. At Children's Day in June, Promotion Day in October and at Christmas, the whole Bible school comes together for special programs. The Daily Vacation Bible School was held in June and July with an average daily attendance of one hundred and sixteen. There were twelve denominations represented and a missionary offering of $20.50 was sent to Africa.

Special mention should be made of the Seventy Group and the Transportation Committee who have been greatly used by going out into the "highways and byways" and bringing in children for the Bible school.

The Home Department carried on by Brother and Sister Carter, parents of Lyda Carter, has been an inspiration to those who have been shut in.

THE SEVENTY. One of the most effective programs or personal work is being carried on by "The Seventy" of the First Brethren church of Long Beach. This group was organized six years ago by the pastor, Dr. Louis S. Bauman, who has repeatedly stated that it is because of their faithful work in calling upon the sick and troubled that he has been free to render the special service for which he has been called on, including the heavy duties as treasurer of the Foreign Mission Board.

"The Seventy" are made up of teams of two or more, which are expected to do at least two hours of definite personal work each week. This is the minimum requirement laid down by the band for continuance in its membership. These workers meet on the first Tuesday evening of each month for dinner, which is prepared by the "Marthas," a small group of women who gladly give of their culinary ability as a service to the Lord. After the diners the chairman, Dr. Bauman, calls for the reports of the various teams of the work done during the preceding month. The secretary keeps a detailed record of this and of the attendance, which has averaged sixty for the past year. During 1932 the following service was performed by these devoted men and women. Calls reported, 6902. Many additional calls (number not reported) on prospects for the Bible school which were obtained through the annual canvass. Members secured for Home Department, 19; Babies secured for Cradle Roll, 70; secured for other Bible school departments, 120; pieces of mail sent out, 1160; bouquets to sick, shut-ins and others, 200. A large quantity of tracts, church calendars and other Christian literature, and much clothing and a number of baskets of food were distributed.

The Transportation Committee, so efficiently managed by Brother Stettenbenz, has consisted of forty volunteer cars for gathering in children on Sunday morning. In 1931 there were only twenty-nine cars, 18,042 have been transported during the year and the average for each Sunday was 347 pupils. Since October first the number has been over the four hundred mark. The untiring patience of this group, is of great importance in the work of our Bible school.

THE WORLD-WIDE MISSIONARY SOCIETY has had a year of real service, in keeping alive the Missionary Spirit. Eleven monthly meetings were held with inspirational messages from missionaries of various fields. Our own workers, Miss Estella Myers and Dr. Florence Gribble from Africa, and Mr. and Mrs. Yett from South America have brought us into closer touch with those fields. Our own Brother Pearson, who presents the gospel to the sailors who come to our ports from all nations of the earth, made known the great opportunity at our very doors. Speakers from the Bible Institute and the Navaho Indian field were also included in programs presented throughout the year.

The Mission study class is taking up the study of Dr. Gribble's inspiring edition, "Undaunted Hope."

Our Dorcas Committee held eleven meetings during the year. Besides piecing quilts, making seven comforts, six large curtains for the Bible school, and two days sewing for the Red Cross, much clothing was mended and made over for our local relief work.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR in the Church is a very active organization, or rather series of organizations, for there are seven societies in the church, carefully graded as to age. There are several reasons why Christian Endeavor thrives so well in this church. One of the principal reasons is that the pastor, Dr. Louis S. Bauman, is very vitally interested in young people and is convinced that Christian Endeavor, which stands firmly for the fundamentals for which the Brethren Church stands, is the best organization with which his young people can affiliate. Incidentally Dr. Bauman is Pastor-Counselor for the Long Beach Division of Christian Endeavor this year. The combined membership of the seven societies at the beginning of this year was 260, but new members are being added frequently.

Each of the four older societies conducts a meeting at the Christian Endeavor Sailor's Rest Mission in San Pedro one night per month. The societies take complete charge of these meetings, furnishing all the music and the speaker, giving testimonies and prayers, and also furnishing coffee and sandwiches for the men after the meeting. For the financial support of the Mission $48.00 was given last year, with an additional $45.00 for supplies. The C. E. societies also gave through the church $60.00 for Home Missions and $35.00 for Foreign Missions.

The work of the societies at the Mission has been specially blessed. Over thirty men were won to the Lord Jesus Christ during 1932. Already this year four men have been won with only two meetings held. This work is now under the direction of our member, Brother George Richardson. The Senior Intermediate society is one of the largest and most active societies in the church. This society has been holding meetings for the old folks at the County Farm on alternate months. Space will not permit a full record of the work of the individual societies. The Senior and the Junior Intermediate societies have made an enviable record in signing up their members as Comrades of the Quiet Hour, Pocket Testament Leaguers, and members of the Tenth Legion. Both societies have practically all their membership enrolled for these three covenants, and the other societies are very close to this goal. No society can fail to grow and prosper if the members are keeping these pledges. Every society has its pre-prayer circle for 15 minutes before the regular meeting. Two of the societies have set aside one week day evening per month for a special time of prayer for the problems of the society and church. Both have been wonderfully blessed through these special prayer meetings.

Other activities of a missionary nature include the making and sending of several hundred rolls of bandages, the sending of other missionary boxes to our missionaries in Africa, boxes to Lyda Carter in Kentucky and to our boys in school at Ashland; the preparation and distribution to needy families of baskets of provisions at Thanksgiving and Christmas; a birthday card shower for one of the missionaries, and the singing of carols on Christmas morning.

Although the achievements of the past year have been very gratifying, no society wants to take any glory to itself, but gives all the glory and praise to him who gave his life for us.

Our pastor, Brother Bauman, is a very busy man. As Treasurer of the Foreign Mission Board he has pressing duties in connection with that work. Numerous are the calls for prophetic messages and he responds to many; besides teaching a large class at the Los Angeles Bible Institute every Monday, he gives the same lecture to a Bible Class every Thursday in our church. Further he has the writing of prophetic articles for the King's Business and other papers; and now a weekly article for the Brethren Evangelist. These prophetic articles are read far and wide, some are translated into other languages. I will give a paragraph of one letter by August Korp, pastor of Agenskalns Church, Marupes iela 14 Riga, Latvia, Europe: "First of all, we would thank you very much for 'The King's Business' we have regularly received several years. This splendid Christian magazine has brought much blessing to us and to thousands of our Latvian people as we have the best articles translated into Latvian, especially the Present-Day Fulfillment of Prophecy. Visiting the different places of our spiritually dark country, we have heard many testimonies to the glory of God, that these articles have been for the salvation of souls."

Amidst it all there is the Home Base for which he has his regular sermons and other duties connected with the church. May the Lord abundantly bless and strengthen him.

We are now looking forward to our special meetings, March 6th, when Evangelist Mel Trotter and E. Farrow, song leader, will be with us. Remember us in prayer, that many may find their salvation and peace in the Eternal Son of God.

JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA THIRD

Beginning January 16, three weeks were spent with the Third Brethren of Johnstown, Pennsylvania in a special evangelistic effort. The writer is no stranger to this people. The record shows that I conducted a short meeting here twenty-seven years ago, and that I served as supply pastor for a few months during 1907. In this church I have a number of close and more distant relatives. There are many others here with whom I have had a life-long acquaintance. Quite a few from the home church have membership here. The fellowship together was most congenial and enjoyable. The objective, however, was not lost sight of. The purpose for which we came together was entered into most heartily by all and the Lord was pleased to bless the work and labor of love together.

The faithful and efficient pastor here is Brother J. L. Gingrich. He and I were not strangers; this being our third meeting together. Brother "Joe" needs no introduction to the brotherhood. He is a hard working pastor, zealous for the cause of Christ and faithful in the preaching of the Word. He is leading this people into deeper spiritual experiences as they respond to his teaching of Scriptural truth. In these days when many are denying the faith it is a pleasure to meet and work with those who still believe. The Brethren Church has many such. May their number increase and may all be kept true to him.

Entertainment while here was in the home of my brother Dave. Needless to say I found a special delight in being so closely associated with my brother and his splendid family. Brother Dave has served the church in no small way for a number of years. He sets an example of Christian stewardship which is highly commendable. His good wife and children are also faithful and efficient in the work of the church. The noon meals were taken out and the good people fed us well. Much calling was done and the pastor and evangelist were well received. Some whom we invited to Christ and the church refused the invitation. Satan is having his way in many lives.

The results of the meeting are reported by the pastor. We were pleased to have Brethren Ashman and Jones with us from time to time, as well as a goodly number of their people. The evangelist was well supported by prayer and faithful attendance. The large audience each night was an evidence of a desire to hear the Word. The city of Johnstown is very seriously affected by the depression, but these people gave a very good offering to the evangelist. For this and the many kindnesses shown we wish to say, Thank you. May the Lord continue to use and bless this people.

REVIVAL SERVICES OF THE THIRD BRETHREN—JOHNSTOWN

The special series of meetings just recently concluded in our church were peculiarly significant. The evangelist who conducted the campaign was the Rev. W. C. Benshoff of Waynesboro, Pennsylvania. This was indeed for him a real homecoming. Johnstown was the scene of his boyhood activities. This is the place where he matured into Christian manhood and where he married. The meetings were also singular in that they proved as a common meeting place for many visitors from other churches, not of the Brethren persuasion, who were also hungering and thirsting for the Gospel. Those who came were never disappointed. Every sermon for the entire three weeks was permeated with the blessed Gospel truth. The saved were revived and the sinners were convicted.

This was the third revival in which the pastor and the evangelist were teammates. We find Brother Benshoff the same congenial, tireless, earnest and conscientious servant of God. In spite of being blessed with wonderful January weather and in spite of much personal work, prayer and solicitation sinners were "gunshy" and refused to come to the services. Where sinners will not attend the meetings, it is impossible to bring them to a place of public confession. There were twelve persons to come forward during the meetings, two for special reconsecration. The others will all unite with the church. By special concerted efforts we feel sure others will make good their promises to accept Christ as their Savior and join his Church. The most pronounced result of the series of meetings was the deepening of the spiritual life within the body of believers.

While we are reporting this special effort put forth for the Lord's work, we would also desire to report a similar but more brief effort launched a few months prior. We refer to Rev. R. I. Humbert's week of special Bible lectures conducted here. The illustrated chart lectures were very fine. Our people cannot cease praising the value which they attach to his lectures. In the writer's humble opinion a man who can conduct services and leave the church in a more healthy condition with noble resolves to live closely to their Master is a blessing to any congregation. Such men of God are both W. C. Benschoff and R. I. Humberd. We heartily recommend both for revival and evangelistic efforts. These men are always welcome in our midst.

JOS. L. GINGRICH, Pastor.

ROANN, INDIANA

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Greetings from the Roann church: We enjoy reading the reports of the different churches and find them both interesting and helpful.

I shall tell you of some of our activities that have taken place during the past few months.

On October 2, we enjoyed our annual Homecoming. A delicious basket dinner was enjoyed at the noon hour. Rev. Delbert Flora gave the afternoon address.

An excellent pantomime, the Holy Story, was given Sunday evening, December 25 to an appreciative audience.

On the evening of December 28, the church united in a farewell service for Rev. and Mrs. G. L. Maus, who had accepted a call from the Nappanee church. Rev. Maus had been our efficient pastor for the past four years. He and Mrs. Maus have served the church most faithfully in every department. We regretted very much to have them leave our midst but we know that he has been called to a larger field of service. The church wishes for them much success in their new field.

Rev. George Pontius of West Alexandria, Ohio, has been secured as part time pastor for the coming year. Rev. Pontius and his family will move into the parsonage soon. Mrs. Pontius has been chosen as patroness for the Senior S. M. M. We are looking forward to a successful year under the guidance of Rev. Pontius and wife.

Revival meetings will start here February 19th in charge of Rev. Pontius.

May God's richest blessings be upon all the churches.

MAUD BEAM.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

Dear Evangelist Family:

The first church in the Northwest has not reported for more than a year; and if following the interesting narration of some regular correspondents, might now send a lengthy letter.

We unceasingly praise God for his abundant mercies to the Sunnyside church. He has given victory time and again, beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning. "Through joy and pain, through loss and gain" how blessed to experience his sufficiency!

Three more active and loved families have left us in the past year for other locations—our loss, others' gain. Yet the Faithful One who walketh among the candlesticks has kept the home fires burning. Another invaluable worker has felt called to return to her former work among the Chinese children of Oakland, California. And the going of some have taken transportation from others who depended on them to get to church. But this is the New Testament means of building new churches, and we pray as in the case of the Harrah field, we may have faith and power in Christ to enter in.

Special services and annual days have been observed by the various departments as much as shortage of gasoline and funds would allow. We cooperated to our profit with the local Presbyterian church in three weeks' meetings. They will return the fellowship and service when we make another special effort this spring. Past endeavors may be listed:

To encourage and deepen the prayer life of the congregation, both in church services and in their homes.

To pray intensly, and to expect from God a personal revival leading to public and private evangelism;

To afford the opportunity to adults and young people of training for morning and evening church choirs by an able and spiritual director;

To enlist through Bible school and Endeavor groups the many young people yet unsaved, and those needing deeper experience.

To develop a more reverent attitude and conduct in the services of God's house, and toward its furnishings, thus improving individual worship.

The Lord has blessed us with dependable young people and an adult membership, well-founded on the Word, and faithful in giving of scant means to the support of the church they love. Since last July the church finances have not fallen behind; and the future is in his hands.

Mrs. Fry has had broken health for the greater part of the past year, and her convalescence was stopped three months ago by the "flu", which reduced her strength lower than ever. So that the pastor and congregation have felt the great handicap of having three-fourths of the minister sick for so long. No congregation could be any more thoughtful and helpful, than the Sunnyside folks have been to the writer and his family in this trial. She is very slowly improving, and we know that our many friends in the brotherhood will continue to remember Mrs. Fry that her recovery may be hastened to the glory of God.

There are many things too far past to report. And our new lay correspondent, Mrs. Rose, will report about Easter time, the event toward which we are now working and praying, that out of both ability and inability Brethren may give gladly, even with sacrifice, to Foreign Missions.

We have had the privilege of baptizing three desiring membership in another denomination; and in the past quarter have received the confessions of and baptized six. Two others have reconverted, while in the services of the neighbor church referred to above, many of us desired and obtained a closer walk with God. Our Bible school is keeping above the 200 mark, and the church audiences are encouragingly large. To our soon coming Lord be all the glory.

HAROLD D. FRY.

SAN BENITO, TEXAS

To the Brethren Evangelist Family:

At our last meeting of the branches of the Brethren held at the home of Brother and Sister E. J. Kelso, Pharr, Texas, February 5, it was decided to hold a communion service or love feast at our next meeting to be held the first Sunday in March (March 5th) at the home of Brother and Sister Chalmer Hoffman, Lafaria, Texas. We have been holding these meetings once a month under the leadership of Brother Hoke, who is connected with the Home Mission Board of the Church of the Brethren and is located at Roanoke, Louisiana. This winter we have been fortunate also in having Rev. John Pitzer and wife of the Church of the Brethren with us and these two brethren have been ably supplying our preaching service. At our last meeting, held February 5, about fifty members of the two branches of the church were present, all living in the Valley. This love feast, March 5, will be our first and the fact that members of both branches of the church will participate indicates the progress we are making as co-workers for God.

RELIGIOUS SITUATION IN RUSSIA

Ernest Gordon, writing in the Sunday School Times on "The Religious Situation in Russia," says: "On the one hand we have the Five Year Plan for the destruction of all religion, closing of all churches and houses of worship prohibition of religious publications, the manufacture of 150 films of atheism, and the like." On the other hand, he quotes Woroschilov, Commander-in-Chief of the Red Army, as saying: "I say that the bands with religion have in these years strengthened immensely. One finds in the army, more commonly than elsewhere, religious Communists who do not conceal their sympathy with religion, who have no intention of parting from it. While the reports of army secretaries represent atheism to be one hundred per cent in the army, in reality religion has advanced to an extent to which we would not have dreamed before the war. The whole army is infected with it." An unnamed Russian paper is quoted as follows: "On the Caucasus coast of the Black Sea, on the Volga, in Siberia, in the North, everywhere, religious organizations are forming. . . . The return to religion which is ever more apparent among the people of the Soviet Union is found not only among the older people, who are disillusioned by the present form of government, but even more among the young. Especially great is the movement among the Russian women who insist on a revision of the opinions forced upon them and display a deep hunger for belief. Religious secret societies which have come up lately among the Soviet youth are spreading rapidly."—Killing religion is not so easy.—The Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

THE BRETHREN'S HOME EMERGENCY CORNER

THE BRETHREN HOME

Right now there is an urgent need for all of our Brethren churches to come to the support of the Brethren Home. Next Sunday you will be called upon to make your gift to this worthy cause. You must not fail in doing your best. Among the outstanding needs just now is money. Payments on the farm must be met which is $562.00 a year. Annuities must be paid when due. This Home was very largely made possible through the gifts of one individual who has this cause at heart. One of these days the bulk of these annuities will stop. Even now a large part of it is returned in gifts to the Home. Other items of need are foods and fuel. Your board can only act in so far as you give us support.

DRY CHURCH LEADERS TO RALLY IN WASHINGTON, MARCH 7, 8

sible. In doing this, the various denominations may well consider the adoption of uniform plans and programs with a pooling of material. For the first time, we face an actual propaganda against abstinence which will be vastly destructive to human life and happiness unless the churches do their duty.

"I am convinced also that in regard to the proposed repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, the churches have a duty. Most of the Christian denominations are formally on record against the license system and in favor of prohibition as the only legislative background for effective temperance teaching. While this may not be so of a few of the denominations, it is felt that many in these groups have a lively interest in the situation and that much effective cooperation from them is quite possible. It may well be that the churches must soon vindicate the position they have taken by appealing to the intelligence and conscience of their own membership and of the people at large.

The fact seems to have been generally overlooked that the Christian churches comprise the strongest organization of patriotic citizenship in the United States, having at least one building, society and leader in practically every community of the land. If and when the issue of prohibition comes directly down to the people, stripped of partisan aspect, and from consideration of candidacies, it will be in a very peculiar sense the duty of the church to be ready, organized through every branch to oppose a proposition deemed essentially immoral in character and, therefore, a proper subject for direct action by Christian societies. This has a strongly practical side as it will be possible for the various denominations to contribute both personnel and material to a united effort.

"The constituencies of our churches are being continually urged to 'organize' to achieve ends which the church itself is already established to achieve. If we now proceed to let the existing organization function throughout its entirety we will find the weight of our entire Christian brotherhood thrown into the scale against evil in all of its forms."

Effort will be made to enlist the general religious leadership of enormous influence which has not heretofore been available to temperance discussion and effort, and, also, non-church groups that are willing to aid. Prohibition is not going out of the Constitution without a fight Bishop Hughes believes, and the Christian Church will be found set squarely for the defense of the American home against exploitation by a licensed liquor trade.—The Presbyterian Advance.

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENCE

Dear Editor: In your issue of February 11, you kindly congratulate Brother Bowman on having read the very early pages of the Evangelist. When nine to twelve years of age, the writer was fortunately favored with a teacher, James McMorris, who specialized in reading. My father delighted to hear me read in "The Vindicator", D. P. Saylor being editor, and also in "The Christian Family Companion," edited by Elder H. R. Holsinger. After my father's decess I read in "The Gospel Hammer", edited by S. H. Bashor, and "The Progressive Christian", with E. L. Yoder editor. This to my mind was the age of discussion, division, and competition, both in the church and out of it. Having been a subscriber to the Evangelist from its beginning, I thank God for these years of cooperation and unity.

EVANGELIST SUBSCRIPTIONS

The special campaign for subscriptions to The Brethren Evangelist at the special rate has come to a close. While the number of new subscriptions added to our list may not have been as great as we had hoped, the promptness with which a large number of renewals was received was very acceptable indeed.

We know the effect of the depression, whether psychological or real, had a great deal to do with both the renewals and the new subscriptions. But some of the older readers of the paper refused to be "suppressed" by the "depression," and managed in some way to secure the amount necessary to renew their subscriptions. Some of these older people would feel as though they had lost a member of the family, if they could not have their beloved Evangelist every week. One good sister from Pennsylvania assures us she has been taking the paper for more than forty years; a pioneer minister from Virginia assures us he has been a reader of the paper for an equal length of time, while an isolated sister in Iowa tells us she has been a subscriber ever since Brother Holsinger was editor. As to the price of the paper a good sister in Pennsylvania who recently renewed her subscription declared in her letter that the "last number alone, was worth the price of a year's subscription." These people are "rooted and grounded" in Brethrenism, and if they are not "the salt of the earth," they are at least "the stay" of the Brethren Evangelist subscription list.

While the reduced rate was in force for renewals to the paper there were a goodly number of old subscribers who, knowing that the paper was being furnished to its readers at less than the cost of production, refused to take advantage of the reduced price and sent in the regular price of two dollars. Notably among this number was big-hearted "Brother Ed" Miller, now in the hospital as the result of a serious automobile accident, who wrote "I refuse to accept the amendment," and enclosed two dollars for his renewal. But that is the way with "Brother Ed", a heart as big as his body, and that is saying a great deal, but it's true.

So far as the Honor Roll churches are concerned, the First Brethren church of Long Beach, California heads the list in number of subscriptions with a list of one hundred and twenty-eight; the first Brethren church of Washington, D. C., is second with a list of one hundred twenty-one; the First Brethren church of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania is third with one hundred sixteen; and the First Brethren church of Waterloo, Iowa, is fourth with a list of one hundred nine.

This is commendable indeed, and reveals the success of system and organization in reaching a goal among a group that may come under the classification of the apostle when he said, "if there be first a willing mind." Not mentioning any names, we would say there are at least three other church congregations in the brotherhood that should have a place with the above mentioned four. We would not presume to place the responsibility; but we would only pray that they may yet be led by the Spirit to see the light.

This campaign has made a great deal of extra work for the Business Manager but it "all goes in a life-time" and because of lack of office help the Business Manager found it necessary to be in the office every morning last week, except Monday, at 6:30 A. M., eastern standard time, to check up and revise the mailing list. And the end is not yet.

Unrenewed Subscriptions

In spite of our generous offer for the last three months there are quite a number of subscribers who have not renewed their subscriptions.

During this special campaign we slowed down on the practice of mailing personal notices to those whose subscriptions were expiring, leaving it to them to take advantage of the special offer.

Some have not done this, even though they had received one or more previous notices, while some subscriptions expired during the campaign.

It is now our purpose to send ONE more personal notice to these subscribers, and then, much as we will regret to do so, we will be compelled to discontinue their papers, if they do not renew. However, if any subscriber desires the paper continued, and promises to pay later on we will be glad to accommodate them in any way we can. But we do ask them to drop us a card telling us of their wish.

Minutes of the Conference

As we announced recently the Conference Minutes were mailed to the churches according to the decision of the Conference, and a goodly number of pastors have made remittance in full for the number sent them. The Ashland church absorbed twice its allotted number, but there are conditions here that account for that. Only one church has reported to date that it refuses "to absorb the surplus," but we trust most of the churches will just "grin and bear it," that is bear their share of the cost of publication.

"Diligent in Business"

Times ARE hard, and we need all the money we can get to keep our plant in operation; but still the Lord seems to be blessing us, in that our one "job press" seems to have been kept running more continuously the past three months than in any three months in many years, which helps greatly; but yet that is only a "drop in the bucket" as compared to our real needs. So continue praying for us, and then try to answer some of your prayers yourselves. It will all be appreciated.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

WATCH

By Roderick MacLeod

BLESSED is he that expects and watches. Life will never be dull for him. To be expectant, even when nothing happens (as every angler knows), makes the bare lapse of time engaging. And is the lapse of time ever bare? Does it not come moment by moment, each, for the man who watches, with its freight—"an Argosy of golden sail" pressing in from the great deep? He is ready, too, for any event—to overhear the knowledge that Night whispers to Night; to thwart the thieves and keep his treasure; to catch the heavenly host at their song and learn it. Even when nothing so sensational happens there are great moments in every day. Your morning prayer that left you light-hearted as a bird, ready for what the day gave or took away, and serene at the close of it; your suspense for an instant between yes and no, between profit and honor, on whatever side you came down; your vivid discernment of the way you were following—to be with Christ, "which is much the better," or to go with others who ask less of you. Those were moments as pregnant and fateful to you as Worms was to Luther or Waterloo to Napoleon. The true old times are dead? If they are, peace be with them; for the new times are true too, every morning bringing its noble chance, and every chance offering your knighthood its opportunity. What makes life a drab thing slipping down to its own place in the Stygian mire is the delusion that nothing worth attention is happening or can happen. Its antidote is the Lord's gospel of expectancy: "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."—The Christian Index.

Conversion of a Would-be Suicide

By E. A. Hopkins, Nanchang, Kiangsi, China

Born of Portuguese parents in China, brought up and educated as a Roman Catholic, a young woman eventually married a custom's official, a native of Denmark. During the first years of their married life she was constantly trying to persuade her husband to become a Roman Catholic, while he was seeking to win her over to the Lutheran faith. However, in spite of talking so much about their respective religions, in reality God was forgotten, for they never went to a place of worship where they would be reminded of him.

During 1919 the husband obtained home leave, and the wife accompanied him with their children, to Denmark. When some months later he returned to China, having been appointed to K— as harbor master, his wife was unable to accompany him having to see the little ones suitably settled before she could leave them.

After about eighteen months, again rejoining her husband, the wife was amazed to notice a remarkable change in him. No longer did he frequent a club, in fact he had resigned membership from five clubs to which he had formerly belonged. For many years he had been a member of a fraternal society, and in his letter of resignation he stated that he felt obliged to resign, because he believed it would be sinful to continue as a member as he now owned allegiance to Jesus Christ as his Savior and Lord.

Cannot Abide a Christian Husband

The wife now saw her husband constantly reading a pocket Bible, and she became so angry that she exclaimed, "What is the matter with you? What a funny man you have become! I cannot live with such a strange creature. I am going away."

Her health suffered in consequence of her anger, so that she had to be taken to the American Hospital. Here the doctor impressed her very much, as he never attended a patient without first bowing his head in prayer. The doctor's wife also was exceedingly kind and daily brought flowers to make the ward look more cheerful for her. The matron had her mother staying with her, who as well was a devoted Christian, and each morning she would sit by the patient's bedside, read a chapter of the Bible and engage in prayer. All this manifestation of love affected her, but her heart continued untouched by the greatness of all love—the love of God.

About this time her husband presented her with a copy of the life of Hudson Taylor, asking her to read it. She did so, and after the perusal of its pages seemed better able to understand the revolution that had taken place in her husband's life. She now became willing to listen as he told her of his conversion and his changed outlook on life, and how the missionaries had now become his chosen friends and companions. He told her that in three years he would be retiring, with the money that would then accrue to him, he would build a missionary ship, and with himself as captain convey his friends to whatever place they desired in order to spread a knowledge of the truth. But the Lord had other plans for his devoted servant, even higher service in his own presence where there is fullness of joy and at his right hand where there are pleasures for evermore (Ps. 16:11).

Suddenly and unexpectedly the husband was stricken down and passed away. Blackness of despair came upon the widow. With regret she now looked back to those days which had been the happiest of her married life. Alas, during those days she had neglected to accept Jesus Christ as her Savior and friend, and now she knew not how to cast her every care upon him in the certain knowledge that he cared for her (1 Pet. 5:7).

Sad indeed was her condition, the One who had been everything to her husband was nothing to her; in fact her heart was in rebellion against him—Christ, the Son of God, he who longed to speak peace to her troubled soul, who desired to pour into her bruised heart the wine of his comfort, and to minister to her wounded breast the oil of his blessed consolation.

Without God! Without Hope!

What a condition was this poor bereaved one in at this time. The little money left to her was quickly swallowed up with so many calls upon it—the children's education, her personal needs, and many other things. Gradually she found herself getting more and more into debt. Her eyesight was rapidly failing, so that all hope of earning her own livelihood was gone. What could she do?

Here was Satan's opportunity and he was not slow to avail himself of it. Conscience seemed absolutely dead and it was as though she heard Satan saying, "You have no soul to trouble about."

Then again the voice of the tempter said, "How are you going to face your landlady owing her all this money?"

Truly he led her to the edge of the precipice. Carefully she laid her plans.

At that time she, Mrs. N., had a sister living near who, with her husband, would often run in and spend the evening with her. The night she had resolved to end her life, they came and remained with her until late. Suddenly the brother-in-law exclaimed,

"Mary, what is the matter with you? That is a dreadful look in your eyes."

An evasive answer was given, but he insisted, saying,

"Something must be the matter. If you will not tell me, you must tell your sister. We shall not leave until you have done so."

The Story Comes Out

Thus insisting, bit by bit the story of the awful crime she was contemplating came out.

The next morning the brother-in-law went to the consul and told the sad story, with the result that the same afternoon help was forthcoming.

Relatives and friends now began to reproach her for having left the Roman Catholic Church. The failure of her eyesight, they said, was the result of having changed her religion, and if she would return her sight would be restored.

Eventually she again went to confession, but such things were to her as broken vessels which could hold no water. And becoming more and more unhappy, in her distress she began to long for the truth her husband had sought to impart to her. Christian Scientists came along, but having in former days heard the real truth concerning the Word of God, the reading of their literature was unsatisfying. Seventh Day

Adventists also interviewed her, but with the same result.

But one Sunday morning she heard footsteps followed by a knock on her door, and outside stood a messenger whom God had sent with the Word of Life in his hand and an invitation to attend the services at the Gospel Hall.

She was overjoyed, for it had been the longing of her heart for some time to attend a simple Christian service.

As week by week she was led there in her partial blindness and found herself drinking in the messages she heard, gradually the light of God's glorious gospel entered her soul, dispelling its darkness. Here a little, there a little, line upon line, precept upon precept, seemed to be her experience.

Light at Evening Time

Then one evening as she sat meditating on the marvelous truths she had been listening to, with great clearness she seemed to hear the voice of God saying,

"Come now, and let us reason together: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool" (Isa. 1:18).

Though she, "Can it be possible that all my black, black sins, can be cleansed; can it truly mean me? I, who have committed so many terrible sins in the course of my life, can have my heart made as white as snow?"

Satan drew near whispering, "Impossible, such a thing cannot be, you are far too bad, it is not meant for such as you."

Then again the Lord spoke reassuringly, "Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine" (Isa. 43:1).

"I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins: return unto me; for I have redeemed thee" (Isa. 44:22).

"I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy

How Should We Treat Our Pastors?

It was a layman who raised the question, and not a pastor. This particular layman is a man of spiritual insight and leadership in his congregation, but he has the greatest respect for his pastor's counsel and position and has had his concern aroused by what seems to him to be a lack of proper regard on the part of some laymen for the spiritual leadership of those called to be God's undershepherds. He has made observations of the lack of cooperation and of the presence of self-seeking in a church group, that have thwarted the pastor's efforts and hindered the progress of the Lord's work. Therefore he wants to know what is the proper attitude of the layman toward his pastor. How should he treat his pastor? There are many things that might be said in reply to this question, but we are giving space to only a few brief suggestions. And we do so the more readily because we have been sitting in the pews with the laymen for a number of years and have gotten their point of view.

In the first place, the pastor should be treated as a man of God. If he is not that he is not worthy to be a pastor and is bringing dishonor to a holy office. It is true also that every Christian man ought to be a man of God, but in a special sense he who is called to be the leader of God's people ought to be a man of God, having those characteristics and qualities and aspirations and motives that set him apart as God's man. The minister's position places upon him special obligations. It is not true that a minister can do anything that any other Christian may properly do. If he is to be a spiritual leader, he must be in the lead spiritually and not insist on any right he thinks he may have of staying in the ranks of the average Christian. He must be willing to pay the price of being able to say to his parishioners as Paul was able to say to the Corinthian church, "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ" (1 Cor. 11:1). Of course this can be said only with the greatest humility, knowing that whatever any man is, he is because of Christ. But every minister ought to strive for such leadership, and he who does so is worthy of being respected as a man of God.

In the second place, the pastor ought to be regarded as the messenger of God. That is his primary function,—to speak the words of God to his people. He comes to them, if he is worthy of his position, equipped in a special way to expound God's word and to interpret God's will for mankind. There is no higher responsibility given to man than just that. It calls for the utmost of consecration and patient seeking after spiritual illumination and the most painstaking and persistent study of the Word and of world conditions. It requires continuous industry and sacrifice and never-flagging zeal and ambition to become a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, dividing aright the word of truth, being able ever to bring forth things new and old out of God's Revelation for the edification of God's people. Such a responsibility is too momentous for any man to undertake on his own initiative; it must come as the bestowment of God to him who is worthy. Such an one, divinely called and set apart by the Holy Spirit, becomes indeed a messenger of God and men should have regard for him and his message.

In the third place, the pastor should be regarded as the leader of the Lord's work in the community in which he is placed. But mark you, he should be a leader and not a driver. The Lord Jesus himself did not attempt to drive men; he called men and led them, and they were followers. He likened himself to the oriental shepherd, who calls his sheep by name. That was his method from of old; as David sang, "The Lord is my shepherd, . . . he leadeth me." So the true undershepherd leads his flock. And they in turn should follow—follow, not only into the "green pastures" and "beside still waters" that strengthen life and refresh the soul, but into the harvest fields of service for the Lord. Following doesn't mean running ahead, or going in a separate course, or standing stiff in one's tracks, or complaining because one leader differs slightly in methods from another; it means going along with the flock and responding to the divinely guided voice of leadership as the very will of God. The big difficulty with most churches is not the lack of adequate leadership, as is often stated, but that there are too many who would be leaders and are not. The greatest need is for more good followers. Even the pastor himself must first have learned to be a good follower before he can be a worthy leader. But having been made a leader of a flock of God, he should be treated with the respect that a leader deserves.

The faithful pastor however does not attempt to take everything in his own hands, simply because he is the leader and to ignore the wisdom and counsel of others. Rather he takes unto himself other leaders who are worthy, like a wise general, places them over divisions and departments, counsels with them, and shares responsibility and leadership. Thus by cooperation and mutual loyalty and faithfulness the work of the Lord goes forward.

In the fourth place, the pastor should have the moral support and confidence of his people and his good name and work should be guarded against unkind and uncomplimentary remarks. Constructive criticism may be needed, but if it is to be helpful it must be made to the pastor himself. But carping criticisms, unkind remarks about his sermons, or the way he spends his time, or focusing attention on some peculiarity or mannerism in a way that lessens respect for him, or giving credence and repetition to some silly gossip, or encouragement to some grievance, real or fancied, that some touchy individual may be nourishing,—all these are damaging to the pastor's good name; they undermine public confidence in him and injure his work.

And finally, the pastor deserves the support of the prayers of his people. That member is not treating his pastor fairly who does not pray for him. Praying is what every person who knows his Lord can and ought to do, and there is no one in the church who so much needs the prayers of God's people as the pastor, because there is no one who has such responsibility as he has. Pray for him and you will support him. Pray for him and you will not easily become offended when he reproves the sins of his people. Pray for him and you will not share in any gossip about him. Pray for him and you will increase his power and wisdom. Pray for him and you will be loyal to him and will uphold his arms and strengthen his words as God's man and messenger.

Oxford Movement Grows in Interest

Public interest in the Oxford Group Movement is steadily increasing, and the readers of The Evangelist, we discover, are interested in knowing more about it. A number of readers took the pains to write us expressing appreciation of the recent editorial, brief though it was, dealing with the Movement. There is much more that might be said about it, but we have space only for an additional word.

It is our opinion that the Oxford Movement has in it certain elements that respond to a real need. Old fashioned witness bearing had all but died out. Yet it was a vital part of New Testament Christianity, and the final commission of our Lord involved that method of propagation, when he said, "Ye are witnesses of these things." Nothing is more appealing than personal testimony given by men who have had a real experience of religion. The rapid growth of the early church was doubtless due as much to that as to any other one thing, humanly speaking. But the average church of today, and particularly those churches in which the Oxford Movement has found greatest receptivity, has gotten very far from that vital personal experience and contagious spirit of the first century. Men craved it, and there sprang up this Movement, which if it had concerned itself with what a man thinks and believes, instead of merely satisfying itself with an emotional thrill, might have been a real God-send to much of modern Christianity.

That leads us to call attention to a vital weakness of the Movement. It purposely seeks to avoid taking any definite stand on matters of faith, in order that it may make appeal to the most

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Sister Mary A. Snyder of Glovers Gap, West Virginia, is our most recent correspondent to enroll in the Original Subscribers' club, as we call those who have been with the Evangelist from its beginning. Who is next?

The Brethren church of West Kittanning, Pennsylvania, where Brother R. D. Crees is pastor, is now in the midst of a revival meeting. It began with preaching by the pastor and other local ministers for the first week and is being continued in the second week by Brother R. Paul Miller.

Dr. Monroe, Seminary librarian, reports funds received from the National Sunday School Association, for the purchase of books, and invites friends of the Seminary to send any worthwhile religious books they may be willing to dispose of. Such books will be gladly received and carriage costs will be paid.

In the Christian Endeavor department this week Brother Grant McDonald gives a good missionary message that will do the young people, and others as well, good to read. The young people will also be interested in the program of emphasis outlined for March and April and presented by Brother C. D. Whitmer.

Again, we say, Send your offerings for the Superannuated Ministers' Fund promptly to Rev. G. L. Maus, Secretary, Nappanee, Indiana, as the Board has been unable to make payments to the aged ministers and their dependents. Also send money for the Brethren's Home to Henry Rinehart, Treasurer, Flora, Indiana. This Board is also in great need of funds.

In a personal note from Brother N. W. Jennings, pastor at Turlock, California, he says, "God is blessing us, our crowds keep up fine, all work is in a healthy condition, but like other churches we are having the money struggle. But the divine promise to supply all our needs is just as faithful as the God who made it, therefore we take courage. We are sowing the good seed of the Word with the strong hope of reaping in the near future.

Brother W. S. Crick, pastor of the church at Fremont, Ohio, gives an encouraging report of his work at that place. During the year closing this February fourteen new members have been added to the church by baptism and six by letter, while twenty reconsecrations were recorded. Most of these results have been realized through the regular services of the church and by personal soul-winning efforts. Attendance at both the Sunday school and the preaching services have been increasing through the year. On February 19th the school reached its high water mark with 116 in attendance, the "largest ever." Other departments of the work are being maintained with good interest. A new Junior Society is being organized and gives promise of being well supported. A pastor's Bible study class is being maintained with good interest.

The church at Roanoke, Virginia, is pressing forward under the leadership of Brother Herman Koontz. As a result of one week of services conducted last October by their pastor nine souls were added to the church. The Sunday school attendance is seldom under the one hundred mark and went as high as 169 on Rally Day. At the fall communion service the attendance is said to have been the largest in ten years. Brother Koontz' ministry in the pulpit is being appreciated and Mrs. Koontz is leading in the preparation of better trained teachers for the Sunday school. The brotherhood has previously been informed of the financial burden resting upon these people and the news that they have been meeting their obligations will bring rejoicing. Any Brethren having money to invest will find here an opportunity that offers good returns along with real service for the Master, by buying their bonds.

Elder Daniel Crofford, of Hallandale, Florida, passed to his eternal reward on February 19, 1933, after an illness of three weeks, having reached the ripe age of 86. Brother Crofford was a member of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania at the time of his death, and previous to his moving to Florida in 1910 had been a resident of Johnstown and very active in the work of the church. He was for years a member of the College Board of Trustees and prominent in brotherhood activities. Through the years of his isolation from Brethren fellowship, he never failed to keep in touch with the church through the Brethren Evangelist, and also was a subscriber to our adult Sunday school quarterly. He leaves an example of Brethren loyalty that is worthy of imitation by many other isolated members. May God comfort those who mourn. Further obituary notice will later be given.

Brother Floyd W. Taber of France sends us a copy of a letter he wrote to the editor of the Evangelical Christian, a highly meritorious Canadian publication which is on our exchange list. He calls the attention of our contemporary to an editorial error it made, and which error we inadvertently overlooked in republishing the editorial in question in our "News and Views" department. Brother Taber in writing the Evangelical Christian makes this correction: "You state (under date of December 15, 1932) that all debtors to the U. S. except Great Britain have defaulted in their payments. As a matter of fact, the number of countries that met their payment of December 15 is greater than the number that defaulted. In particular, Italy, that you mentioned in an editorial written previously as not likely to pay, did meet the payment, and had announced her intention of doing so as soon as the question was raised." We thank Brother Taber for calling our attention to this error which we took over from our esteemed contemporary and gladly make this correction.

The church at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, has enjoyed one of the greatest revivals that has been reported in a long time, 124 souls took their stand for Christ during the meeting and about 100 of these will unite with the church. And what is significant from the standpoint of present strength, the greater part of these are adults. Brother R. Paul Miller was the evangelist and Brother William Clough is the pastor, and a real soul winner he is. As one might expect from a campaign with such numerical results, the interest ran high and the attendance averaged 400 for the entire three weeks, which is unusual for that small church. At the closing service 44 persons gave themselves to Christ. And it appears that the revival is not over, for the pastor states that he has knowledge of six more families intending to join the church. In the two years that Brother Clough has been on the field, the church membership has increased from 70 to 190 and the Sunday school from an enrollment of 60 to 250. The people have long been praying for just such an awakening and prayer coupled with a passion for souls enables God to work with power among his people. God grant them power to go on from this victory to many more in his name.

Our good correspondent from Harrah, Washington, writes that the Lord's work there under the leadership of Brother Fred V. Kinzie is pressing forward with many reasons for encouragement and rejoicing. One new member is reported. The various departments of the work are said to be active. The Christian Endeavorers are developing in leadership since responsibility has been placed upon the young people themselves. This is in accordance with the fundamental purpose and program of Christian Endeavor. It is of interest to note the economy measures of this congregation, both men and women taking upon themselves extra work to save in the cost of church operation, but it is significant that they are not cutting down on the efficiency of the church program. The men may have to cut their own church firewood, the women do the church janitor work, and the pastor and people sacrifice together because of financial conditions, but the work of the Lord goes on as usual, increasing in intensity, if anything. And what is said of this church may be said of many other churches, varying only in the particulars by which the economies and sacrifices are made. In many places God's people are carrying on without any lessening of program or effort, the people themselves preferring to absorb personally the financial loss and sacrifices rather than compel the church of Christ to take the loss. May God increase that spirit.

The Standing and State of the Christian

By Dr. J. C. Beal

(Stenographically reported by Gladys Spice)

It is extremely important that all Christians understand that there is a vast difference between the "standing" and the "state" of the individual Christian.

Unless we thoroughly understand this condition, we are at a loss to know just where we do stand. On days when everything is rosy, we will feel sure that all is well,—but on days when everything seems to go wrong, then we begin to wonder if after all, we are really saved. A complete study of this particular subject will bring much joy to all of God's children.

The Standing (or position) of the Christian depends on "where he is". Noah and his family were saved because of "where" they were (in the ark) NOT because of "what" they were,—for if they had not found grace in the sight of God they would not have been saved. It was only because they were willing to obey God's command and go INSIDE the ark, that they were saved. If Noah had built an ark and then had never entered it, he could not have been saved from the flood. And please note also, that they were JUST AS SAFE the day they entered the ark, as they were forty days afterward! So we must learn this lesson, that our standing, or position, is a result of the FINISHED work of Christ on the Cross and is PERFECT from the moment that the individual becomes a Christian. WE CANNOT DO A THING TO ADD TO OUR STANDING! The weakest Christian, has the same standing as the very best living Christian. But we must never forget that until one has been BORN AGAIN, they have no standing in Christ!

Some people argue that the teaching that the weakest Christian has the same standing as the best one, gives license to sin. But that is untrue, for when we once fully realize that we ARE children of God, we will also realize our responsibilities to HIM as our Father. Humanly speaking a child is always under greater responsibility to his parents than to any one else. So it is spiritually. Let us remember also that when a child is born into a family—if he be ever so wayward a child, the fact remains that he is STILL a child of that particular family. Even so, when once we are born again, according to John 3:3, 7, our relationship with and to God is settled FOREVER,—but let us be sure that we are not breaking our Heavenly Father's heart by living so far beneath our position (or standing) that we are bringing dishonor and shame to his Precious Name. The title "Standing" (or position) is given or shown in the following references: every believer is a child of God (John 1:12); every believer is born of God (1st John 5:1); every believer is a "joint-heir with Christ" (Rom. 8:17); every begotten child of God is kept by the power of God and has an incorruptible inheritance, (1st Peter 1:4-5). It might be stated here that the word translated "reserved" in verse 4, means "guarded lest it be taken from us"; while the word translated "kept" in verse 5, means "guarded lest I take myself away",—and so we see that both our inheritance and our very own selves are guarded, so that nothing can separate us from God. How marvelous! We are Sons of God NOW, (1st John 3:2); please note that all the epistles are addressed to saved folks therefore, the message of the epistles is especially for the Church. Other references regarding our standing are: 1st Peter 2:9; Rev. 1:5-6; Col. 2:10; John 3:16; 1st John 5:13; Heb. 10:19; Eph. 1:6; Eph. 2:4-6; Eph. 1:13; 5:30; 1st Cor. 12:13; 6:19.

ALL THESE THINGS ARE TRUE OF THE BELIEVER,—the real-honest-to-goodness believer. They are NOT gained by prayer, service, church-going, almsgiving, self-denial, good works, holiness of life, etc. All are a gift through faith. Therefore, they belong to the believer. See Romans 3:22.

Our State (or walk), which means "What we do", may be far below our standing,—in fact, IT IS far below our standing at the best, for it will never be perfect until we "see him" (1st John 3:1-3). The order under GRACE is to give the highest possible standing and then exhort the believer to maintain a state or walk in accordance with the standing. Is not that a splendid goal? To be ever reaching forth that our walk in life might be consistent with our standing in Christ! To get the distinction make the following comparisons: 1st Cor. 1:2-9 presents the Standing of the Corinthian Christians; but 1 Cor. 1:11 presents their State, or walk.

Note the difference! Also read 1st Cor. 3:1-3, 4:18; 5:2 which all present the state of these people. Now compare 1 Cor. 6:11 with 6:7; 1 Cor. 6:15a with 6:15b; Col. 1:12, 13 with Col. 3:8-9; Rom. 6:6 with Col. 2:20; Eph. 2:6 with Col. 3:1; Eph. 5:8a with 5:8b; Col. 3:4 with vs. 5; 1st Thess. 5:5 with vs. 6; 1 Thess. 5:9-10 with vs. 11; Heb. 10:10 with John 17:17 and Eph. 6:26; 1 Cor. 1:30 with 1 Thess. 5:23; Heb. 10:14 with Phil. 3:12; Phil. 3:15 with Heb. 6:1 and Phil. 1:6; 1st John 4:17b with 1 John 2:6. Keep in mind that the Christian receives his position or standing wholly as a result of Christ's work, appropriated by Faith, and therefore the position MUST be perfect. Heb. 10:14. BUT AS TO THE STATE we must say with Paul: our high calling is that our state might reach the perfection of our standing (Phil. 3:12, 13). It may be said that all the after-work of God in our behalf is intended to bring state into conformity with the standing. See Eph. 5:26; Heb. 12:10; 1 Cor. 11:32; Eph. 4:11, 12; 1 Peter 4:12-14; 1 John 3:2.

CHRISTIANS GROW IN GRACE, but NOT into Grace! In every true child of God, finally the standing and state—the character and position will be equal. 1 John 3:1-3. We shall be like him. The position or standing is not a reward of perfected Character,—the character is developed from the standing or position! This has nothing to do with the matter of rewards. Our standing is a GIFT

SAVED BY GRACE

... but God, being rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead through our trespasses, made us alive together with Christ (by grace have ye been saved), and raised up with him, and made us to sit with him in the heavenly places, in Christ Jesus; that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in kindness toward us in Christ Jesus: for by grace have ye been saved through faith: and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works that no man should glory. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God afore prepared that ye should walk in them." (Eph. 2:4-10 R.V.).

OF GOD. Our State is what determines our rewards according to 1st Cor. 3:8-15.

After Conversion--What?

By Miles Taber

John 14:15; II Peter 3:18

(Sermon preached in the Leon, Iowa, Brethren church by the pastor, following the revival conducted by the California Quartet)

What should come after conversion? I think many new converts are asking that question this morning. They say, We have confessed Jesus Christ as our Savior, and now we are Christians. What shall we do? Briefly, the answer is, Live the Christian life. For conversion is but the beginning of a new life, not its end. It is the new birth; the new life follows. When we begin that new life, God does not take us immediately to the glories of heaven, but he leaves us here for awhile to develop this life and to win others for Christ. Living the Christian life then becomes our main business, everything else is secondary. Naturally we want to make a success of this new task. But how?

Dr. Torrey tells us that there are two classes of people who start out in the Christian life: those who make a complete or partial failure of it, and those who make a complete success of it. It made us very happy during the last few weeks to see so many coming to this altar to re-consecrate their lives to Jesus Christ. They had once started the Christian life, but for one reason or another they had made at least a partial failure of it. The coming back of these who have wandered away, as well as the knowledge that there are many who have wandered who will never come back, ought to impress indelibly upon our minds the great danger of drifting in the Christian life. The Christian must face spiritual forces which are determined to destroy him, and these forces are much stronger than any Christian is in himself. The question naturally arises: "Is it possible to point out a plain pathway which anyone who will can follow, and which will lead to certain success in the Christian life?" I think it is. I think the way is made plain in God's word. In fact it would be a strange God who would show us in his word how to be saved, and then leave us without a guide to show us how to live this new life successfully. But throughout the ages men have found in God's word a trustworthy guide all along the pathway of life, and they have said, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and light unto my path." Let us search the Scriptures this morning that we may discover and follow the lighted path of success in Christian living.

Jesus spent the last few days of his earthly life teaching the disciples the rules for success in the Christian life. He seemed to summarize all of this teaching in one simple, but vital, sentence: "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments." Obedience is the first law of the Christian life. I know it is hard to obey. It goes against the grain. It hurts our pride and destroys our independence. But we may as well face this question and settle it now. Either Christ is Lord of our life or he is not. You may call him Advisor, Teacher, Friend, Savior, or even the Son of God, but if you do not make him Master of your life, you are still in your sins. He is either Lord of all, or he is not Lord at all. This is strong language, but it is the language of Scripture. Paul wrote, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." A confession means nothing unless it is backed by an actual surrender of the life to Jesus as Lord. Again let me say that you may as well settle this question now. It is either "all the way with Jesus" or failure in the Christian life. No man can serve two masters: not even Jesus and himself. It is either Jesus or self: it cannot be both. If you are hoping to save certain habits, certain worldly pleasures or certain business practices from the old life, knowing that Jesus would not approve of them, you may as well write "failure" over your Christian life right now.

Trust and obey, for there's no other way

To be happy in Jesus, But to trust and obey.

This obedience must apply to certain ordinances which Jesus instituted for his church. The first of these is baptism. When Jesus commanded his disciples to make disciples of all the nations, his next command which followed immediately was to baptize them. First, conversion; then, and immediately, baptism: that is always the Scriptural plan. At Pentecost Peter said, "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you" and the record follows: "They then that received his word were baptized." It was the same with Philip at Samaria: "But when they believed Philip preaching good tidings concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Later when Philip led the Ethiopian eunuch to Jesus, they stopped along the way at a pool and he baptized him. When Paul was converted and had received his sight again, he was baptized even before he took food. When the Philippian Jailor was saved, he and his family were baptized that same night, "immediately." These examples, and there are many more like them, show that the disciples and those who believed through their ministry thought that those who believed should be baptized, and baptized immediately. With them it was simply a matter of obeying their Lord. Some may say that baptism is unimportant, non-essential, or a matter for each one to decide for himself, but they are clearly wrong. The question has already been decided by Jesus himself. With us it is not a question of baptism, it is a question of obedience to Jesus who commanded baptism. "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments." If you want success in the Christian life, begin it by obeying Jesus' command to be baptized, and do it tonight.

Then Jesus left for his church a special service of communion. And the keeping of this service is a command which we disobey to our own peril. Someone remarked to me during the revival that some who have backslidden would never have done so if they had been faithful in attending the communion service. Simply attending this service will not necessarily keep one from backsliding, but anyone who enters fully into its spirit will find in it a manifestation of the grace of God which is able to keep his soul. As long as professed Christians continue to disregard and ignore the plain commands of Jesus, just so long will they continue to backslide. Hear these commands again: "And he took bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave to them saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me. . . . And he took a cup, and gave thanks, and gave to them, saying Drink ye all of it. . . . If I then, the Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." These commands are plain. Any child can understand them; but many adults will not obey them. Again it is not so much a question of eating a bit of bread, or of drinking a bit of wine, or of washing another's feet, as it is a question of obedience to our Lord. Do not expect to live a happy, successful Christian life if you habitually ignore these commands. Do not seek for the blessing except at the place of blessing, which is the place of surrender and obedience.

Again, Jesus demands obedience not only in the things we do, but also in the things we believe. "Ye believe in God, believe also in me. . . . Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; or else believe me for the very works' sake." Jesus here commands us to believe him. This may seem almost an unnecessary command. Surely, we will say, anyone who depends on Jesus for salvation will believe him. But the truth is, they do not. Too often we hear men who profess to be Christians arguing about some of the teachings of Jesus as though we could accept them or not, just as we please. Jesus is not the final authority to them. They have dethroned him from that position, and have exalted in his place their own corrupt, human reason. And while Jesus pleads, "Believe me," they reject him and follow their own misguided judgment. Here again we must decide: either Jesus is Lord, and we believe him always; or Jesus is not Lord, and we believe him only when he says what we already believe. The settling of this question aught is especially important for those who are young, because in many classrooms they will hear Jesus openly contradicted. Many theories will be studied which are plainly antagonistic to Jesus Christ. The student must often choose between Jesus and the professor, or between Jesus and the textbook. For many young people, their choice here will determine their success or failure in the Christian life.

There is another command of Jesus which is vital to a successful Christian life. It is the command to be his witnesses. The members of the quartet told me almost daily while they were here that they had never been so happy in their lives as while they were privileged to witness for Christ here and see so many born into the Kingdom of God. You may talk about the pleasures you have to give up in order to be a Christian, but you have never known real, unbounded joy until you have won your first soul for Jesus Christ. The world can offer nothing to compare with it. And there is nothing like soul-winning to keep one close to Jesus, first because it demands constant fellowship with him in prayer, and also because a soul-winner is often reminded of his mistakes by others. His life must ring true, or he is soon told about it.

I fear there are some who feel a call to be witnesses in some far off place among the heathen who are yet unwilling to witness here in Leon. There is something wrong with one who continually talks about wanting to be a missionary, but who consistently refuse to teach a Sunday school class, sing in the choir or take a topic in Christian Endeavor. Missionaries tell us that no miracle is performed on them when they cross the ocean to make them soul-winners. They ask for recruits who are successful and willing workers in their own home church. Others who have been accepted for the mission field have proved disappointing to those who sent them out. When Jesus told the disciples where to witness, he named their own home town first. After that he widened the field to embrace the whole world. Let every one who would be a witness for Christ begin in his own Jerusalem. For some this will be at school. For others it will be at work. For most mothers it will be in the home. Do not seek for larger fields of service: seek to be faithful witnesses in the small circle where God put you. When God saved you he knew where you were, he knew all of your present limitations, and yet he said to you, "Ye shall be my witnesses." This is not a matter of choice for a few Christians: it is a matter of obedience for all.

VOICE OF THE CHURCHES

"HOLD THE FORT, FOR HE IS COMING"

TODAY demands ANCHORED CHRISTIANS. A spirit of restlessness is possessing us. A roving, wanderlust is gripping us. We are becoming like "waterless clouds carried about by every wind." We are becoming like "raging waves" and "Wandering stars." These times are discovering the WEAKLINGS and the GIANTS of FAITH. Some are pulling anchors and drifting with the tide. They have "drooping hands and weak knees." They take the "line of least resistance." They are falling before the mighty winds that are sweeping about us and rolling on and on before them. But, thank God, others are standing with undaunted steadfastness. They are "anchored to the rock." Standing on Christ, they cannot be moved. They are "steadfast, unmovable, rooted and grounded in Christ." They are Holding the Fort for he is coming. "Evil men and seducers are waxing worse and worse." They are saying, "The church is already unsteady and tottering to her fall." They claim the "set of the tide" is steadily and with increasing current away from the church. True, much of the Professed Church is unsteady and doubtless tottering to a fall. But this part is the spurious part. It is the fickle, unsaved, worldly, unregenerate, empty-professing, mere church membership part. The Regenerated Believers who form the Body and Bride of Christ are Holding the Fort for he is Coming!! Instead of PANIC they are resorting to PRAYER. Instead of COMMUNISM (under the disguise of TECHNO-CRAZY) they are true-blue to the CHURCH. They are "troubled yet not in distress." "Perplexed, but not in despair." "Persecuted, but not forsaken." "Cast down, but not destroyed." 2 Cor. 4:7-18. "For which cause, we faint not." This is an hour in which the CHURCH SHOULD HAVE THE RIGHT OF WAY. Close up other places, curtail and detail other things, but give the Church of Jesus Christ the right of way and first place in all things. At least, there should be no backward movement. "Hold the Fort for he is Coming." Count these days as days of opportunity instead of days when our "knees become as weak as water." "Be patient, therefore, Brethren, establish your hearts, for the Coming of the Lord draweth nigh", James 5:7-8. We are being sifted as chaff from the wheat. "Why say ye not a word about bringing back the King?" "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

INDOCTRINATING NEW MEMBERS

I have never been able to understand the policy of a church so exactly correct in her statements of faith and practices as set forth in the Message of the Brethren Ministry and seemingly remain indifferent to the needs of the new converts of her membership. I venture that there has been an appalling loss through the years because we have had no definite method of indoctrinating or "Brethrenizing" new members, making them feel that they are a part, not only of the local church, but also of the Brethren Denomination. I am quite certain that no business organization would try to assimilate new members into its staff without immediately training them in the methods and policies of the firm of which they had become a part. It is even more important for us if we are not to be just simply another denomination, and this will surely be true unless our new members feel that our distinctive beliefs and practices are vital to their Christian faith. This is the problem as it has presented itself to me; to you it may seem more imaginary than real, even as it has to several ministers with whom I have discussed this question. However, let me assure you, this is and has been for years, a real problem in some of our churches.

That is my problem; here is my solution. The church should prepare a handbook, not exhaustive in its treatment, but definite in its language and devotional in its nature. I know of no better illustration of what I have in mind than the series of editorials written by the editor of the Evangelist two years ago entitled "Steps in the Way of Life and Fellowship". The local congregation should be charged with the responsibility of getting a hand book of such a nature into the hands of, or at least accessible to, each individual member; and the pastor charged with the responsibility of seeing that new and old members alike know why they believe what they believe, using this handbook as a basis of study.

It would be interesting to know if ministers and other laymen as well, have felt the need of such a handbook.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

A LIQUOR QUESTIONNAIRE OF HIGH SCHOOL BOYS AND GIRLS

Some weeks ago the Rev. Herbert P. Beam, Methodist pastor at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, addressed a questionnaire to 500 boys and girls of high school age in that town and county, inquiring concerning their personal habits as to liquor. The results reported by the pastor were published in the Gettysburg Times as follows:

1. In answer to the question, "Do you drink intoxicating beverages?" 198 girls and 138 boys, or a total of 336, answered "No." 50 boys and 26 girls, or a total of 76, answered "Yes." 27 papers were returned with no answers; 12 papers clearly revealed foolish answers and were not counted.

2. Of the 50 boys who say they drink, 25 say their parents make one or more of the intoxicating beverages in their homes. 14 boys drink wine, 21 beer, one whiskey, seven drink wine and beer, seven drink all three.

3. Of the 26 girls who say they drink intoxicating beverages, 16 say their parents make one or more of these beverages in their homes. 10 girls drink wine, seven drink beer, one whiskey, one wine and beer, one beer and whiskey, six all three.

4. Of the 336 boys and girls who do not drink, 7 boys reported that alcoholic beverages are made in the home by their parents (wine 6, beer 1). 10 girls reported that such beverages are made in their homes (wine 6, beer 4).

5. Out of the 412 boys and girls upon whose answers this tabulation is made, only 58 report intoxicating beverages made in their homes. When we consider that some of these people may have come from the same homes, it would not seem that "everybody is making it."

Mr. Beam says: "This is a typical community. There are many centers much 'wetter' than ours, but taking the country as a whole, this is a typical picture."

How far these facts are from the wild and unsupported assertions of the wets that there is more drinking now than under the license system. There is too much, it may be admitted, but conditions are vastly better than when the sale of intoxicants was legalized.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

liberal as well as the most conservative. On the occasion when the editor had the privilege of participating in a questioning of the Group as well as observing their demonstrations, the criticism was put to them that none had said anything about the Cross or the Blood. Then it was discovered that some of their number believed most thoroughly in the atonement of Christ, while others seemed to have gotten relief from sin by their effort to be "absolutely honest" in making a clean breast of everything, confessing of course to men, which is not according to Scripture. We had long heard that "an honest confession is good for the soul", but we had never known the old saw to be driven on all fours as it was there. The only cross some of the Group could be induced to acknowledge was such as the Christian could share in common with Christ, a cross that meant merely burden bearing. Unitarians, it was discovered, could participate in the Movement with as much freedom and zeal as the old fashioned Methodist (if any such Methodists were to be found), which meant that so far as fundamental Christian belief is concerned it doesn't scratch the surface. The fact is, it leaves men right where it finds them in matters of faith.

Such a weakness is fatal to the Movement, as it predestines it to failure and to result in a disservice to pure Christianity. A movement cannot be of God that fails to exalt the crucified Christ, and that is what the Oxford Group fails to do. One outstanding proponent of the Movement said, with a view to pointing out the zealous character of it, that some one had facetiously described the Oxford Movement as a means of making Christians out of Episcopalians. We would be hesitant about quoting him except for the fact that the speaker himself was an Episcopalian. But we failed to discover wherein the Movement would make anything Christian that was not already so.

It is what I fain would be! Let me be only a voice whose tones and utterances are taught by my Savior, and are concerned with him, and sound forth his praise, and seek his glory! Yet a distinct and individual voice, not a mere echo and reminiscence! I would have a clear accent of my own.—Alexander Smellie.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

The Preadamites

By Louis S. Bauman, D.D.

(No. VI)

Nowhere have we any sanction in Scripture for the idea that Adam and Eve were the first intelligent beings, dwelling in bodies of flesh and bone, to inhabit this planet. Adam, the direct creation of God, may have been the first creature called Man, and Eve the first called Woman. But it is quite significant that when God created these two, the heads of the present race, he blessed them, and said unto them: "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth" (Gen. 1:28). Webster gives as a definition of the word "replenish," "to fill again after having been diminished or emptied; to stock anew; to refill." In the light of the preceding verse and other Scriptures already examined, we can only believe this is the sense in which we must take the word "replenish" here. Significant it is that this same command, in exactly the same words, was given to Noah after a second judgment-flood had laid waste and emptied a world of godless men; for, God blessed Noah, and said to him: "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth" (Gen. 9:1).

Right here, between the first and second verses of the first chapter of Genesis, we have all the time the cavilling infidel may desire for the life of those many strange creatures whose fossil remains are constantly unearthed from beneath the water-formed strata of the earth. Adam is a historic character. So are his descendants. The Bible is the most authentic history in man's possession. Any prehistoric men or animals simply belong to the preadamite race. Men, "wise in their own conceits," may dig up huge piles of preadamite "remains," and think to scoff at the Word of God. It will be more to the point if they will stop to scoff at their own ignorance—especially their ignorance of the Genesis of the impregnable Word of God.

Modern Scientists Quite Familiar with Preadamites

Some modern scientists seem to be quite well acquainted with some of these old Preadamites, calling them familiarly by name. They esteem them highly, for they bow in reverential awe before their bones. They also are quite familiar with the animals which prowled around them, or upon which they rode. We can only hope that when they dug up the bones of that old Preadamite, Mr. Eoanthropus, who lived on the Pittdown Common, at Fletching (Sussex), some 300,000 years ago, they did not make a mistake and actually desecrate the resting place of one of our own forefathers, —a son of Adam who lived but a paltry 5,000 years ago. And, if that other old Preadamite was caught in his cave-dwelling at Westphalia, Germany, and perished when an angry God laid "waste" and made "empty" a world that was being completely polluted by a sinful race, so be it.

But why try to bridge the devastation wrought through that prehistoric judgment by hunting for a link to connect Neanderthal with Adam? If the Preadamite, Neanderthal, actually lived so long ago, and went riding on his many-toed Hyracotherium, well and good. We do not even offer an objection to the authenticity of the picture. But why search for a link that does not exist between that picture and the picture of Adam and Eve riding together adown Lovers' Lane in Eden, on prancing steeds possessing but one good solid toe on each foot? If Neanderthal's Hyracotherium was so prolific as to have all those little "colties" (some of which modern scientists have fondly named Eohippus, Orohippus, Epihippus, Mesohippus, Miohippus, Hypohippus, Parahippus, Merychippus, Protohippus, Pliohippus) following in her train, then we will admit that a Preadamite by the name of Pithecanthropus Erectus may have lived to manage that riding academy. But we refuse to see any relation between Pithecanthropus and the multitudinous little hippuses over which he had dominion, and Adam and the Eden of peaceful animals over which he was given dominion,

What Became of the Preadamites?

What may have become of the Preadamites whose bones were buried far below the "darkness" that "was upon the face of the deep" (Gen. 1:2), we cannot say. But the disembodied spirits (demonia) which have from the days of Adam sought embodiment, may offer a solution. "The sons of God" who "came in unto the daughters of men" in the days of Noah, have not altogether been accounted for. "The angels which kept not their first estate," but left their own proper habitation, committing fornication in that they went after "strange flesh" (Jude 6, 7), still present us with much mystery. Strange creatures were fitting about this earth when Adam stepped forth upon it. These all furnish quite interesting studies still ahead of us, as we continue our way, step by step, through these most wonderful first chapters of the most wonderful Book God has given to man.

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humberd

Study Number Eleven

When we come to the fourth chapter of Revelation, we find ourselves on Old Testament ground. The church age has run its course and the Lord is clearing the scenes for the Kingdom Age. Thus to get the meaning of the seven sealed book, we must go back to the Old Testament.

The Year of Jubile

Every fiftieth year was known as the year of jubile (Lev. 25). It was the year when the land returned to the original owner. The land belonged to a certain family and a man could not sell it permanently, for in the year of jubile it came back to him again. Thus the price of the land was reckoned according to the number of years to jubile. If it was forty-five years, he would get far more than if it were but five.

If a man had sold his farm and later wished it back and was unable to redeem it himself, he might recover it if he had a rich relative who was able and willing to buy it back for him. This relative was known as the "kinsman redeemer."

Boaz as Kinsman Redeemer

When Naomi came back from Moab, she had lost all and was unable to redeem her land. Ruth went out to glean "and her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging to Boaz, who was of the kindred of: Elimelech," (Ruth 2:3).

Boaz was a mighty man of wealth and was able to redeem the land, but was he willing? Naomi sent Ruth to him with the question. He was willing but there was a man who was nearer of kin and he must ask him first. Early the next morning, Boaz went to the gate of the city and waited for the man to pass by. Ten men of the elders of the city were called aside to act as witnesses. Boaz informed the relative of his duty to redeem the land. The man said that he could not do so for he would mar his own inheritance, so Boaz took off his shoe and gave it to another man as a testimony that he himself would play the part of kinsman redeemer (Ruth 4:6).

Christ as Kinsman Redeemer

We can find a type of Christ in the kinsman redeemer. When man fell, he lost his dominion over the earth and came into bondage to sin and death. No man has ever been able to redeem himself, let alone the whole human race, so if man is to be redeemed at all it must be by outside help. Christ became our kinsman when he took a human body through the virgin birth. The human race now had a kinsman who was able to redeem man, but was he willing to do so? Yes, we can well thank God that he was willing and he has redeemed us not with "corruptible things, as silver and gold,—but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Peter 1:18).

Let us remember that we are trying to find out the meaning of the book in the right hand of the Father. We have said that the book is the title deed to our redemption and that Christ is the Kinsman Redeemer. Now we turn to Jeremiah thirty-two for another view of the matter.

Jeremiah as Kinsman Redeemer

The Babylonian army was besieging Jerusalem and occupying the land about the city. Jeremiah belonged to a family that owned land that was now in the hands of the enemy. He prophesied a coming time of peace, but things looked doubtful to his cousin, Hanameel. So Hanameel came to Jeremiah and asked him to play the part of kinsman redeemer for "the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself" (Vs. 8).

Jeremiah bought the field and paid the money for it. Jeremiah "subscribed the evidence and sealed it—and I charged Baruch before them, saying,—take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, both of which is sealed, and this evidence which is open; and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days" (Jer. 32:14).

Title Deeds Sealed

Jeremiah played the part of kinsman redeemer but could not take charge of his purchased possession at once because Nebuchadnezzar's army occupied the place. The title deed was sealed, placed in an earthen vessel and laid in a safe place until the army would leave, then he could open the earthen vessel, take out the title deed, break the seals and take possession of his purchased land.

Christ played the part of Kinsman Redeemer. He has redeemed us by his own blood but a usurper is in possession. Satan is prince of the world, so the title deed was sealed and placed in the Father's hand for safe keeping until the time for the usurper to be dethroned, then Christ will take the book, break the seals and claim his purchased possession.

Christians Sealed by the Holy Spirit

We may wonder why Christ did not at once drive Satan out of the earth, but there is a good reason. He is getting a bride and we were not yet born. Thus some nineteen hundred years have passed and the usurper has been permitted to remain in possession of the earth. Opportunity, however, has been extended for "who-soever will" to affirm allegiance to the rightful Owner. As soon as a person hears and believes the word, he is immediately sealed with the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is given as an earnest or pledge of our inheritance and this seal will hold until the day comes to redeem the purchased possession (Eph. 1:13). We are sealed until the day of redemption (Eph. 4:30). The day of redemption is the time when the throne is set in heaven and our Lord takes the book out of the Father's hand, breaks the seals and clears the earth for the Kingdom Age.

Opportunity for Repentance

The Lamb reaches for the book in the right hand of the Father. The day of redemption has come and Satan must be deposed. The church age has closed and there are millions on earth who have never heard the true way of salvation and who would turn to God, if given an opportunity. Thus, the purifying of the earth is done by degrees. A seal is broken in heaven—on earth, terrible things take place. Another seal is broken and more troubles fall upon the earth dwellers.

During these terrible judgments on earth, many people will sense the situation and will interpret them as being from God and will turn to him. Other seals will be broken and other souls will be brought to realization of their duty to God. In times of prosperity, people forget God, but in times of trouble, those who are seriously minded will respond to his convicting power.

"If the Foundations Be Destroyed, What Can the Righteous Do?"--Part I

By Melvin Grove Kyle

Why the archaeologist? Cui bono? of what use is he anyway? And especially, What can he contribute of helpfulness in a series of brochures for the building up of the religious life of the devout people, young and old, who can be induced in these frivolous times, to read religious books? For is there not a very widespread notion that at least the oncoming generation just now thundering at the door, home from college with "yells bursting in air", is exceedingly skeptical? That is iterated and reiterated until, according to the dictum of Alice in Wonderland, "what I tell you three times is true," we are rather obliged to believe it. In fact it is believed by very many. I recently read a book written up from one of these surveys, questionnaires, which nearly drive educators frantic, intended for the very purpose of proving that college students of today are alarmingly skeptical. This particular questionnaire was conducted at Cornell University and, from the rather prevalent opinion of that institution, I thought that, if the author could not prove it there, he could not prove it anywhere. So I read the book with increasing interest—ever increasing interest, and at last growing amusement. The author told what the students were reading what questions they discussed, what arguments they put forward, what appalling doubts were bandied about, until all the years since my college days seemed obliterated. That skeptical stuff had such a reminiscent sound. When I was a student—some years since—at dear old Muskingum, one of the most conservative institutions in the land then and still, we discussed all those questions, put up all those skeptical bluffs, until we must have seemed to our betters an unbelieving lot. There was not a thing in all that this author put forward to prove the wicked thinking of present-day students that was not familiar, except the college slang. They had learned a new lot which I did not understand.

Yet there is a real difference between the students of my college days and those of today. When we returned occasionally to our homes, we began to air some of our sophomore wisdom and our fathers peered over their glasses at us and said, "Tut, tut." And we "tutted"! Then perhaps we spoke to our old pastor about our intellectual qualms and he said sympathetically, remembering his own student days, "Oh well after a while, these ideas will not trouble you so much". He knew they were only growing pains. So we subsided; today the young folks will not subside. They insist upon those questions being answered.

Now why the archaeologist? to answer those questions. If it seem a very large claim to make for the archaeologist that, of all teachers today, he is best qualified to meet the skeptical tendencies of the young generation turned loose in a great new world of facts which they have not yet for themselves organized, let us consider carefully the following:

Our religion is an historical religion. Most religions are religions of a person. Such is Mormonism; it is the religion of Joseph Smith. There is a little biography attached to him, but no history lies back of the book. All the Mexican history, such as it is, which Mormons claim for their book, was written into it by the Reverend Mr. Spaulding who wrote it as a romance to while away the ennui of invalid days. Joe Smith took that romance, wrote into it some quotations from the Bible, adjusted it to his purpose, and presto, the Book of Mormon. That religion is the religion of a person.

Mohammedanism is also a religion of a person the religion of Mohammed. While quite a little of the Bible is incorporated into it, it is not vitally related to it in any historical sense. The religion of the Koran is the religion of a person.

So also Buddhism is the religion of Buddha and Confucianism is the religion—or rather morals—of Confucius. Little or no history is behind these. They have not historical, but personal roots, so each is a religion of a person.

Christianity is also a religion of a person, most intimately so, but, in addition, it is an historical religion. I was once lecturing in Athens, Georgia, the University town of the state. One who was interested in the conference at which I was lecturing said to me, "There is a Jewish clothing dealer here in town I wish you to meet." Now I had met some Jewish clothing dealers in a business way, and the remembrance was not particularly alluring, but I courteously suppressed those memories and said, "Certainly I will be glad to meet your friend." We found a typical Jewish clothing dealer, and talked a minute or two about those little nothings which strangers utter when they meet and feel a little uncertain, and then he turned sharply to me and said: "Now this is my idea: Christianity has its roots in Judaism, and Judaism has its fruits in Christianity; and when we all get to see these things we will not be very far apart." "Well", I thought, "you are not very far from the kingdom." Was there ever a more succinct statement of the relation between Christianity and Judaism?

Yes, Christianity, in addition to being a religion of a person, is also an historical religion. Our Lord said explicitly that he "came to fulfill" the law. He fulfilled its moral demands upon us in his atoning work and in his life of perfect obedience, and he fulfilled all the adumbrations in the ceremonial requirements and so ended the sacrifices "once for all". Such was his constant representation during his life and in his teachings and such also is the burden of the Epistles which followed; especially the Epistles to the Romans and to the Galatians argue respectively the assuredness of the satisfaction and its completeness. Then in the Epistle to the Hebrews the whole argument is reviewed historically to show especially to the Jewish world that all was fulfilled. The Christ came not to add to the revelation of redemption, but to personify it. In the patriarchal period, from creation to the descent into Egypt, there was revelation in promise, from the Protevangelium concerning the seed of the woman, to the covenant made with Abraham and confirmed to the patriarchs. In the tribal period, from the descent into Egypt to the entrance into the Promised Land, we have revelation through Providence, God's moving pictures, the proof of his being and his supremacy in the wonder of Egypt, the giving of the Law from Sinai and the instituting of the whole ceremonial system of types and shadows at the Tabernacle, the divine leadership in life throughout the wilderness journey and the substitution of Joshua, Jesus, for Moses the Lawgiver at last actually to lead into the Promised Land. In this period the whole of the revelation of redemption was unfolded. In the national period there was revelation through prophecy unfolding and applying, but adding nothing to the revelation. In the redemptive period came revelation in Person, the same revelation fulfilled in the Person of the Son of God, neither taking from it nor adding to it, but only fulfilling it. Then in the evangelistic period, in the Epistles the personification of the revelation was unfolded, as had been its foreshadowing at Sinai and in the prophecies. This evangelistic period is continuing in the heralding of that revelation by preachers to the bounds of the nations and to the end of time; still the messengers of that one revelation.

Yes, our religion is an historical religion; the Jew of Athens was right; how marvelously true it is that Christianity has its roots in Judaism and Judaism has its fruits in Christianity. Christ and his message can no more be separated from their historical roots in the Old Testament than can the ripened summer fruits be separated from the roots that sent up their sap in the springtime of the year. Cut away the roots and the fruits soon drop.

History is inseparably bound up to a narrative of events. Folklore and legends and myths do not make history; they may, and oftentimes do, depict manners and customs, but the events of folklore and legends and myths being, in part, usually in whole, imaginary cannot be accepted as history. It is oftentimes asserted in answer to this that a work of fiction may convey much valuable truth. So it may; but when? Only when, and in so far as, it is a true representation of real life. Why is Conrad so much admired by literati though the sensationalists who feed on falsehoods find him dull? It is because he, more than any other recent novelist, depicts such things as really happen, so that when one reads a work of Conrad he says at the end, "Just so; only the names are imaginary." Then somebody is sure to mention Pilgrim's Progress; somebody always does mention Pilgrim's Progress in this connection. But Pilgrim's Progress is not a work of fiction; it is a narrative of real events, the events of every pilgrim on the way to the Celestial City. Even the names exactly describe each of us at the various passages of the pilgrim's way.

JESUS MINISTERING TO THE MULTITUDE

(Lesson for March 12)

Lesson Text: Mark 6:30-44; Golden Text: Matt. 20:28

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

The Twelve Sent Forth. Mark 6:1-13

Jesus ministered personally to the great multitudes with whom he came in contact, but his ministry was to be much broader than this, and in order to reach more people he commissioned the apostles and sent them forth by twos, to preach his word and to do his work. No doubt many repented as they heard the word preached by the apostles; certain it is that many were healed, and they that received these things received them as at the hand of Christ. It is for this self-same work that he has commissioned us, and it is a sobering thought that when men receive us and our message they are actually receiving Christ. Matt. 10:40. How ought we live!

TUESDAY

The Death of John the Baptist. Mark 6:14-29

Verse 20 is a most eloquent testimony to the power of a God-directed life. Herod was at first greatly incensed against John, for denouncing his sinful life; but his anger gradually gave way to respect for this out-spoken man of God, and it was with real grief that he fulfilled his rash promise. How his superstitious and outraged conscience must have terrified the wicked Herod, as he heard of the miracles of Jesus, and thought that the murdered John had risen from the dead! There are few possessions more valuable than a conscience void of offence toward God and men, and for it we should never cease to strive.

WEDNESDAY

Feeding the Five Thousand. Mark 6:30-44

It is nothing remarkable that he who, in the beginning, created all things, should again create, in order to satisfy the needs of his people. It is worthy of remark, however, that Jesus used his power to do for his people something he would not do for himself (Matt. 4:3-4). No good thing will be withheld from them that walk uprightly. At first the disciples doubted, but Jesus more than met the need, and today he is able to supply all our needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus. Let us not forget that he still has compassion on the multitudes, and would have us feed his people.

THURSDAY

Reassuring the Disciples. Mark 6:45-52

How many lessons we might draw from such a passage: a Savior whose eye is upon us in all our struggles; who comes unto us with reassuring words when our minds are filled with fear; who lightens our load when it becomes very heavy. But perhaps the greatest lesson is the lesson of the hardened hearts. Only a few hours earlier they had seen him in the act of creation, as he brake the bread to the multitudes, but already they were amazed at the next manifestation of his divine power. It is even so with us; each day we experience his mercies, yet when the new storm arises we are immediately torn with fears, and doubt his power. God save us from hardened hearts!

FRIDAY

Many Persons Healed. Mark 6:53-56

As many as touched him were made whole, for he who had power to create also had power to recreate. Today he still has power to heal, and does heal, but more important even than healing of the body is healing of the soul. Every soul that Jesus touches is made whole. The great work of the missionaries and of all Christian workers is simply this: bringing souls in touch with Jesus, the Great Physician. Let us be sure that he has touched every spot of our own lives, and made us every whit whole.

SATURDAY

Jesus the Humble Servant. Phil 2:1-11

He that would be greatest among you, let him be your servant; this was the teaching of Jesus, and this was also his example, in the greatest degree. This emptying himself of his divine glory, and taking upon himself mortal flesh, for the suffering of death, was for you and me—and "whosoever." The practical lesson of the passage is that we should be of the same mind, humbly serving the multitudes and bringing them to Jesus. Pray that his children may really have the mind of Christ.

SUNDAY

Ministering to the Nations. Isa. 35:1-10

Today, as never before, the nations seem lost in the morass of financial difficulties, greed, graft, and general human incompetence. The need is for some one with wisdom to lead the way out of these difficulties, and our only hope for such a leader is in the return of our Lord. With him he will bring blessing to all nations of earth, and they shall rejoice in his presence. Pray that we may be used of him in his great program (Rev. 20:6).

Lanark, Illinois, Christian Endeavor

Dear Mr. Whitmer:

The Brethren Evangelist has not heard from our Christian Endeavor for some time, so we thought we would drop you a line and let you know how we are progressing.

We are now having a contest that is increasing our society in attendance, membership and interest. With the group being in two divisions the young people are making an honest effort to prove their loyalty to Christian Endeavor and God.

Some time ago our pastor was attending an evangelistic meeting, so we furnished the program for the church hour. We gave a short play and had many musical numbers which proved to be very good. One of our neighboring churches asked us to put on the same program at their church on the following Sunday night. It was voted upon and everyone was in favor of going.

We have now decided to pay the light bill for our church for a year. This is going to help out with the local expenses a great deal.

During the vacation over the holidays we had a party for several of our members who were home from college. This was held in one of the large rooms of the church. Even though some of them had been gone for several months they had not lost any of their interest.

Our new officers for this year are as follows: President, Helen Wolfensberger; Vice-President, Bernice Diehl; Secretary and Treasurer, Amanda Wilson; Corresponding Secretary Dorothea Rahn; Chorister, Harry Tallman; Pianist, Marjorie Puterbaugh.

Sincerely yours,
DOROTHEA RAHN,
Corresponding Secretary.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE CITIZENSHIP COMMITTEE

By Olive Strohmeier

Have you a citizenship committee in your society? The young man that has reached the voting age should be chairman, with one or more vice-chairmen from the mature and better-informed members of the society.

The committee may direct the Endeavorers in civic studies, though they are not old enough, probably, for an active part in civic life. It may arrange for a study-class; and these studies may be applied to actual conditions in your town. The committee will take charge of the prayer meetings with civic and temperance topics, and see that applications are made at every meeting where they will be appropriate to the topic. The committee can do and lead the Endeavorers to do some of the following:

1. Organize a Christian Endeavor society among prisoners.

2. Conduct a safe and sane Fourth of July.
3. Aid old soldiers in celebration of Memorial Day.
4. Plan suitable exercises for Washington's and Lincoln's birthdays.
5. See that a religious service is held for Thanksgiving Day.

6. Work to get out the full Christian vote.
 7. Take interest in the passage of laws affecting the Lord's Day.
- More detailed information may be secured from "Expert Endeavor" and "World Tasks for Christian Youth."

Taken for Kidnappers

By H. J. Sheets, Bareilly, India

Why preach to us illiterate folks? We can't understand your message." Translated into plain Anglo-Saxon, this was the Oriental's way of telling us to "move on." Why this hostile reception? For a week we had been most cordially received by both Hindus and Moslems, and given a splendid sympathetic hearing.

As we moved on men in the fields stopped their work to stare at us. When we drew nigh to the next village no children appeared to greet us and the women with fear on their faces beat a hasty retreat. A few men armed with clubs came out.

In this unfriendly atmosphere we began to sing and then to preach. Gradually the people became interested, but still held on to their clubs. More men came—not one without a bludgeon—but the women and children remained conspicuous by their absence.

Songs and addresses finally succeeded in winning their confidence. Then we were told that the day before some men had come in a motor (we were in the missionary motor lorry) and entering a nearby village had kidnapped a child. The report has spread that nine children in all had been captured and carried away. I recalled that a new bridge was being built over the Ganges river and that word had been circulated by the worshippers of Mother Ganges that to placate her for this indignity sixty children must be sacrificed. These superstitious villagers had taken us for kidnappers.

"Had we been Moslems and not Hindus," they frankly affirmed, "we would first have beaten you and then made inquiries. In fact had not the Sahib (meaning me) been with you, we would have cudgelled you any way. We were sure that having come in a motor you could have only one purpose. When we saw you were carrying a box (harmonium) our suspicions were confirmed, for we felt sure you brought it along to stow a child away."

This week's evangelistic effort has convinced me that there is a most amazing and gratifying change in the attitude of the Moslems. As a rule they combine the disposition of the wolf and the lion and are never so happy as when attacking or devouring you. Controversial, intolerant, bigoted, they are hard to reach. But though we visited not less than ten villages where only Moslems live and though two of our men were tactless and controversial, the Moslems showed a most beautiful spirit of tolerance and receptiveness. The deity of Jesus and other questions came up for dis-ussion which in the past would have been tantamount to waving a red flag before a bull, but they were discussed in a truly Christian spirit. One young man followed after the rest had gone and told us that for years he had been a reader of the New Testament and asked us to teach him more about Jesus. We hope that he may become a true Christian.—Missionary Review of the World.

Where There Is No Missionary Depression

It is an astonishing fact that the cooperating missionary societies in the Netherlands are not suffering from the present depression. The income of these societies in 1931 was Fl.25,000 ($10,000) larger than in 1930; and in the first six months of 1932 it was Fl.70,000 ($28,700) larger than in the same period of 1931. Three reasons are suggested to explain this fact.

The first is that these Christian people love missions. The National "Mission-fest," held last July on the grounds of the palace of the Queen-Mother at Soestdijk near Amersfoort, gave ample evidence of this. In spite of a rainy day, over three thousand people were present. If the weather had been more friendly, from eight to ten thousand people might have been expected. From three platforms speakers gave addresses to people themselves under umbrellas.

There were many interesting features to this "fest." In the program especial consideration was given to the younger people. Popular addresses were interspersed among those of a more solid character, required to satisfy a Dutch audience. The varied and picturesque costumes worn were evidence that the people came from all parts of the country and from rural classes as well as from the city. The Queen-Mother was there, but the Queen and her Consort were prevented by absence from the country. The deep interest in foreign missions and the manifest devotion of the people to this cause was evident. What other purpose could bring them together on a rainy day for an outdoor series of addresses?

A second reason for the steady support of missions by the Christians in Holland may be found in the fact that the income of the societies depends not upon large gifts but on a multitude of small gifts. This means extensive and effective missionary education, and a thorough-going cultivation of individual givers and of pastors and church leaders. A detailed study of the methods adopted by these Dutch missionary societies in the cultivation of their constituency would be suggestive and stimulating. But the essential fact is that base of missionary support is broad and wide as well as deep, and when the shock of economic depression comes the results are not so destructive as when the opposite is true.

A third fact to be noted is the extent of successful cooperation in the work of the missionary societies in Holland. Eight societies have united their administrative work. Each has maintained its separate organization, treasury, and work in the field, but the executive secretarial work, both as related to the cultivation of the home constituencies and the administration abroad, has been united under one staff in the headquarters at Oegstgeest, near Leiden. Instead of eight or possibly ten secretaries for these eight societies, there are five—two for the homebase, two for the work abroad, and one general secretary. This union has resulted both in economy and in efficiency. With separate organizations and one secretary, or in some cases two for each society, one man must spread his service over the whole field, both at home and abroad, and can specialize in neither without weakening his effectiveness in one or the other department.

A visit to the Oegstgeest headquarters impresses one with the efficiency of the administrative organization, in the most improved machines and methods for their office work and in their knowledge of missionary problems, always abreast of the best in the world. This effective cooperation makes possible the successful missionary education to which reference has been made. Summer schools are provided to such an extent that every pastor in Holland can attend one every three or four years, and by the systematic working of the home field every pastor has such an opportunity. The record of every congregation and every individual giver is card-catalogued. Every gift is systematically followed up, and if it is not repeated in due time the reason is sought. Here is a lesson for wasteful, inefficient Americans! What gains in economy and in effectiveness might be made if our mission boards would seek the largest possible cooperation in administration!—A. L. Warnshuis, in The Missionary Review of the World.

THE MIRACLE OF INDIAN MISSIONS

An illustration of the miracle of Indian missions is found in the story of the brave and devoted missionaries who ventured out to that hostile country during the first thirty years of the nineteenth century. Henry Martyn, a century ago, with mingled discouragement and yearning, declared that "to see one Hindu a real believer in Jesus would be something more nearly approaching the resurrection of a dead body than anything he had ever seen." The Abbe Du Bois, after a life-time of devotion, mourned that he had never seen one genuine convert. Looking back upon the great awakenings, and measuring the silent but sure interpenetration of India by Christian ideals, watching the indirect influence of the missionaries upon India's own reformers from Ram Mohan Roy to Mahatma Gandhi makes us marvel at the patience and the faith of men who toiled on through the darkness of those early days.

Could these men come back today and see the haughty Brahmin who has been led to Christ kneeling beside the despised Pariah, together partaking of the Communion Cup; could they listen to the record of the Travancore Mission, or hear the verdict of the centuries, what would they say? In India the Kingdom of God has come "without observation." The practical Christian of the West, in a hurry to "evangelize the world in a single generation," would do well to remember the lines of Kipling about the man "Who tried to hustle the East."—Dynamodaya.

Coming and anniversary services the Sunday following Thanksgiving. Great encouragement came to the church as it again listened to the man of God who had been their faithful and efficient pastor during the trying years of the World War, 1915-1920. At the close of the evening message, more than twenty came forward to reconsecrate themselves, which led Brother Oberholtzer to remark that it seemed more like closing a revival than just a day of homecoming festivities.

Are you read this report, we will be engaged in a "home-talent" evangelistic campaign, it having been decided that the pastor shall do the preaching and the membership volunteering to care for the praise and personal work. Pray that we may experience a continuation of the Spirit's leadership. "Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit!"

WM. S. CRICK.

HARRAH, WASHINGTON

The Harrah church extends greetings to each Evangelist reader. In reading the reports of the different churches, from week to week, we have no selfish motive, only one of extreme pleasure, thus to remove any trace of selfishness, we will in our weak way, enumerate some of the activities of our little western church.

As has been ably reported through the columns of this paper the 14th Annual Conference of the Northwest District of Brethren churches met at Harrah on June 28. This is the one opportunity of the year, that the pastors and members of these three churches in the northwest have for real fellowship.

In April, our pastor's wife, who was very ill, underwent a serious operation. Her condition was critical but God heard the united prayers of a congregation who loved and missed her and her recovery was unusually rapid. At the time of her illness her outstanding work was superintendent of the Junior Endeavor for which she was especially adapted. May the Lord strengthen her body that she may eventually resume this branch of his work.

With a feeling of guilt that our boys have been somewhat neglected, a committee, chosen from W. M. S. ladies, co-operated with the pastor and wife. Results in the form of a Father and Son pheasant banquet proved a real fellowship meeting around the banquet tables. This was the first get-together meeting of men, only, in the history of the church. We hope to be able to organize soon a society for our boys equally as active and beneficial as the S. M. M., of which we are justly proud.

Each department of the work connected with the church is active, each leader nobly doing his part.

The young people of the Senior Christian Endeavor have taken over most of the leadership of this society in the past few months. They are holding good meetings and manifesting more interest than when the adults were taking a more active part.

The teacher's training class, conducted by the pastor, completed their course this winter. Brief commencement exercises were held early in January at which time a class of eight received diplomas.

The men of the church have something to their credit. Taking time from regular duties they drove to the hills (twenty-five miles away) with axes and saws, cutting and sawing up oak wood for the church fur-

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

We are glad to report that we have made some progress during the past year, there being only three Sundays on which our Sunday school attendance was under 100. Two of those times the weather was decidedly unfavorable. Our peak was reached on Rally Day, the first Sunday in October with 169 present.

During October, Brother Koontz led us in a seven days' meeting resulting in nine additions to the church. One night during the meeting we had about the largest crowd we've ever had at a regular service, and Brother Koontz held the audience spell-bound while he delivered a masterful sermon on "Ten Reasons Why I Believe in the Second Coming of Christ."

At the fall communion the service was very impressive and inspiring, and the largest number of communicants in the past ten years participated. Several of the new members said they thoroughly enjoyed our method of observing the Lord's Supper.

We wish every member of the brotherhood could have heard a recent sermon that Brother Koontz preached on "Intercessory Prayer". If all our folks would heed the admonitions of that sermon, we believe that inside of a year the spiritual and numerical growth of our Church would be very surprising to our present day church leaders.

The first book of the Teacher's Training Course, "Great Doctrines of the Bible" has just been completed and we are glad to report that seven passed the examination with good grades. We are now starting the second book with an enthusiastic class under the able leadership of Mrs. Koontz.

The Lord is leading us in a wonderful way in our financial problems and we feel it is due to the prayers of his people. We have very heavy obligations to meet in March and if anyone feels led to help by buying a bond it will be very much appreciated and a good investment for the buyer.

We have begun to plan and pray for the spring revival to be conducted by Rev. R. Paul Miller, and we wish the entire brotherhood would join us in prayer for a successful and continual revival in this section of the Lord's vineyard.

MRS. J. HAROLD PUTT, Secretary.

FREMONT, OHIO

Fremont Brethren have been rejoicing in the Lord since last we reported in these columns, and we are glad to share our overflowing cup with the Brethren Evangelist family.

Beginning with the two weeks' evangelistic campaign last February, led by Brother R. D. Barnard, when one confessed and received baptism and one was reconsecrated, fourteen have been added to the church by confession and baptism, six by letter, in addition to more than twenty reconsecrations. Three were baptized besides, who have not identified themselves with this church. We have been experiencing during the past year, the thrill that comes when confessions are received in the course of the regular worship services. These victories have been due to the personal soul-winning efforts of those of the church who have recently found the Lord, and we give the Lord the glory, for the perennial evidence of the Presence of the Holy Spirit.

The attendance at the worship services has showed a steady and appreciable increase over 1931. The morning worship service attendance has increased thirty-eight per cent and evening attendance twenty-six per cent.

The Church School attendance likewise has grown, so that Sunday, February 19th, the record attendance, not only for the five years of this writer's pastorate but for the thirty years of the school's existence, was reached. This record was reached on the occasion of a visit of a Girls' Gospel Team from Ashland College, which visit was greatly appreciated. The average attendance for the church school for 1932 was twenty-six per cent above that of 1930, and forty-seven per cent over the average of 1930.

The second Wednesday evening of this year, the church school launched a constructive Bible study course with the pastor as teacher. The attendance at the six sessions already held has averaged seventeen. There is a manifest desire to "study to rightly divide the truth." One more Brethren Evangelist subscription has been turned in this year than last.

The Young People's Christian Endeavor society observed Christian Endeavor Week with two special evening programs in addition to the two Sunday evening church services. At last week's business meeting of the society, it was voted to launch a Junior Christian Endeavor society at once. It is believed that more than twenty children of the church school will be enlisted in the Junior society. The Woman's Missionary Society already sponsors a Junior Missionary society which has been popular and a blessing. The financial reports of the various treasurers of the church read at the annual business meeting showed all current bills paid to date. While there was a readjustment of the budget, the church faces 1933 with an optimistic spirit.

For six days during the month of August, Brother Charles W. Mayes led us in a Bible Conference which was well attended in spite of the heat and vacation period. Afternoon attendance averaged forty and evenings averaged sixty. Brother H. M. Oberholtzer was the guest speaker for the Annual Home nance. Trucks hauled it to the church, where it has been neatly piled in the basement. With a few tons of coal the question of heating the church during the winter months has been disposed of in an economical way.

The ladies have done their share along the line of economy, also. During the summer months a janitor's service was discontinued. Two W. M. S. ladies went each week and thoroughly cleaned the church. A number of times the Sisterhood girls performed this work with equally good results.

We do not want this report to be in anyway a repetition of former ones but we feel that through our church paper we should thank God for a pastor who endures, who when tried and tested remains our faithful shepherd, gently rebuking, like as a father to a child, with no other feeling save love, smoothing out the difficulties which occasionally arise because "to err is human." His desire at all times being to hold up the standard of the church with peace and harmony. God, alone, understands and giveth the strength to endure.

At a recent Sunday night service, a young man bravely came forward with his public confession for Christ. He has since been baptized and united with the church. It is, indeed, encouraging to see young people turn from the world and its "charms" to the peace and security of God's love.

Our fall communion and love feast was observed during the first week in November. An epidemic of influenza in the neighborhood lessened the attendance of this service somewhat but did not in any way detract from the inspiration or spirituality of the meeting.

Cottage prayer meetings during the winter months have resulted in a closer bond of fellowship. There is no surer way of getting close to God than to meet in a hospitable Christian home, with a cheerful fire, for prayer and Bible study. One exceptional case to prove their worth was manifested by a boy (of high school age) who rode nine miles on horseback to attend the weekly prayer meeting in a distant home.

Every member of this church is saddened by the fact that one of our loved families, Brother and Sister Charles Faw and their four children are leaving soon for Vale Oregon. They are among the charter members who have served faithfully in active church work. We know that what is our loss will be gain for the advancement of a Brethren work at Vale. Their example and Christian influence will witness for him wherever their home may be and the love and good wishes of all will follow them.

We can not complain for God has supplied all our needs, yet we sometimes wonder if all churches realize conditions in this section. Practically all farms are leased and the present price of farm commodities does not even pay the rentals. If the Harrah church falls short in meeting its requirements it is not through negligence, crop failure, or lack of faith in God but because the wherewithal has not been supplied.

REPORT OF REVIVAL AT UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

"Rejoice in the Lord always and again I say rejoice." For many weeks, yea for many months the Uniontown church has been praying, planning and working in every way we knew for a great victory revival beginning January 29th to February 19th. The fact of the matter is, just as soon as our last wonderful revival closed, we began praying and preparing for a bigger and better revival this year. *And now since the meeting has closed, all Uniontown is rejoicing in the great victory God gave. We thought we had a real revival last year, and we did but the meeting we have just closed has proven by far the greatest and the best. The greatest in the history of the church.

Rev. R. Paul Miller was the evangelist. A great man of God. A great man of prayer. A great preacher. A great soul winner. Uniontown will long remember Brother Paul Miller and his wonderful soul stirring messages from the Word of God. Brother Miller was my pastor in Philadelphia. He was the man who won me for Christ back in 1923. It was a real privilege, a real joy, a foretaste of Heaven to have the man to whom we owe much, lead us in this remarkable campaign of soul winning for Jesus Christ.

From the very first night the crowds came. In spite of weather conditions the church was filled every night. Ordinarily we could only seat around 200 people. but with the help of kind friends we were loaned enough chairs to seat approximately 450. The average attendance for the entire three weeks was 400. Every undertaker in Uniontown and one from Fairchance loaned us the chairs and we are indeed grateful to them for their kindness. We filled every corner in the church, filled the balcony, filled the Sunday school rooms, filled the vestibule and seated many in the basement. Folks seemed to be content if they could hear even though they could not see the speaker. On the final night we crowded six hundred people in and scores being turned away. The closing service there were 44 who gave themselves to Christ. We are praising our Father God for the privilege we had in giving the Gospel to the many thousands who came.

There were 124 who came out for Jesus Christ during the meeting. We are indeed rejoicing in the number who came, but truly we believe our revival has just gotten under way. Whole families came to Christ during the meeting. Many of them. Out of this number about 100 will unite with our church, the great number being adults. Men and women came weeping, men and women came rejoicing. Fathers came leading their children. Wives came bringing their husbands and children came bringing their parents. Oh, how we will remember the sights, and the glorious victories Jesus Christ won over sin and the devil during these nights of meeting. Truly God works, convicts and still answers prayer. We know of at least six more families who are coming into our church as a result of the revival. (These are members of other churches who have testified that in our revival they heard the first real Gospel they have heard in years.) We do thank God for our privilege.

People came from every part of Uniontown and surrounding country. They came from every church including the Catholic church. The Saturday night service and the Sunday afternoon services were crowded and proved as successful as any other night of the campaign. Our church will most certainly be strengthened numerically, spiritually, financially and in every conceivable way. We are organizing as a direct result of the revival a Brethren Young People's society and the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha. When we came to Uniontown (not quite two years ago) we had 70 members and a Sunday school of about 60 enrollment. Today we have (not including the results of this meeting) church membership 190 and a Sunday school enrollment of 250. Our great ambition was that we might be used of God to inform all Uniontown that there was a church in their city that dared to preach the truth and teach the whole word of God. Our prayer to this end is being answered daily, souls are being saved and God as in days gone by is adding to the church such as are being saved.

The success of our meeting we believe is due to two things mainly. First, preparation and second, our evangelist. God bless you, Brother Miller. We shall long remember you. We shall pray for you as you go. Under preparation, we had prayed for souls, and for the leading of the Holy Spirit. God gave us both. Cottage prayer meetings for the revival had been held weekly for twelve months preceding the date. We claimed God's promise and God gave the increase and the victory.

Should our Lord Jesus Christ tarry, there is yet a great work to be done in Uniontown. The fields are write already unto the Harvest. The work has just begun. Brethren, pray for us that we may be used of God in winning them for our Lord ere he comes.

WILLIAM H. CLOUGH, Pastor.

THE REVIVAL AT UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

After closing the meeting at Ellet, Ohio, we came to Uniontown for our next campaign. For many years this church has had hard sledding. The ground gave way under their church structure due to a "coal sink". A financial investment in a prospective site for church and parsonage proved a menace instead of a help, and all but cost the church its meeting house and all. All danger from this source is not yet over but it appears to be overcome. Discouragement had taken hold of many of the members regarding the church's future. BUT ALL THESE THINGS HAVE CHANGED!

Today there is nothing but the highest optimism prevailing throughout the congregation and all the community when the future of this church is considered. The congregation has just about trebled since the present pastor has come on the job a year ago last May. Another revival has just been closed here that will send the number a good deal higher. The leaders of the church are gripped with a vision of the future which has never heretofore been thought possible. Plans are being discussed for enlarging the church building to accommodate the growing Sunday school and congregation. The Sunday school is now the largest in history. A Young People's Society is being organized as a result of the meeting just held which will likely start with around sixty young folks of the finest kind. In short words, this Brethren church in Uniontown is simply booming along. Every dollar the Home Mission Board spent here is golden.

The pastor of this church is William Clough, a young man whom the evangelist brought to Christ in Philadelphia ten years ago when we first went there as pastor. Since then he entered and graduated from the Philadelphia School of the Bible, and while there we had the privilege of being his teacher for three years. While he has not been here long, yet God has used this young man in great power to save lost men and build up his church. He preaches in every place he gets a chance and almost invariably he stirs the hunger of souls for something real in Jesus Christ. There are numbers of small, neglected churches in outlying sections where they are only too glad for his coming. Week day nights and other times find him going here and there with the message of a real Christ, and a real Bible, and a real life in Christ, such as gripped his own heart years ago. I dare say that the Brethren Church is better known in this section today than ever before in its history. This young man is a soul winner born of a love for men's souls. Men know he loves them, and they know his Christ will save them FROM their sins, but not IN their sins. Would God that every minister of the Brethren Church had a passion for souls, and an expertness in winning them such as this young man has. After all, our need is not money, nor brains, but men, real men whose hearts have been filled with the love, grace, and sweetness of Christ. How many of us have grown cold, methodical, ecclesiastical, bent on organizing to make up for soul passion!

This revival was a time of rejoicing from the very first. Fine interest and attendance was manifest all the way through. How these people did love the Old Book and every new truth in it that might be brought to them. It was fine to preach to them. And these people have hearts, large hearts. Their homes were open to us and the best of fellowship was enjoyed everywhere. We quickly learned to love these people. Faithfulness seemed to characterize all who served in any capacity. No one ever seemed to lack in duty.

Our home was with the pastor and his wife. And he has a wife who is a real help to him in the ministry. She moves quietly, but effectively, in a thousand ways to help, and is a real soulwinner herself. It was a pleasure to say the least to spend three weeks in their home.

This church has a real future today. Their prospects are as bright as the promises of God. It was a great meeting God gave us with a great harvest. May it go on till he comes.
R. PAUL MILLER.

transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins" (Isa. 42:25).

As she rested her soul by faith on the promises of the ever living, never changing, Almighty and Eternal God, joy unspeakable began to possess her soul, and there flashed into her memory the words uttered years before by her husband, "Oh, it is such joy, such marvelous joy and peace!" Into her mind came also the lines of his favorite hymn:

"O Love that wilt not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in thee;
I give thee back the life I owe,
That in thine ocean depths it flow
May richer, fuller be."

What Time Has Proved

Months have passed away since Mrs. N. took her stand upon the written Word of God and so passed from death unto life.

Her life manifests that she is indeed a new creature in Christ, "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new" (II Cor. 5:17).

Possessing a large type Testament and hymn book, she is praising God for the excellent memory she has, in which she is storing away scripture and hymns so that should her eyesight entirely fail, she will have these unailing treasures to draw upon.

"Never do I know now what it is to have a bad night," is her happy testimony.

"I repeat my verses and hymns over and over, and they also help me in my prayers and communion with my Lord."

With Job she can say, "Who giveth songs in the night."—Moody Bible Institute Monthly.

TO STUDY ALCOHOL

While leaders move toward early repeal of the 18th Amendment, the Allied Forces has launched a new study course for young people which attacks "the problem of alcohol" at a half-dozen angles.

"Alcohol and My Generation", as the new outline is called, was released today for national distribution by W. Roy Breg, Director of Activities of the Allied Forces, representing the young people's division of the movement, which is known as Allied Youth. The Allied Forces now has a nationwide enrollment of more than 1,600,000, and more than half the number is made up of young people from 17 to 30. The youth leaders are said to be enthusiastic concerning the study course, which they produced with the assistance of a limited number of adult sponsors, educators, and older young people.

The British Control Board, Dr. Walter R. Miles of Carnegie Institution, Dr. Haven Emerson, Dr. Irving Fisher, and "The Brewers Journal" are among the authorities quoted by the dry youth group in pointing ways to "a realistic study of the alcohol problem." Chapters include "Alcohol and My Life", "Alcohol and My Crowd", "Alcohol and My Town", and a procedure for registering the personal opinions of the subject held by members who complete the study course. Among the questions raised in the study are the following: "What does the drinker suppose that alcohol brings to him? Distinguish between freedom, guaranteed by our Constitution, and so-called 'personal liberty.' Is drinking popularized by reason of the comparatively heavy cost of buying intoxicating beverages?" Wet textbooks as well as dry are included in the reading lists proposed for students engaging in this course, which will be taught in schools, clubs, church groups, and by Allied Youth councils in hundreds of cities and villages.

Initial organization of Allied Youth was established in every state during a ten months' field campaign for prohibition and law observance, conducted in 1931 and 1932 under the leadership of Dr. Daniel A. Poling and ten associates.

It will be time enough to talk about changing religion when men grow up to the present one.—El Paso Herald.

"AVERAGE GIRL" ASKS WHY KEEP SECRET REPLY TO "OPEN LETTER"

In "The Advance" of January 19, page 24, appeared an open letter addressed to Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt by an "average girl" of Nashville. The young lady is not personally known by anyone at "The Advance" office, but it is learned from reliable sources that she is being embarrassed by the size of her mail—greatly increased since she wrote the second letter, printed below, which letter first appeared in The Evening Tennessean of Nashville on January 24.

1711 Hayes St.,
Nashville, Tenn.,
Jan. 20, 1933.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt,
49 East 65th St.,
New York, N. Y.

My dear Mrs. Roosevelt:

Your letter of January 16 replying to my letter of December 14 had for some weeks been expected with very real interest.

Your letter was marked "Personal and Confidential," and I am wondering why. Your broadcast that called forth my letter went all over the country, and you spoke of the "average girl." My reply to your statement was not personal nor confidential, but appeared in twenty or more publications from Boston to St. Louis. I have received 79 letters of commendation from 30 states, from Maine to Texas and from Virginia to California. Your statement was not made about Osta Underwood. It was about the "average girl" of your country, therefore, since I replied for the average girl, it seems that our correspondence is not between us, but between the first lady-elect and our "average girl."

Every day by letters and in conversation I am asked: "Has Mrs. Roosevelt replied to your letter?" Must I say, "Mrs. Roosevelt answered but marked the reply 'Personal and Confidential?'" Hundreds of thousands of people read your statement and many hundreds read my letter and they are interested in your reply. After all the reply should be to "The Average Girls" and not to "An Average Girl." Is there any sufficient reason why I should treat your letter as "Personal and Confidential?"

I hope you will find it convenient to reply at once.

Very sincerely yours.

OSTA M. UNDERWOOD.

WHEN BOBBIE RAN AWAY

By Emma Florence Bush

Father Waitt was coming in the gate. It was good to get out to grandma's again in the big house by the ocean, after a week in the hot, dusty city. But no dancing feet were on the path to meet him.

"Where's my boy?" he called. No answer. "That's funny," he said to himself. "Bobby's always watching for me. Perhaps he is in the garden."

But no little boy was digging in the soft earth in the garden. So father went up the steps to the front piazza. Mother sat there sewing.

"Where's Bobbie?" asked father. "I missed the little fellow. Is he sick?"

"No," smiled mother, "Just step around to the side piazza and look."

This is what father saw—a high fence made from grandma's old fashioned clothes-bars stretched across the edge of the piazza, and was tied by a stout string to large, strong nails. A wee boy in rompers and shade hat, with a large cotton flannel dog in his hand was peeping through the bars.

"Hello, father," he cried, as he caught a glimpse of his father coming around the piazza.

"Well! Well! What is my boy doing here?"

"Bobbie runned away," said a meek little voice, as Bobbie all at once remembered the high fence. "Father, please take Bobbie out, I'm good now."

"Suppose we ask mother first," said father.

Mother folded her sewing. "Yes, we will take the fence away now. We will put on your clean white suit and you get all ready to go for a ride, and then we will tell father all about our trouble."

When Bobbie was dressed, father took him on his knee. "Now, let's hear the story, son," he said.

So Bobbie began, "Mother said never to go out of the yard. But two big boys came with pails, and they were going to the beach. Bobbie wanted to dig in the sand and so Bobbie went too. We digged and digged until Bobbie was tired. Then I wanted mother and mother was home. Bobbie was too tired to go, so he cried, and the big boys put him in the water."

"Poor little chap, what did Bobbie do then?" asked father, holding him close.

"A lady comed, and she said to the boys, 'What are you doing?' I said, 'I want to go home,' and she said, 'Where is home?' I told her, 'Where grandma lives' and she made the boys tell her where they finded me. Then she brought me home and mother hugged me tight, and said, 'Thank you, Mrs. Bright, for bringing my little boy home to me.'"

Father looked very sober. "Didn't she say you were a naughty boy to run away with the big boys?"

"No, she didn't say that," said Bobbie slowly. "She said, 'If a little boy runs off when his mother doesn't know it, he must be tied,' so she got the clothesline, and grandma said to make a fence, and they did.'"

"A very wise thing to do," said father.

Bobbie did not answer. He must have thought so too. Pretty soon a little face looked up at mother, as Bobbie said, "I'm good now, mother, and good boys don't run away. Will you please take down the fence? I'll never, never run away again."—The Presbyterian Advance.

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENCE

ANOTHER READER FROM THE BEGINNING

I too have read The Evangelist from its beginning and paid my own subscription for 46 years and paid for many others too.

Before the Evangelist existed, I read the "Gospel Messenger," the "Gospel Preacher," and the "Progressive Christian." This may be one reason why I am a "died in the wool" Brethren.

When I could not read, some one read to me.

The last number of the Evangelist (No. 6) was extra good.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

BOOKS WANTED

Since last September, when school opened, we have been only able to purchase for our Seminary Library less than twenty books.

A few weeks ago we received our fifty dollar allotment from the National Sunday School Board, and apportioned ten dollars for magazines, and accredited each seminary professor with ten dollars, enabling him to order books for our library to that amount. We greatly appreciate this gift and it will probably have to last us until next winter. Thanks to you who, by your White Gift, have made it possible.

We feel that some of you interested in the development of our Seminary Library may have books of value, which you would be glad to have our young men use, who are preparing for the ministry. We are taking this opportunity to state our need, and to invite you to send us any books of a religious nature, either devotional or of a technical nature.

If you have a goodly number of books, maybe belonging to one of our departed ministers, and do not feel that you could pay freight on them to Ashland, please correspond with the writer. We assure you that any gifts will be carefully shelved and used often. KENNETH M. MONROE, Seminary Librarian.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

SUTTON-McLIVAIN—On January 14, 1933, at the Brethren Manse, in Carleton, Nebraska, Mr. Benjamin L. Sutton, and Miss Vonda L. McLivain, both of Beloit, Kansas, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. The bride was a former parishioner when we lived at Fortis, Kansas, and for five years has been manager of the dry goods department in the Golden Rule store in Beloit. Mr. Sutton is a clerk in the Kansas Power Company office in the same city. Both are commendable young people, and the well wishes of their many friends go with them. They will make their home in Beloit. He is a Baptist, and she a Brethren, but they will attend some church together. Ceremony by the writer. W. R. DEETER.

IN THE SHADOW

MILLER—Harold J. Miller, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Miller, of Carleton, Nebraska, was born August 16, 1910, and departed this life in Queens Hospital, Honolulu, T. H., on December 2, 1932, aged 22 years, 3 months, and 16 days. He was a High School graduate, attended Business College, and for a time worked in Superior and Crete, Neb. In 1930 he enlisted in the U. S. Army, was stationed in Hot Springs, Arkansas, being assigned duties in the Army & Navy Hospital Quartermaster Corps. In February of last year he was transferred to Honolulu, Territory Hawaii, and held the rank of Private First Class in the Detachment G. C. He had a good record, and was in line for an early promotion.

He was fatally injured in an auto accident on December 2, and only lived a short while afterward. Three of his comrades met death in the same car. They were given a military funeral service on December 16, 1932. The body was shipped home, arriving on January 30th this year. The funeral service was held in the Brethren church February 2,—just 2 months after his untimely death. An unusually large crowd was in attendance. Funeral by the writer, assisted by Rev. Sink and Wylie. W. R. DEETER.

KNIFFER—Pern Olive Kniffer, daughter of Rudolph C. and Florence N. Kniffer, was born October 11, 1890, and departed this earthly life, January 20, 1933, aged 12 years, 3 months and 10 days. She leaves a father and mother, brothers and five sisters and a numerous other relatives and friends to mourn their loss. The Kniffers were one time members of the Pleasant Grove church. Fern was a sweet girl, a member of the Pleasant Grove Sunday school and knew how to pray. Hers was an accidental death. She continued to read the Bible to the time she died, until her death. The funeral was conducted in the M. P. church near her school house, so her grade could attend the funeral service. The service was conducted by her uncle, the writer, assisted by Rev. F. W. Church. The large attendance bore witness to the love the people had for this little life. Our hearts were crushed by the sorrow, but the Holy Spirit was our support and God was our strength. Had it not been for the hope of life beyond the grave we never could have preached this funeral. How sweet when children love the church and Sunday school and die praying! No wonder Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of God." H. W. ANDERSON.

KIMMEL—Mrs. May Tourlinton Kimmel was born January 29, 1893 and died January 7, 1933. She was born in Topeka, Kansas, and was a graduate of Washburn College and attended the Kansas State College at Manhattan. She was married to Ray D. Kimmel in 1915. They made their home in McLouth, Kansas, where she had been an active worker in the Brethren church. She had been raised in the Presbyterian faith and did not unite with the Brethren church until two years ago. She will be greatly missed in McLouth where she had preached this funeral. How sweet when children love the church and Sunday school and die praying! No wonder Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of God." MRS. J. R. KIMMEL.

HANG—Mrs. Sarah Hang passed away, January 3, 1933. She was married to George B. Hang, October 28, 1859, who preceded her in death some five years ago. She and her husband were charter members of the Canton Brethren church, to which they were faithful members until the end of life. On May 26, 1907, she was elected to the office of deaconess to which trust she was true and faithful until age somewhat advanced. Her participation in many of the church activities. She was the mother of eleven children and leaves also ten grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren. She lived to the age of 82 years, lacking one month.

Services were held in the Canton church, in charge of the writer, assisted by Dr. J. C. Beal. D. F. EIKENBERRY.

HENSLEY—Mrs. Martha M. Hensley departed this life at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Graham in Fort Scott, Kansas, on January 11, 1933, at the age of 85 years and two days.

Mrs. Hensley came to this country in 1894, and her husband preceded her in death a year ago.

Mrs. Hensley had been a member of the Brethren church for many years, and was highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. She had made her home with the Grabrams for several years. The funeral was conducted from the Konantz Mortuary Chapel, by her pastor, the writer.

The body was laid to rest in the family cemetery, near Carthage, Missouri. May everything beautiful in her life be cherished in the memory of those who loved her. L. G. WOOD.

GISH—James V. Gish was born in Macopin County, Illinois, July 24, 1863. He passed away at his home in Iola, Kansas, January 31st, 1933, at 7:30 P. M., at the age of 69 years, 6 months, 7 days.

In the year 1895, Christian and Emily Gish together with their five children, of whom James was the youngest, came from Illinois and settled in the southern part of this country.

After completing his grade school work at the old Gish school house, the ground for which was donated to the district by Jim's father, he entered the Kansas Normal College which was then under the supervision of Prof. Sanders, and graduated therefrom in the spring of 1884.

On March 18th, 1885, he was united in marriage to Dora M. Curtis. To the pair were born three children: Leona, now deceased; Leo S., of Iola, Kansas, and Lela of this city.

James' early life was devoted to the farm and school teaching. His three sisters, and numerous other relatives and friends, have been members of the Brethren church since 1884 to 1907, and many of the older residents of both the country and city were his pupils.

Shortly before his death, he called for the Rev. J. H. Sowerby of Iola, Kansas, and with his kindly guidance, James, with God, announcing he was ready to go, and that his only regret was for the sorrow and grief he was leaving behind.

He leaves surviving him his widow, two sons, two grandchildren, three sisters, and numerous other relatives and friends. Mr. Gish was a descendant of that prominent Gish family of Tunker faith, and was a friend of the writer, from their boyhood days.

The funeral was conducted from the Konantz Mortuary chapel, by the writer, on February 2nd, 1933. The writer also conducted the funeral of his father, Christian Gish, 25 years ago. The body was laid to rest in the family lot in Evergreen Cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Putting God in the nation's life,
Bringing us back to the ideal thing—
There's something fine in a creed like that,
Something true in those words that ring.
Sneer as you will at the "preacher air,"
Scoff as you will at the Bible tang,
It's putting God in the nation's life
That will keep it clear of the crooked "gang."

GOD IN THE NATION'S LIFE

—Baltimore Sun.

We've kept him out of its life too long,
We've been afraid—to our utter shame—
To put him into our speech and song,
To stand on the hustings and speak his name.
We've put all things in that life but him,
We've put our selfishness, pride and show;
It is time for the true ideal to come,
And time for the low ideal to go.

To Seek God's Face and
To Keep God's Law is the Way Out

Putting God in the nation's life,
Helping us think of the higher thing—
That is the kind of speech to make,
That is the kind of song to sing,
Upward and forward and let us try,
The new ideal in the forthright way—
Putting God in the nation's life,
And putting it there in a style to stay.

THE New President Speaks

This is being written on March 4th, just after listening to the inaugural speech of Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt. What he had to say was short and to the point, somewhat different from the usual thing uttered by politicians after election. The present situation, he reminded his hearers, is a time for action rather than talk. So far, at least, most of us can agree.

The speech, brief as it was, contained three references to the Bible, which is more than you will find in some sermons today. The first reference was to a part of Proverbs 29:18; the second to a part of Matthew 28:19; and the third was a figure borrowed from an incident recorded in all four Gospels (see Matt. 21:12-13).

Evidently, like his predecessor of the same name, Mr. Roosevelt has some acquaintance with the English Bible. Many will recall some of Theodore Roosevelt's energetic utterances, like "battling for the Lord at Armageddon" and the famous 'Ananias Club.' Unfortunately, many of our embryo politicians now being trained in Bible-less schools will know nothing of the English Bible, and to that extent their speech will be impoverished. If you want to learn to speak clearly and effectively, study the English Bible and memorize great sections of it. That is where Lincoln got his flawless clarity of speech.

WHERE There is No Vision

That part of Proverbs 29:18 used by Mr. Roosevelt reads as follows: "Where there is no vision, the people perish." No finer text could be chosen by the incoming government represented and led by the new President. We hope that he understands its real meaning. Even some of the preachers do not.

The word "VISION" does not refer to something which originates in the mind of man, but to a communication which comes from God. The great prophecies of the Old Testament are called "visions." (Compare Isaiah 1:1) Therefore, a people with no "vision" is a people with no Word from God. Such a people is in a perishing condition. Hence, the most important thing today is not the reconstruction and control of the banking situation, desperate as that is, but a renewed declaration of the REVEALED WORD OF GOD.

Economic and social conditions are bad, but they are only symptoms of a deeper disease. Modern society, like Job, is smitten with boils. And boils are not cured with salve. That is the trouble with most of our politicians and educators today—they are mere boil-dressers blind to the real disease of humanity. This disease at bottom is a spiritual matter. And the cure is found in a VISION, not of man, but of God. Where there is no vision, the people perish.

Our Common Difficulties

We would like to believe that the President-elect sees clearly the implications of the Biblical text he so bravely quoted, but an earlier sentence of his speech raises a doubt. "Our common difficulties," he said, "concern . . . only material things." If Mr. Roosevelt sees no deeper than this, he will prove to be only another doctor of boils. I trust that the reader will not misunderstand me here. Even salve is better than nothing on a boil, and all of us will sincerely hope that Mr. Roosevelt's salve will prove more potent than Mr. Hoover's. Perhaps Mr. Roosevelt will even lance some of the boils. They need it. But the point is that there will be no permanent relief until the underlying disease is dealt with. Whatever temporary relief humanity may find in the remedies of the skin specialists will always eventually be followed by another outbreak of boils.

Job, you will remember, got no help from the nostrums of his three philosopher friends, neither from the wisdom of the "younger generation" as represented by Elihu. He was cured by a vision, not of man, but of God. "I had heard of thee by the hearing of the ear," he confessed at last to God, "But now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore, I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." (42:5-6) Then, and not until then, did God "turn the captivity of Job." And we read that God "gave Job twice as much as he had before."

There will be no permanent cure for the world's ills apart from the Vision of God. Today the bringing of that Vision to man depends upon the Church as she declares the Word which reveals the Vision. And to the extent that the Church becomes apostate in preaching that Word, the Vision will be marred and fail. That is the difficulty today. Some day, thank God, he who is the very Image of the Invisible God will reappear to take over the governments of the world. In his Presence the world will find the permanent solution for its sickness. Until he comes, let us be faithful in declaring the Vision. For even today, it is the saving grace in a tottering civilization.

PROVERBS 29:18 and Prohibition

I hope that some time the new President will read the Proverbs passage as it is translated in the American Revised Version, and read the entire verse. Here it is: "WHERE THERE IS NO VISION, THE PEOPLE CAST OFF RESTRAINT; BUT HE THAT KEEPETH THE LAW, HAPPY IS HE."

The most striking characteristic of the past decade has been a defiant rebellion against law and authority. To successfully cope with this attitude two policies are being advocated. The first would pass more laws to put down the rebellion. The second would repeal the laws against which people rebel. But you cannot change human nature by passing laws. Neither can you safeguard society by removing the restraint of law.

The remedy is set forth in the text: "The people cast off restraint" because there is NO VISION. That is the reason why multitudes have cast off the restraint of the 18th Amendment by breaking it; that is why the present government will try to cast it off by repeal. There is NO VISION, which means no declaration of the REVEALED WORD OF GOD. Church leaders have been more concerned with political lobbying than they have with Gospel preaching. They have spent their time trying to unseat wet legislators in Congress, and have left unmolested the apostate preachers in their pulpits. They have thundered loudly against those who deny the efficacy of the Prohibition Law, but have said nothing against those who deny the efficacy of the Blood of Christ as our Substitute and the foundation of true righteousness.

Permanent social progress cannot be had without spiritual preparation. Until men learn that, they know nothing. Read the sixth chapter of Isaiah, and note the order:

1. The Vision of God (verse 1)
 2. The Confession of Uncleanness (verse 5)
 3. The Cleansing from the Altar (verse 6-7)
 4. THE WILL TO OBEY (verse 8)
- "WHERE—THERE IS NO VISION, THE PEOPLE CAST OFF RESTRAINT."

THE Money Changers in the Temple

Through the striking figure of that well known incident of the Gospels, the new President hurled an indictment into the camp of "the rulers of the exchange of mankind's goods." I have not read all the inaugural speeches of the presidents of this country, but I doubt whether any one of them ever contained a severe condemnation of the money rulers and their methods, those highpriests of finance who for the past few years have systematically plundered the public. Mr. Roosevelt evidently has some courage.

"The Money Changers," said Mr. Roosevelt, "have fled from their high seats in the temple of our civilization." Here we can only hope that he knows whereof he speaks. But if true, the President will find it no small task to keep them out. Thus far they have always come back. And many people have a suspicion that there are still some within the precincts of the temple.

People have been wondering why the severest financial stringency of all has arisen almost exactly contemporaneous with the inauguration of a President who apparently has little respect for the money rulers. Was this a mere coincidence? Or did these rulers know something in advance of what Mr. Roosevelt would say, and decide to give him a concrete illustration of what they can

The "New Deal" and the National Crisis

Every patriotic American, and particularly every Christian patriot, has been greatly concerned about what has recently taken place in our national capital. Not in many years has the public interest been so tense in the transference of power from one administration to another. This extraordinary concern has been due not primarily to the personalities involved, but to the distressing situation prevailing and the uncertainty as to what might or might not be done about it. Both are honored men and capable. Mr. Hoover was set aside in response to the popular vote last fall because people had lost confidence in his ability to solve the depression problem. Mr. Roosevelt was elevated by overwhelming vote and inducted into place of authority because the people came to believe that he would somehow lead them out of their financial troubles. Mr. Hoover, though rejected at the electorate, yet was loved and admired by vast numbers of his fellow citizens because he showed himself to be honest, sincere and hard-working, a man of high ideals and a Christian gentleman. Mr. Roosevelt also has been highly respected and favored by large sections of the country and in positions of responsibility has shown himself a man of honor, capable, aggressive and worthy. But his personality was not the issue in the campaign.

The records of both in public office afford occasions for just criticism, as well as for commendation. We have a feeling that the Prohibition situation might be different today if Mr. Hoover had exercised real leadership in its defense, using the great power of his office to insist upon respect for and observance of the Eighteenth Amendment as a part of the Constitution, and giving the forces defending and enforcing that law the support of his spoken word frequently, as he might well have done. He was elected in 1928 by the dry voters because he stood for retention and enforcement of "the noble experiment." And these same dry voters had a right to expect him to be their champion of the dry cause. If he had done so, we dare say that not only would Prohibition have been kept in better favor, but many a dry voter would have been for him who was not at the last election. And yet we do not believe the difference at the polls would have been sufficient to have changed the election. In other words, we do not believe Prohibition leadership would have enabled him to win a second term, under the financial circumstances. Some one had to be blamed for the depression, and he was the logical person to blame.

Regarding Mr. Roosevelt's record, we recall a number of points at which we think he deserved criticism. But to mention only one, it is a matter of common knowledge that he has been outstanding in his opposition to Prohibition. He still retains that attitude and made much of it during his campaign for election to the Presidency. Consequently we are not happy at the thought of what his influence may be along this line, now that he has secured that high office. Notwithstanding his consistent pro-liquor attitude, we doubt if it had a great deal to do with the election outcome. It is possible that it was one factor in determining the size of his majority, but we dare say he was not elected because of his wet position. The thing that put him in office was the way people came to look upon him and his promises in relation to the depression. He was a successful governor of New York State, and in the trial of Mayor Walker he showed both dignity and courage, but his experience as governor was not sufficient in itself to assure the people of the nation that he would make a good and successful President. We hope he has within him the making of a really great Executive, but that is yet to be proven. The thing that won him that coveted position was the fact that he became to a distressed people their star of hope. The more severely they became afflicted the brighter grew their hope that he would lead the way to better things. The "new deal" spoken of was to them not a mere campaign slogan; it represented a heart yearning; it was full of meaning. They wanted just that, and they voted to secure it.

President Roosevelt may prove to be just the leader the nation needs in this dark hour. It is the hope of every good citizen that he will be. The country is unusually warm toward him, and receptive of his leadership. That is at once an asset and a liability. It will enable him to press with all the greater force his policies upon the people and to secure from them all the more readily such cooperation as is necessary to give them a chance to succeed. At the same time, if his policies prove unsatisfactory and inefficient, the disappointment will be all the greater and the reaction all the stronger and more bitter. It is the clear duty of every citizen, and especially the Christian citizen, to give such cooperation and helpful support as will contribute most to the success of the government and to the relief of these critical times. The Cleveland Plain Dealer gave wise counsel when it said recently: "While looking to the new leader for guidance and for the initiation of constructive policies the people of the country cannot afford to ignore their own responsibilities in the days to come. Government can do much, but it cannot do everything. Individuals must do their part; business and civic groups still have their functions. Roosevelt was chosen to lead, not to perform miracles or, Atlas-like, to carry the burdens of a world which must carry most of its own." In very truth, let every citizen bear his own burden.

But there is something in the whole program that gives the Christian concern at the very beginning, and makes him fear for the outcome. The difficulty is to be found in the limited character of the vision, the materialistic nature of the whole conception. It is found expressed in one vital sentence in the new President's inaugural address. Referring to "our common difficulties", the President said: "They concern, thank God, only material things." If he had not said "only", we could have understood and could have agreed. But the difficulty is not merely that "Values have shrunk to fantastic levels; taxes have risen; our ability to pay has fallen; ..." and such material maladjustments. We are sure that the President himself does not think so, for he later strikes out courageously against "callous and selfish wrongdoing" in business. When Mr. Roosevelt hits at selfishness and points out that confidence "thrives only on honesty, on honor, on the sacredness of obligations, ... on unselfish performance," he is dealing with spiritual values. Yet his preceding statement indicates what is primarily the mind of our leadership and also of the crowd. It was that constant emphasis upon material things that brought on the depression. Men forgot God and turned to idols; they left off the worship of the God who is a Spirit, and made for themselves gods

About Prohibition

Prior to 1925, most of Canada was dry. For the three years ending in 1925 the arrests for drunken driving totalled 1492. Then the Provinces established government sale, and for the three wet years ending in 1930 the convictions for drunken driving amounted to 5,225—an increase of 251%. This is on the authority of the Official Report of the Minister of Trade and Finance, Ottawa, Canada, 1932. And yet many of the wet advocates are advising the government to look to Canada for a more satisfactory method of dealing with the drink problem.

There is not a district in the United States that does not bear witness to the success of Prohibition, when the situation is represented honestly. Even in New York City, the wettest of all wet centers, Prohibition, has been all too effective to suit the wet forces, and that accounts for their persistent efforts to discredit and bring it to naught. According to the World Almanac for 1933 (page 480) "Arrests for drunkenness in the city of New York for five years ending in 1916 averaged 13,314 per year. For the five dry years ending with 1931, arrests for drunkenness averaged 7,690. So Prohibition has succeeded in sobering even that great metropolis. This sobering effect is lessening the number of deaths due to alcoholism. The record for 1930, the latest available figures, show that alcoholic deaths in the United States continue to decline as they have been since Prohibition went into force. The rate per 100,000 population for five years ending with 1917 averaged 5.2. In dry 1930 the rate was 3.5.

In the face of all the many benefits,—economic, social, moral and spiritual, the evil forces set to do away with Prohibition have succeeded in their first great offensive, and the moral and religious forces of the nation seem to have scarcely enough fight and courage left in them to offer any effective resistance. It may take a return of the bitter experiences of the old saloon regime to fire them again with the courage and conviction necessary to drive out completely the accursed liquor traffic. And it will not take long to begin to reap the fruits of our indifference. Already press reports from Los Angeles quote Mayor Porter as saying that drunken driving and arrests for drunkenness have increased between 200% and 300% since the repeal of the California state prohibition enforcement act on November 8, 1932.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Every church ought by this time to have sent to Rev. G. L. Maus, Nappanee, Indiana, an offering for the Superannuated Ministers' support and to Mr. Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana, an offering for the Brethren's Home.

As we were going to press the sad news reached us of the death on Thursday, March 2, 1933, of Dr. J. M. Tombaugh of Hagerstown, Maryland. Dr. Martin Shively was called to conduct the funeral and will make report in a later issue.

The Business Manager writes this week about several things, but particularly about two more long-time subscribers, the picture of one being reproduced in his department. We join in congratulating Brother Wisler on his 91st birthday and thank him for his loyalty.

The next special offering that the churches will be called upon to make is for our Foreign Mission work, to be lifted on or before Easter Sunday. The times call for sacrifice of a kind that we have known little about heretofore, in order that the work of the Lord in distant lands may not be hindered.

Brother Homer Anderson writes that he has accepted a call to become pastor of the church at Pleasant Grove, Iowa. During the year past while he was preaching at the Gritter school house six persons accepted Christ, four of whom were baptized and one added to the Pleasant Grove church.

A post card from Dr. W. H. Beachler and his official Board, informs us of the revival meeting to begin in the Gratis, Ohio, church on March 19th. Brother Claud Studebaker of Pittsburgh will arrive on the next evening, March 20th, to do the preaching. We are sure they will be grateful for the prayers of the brotherhood in behalf of their meeting.

A report from the pastor of the church at Clay City, Indiana, Brother W. B. King, states that two new members were added to the church during the year and other prospects give added cause for encouragement. The work of the Christian Endeavor societies is progressing and the young people are showing their loyalty to the church in singing and other ways. The W. M. S. has its eyes set on the goal of being a Banner Society.

In a recent letter from Brother I. D. Bowman, whose address is Leedsburg, New Jersey, we learn that he will be seventy-one years old on March 7th. For more than fifty years he has been preaching the Gospel and has been used of God in leading many souls to the acceptance of Christ as their Savior. We extend congratulations to Dr. Bowman on this anniversary of his birth and pray that God may have yet much more service for him to do before he is called home.

Brother L. G. Wood, pastor of the church at Fort Scott, Kansas, says the work is moving forward in an encouraging manner and that the people are maintaining a fine spirit of courage and devotion in the midst of financial hardship. One application for baptism is reported, and the attendance at the services is growing. The church has been beautifully redecorated, the material having been furnished by an isolated family and the work donated by local craftsmen, who were members of the church.

Our correspondent from Muncie, Indiana, says the work there is making splendid progress under the leadership of Brother Delbert B. Flora, who entered upon the pastorate the first of the calendar year. Attendance and interest in the Sunday and mid-week services are increasing. The Christian Endeavorers and the W. M. S. receive special mention for their growth and activity. This is one of the very promising mission churches and its continued growth will be a source of encouragement and rejoicing on the part of those interested in national missions.

The work at Allentown, Pennsylvania, has been going forward encouragingly since the first of the year, which was begun with a helpful watch night service. Beginning with the first Sunday souls began to confess Christ as their Savior and up to the time of the report fifteen new members had been added to the church. The Christian Endeavorers are showing themselves both active and spiritually minded in the cause of Christ, going after new members with Christian zeal, but not lowering the standards to secure them. God will make such young people a power for good. The Junior Endeavorers are also active and being faithfully instructed. Brother S. E. Christiansen is the zealous pastor of this church.

A card received at the Evangelist office on March 2, from Brother E. L. Miller, in the Harrisburg Hospital, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, says, "The doctor just left my room and said in going that I would be home by the end of next week, barring any accident. Had it not been for a gripe cold contracted last week, I do believe I would have been home by the end of this week." Those who have been praying for him will rejoice to learn of this answer to their prayer as evidenced in his remarkable improvement. Continue to pray that God's healing work may go on to completion and that nothing may interfere with Brother Miller's complete recovery.

The work at Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania, has been making splendid progress the past year under the pastoral care of Brother William Gray. During the year seventy-nine new members were received into the Mount Pleasant-Jones Mills circuit and in the Mount Pleasant church alone thirty-three new members were added. During a recent meeting twenty-eight confessed Christ and a number of others made a reconsecration of themselves to Christ, making a total of fifty-eight to take a stand during the meetings. The pastor served as the evangelist. A personal workers' band called "The Seventy" has been organized to continue the evangelistic spirit and effort. The Sunday school has increased in attendance fifty per cent and the Christian Endeavor society, though not long organized, is making good progress.

Sister Sarah Keim, widow of the late Brother Josiah Keim and prominent in the national work of our women in others years and one of the organizers and charter members of the Sisters' Society of Christian Endeavor, lives in Ashland, Ohio. In a conversation with the editor the other day she informed him that she too was entitled to be a member of the Original Subscribers' Club, that there has not been a week since the Evangelist's beginning that she has not had the paper in her home, and she reads it too. Moreover she was a reader of the very first paper ever published by Brethren people, the "Brethren Visitor," edited by Henry Kurtz, then came the "Brethren Vindicator," later the "Christian Family Companion," and then "The Evangelist." All of which found their way into her father's home. She, like others of the staunch Brethren of the older generation, began to read the church literature when but a child, and on that literature and the Bible she has nourished her spiritual life through all these years. She is now in her 80th year and still keen in interest and active in the Lord's work.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother N. W. Jennings writes: Pray for Brother H. H. Wolford, who is in the St. Mary's Hospital, Modesto, California. The doctor said there was no hope of recovery from a number of strokes. But prayer changes things, and he even now appears some better. His wife attributes it largely to prayer.

Things Behind and Before

By R. R. Teeter, D. D.

A sermon preached at Ashland, Ohio, on January first, nineteen hundred thirty-three, the fortieth anniversary of the writer's ordination.

This one thing I do, forgetting the things that are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, Phil. iii 13, 14.

One of the gifts common to the young of every generation is hope. They naturally look forward to the long years before them, and think comparatively little of the space, brief as it has been, through which they have already passed. But the center of interest changes with alarming though imperceptible rapidity; and, almost before we know it, we find ourselves beginning to look more frequently and more tenderly backwards, and to think less of the possibilities that lie in that swiftly narrowing tract between us and the grave. So, the future appears to be for the young; the present for the middle aged; the past for the old.

But these words of the text, so full of hope and unflagging energy, are the words of "Paul the aged:" are written in the very last year of his life. A few months more and he will be saying, "I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course." A little while after that, he will be a martyr. He is a prisoner already. For thirty years he has been at work; his work is almost done. And yet he says, "I think nothing of all that, that is behind me: I forget it all; and here, old and worn and broken as I am, with the light of unquenchable hope in me, I press toward the mark, and forget everything that is behind, to reach out to that which is before." A grand picture! Whether it be a true principle on which he acted or not, at least it worked well in his life, and made it to the very end the noble thing that it was, "bringing forth fruit in old age, to show that the Lord was upright."

But it seems to me that these words carry with them broad practical lessons for us all, as to the way in which you and I should order the scheme of our lives, and I would put these lessons just into three advices, three counsels: Live in the future; let that bright, certain, infinite future dwarf the imperfect past; and let hopes for the future and the lessons of the past unite in strenuous concentration of effort in the present. "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind me, reaching forth to the things that are before, I press toward the mark."

The Advice of the Apostle

I. First, then, take this advice commended to us by the example here taught us: Live in the future.

Look at that image, "I press toward the mark, reaching forth unto the things that are before." Of course the reference is to a runner. And there is great emphasis and power in that word translated "reaching forth unto." The idea is that of a man stretching himself out towards something as a runner does, with his body straining forward, the hand and the eye drawn onward toward the goal. He does not think of the yards or meters that he has passed, he heeds not the nature of the ground over which he runs. The stones in the path do not stay him, nor do the flowers in the grass catch his eye. The white faces of the crowd around the course are seen only in a flash as he rushes past them, he has no time to wave a friendly greeting to admiring friends among the onlookers, as he makes a final dash toward the winning post, and the garland that hangs there as his prize for winning the race. "They do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible." Then let us, with eye and hand flung forward, "stretch out toward the things that are before," and imitate that example,—not in the fierce whirl of excitement, indeed, but in fixed regard to, and concentrated desire of, the mark and the prize.

These two objects of hope and effort seem to be distinct, though inseparably connected; and it is, perhaps, not over-interpreting a metaphor to see a separate meaning in each. The mark is reached by the runner's effort: the prize is the reward given for victory. If we are to distinguish between them, which seems probable, we may say that the former stands for "being made conformable unto Christ's death," and the latter for attaining "unto the resurrection of the dead;" or in other words, that the mark is the absolute and thorough moral likeness to our Lord, which ought to be the goal and aim of all Christian effort, while the prize is whatsoever of glory and felicity, besides, the great Judge of humanity may be pleased to bestow upon us, unworthy though we may be, who by his grace have been kept from falling.

The Promised Goal

If we are right in this distinction, the language of the text suggests important principles about the relation of these two things. There is to be a distinct recognition of moral perfection as our constant aim. Our efforts after it are allowably stimulated by the hope of the fair reward which it ensures. There are those who make much of the selfishness of having any "respect to the recompense of reward." But Paul, at any rate, gives no heed to such exaggerations, but knows enough of the difficulties of the race to be thankful that he can stir his flagging energies, by the vision of the prize. But he will insist that it is to be reached only through attaining to the mark; that is to say, if you want to be blessed, you must be good; if you want to get to heaven, you must be like Christ. Press on toward the mark, and the moment your foot crosses the line, where the winning post stands, at that moment on your brow will fall the garland allotted to the winner. "The man shall be crowned if he have striven lawfully," says the apostle. Set your efforts toward the goal, and God will give you the reward.

But passing by such considerations, let us look a little more closely at that thought of living in the future, as the true attitude for Christian men. Our highest condition in this world (and perhaps we might leave out the words, in this world) is not the attainment of perfection, but the recognition of heights above us which as yet remain unreachd.

Such recognition is the condition of all progress of all sorts. The artist that is satisfied with his representation of his ideal will cease all growth and development. A touching story has been told of a noted artist, who was standing in front of his masterpiece, sunk in sad reverie; and when bystanders asked him why he was so sad, he answered, "Because I am satisfied with it." "I have embodied," he would say, "all that I can think or feel. There it is. And because there is no discord between what I dream and what I can do, I feel that the limit of my growth is reached." Unless we see an ideal far above us, the actual will never approximate toward it. Therefore dissatisfaction and unrest, born of the contrast of these two, are the very prerogative of man, by which he is marked off from the happy contentment of the brutes beneath him, and from the happy peacefulness of the angels of God. We may venture to apply Christ's words to this subject, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests," but man "has not where to lay his head." If he could rest, he could not grow. And so from generation to generation, for the individual and for the species, the condition of our progress is a distance beckoning us, and a feeling that we have not already attained, neither are we already perfect.

And that is eminently true of the moral and spiritual progress which make the Christian conception of "growth in grace." The very characteristic of that idea is the indefinite approximation to an indefinite perfection.

The type for us is the express image of God, the complete man, Jesus Christ. To that supreme beauty our nature is capable of unlimited approach. No man knows how much of goodness, nobleness, and wisdom are possible for any man, or for himself. No bounds can be set to that progress of growth. There is no point on that happy voyage, beyond which icy cliffs and a frozen ocean forbid a passage; but before us, to the verge of our horizon of today, stretch the open waters; and when that furthest point of vision lies as far asstern as it now gleams ahead, the same boundless sapphire sea will draw our yearning desires, and bear onwards our advancing powers.

What is Perfection?

There are two ideas in that notion of "perfection." The one is the extirpation of sin, the other is the attainment to the likeness of the infinite God. Sin may be extirpated, and yet the second process may be but in its fancy. A man may have no transgression, no blot, no stain upon his nature, and yet his nature may not have expanded to all the width which is possible for it. He may have "a clean heart," and yet the elastic walls of his heart may not have widened by their pulsations to their utmost capacity. He may be pure, and in that sense perfect, and yet may have lying before him a dazzling path of light along which he may travel through all eternity, and beyond its furthest bound he may know there lie great distances, and that if he got to what now seems to be the furthest possible point, he will still have to say, "Not as though I had already attained, neither were already perfect, but I follow after."

Even the former of these two elements of perfection is not attained on earth in its fullness, and how much less the latter! Our task, then, can never be completed here, and our eyes must ever be directed to what still remains unfinished of the Divine purpose in us. Such is the law of our condition on earth. Is it confined to earth? Shall we stop growing in heaven, or is our entrance there not much rather the beginning of a new stage in that growth, which has no end?

There, too, will not our loftiest attainments be as a platform on which we may stand to reach up to what is still higher? Will not the attitude of spirit which is inseparable from all advancement and all health here, be the attitude for the other world too? Shall we not then possess all that hope by which we now are saved, with only the loss of the painful sense of incompleteness? May not a fair vision of what we shall be gleam before us, which shall excite wishes without tumult, consciousness of non-possession without pain, aspiration without the pang of yearning, certainly without fear, and work without effort? Will not the glories that are to be revealed exercise their attraction over us then? Will not this still be the description of our being—"reaching forth unto those things which are before?" I believe that thus we shall live through all the eternities that are before us, growing wiser, nobler, stronger, greater; plunging deeper into God, and being more and more filled with more and more of him. So we shall move forever as ascending spirals that rise ever higher, and draw ever closer to the throne we compass and to him that dwells alone; ever perfect, yet ever growing, for we have an inexhaustible Savior to absorb into our hearts, and we have hearts that never reach the ultimate term and bound of their indefinite possibility of receiving.

This grand future should draw our thoughts all the more to itself, because it is not only grand but certain. For this is the difference between the Christian man's hope and any other, that it is not an air-blown bubble, that it is not a dream, a fancy, a peradventure, that it has a "Verily, verily, I say unto you" to rest upon, that all the promises of God "in him are Yea and Amen." Unrest comes with anticipation, when it has only possibilities to cling to. Terror accompanies even Hope when her sunny eyes try to pierce the future by their own power alone. Ordinary experience tells us that we can be sure of the past because it is dead, and that it is folly to reckon upon the future; and that thus, between yesterday that has ceased to be anything to us, and tomorrow which we cannot see, our poor life is saddened and dwarfed to one fleeting point. But, believing on him who was and is to come, we may reverse that bitter experience. To our thankful memory the past will live. And to our instructed hopes there is a certain future on which we can build, far more glorious, far more beautiful, than anything in the past. "We know that when he shall appear we shall be like him." We have a future which is an object, not of dim expectation and trembling hope, but of knowledge.

Our word is not "it may be," but "it WILL be." We have a certainty, not a possibility or a probability, for our hope. That which is to be becomes as firm a reality as that which has been. Hope is truer than history. The future is not cloudland, but solid fruitful soil on which we can plant a firm foot.

A Habit of Life

And therefore that habit of living in the future should make us glad and confident. We should not keep the contemplation of another state of existence to make us sorrowful, nor allow the transiency of this present to shade our joys. Our hope should make us buoyant, and should keep us firm. It is an anchor of the soul. All men live by hope, even when it is fixed on the changing and uncertain things of this world. But the hopes of men, who have their hearts fixed upon God, try to grapple themselves on the cloudrack that rolls along the flank of the mountains, and our hopes pierce within that veil and lay hold on the Rock of Ages, that towers above the flying vapors. Let us then be strong, for our future is not a dim peradventure, nor a vague dream, nor a fancy of our own, nor a wish turning itself into a vision, but it is made and certified by him who is God of all the past and of all the present. It is built upon his word, and the brightest hope of all its brightness is the enjoyment of more of his presence, and the possession of more of his likeness. That hope is certain. Therefore let us live in it, and "reach forth unto the things that are before."

And that is the true spirit, depend upon it, for wider interests than our own. Live in the future for yourselves; live in the future for the world. It is right to believe in a millennium of some sort or other, when things will be different from what they are now, in better times than we have ever seen, or than the world has ever seen; because that faith is wrapped up and involved in the confidence that God loves us all, and is shaping this earth's history to his own perfect aim. And instead of looking back and lamenting, and saying, "The former days were better than now," let us for ourselves and for those we love, for the church, for the world, gaze into the future with bold, bright, hopeful eyes like the prophets of old, and see as the one figure that towers above all the dimness of the unknown generations the conquering Servant of the Lord, and as the last result of the perplexed history of the race—"the tabernacle of God is with men." For us let the Cross be the central point of the world, from which are evolved the powers that will lead to that blessed time when, after all stumblings and wanderings, our brethren with us will have reached the mark, and the purposes of God will be finished, in a redeemed humanity and a perfected world. Thus, "reach forth unto the things that are before."

After Conversion--What?

By Miles Taber

John 14:15; II Peter 3:18

(Sermon preached in the Leon, Iowa, Brethren church by the pastor, following the revival conducted by the California Quartet)

There are other commands of Jesus which we must obey, but those we have mentioned have shown us the necessity of obedience in every sphere of life. The Christian life is a life of obedience. We must now turn to another part of the text. Jesus said, "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments." Later in the same conversation he said, "He that loveth me not keepeth not my words." It is plain from these two statements that the life of obedience depends on a proper love for Christ himself, and on that alone. If we love him, we obey; if we do not love him, we do not obey. Obedience to Christ is the result of our love for Christ. This is fundamental: it is the foundation upon which the whole Christian life is built. How sure is your foundation? Do you love Christ more than anything else or anyone else in all the world? Many have failed in the Christian life because they never started right. They made a confession because they were simply sorry for their sins, or because they liked a certain church, or because they admired an evangelist or a singer, or because their emotions were moved, or because someone else wanted them to do it, but they never gave their supreme love to Jesus Christ. Yet there comes times in the Christian life when nothing but that love is strong enough to hold us steady. Nothing less than a vital union with Christ can make us strong enough to overcome the spiritual foes who tempt us. There can be no success for a Christian without this supreme, undying love for Christ. Do not try to build a Christian life on any other foundation.

There are two words for love in the Greek language in which the New Testament was written. One denotes a love founded in admiration, the other a love founded on emotion. Jesus here used the former word. Even our love for Christ must not be the kind that arises from emotion alone if it is to endure. Emotions come and go, and any love founded on them is likewise changeable. The love which is the foundation of a successful Christian life must be built upon something more stable. Jesus demands a permanent love, arising from our admiration for him. Anything less than that will not stand the stress of the Christian life.

We have seen that the successful Christian life is a life of obedience. We have gone back and found the source of that obedience in our love for Jesus Christ. Now let us look the other way and see what the result will be of a life of obedience. It is fitting that this should come to us through one who learned all about backsliding through bitter experience. For Peter drifted so far away from Jesus that he cursed and denied that he had ever known him. Although Peter returned to the Lord again, this experience of backsliding made such an impression on his mind that the last recorded words from his pen are a warning to others against this danger. And with the warning he gives the secret of the steadfast Christian life. Hear his warning: "Ye therefore, beloved, knowing these things beforehand, beware lest, being carried away with the error of the wicked, ye fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." To grow—that is the sure way to keep from sliding back. To climb—that is the way to avoid falling. Those who are forever driving forward never need to worry about drifting backward. Would you be sure of success in Christian living? Then seek to grow; let each day find you better than the one before. A growing Christian never backslides.

But how are we to grow? We cannot grow by wishing to. "Which of you?" by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?" Growth is not controlled directly by our wills. Normal growth takes place when the laws of growth are obeyed; it is the natural result of keeping these laws. Likewise growth in grace is not a matter of choosing to grow, but of keeping the laws of spiritual growth. These laws are the commandments of Jesus. And so spiritual growth is the result of keeping his commandments. If we love him, we will keep his commandments; and if we keep his commandments, we will grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord; and if we thus grow, we will never backslide. There you have the sure road to success in the Christian life, a road which anyone can travel who will.

Peter tells us that we must grow in grace, and few graces are more important than the grace of giving. Dr. Torrey says, "Success and growth in Christian life depend on few things more than upon liberal giving. A stingy Christian cannot be a growing Christian. It is wonderful how a Christian man begins to grow when he begins to give." Giving is not simply a method of meeting necessary expenses; it is the exercise of a Christian grace, and this exercise is essential to the development of a normal Christian life. Giving, like the Sabbath, was made for man, and not man for the sake of giving.

Peter also says that we must grow in the knowledge of our Lord. Paul expressed a passion for this growth when he cried, "That I may know him." We must continue to grow in our knowledge of him by fellowship with him. Special periods of private and public fellowship with Christ cannot fail to make us know him better. Those who are faithful in keeping the quiet hour and in attending prayer meeting are not the ones who usually backslide. But when we see people neglecting Bible reading and prayer, and letting other activities take them away from the church week after week, we know that they are no longer growing in the grace and knowledge of the Lord. They have begun to drift, and in many cases they continue to drift until it is impossible to reach again the shore of safety. The Christian life is a struggle, a warfare, and the battle is never won by drifters. They suffer the hardships of the battle, but they never know the joy of the victory which follows.

These rules of success which we have found in the Bible this morning are simple, but so are the rules of health simple. They are not so hard to learn, but they are sometimes hard to practice when temptation is strong. It is not knowing these things that will lead to success, but doing them. The only way to keep from backsliding is to continue to grow in grace; the only way to grow is to obey the commandments of Jesus; the only way to keep those commandments successfully is to love him supremely. Settle that question this morning, and the rest will follow easily. Do you love the Lord Jesus Christ himself more than anything else in life? Can you say sincerely this morning

"My Jesus, I love thee, I know thou art mine,"

For thee all the follies of sin I resign;

My gracious Redeemer, my Savior, art thou,

If ever I loved thee, my Jesus, 'tis now."

The "New Deal" and the National Crisis

of their gold. And many are the church members who have joined that crowd of idolators. They most of all and first of all need to repent. And all along the line there is need of a turning to God, to seek his face and to walk in his paths. There is no other way out of the chaos and darkness in which the world is gripped. It is no mere pious platitude that a few awakened souls in the business world have been telling us, that what the world needs most is not more business but more religion. It is as true as time, as inevitable as the seasons, as necessary as life. We have come to this national crisis because we have not believed it, or have forgotten it. We need to turn from grasping after material possessions to a quest of the treasures of the Spirit.

VOICE OF THE CHURCHES

BEARING ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS

In the sixth chapter of Galatians there are two sentences which have always seemed to me to contradict each other. But as always the apparent contradiction was not in the Word but in my misunderstanding of the Word. The sentences are: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ" and "For each man shall bear his own burden." The key to the solution is that two different Greek words are here translated "burden."

The former word, which represents the burdens we are to bear for one another, comes from a root meaning "to go down", then "a weight." Consequently, these burdens which we must bear for one another in order to fulfill the law of Christ are the ones which are too heavy for them to bear alone. The picture is of a man struggling to hold up a weight, which, in spite of his best efforts, is gradually "going down." To fulfill the law of Christ we must help such an one.

The second word, which refers to the burden which each one must bear, is the same which Jesus used when he said, "My burden is light." It is often used of the lading of a ship, the ship's normal load. It represents the task which Jesus gives each of us to do, and this burden is one we can bear without help, yet, one we must bear without help.

Thus we see that as Christians we have a normal burden which each of us must bear alone, but in addition to this, sometimes certain ones are found struggling under burdens which they cannot bear alone, and then it is simply fulfilling the law of Christ to help them, even to lift the burden from their shoulders if we are able.

It seems to me that this principle can find no better application than in the matter of church finance during this depression. During normal times the members of a church are able to carry the burden of an adequate budget, and this burden is "light." But as their private incomes decrease from year to year, and in many cases entirely vanish, that burden becomes a "weight" which of necessity begins to "go down" because they are no longer able to bear it. It is then that the employees of the church have the blessed privilege of exemplifying in their own lives the law of Christ by bearing a larger share of this burden, lifting as much of it from the people as they are able. This includes pastors, musicians, janitors, sextons and all others whose salaries must come out of the church budget. For one to demand, or even expect or accept, the same salary today as he received three or four years ago, is to fail to fulfill the law of Christ, and to permit the church to fall under a burden which it positively can not maintain. "Oh," it is said, "the weight is no heavier than it was three years ago." Yes, that is true, but the financial strength of the weight bearers is not half as great as it was at that time, which amounts to the same thing as doubling the weight.

More than that, one's salary might be decreased from 25% to 35% before he could truthfully be said to begin to take a share in the burden, because his living expense has been decreased that much. In some sections of the country, such as that in which the writer lives, incomes can be cut 50% from the 1929 level without working any hardship on the individual. Beyond that point, the burden-sharing begins to be felt.

In the light of our approaching Easter offering, this slashing of salaries in the United States is of even more importance. It has always seemed to me that the highest salaries paid to any servants of Christ in the church should go to those who have sacrificed the most, the foreign missionaries. Of course they do not ask for this, and they need never expect it, but they deserve it. Brethren of the ministry, let us all "bear one another's burdens" to the limit of our ability.

This plea is not in defence of those who are always wanting to cut the preacher's pay and force him to live on much less than they enjoy themselves. This is a plea for sharing burdens in an emergency. The members of the church must in turn help to bear the burden which the minister thus willingly assumes. This is the only way to triumph in these trying times, and in so doing we shall learn by experience the meaning of the law of Christ.

CHURCH POLITY

What does the New Testament teach regarding church polity? What is the practice of our churches today regarding church polity? Should we be exercised by much concern regarding church polity?

Answering these questions inversely to the order in which we have asked them we suggest relative to the last question that, it is our humble opinion we can well afford to exercise concern. Not to make it any issue of contention, neither to molest our manner of mutual accord, nor to unduly criticize our methods of procedure. For to do so would destroy the principles of any kind of good church polity. Which principles are; to be of one accord, to actually proceed, and to do it in love being led by the Holy Spirit of God. But inasmuch as there are expressions of criticism relative to our own fraternity, which not all arise, we are confident, from a spirit of morbidity, we believe the thought of church polity worthy of our concern. And this concern should not arise from any degree of alarm or mere excitement. The occasion for such is too small.

In reviewing the Census Bureau's report of 1906 on Religious Bodies, we learn that there are three types of church polity exercised among the denominations of the United States. Although this report gives them in the main, as two different types; namely, congregational and episcopal. The third type we have in mind growing out of this review is that type composed of a modification and composition from both the congregational and episcopal polity. And towards this latter type our mind is considerably inclined. We believe in a happy medium, when the happy medium creates true happiness, and where principle is not destroyed, but to which it is yielded. Certainly fifty years should allow us a lit-the liberty to express a simple view relative to our own polity. To some of us it seems the Brethren church polity is a product of two extremes. The extreme exercise of the episcopacy from which we came, and the extreme exercise of congregationalism unto which we swung. Extreme congregationalism means indefiniteness. The Lord only knows how his church over which he has made us responsible has suffered in this respect. To overcome this indefiniteness, auxiliaries and boards arise, which, if not carefully guarded by the church and the Holy Spirit, may in turn exercise an extreme episcopal polity, even greater than an episcopal church.

As to the New Testament church polity, it is my thought, without in this limited article giving any New Testament dissertation, that it teaches both the rights of the individual Christian and the duties of elders and of overseers. In its teachings we can truly see the exercise of the episcopacy guided by the Holy Spirit as expressed through the church as a whole. We can see congregationalism guided by the elders. The Council at Jerusalem had a definite decision handed down to the people that we must agree was influenced in no little degree by the churches among the Gentiles. But who of us can say the New Testament church was episcopalian in polity? Who can say it was congregational only? Let us not make the New Testament or any of God's Word say the thing that fits our notion. But let us rather, allow our notions, our opinions, yea, our convictions to be formed by what the Word says.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humbert

Study No. Twelve

Breaking the Bondage

The Negroes were once under bondage and slavery. Every day it was labor and toil, sweat and suffer. We will say that there was a paper in Washington, D. C., that if signed, would set the negroes free?" John Brown tried it, but failed; the Underground Railroad tries it, but thousands still suffered under the yoke of bondage. Who could set them free? Not a man in the south, nor in the north, nor in the west, nor in the east; not a man anywhere was able to sign that paper and set the slaves free.

The Failure of Men

So it is with the human race. They are under the bondage of sin and death. The title deed is in the Father's right hand. Who can take it and set humanity free? Medical science has tried and failed—sickness and death still take their dreadful toll; politicians have tried and failed—corruption and violence are all about; social service and humanitarians have tried and failed—slums and poverty still curse the earth.

"Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth was able to open the book, neither to look thereon" (Rev. 5:8). No man anywhere is able to take that book out of the Father's hand and set the human race free.

The Proclamation of Emancipation

No man was able to free the slaves until Abraham Lincoln, not as a mere man and not in the power of a local organization, but in all the power invested in him as President of the United States, signed the paper. Instantly the negroes in the South could have held great celebrations; they could have danced until midnight in the joy of their new freedom for the Proclamation of Emancipation was signed and liberty was assured them. However, next morning they would hear their master's command and feel the driver's lash. They must still smart under their servitude because their old masters would fight to the last ditch to keep them under subjection.

A Redeemer Found

So it is with this book. No mere man was able to take the deed and set humanity free from the smart of sin and death until Christ, not as the Son of God nor as son of David but in all of his blood bought power of redemption—Christ as a Lamb, took the book. Instantly, cries of joy reverberate about the throne as elders and seraphim sing praises to the Lamb, while from far out in the depths of space myriads of angels join in the happy chorus; wider and wider the volume rolls until every little creature adds its own little ripple and a mighty avalanche of praise breaks forth upon the hills of glory.

Why this joy? Because the Lamb has taken the book and sin's long war with God must end. But suffering of creation still goes on. The great tribulation must run its course—a "tribulation such as was not from the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be" (Matt. 24:21).

Making Redemption Effective

The paper in Washington is signed but the slaves in the South must work until their freedom is effected. In Washington, orders go out—in the south, armies march; in Washington, orders go out—in the south, battles are fought; in Washington, orders go out—in the south, buildings burn; the conflict continues until the enemy is subdued and the war is over. Then the negroes are set free.

It is thus with our redemption. Up in heaven, a seal is broken—down on earth, a judgment falls; up in heaven, a seal is broken—down on earth, another judgment falls. The conflict continues until the great battle of Armageddon is set; the last great judgment is ready to fall; Satan is to be bound and again a mighty avalanche of praise breaks forth, as the courts of heaven ring with the Hallelujah chorus (Rev. 19).

Chapter Six—The First Seal Broken

The Lamb breaks a seal; a voice thunders, "Come", and lo, a white horse gallops into view, carrying a rider with a bow. This is the antichrist, Satan's mighty prince who is to play such an important part in the closing history of this age.

In Revelation nineteen we see the true Son of God coming in judgment upon a sinful race and riding a white horse charger. Satan is a counterfeiter and sends his antichrist, the son of perdition upon a white horse, also. The rider of this horse has no slaughter weapon, but merely a bow. He comes into might, "but not by his own power" (Dan. 8:24). That is, Satan will give him the power he offered Christ in Matthew 4:9 (Rev. 13:2).

In Daniel, we have the prophecies of this coming man some of which were partially fulfilled in Antiochus Epiphanes, who was a remarkable type of the antichrist.

Where His Power Lays

This fearful creature will "cause craft to prosper" (Dan. 8:25). Certainly, in our time of unemployment, when dinner pails are empty and pay checks are small; when factories are silent and commerce is slow, certainly the surest way to ride into power is just that way—by causing craft to prosper. A man who could cause the wheels of industry to move and set the motors of idle machinery to humming—such a man would be crowned as a superman over night.

Just such a man is demanded today, and just such a man is coming soon. There is but one hindrance to his appearing, and that is the precense of the Holy Spirit in the Christian. The mystery of lawlessness was working even in Paul's time, but it has been and will be hindered until the church is removed from the earth, then the Holy Spirit (in the sense that he came on Pentecost) will be removed and lawlessness will head up in one man—that Wicked (II Thess. 2:7-8).

His Fearful Blasphemy

Daniel tells us that "he shall magnify himself in his heart" (Dan. 8:25). That is, he will sit in the temple as God and demand worship (II Thess. 2:4) under penalty of death (Rev. 13:15). Christ warned the Jews of this time and told them to flee to the mountains when they shall "see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place" (Matt. 24:15). The Jews will no doubt be sustained in a supernatural way, probably with manna from heaven like in the wilderness (Rev. 12:14).

Even though this man will be so mighty as to win the admiration of the entire world and people will feel that no one is able to make war with him (Rev. 13:4), yet Daniel tells us that "he shall be broken without hand" (Dan. 8:25). The Lord shall destroy him with the brightness of his coming (2 Thess. 2:8).

"If the Foundations Be Destroyed, What Can the Righteous Do?"--Part II

By Melvin Grove Kyle

History is made up of real events. This is not only essentially a necessity in order to be history, but in this case it is doubly so because of the outcome of that history in the Person and the events and the message in which the history culminates and is fulfilled. Important as this will at once appear, it is not infrequently overlooked. A very dear friend of mine, a devout man and a firm believer in the Word as an objective revelation, yet in conversation remarked incidentally that he did not think it mattered much whether the records in the Old Testament were a narrative of actual events or not. I allowed the remark to pass in the casual way it was made for the moment. A little later in the conversation, he spoke of our Lord's quotations from the narratives of the historical books. I asked, "Do you think he believed those stories?" He replied, "Certainly he did." Then I asked, "If the stories were not narratives of actual events, what becomes of our Lord's deity?" "Ah," said he, "I see." So it comes about that many devout believers in the reliability of revelation, are yet deceived by the smooth and confident and reiterated assertion that "It does not matter much, whether the narratives are history or merely folklore." Certainly Christ did not fulfill that which had no original actuality. We might as well venture to speak of some latter day Indian Chief fulfilling the legend of Hiawatha, or to reconstruct, as some have actually tried to do, the physical geography of the ancient world upon the legend of Atlantis. It will not do; real history out of which great facts come and great truths emerge to be "fulfilled" in any life, must consist of a narrative of actual events.

The attack upon our religion is an historical attack. Very many elements of the attack are directly against the historicity of the narratives, both of the Old Testament and the New. And all the more subtle are the attacks of criticism, that are not immediately and directly against the historicity of the narratives, yet go back to this as the hinterland of the whole controversy. When this is established all the critical opinions founded upon the untrustworthiness of the narrative find themselves suspended between heaven and earth; it is impossible to rise and fatal to fall: What, for example, becomes of the whole critical theory of the late authorship of the ceremonial system at the close of the Exile. If the narrative of the Tabernacle in the wilderness be a narrative of facts?

The philosophical attack of a century ago is a spent force and its few advocates of today do no more than parade the tawdry arguments of the olden time without even a change of clothes! As Joseph Cook characterized the efforts of one who attempted the threadbare arguments: "He put his hand in the abandoned nest of infidelity and took out a handful of empty eggshells, filled them with blasphemy and hurled them at his audience." I heard Mr. Stead, Editor of the British Review of Reviews, do exactly that in the Christian pulpit of the City Temple in London in 1928. His great audience looked down their noses in silence. How he ever got into a Christian pulpit with his stale message, I do not know. That old philosophical attack has gone by to the limbo of infidel utterances; no philosopher worthy of the name today holds its argument to be valid.

There is another attack upon our religion which is looming on the horizon of popular thinking and has already reached the zenith of the learned world. It is the psychological attack, behaviorism, the notion that there is nothing of our experience, but our behavior; there is no soul; nothing behaves, it just behaves itself. It has a self-starter. Of course, then, when the behavior stops, there will be nothing to call to account, so there can be no such thing as responsibility for human conduct. This is being widely taught in our high schools and the colleges of the land. It accounts in large measure, not for any intellectual skepticism but for the rising tide of immorality. Police chiefs relate occurrences too horrible to narrate here which are directly traceable to collegiate instruction that young men and women are not responsible for what they do! This is the dragon next to be slain.

But just now the great attacking force, deeply entrenched behind a half century of the most intense critical scholarship the world has ever known, is assailing the credibility of the Biblical narratives and asserting that, since the Bible was not written expressly as a scientific book, it does not need to be a truthful book, but only, that out of a fog of myth and legend, there may be sifted some precious grains of truth to adorn the heavenly way.

The only way to meet successfully an attack upon historicity is to get the facts in the field. Facts are final; if they substantiate the narrative, it is a narrative of actual events. And does any one now ask, Why the archaeologist? It is he who gets the facts in the field. The great and ever increasing volume of research work in Bible lands is all directed to this end, and it is this witness of the field work in Bible lands which is now to be recounted.

Some Recent Facts brought out by the Archaeologist. It is important to note that history is always recounted looking down stream, from the earliest times to the present. But archaeological history is always viewed looking up stream; the latest history is on the surface and as we go down in the debris, we go back in the history. Some of the recent witness of the field work in Bible lands will be now narrated beginning near the surface of Israelite history and going back step by step through Israelitish, and Patriarchal and Canaanite history to Babylonia and the primeval story of the town-town of Abram.

(1) It is noted (II Chronicles 1:16) that Solomon "had horses brought out of Egypt" for his chariot corps, the "heavy artillery" of that day, or the equivalent of the tanks suddenly thrust into the Great European war. The University of Chicago in its excavations at Megiddo has found the stables of Solomon, not, of course, those arches under the temple area at Jerusalem so ostentatiously shown to tourists by Jerusalem guides as Solomon's stables, but real stables at the great fortress which guarded the most important pass in the land, that leading from the Plain of Sharon to the Plain of Esdraelon. Through this pass went all the invading armies of Egypt or Assyria or Persia and through this silently swept the cavalry of Allenby in that night raid that overwhelmed the Turkish and German army. These stables really were discovered many years ago by Shoemaker in his work at Mutesselem (Megiddo), but he was not able to determine what the ruins might have been. Now, when the excavations are systematically carried on, stripping layer after layer from the area of the mound, the relation of things to each other appears and Solomon's stables are clearly shown and the pottery evidence certifies the time. Here are long rows of stalls carefully paved and properly drained. In fact, the horses seem to have been as carefully cared for as are the petted darlings of the race-course today. It is a bright light upon the power and lavish expenditure of Solomon's reign; this chariot corps, the strongest arm of the military power, had wealth lavished upon it as upon the great battle fleets of modern navies; no expense spared to make it most effective. The great king was perfecting the machinery of defense to hold his own and to extend his domain to the limits of the promise. Soon this work was to be completed and the last grip of the dead hand of Egypt upon Palestine to be loosened. When, by a diplomatic marriage, Solomon got Gezer as a dowry with his Egyptian wife. True she was a hostage from her father and a spy upon her husband to preserve the peace, and she introduced Egyptian idolatry into Jerusalem along with all the other varieties practised by Solomon's wives; but at last Solomon was in complete control in the land—at how great a price!

(2) The Egyptian influence, of which Solomon was trying to rid himself in the land by letting it into his own household! had been an inheritance from his father David. A curious and unexpected discovery was recently made near Ammon, the capital of Trans-Jordan and the ancient capital of Ammon. Some workmen were digging a ditch for a work of civil engineering, drainage or irrigation, and came unexpectedly upon a tomb. It was plainly ancient and was dated by Dr. Albright, for ten years Director of the American School of Oriental Research, now at the head of the Semitic Department of Johns Hopkins University, my colleague also in the excavations at Kirjath-sepher, one of the foremost experts in the pottery evidence of Palestine. He placed its time in the reign of David. When we note that it contained an anthropoid shaped (human shaped) sarcophagus distinctly Egyptian, it is seen at once that in the days of David the land was not yet free from Egyptian tendencies. In fact, as we shall presently see, the ugly ogre of Egyptian military power was still a threatening menace on the southwest. Thus more than three centuries after the Exodus Israel was not yet entirely escaped from the stranglehold which Egypt had in the slavery days.

(3) The extent to which this Egyptian menace affected, and was well adapted to affect, the national life of Israel to so late a period is next illustrated, as we look upward along the stream of history—illustrated in a triumphal entry graced by Saul and Jonathan. Shakespeare speaks of dinner "not where one eats, but where one is eaten"; so there are triumphal processions not where one triumphs, but where one is (Continued on page 16)

THE EFFECTS OF ALCOHOLIC DRINKS
(Lesson for March 19)

Lesson Text: Prov. 23:29-32; Isa. 28:1-4; Dan. 5:1-4; Golden Text: Prov. 23:32

The Woes of Intemperance. Prov. 23:29-35
Woe, sorrow, contention, wounds without cause, redness of eyes, strange women, reeling as one on the top of the mast of a storm-tossed ship, babbling—surely they are short of memory indeed, who cannot remember that all these things were associated with the "good old days" when John Barleycorn had a temple on every corner! Yet even Christians today seem to have forgotten, and to believe that the return of alcoholic liquors will usher in a period that is little short of the millennium. Pray that our people, and especially our law makers, may be spared from the seductions of the paid propaganda of the wealthy wets, and that our government may not redden its hands with the souls of its citizens for revenue.

TUESDAY

The Curse of Drunkenness. Isa. 28:1-8

Where there is drunkenness there is no place clean. Even the wets seem to deplore drunkenness as much as the dries; they tell us, however, that there is more drinking and more drunkenness now than ever. Their memories surely are short! In the days before prohibition I myself saw many a drunk in the gutter, too befuddled even to lift his face out of the slime; it was a many-times-a-day affair to see them staggering along the city streets. In recent years such scenes have been quite infrequent; I doubt if I have seen as many as one a month. Some of the young people drink, because the movies have taught them it is "smart," but they did even in those far-off days when I was in high school, and it was also against the law then. May God in his mercy save us from the curse of greater drunkenness!

WEDNESDAY

Intemperance and Irreverence. Dan. 5:1-4

The mind that is under the influence of alcohol knows no right or wrong, and respects not God or man. This incident is only typical of the irreverence which a drunken man will display. Our country was founded by men with deep religious convictions, and many of them, including our Brethren forbears, struggled against this unholy thing even in those days. Pray that the motto, "In God we trust," may not be merely a meaningless phrase.

THURSDAY

Resisting Temptation. Jer. 35:1-10

These men were offered "something to drink" in the house of God, by God's prophet, yet they had the courage of their convictions, and refused. Today there are many who would be fearful that they might offend, or might be considered as "prigs" or "goody-goodies." Surely our Father has taught us how to live: let us pray for grace and courage to live holy, even as he is holy, in this wicked world, and to stand squarely for the truth under all circumstances.

FRIDAY

Helping the Weak. Rom. 15:1-7

"For his good, to edification"—what a difference it would make in the world today, if men shaped their actions according to this rule! What a difference it would make if only CHRISTIANS did so! In former days many a drunkard begged his neighbors to vote dry, so that he would not be confronted with the stuff everywhere. Under the head of "helping the weak," do not forget the drunkard's wife and children, their helpless and hopeless condition, their blighted lives. Our law makers seem to have forgotten them, under the urge of the wealthy wets. Jesus would have us help the weak in every way possible.

SATURDAY

Respect for the Law. Rom. 13:1-10

The wet forces have never respected the law. Before prohibition it was illegal to sell to minors—but they did. There were bootleggers and speakeasies, and they flourished. Through the growth of gang methods in recent years, the business has been controlled by a few "strong men" who have become wealthy. But they respect NO law that interferes with personal appetite or license—or gain. Without respect for law no government can long endure. Let us not forget to pray for our nation.

SUNDAY

Walking in the Spirit. Gal. 5:16-24

Drunkenness is here listed as one of the things that will keep a man out of the kingdom of God. It also impels a man to commit most of the other sins here catalogued, and thus makes the sacrifice of Christ of no effect. Shall we who are strong make the blood of Christ of no effect for our weak brother? Let us walk in the Spirit, and strive to lead others in the way of life.

Missionary Message to the C. E.

By Grant McDonald, Missionary Superintendent

As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. (Jno. 17:18).

And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. (Mark 16:15).

And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal; that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together. (Jno. 4:36).

When we read these verses we are thinking of a lost world; of millions of unevangelized people; of our own country with millions yet unreached with this blessed Gospel; and it makes us wonder whether or not the church is not making some serious errors in her attitude toward her members and toward the world field. When we think of the wonderful progress we have made in our public school systems of "Americanizing," those who come to this country, it is wonderful. But the church has failed to perform its duty of "Christianizing" them and then carrying the message out to the regions beyond.

There are two outstanding facts that need stressing: First,—Salvation is a gift of God through faith in a crucified, risen Savior; the acceptance of Jesus Christ as Savior and confession of him as Lord is accompanied by the incoming of the Holy Spirit, who imparts eternal life and seals the believer unto the day of redemption, when he will receive his glorified body. The believer has a new life, a new relationship. He is not his own. He is bought with a price. The words of the hymn probably familiar to you are: "I am redeemed but not with silver; I am bought but not with gold, bought with a price the blood of Jesus the precious price of love untold." He belongs to Christ. "Ye are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men." I Cor. 7:23.

The second great important fact that this new relationship involves new responsibilities. We become subjects to a new ruler. Among the last words of our Master before he went to the Cross were, "I have manifested thy name unto the men that thou gavest me out of the world."

—He takes us OUT of the world and then sends us INTO the world with this great command, GO YE into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.

Here enters the great question? "By what right do you choose your Lord's last command as the one thing to be crowded out of your life?" The one calling not overcrowded is the Missionary. But many have crowded it out of their lives. I read a story that I think would be fitting to tell here at this point. This is purely a story but one with a lesson: It was at the Communion table; there was a church full of disciples, and the deacons came along with the cup. It was the rule for the man on the end to partake of it and then pass it on to the next and so on until the last one had been reached. But one man right in the middle of the pew, got hold of it and partook and held on to it. "Pass it on," said the fellow next to him who had just taken of it. "Pass it on," said the fellow who was waiting to take it next. "Pass it on," said the deacon in a low but earnest voice, but he would not do it. The pastor seeing that there was some trouble in the pew, slipped down on tip toe, and seeing how it stood, said, "Pass it on, the cup is for all; 'drink of it.' It is not intended for you alone but for all. It has come all the way down the table until it has reached you. Don't stop it; pass it along." But the man clutched it all the harder and would not pass it on. He wanted to keep it all for himself.

There is the cup of salvation Christ filled with his own hands. He gave it to his disciples to drink. Drink and pass it on. "Freely ye have received, freely give." "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Go Ye Therefore!

The apostles partook and passed it on. They of Jerusalem passed it on to Antioch; and they of Antioch passed it on to Ephesus and Corinth and Philippi; and they of Ephesus, Corinth and Philippi passed it on to Rome; and they of Rome passed it on to Britain, and they of Britain passed it on to America. Now are we going to hold to the cup or are we going to pass it on to those in Africa, China, India, South America and the isles of the sea? But there are some who are now holding to that cup and are not passing it on. They say, "It is good, blessed, Oh, most blessed," but will not pass it on." They remind me of that fellow in a shipwreck. Folks were seen clinging to every piece of wreckage that would help to keep them up. But one fellow managed to get a life boat and he got in and started rowing for the shore, shouting "Praise the Lord, I'm saved" and left the others to perish. We are just as selfish when we refuse to send or carry this Gospel story to other parts of the world. Every minute some one passes into eternity without Christ, because some one has failed to do his or her duty. Christian Endeavorers, here is your challenge! Will you meet it? The Lord said "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest.

Ellet, Ohio.

the problem of church extension. The missionary must sow by all waters. The one knows which shall prosper, this or that. The sowing may be done in a thousand ways. It may be done by the wayside preacher, by the doctor in the hospital, by a preacher in a Christian school, by a worker in some factory, by a pastor in his pulpit. The Word is the power of God unto salvation.

More Missionaries Needed in Japan

In Japan there are not enough seed-sowers. Great rural districts are still untouched. The great gospel field lies fallow. If the Japanese cannot or as yet will not sow the field here, other followers of Jesus must do the work. The great fact is that the field has not been sown. For reasons we cannot go into here the Japanese are not sowing the entire fields. We believe that Christ wants this field sown. This is the only reason for our being in Japan today. Our being here does not depend on a longing on the part of the people for intercourse with the west, or on their invitation to us. We are here to sow the seed.

We need your help if the Word is to be sown bountifully in this field. In Omuta there are one hundred thousand people. Among them we cannot count two hundred Christians. Here lies our present task. Dare we let the field lie barren till the Japanese themselves are able to sow it? Is that fair to Christ our Lord? Dare we curtail or cripple the work for the sake of any so-called efficiency plans or modern reorganization? The whole burden of mission work lies, as it always has, upon the shoulders of those who know and love the Christ, our only Lord and Savior. For his sake we ask your help in planting his Church.

We find that rapid progress is being made along all lines in the Lutheran Mission. It is good to have a part in the building of Christ's Kingdom today.

"Re-Thinking Missions" on the Field

Veteran Missionary C. K. Lippard

TELLS IN "THE LUTHERAN", WHY MISSIONARIES ARE IN JAPAN

And practically the same story would be told by any truly Christian Missionary anywhere for any church

A whole week spent here in Omuta Japan, re-thinking missions, has brought us little new light. Thirty years on the field! What length of days! What effort! What prayer that the Kingdom of Christ might come into many hearts! Has it all been in vain? Have we been on the wrong track all this time? Or have we really been doing the work of an evangelist? We ponder the whole situation. We refuse to count successes only by numbers baptized. We hesitate to believe that certain church buildings, school houses and missionary residences measure the work that has been done, or the success or failure of that work.

We believe that the greatest successes lie beyond the line of material vision. We feel that a certain part of our souls have gone into the unseen life of Japan, that part of our being has been united with the great, unseen soul of this nation, that in some way our Christian hearts have become a part of living, longing, struggling Japan, and that union can never be broken for whatever cause. A real Christian fellowship has been formed, a friendship in and through Christ, because he has been the one common friend and the Savior of us all.

Binding Ties Are Superficial

We have frequently come into contact with leaders of other religions. We have had both Buddhist and Shintoist priests in our home. We have eaten with them and rested with them, and talked with them on many subjects. We have visited them in their temples, heard their prayers, taken part in their burial services, divided our thankofferings with their widows and orphans. Our children have played in their temple grounds, slept in their temple apartments and eaten their food with great relish. Their workers have also been in our churches and classes and heard our message. Yet the only common tie we were able to find with them was the tie that binds us all together in the everyday necessities of life. As far as spiritual comprehension is concerned they cannot understand the religion of our hearts. They cannot enter into our spiritual joys, for they have no sense of a personal God or a Savior from personal sin. To understand these things, they must be born from above. There seems to us no possible way for them to learn this fact apart from God's Holy Word.

So far as we know, we have no real enemies among the Buddhists and Shintoists of Japan. We count many of them as warm friends. We rejoice in being able to read their literature. There is a thrill in watching them at worship. Sometimes we wonder if we are not being unduly influenced by their thought. Have we missed the way in not being able to win more of them for Christ?

After reading the volume, "Re-Thinking Missions," we have become more thoroughly convinced than ever before, that the place of a missionary in Japan is that of a sower. His task will not be finished until the entire field has been sown with the seed of God's Word. The one important problem is

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

MT. PLEASANT, PENNSYLVANIA

Dear Brethren: We are sending you a report of our first year's work here at Mt. Pleasant and Jones Mills, Pennsylvania. We came here from Highland, Pennsylvania, on March 1, 1932. This year has been a great year for the church here, and the church is rejoicing over the many victories of this past year. This circuit is under the Pennsylvania District Mission Board, and we are sure that you enjoy hearing of the progress of your mission work, for it is only when we hear of the splendid work of our Mission Boards, in the way which they come to the rescue of many of our promising fields, that would otherwise be neglected; that we are able to support them with our prayers and offerings in a way that is pleasing to our Lord.

The Sunday School

We first will tell you of our Sunday school work here at Mt. Pleasant. Our Sunday school at this place has increased in attendance more than fifty per cent in the last year. Our record attendance is one hundred and nine, and we are looking forward to the day when we will have a much larger school.

Christian Endeavor

Our young people have a fine Christian Endeavor which they have just started a few months back. The Christian Endeavor meetings are well attended, and the young people are very much interested in this work. It is a great blessing to see our young men and women with their Bibles leading these meetings, and offering prayer. We Brethren people can be proud of our boys and girls that are in the service of our Lord in this Christian Endeavor work.

The Seventy

Sunday morning, February 12, at the close of the service an invitation was given for personal workers. In response to this call thirty men and women came and gave their lives for this work. This newly organized group of men and women will be known as the Seventy, and will go forth to seek the lost two by two, as Jesus sent forth the seventy in Luke 10:1. Pray for this newly organized group of personal workers.

The Church

The spiritual condition of the church is good. We have just closed a revival which will be long remembered here. The members of the church say that the attendance at this meeting was the best in the last five years. Sunday afternoon services were held, the attendance ranging from one hundred to two hundred people. Twenty-eight came to Christ in this meeting. The total of those coming both for re-consecration and salvation during this year was fifty-eight. The number received into the church was thirty-three. The number coming to Christ on this circuit this year was seventy-nine. The future of this church is very promising. Pray that the BLESSING OF THE LORD will be upon us as we endeavor to serve him in this part of his harvest field.

WILLIAM GRAY, Pastor.

MT. PLEASANT, PENNSYLVANIA

Since our last revival in 1932, a continual progress has been seen in our strength and growth in the Grace of our Lord, under the leadership of our pastor, Rev. Wm. Gray. The Sunday school has increased about fifty per cent in attendance, classes are organized, and have their monthly meetings. The superintendent is Brother Jay Miller.

A revival beginning the second week in January and continuing for four weeks was a blessing to our community and church. Rev. Gray, our pastor, was in charge of the services. He gave us real Gospel messages. Large crowds attended including delegations from the different town churches. The Uniontown Brethren were with us five different nights.

Special music was rendered each night by people of the community and the church. It was a great blessing to see men and women coming to Christ in this meeting. We ask that the Brethren continue to pray for our work here, that we may be able to accomplish much for him this year.

MISS VIRGIE MILLER, Secretary.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

Perhaps a few lines from this place might be of interest to the readers of the Evangelist, therefore I will make the venture.

The work is moving along as well as could be expected, under the existing circumstances. The depression and unemployment are very acute, and nearly all of our heads of families are unemployed, or getting one or two days per week for a mere existence. Yet our people are keeping up their courage splendidly, and we are all engaged in the struggle in a very fine spirit.

All of the organizations of the church are moving forward in a normal way, with an increasing attendance and interest. We have one applicant for baptism and several other interested persons that we are hoping to reach soon. We had 79 in Sunday school last Sunday and very good attendance at the preaching services.

We wish that those who have been here in recent years, could step into our church auditorium next Sunday and see the transformation that has taken place in the last three weeks. Every part of the interior, including ceiling, walls, woodwork, pews and the floor, has been redecorated and refinished with the best material available. This was made possible through the kind liberality of Brother and Sister Clum of Parsons, Kansas, who gave the money to purchase the material, and also through the interested liberality of men here who gave their time and labor to the accomplishment of this task.

Some of these men were expert painters, and I will say they are real artists in their profession. Several other very handy helpers also remained at the task until it was finished. It is putting it very mild when I say: IT IS WONDERFULLY APPRECIATED BY ALL OF US, and even the general public of the city is rejoicing with us in this achievement.

I was on the job myself and I know whereof I speak, when I say that the men that did the work did it cheerfully as unto the Lord, and now we all rejoice together. Some of the good women are also to be mentioned, for nearly all the time the men were working, they brought and served good warm meals to the workmen, in the "upper room" at the noon hour.

The painters have estimated this as a $250.00 job, and now perhaps some one will ask: how could that little group of unemployed Brethren at Fort Scott, accomplish such a piece of work in this time of depression? Here is the answer: EVERY BIT OF THE MATERIAL AND LABOR WAS A GIFT TO THE CHURCH IN THE NAME OF THE LORD, and we feel under renewed obligation to him because it came to us in his Name.

We desire all to rejoice with us in the Lord for his manifold goodness. Let us praise his Name forever.

L. G. WOOD.

PLEASANT GROVE, IOWA

We are writing this time for Pleasant Grove, Iowa, where we have been called to serve as pastor. It is a pleasure to work for them. For a year I have preached at the Gritter school house, about four miles south of Pleasant Grove. A few weeks ago I reported for Gritter, but it seems I forgot to say that I had done the preaching, but I shall not forget it this time. Some time ago I wrote an article on "Can a Brethren Preacher Preach for a Community Church and Still be Brethren?" I never sent it in for publication. But I say he can. I preached at Gritter and gave the invitation and six accepted Christ. Then I preached a sermon on Baptism and preached Triune Immersion, and all six asked for triune immersion. Such preaching can be done, but it must be done in meekness and kindness. Only one man differed and he didn't go to church, but he prohibited two from being baptized. I baptized four; one of them went to the Pleasant Grove church and three went to the Christian church. There are times when it becomes necessary to give a reason for the faith that is in us, and to teach our doctrine, and there are many more times that we could do it, if we would.

We are glad we can now preach the doctrine much easier. This is the third time we have served the Pleasant Grove church, —once when money was plenty, once when times were hard, and now when times are getting harder. Soon Christ will come and we shall have no need of money. Let us write on our hearts, "In God we trust." We ask for the prayers of God's people that we may serve these good folks at Pleasant Grove.

H. W. ANDERSON.

MUNCIE, INDIANA

It has been some time since a letter from the Muncie church has appeared in the Evangelist, but in this case no news is good news.

The first Sunday in January, Rev. Delbert Flora began his pastorate here. Shortly after he and his wife had settled in their new home, a baby boy came to take up his residence with them. Though they have been here only a short time they have endeared themselves to the church and to the community.

Every department of work in the church is in good condition and is showing steady growth. The attendance and interest in the church services is constantly growing and the attendance at the prayer services is almost equal to that of the church services.

Everyone has been rejoicing to see the increased interest in the Christian Endeavor Society. The young people are becoming interested in the work and the attendance has almost doubled.

The W. M. S. continues to be one of the strongest and most active organizations in the church and the members are now looking forward with interest to a joint meeting with the W. M. S. at Oakville.

The church has not forgotten benevolences in the past year and the pastor is already reminding us of the Easter offering which we hope will be very large.

We are looking forward to the revival services, which are to begin in June, and are planning a visitation program in preparation for the services. Special prayer services have also been planned.

We ask for the prayers of the brotherhood for the success of these meetings.

EDNA GARRETT.

Muncie, Indiana.

CLAY CITY, INDIANA

Our last report was made at the close of our revival services in May, 1932. Since that year has passed and another is well under way, we are about due for another report from Clay City.

Since that report was made we have added two members to our number, Mr. White, by baptism; and Mr. James Wilson, a former member of the Brethren church. So our membership has increased some. We cannot ever expect to be overcrowded with members for the inhabitants here are not that multitudinous. But we are praying and working earnestly for several souls who should be members of this church, and we are trustful in our belief that God will hear our prayers and give us these souls. Concerning this matter we ask the prayers of all the faithful Brethren.

We are pleased to report that our Christian Endeavor Societies are progressing. Instead of one organization with all ages together, we now have two distinct groups that are united in effort. There is now being put forth a strong effort to hold union services once a month with the other young people's organizations of this city. The initial effort was put forth in a combined social of the Methodist and First Brethren Young People's Organization. This is to be followed with others. This will, no doubt, give great impetus toward the progress of the Young People's work in this church as well as in the other churches here. Several of the older people are doing much to help and encourage these young people forward. May the Lord bless our younger Christians, as well as those who have grown older in service.

We are hoping that in the not too far distant future we shall enjoy a Young People's Choir. Fortunately, we have a good Senior quartette, which serves us nicely and frequently. A quartette of young folk also serves us well but not so frequently as we would like them to, and our Junior trio is a real treat.

This First Brethren church happens to be a hundred miles from the nearest other Brethren church, so our contact with the "Brethren" is not so frequent as we would have it. Nevertheless to all those who live within calling (or driving) distance of our church we extend a most hearty invitation to visit us.

Furthermore we are happy to report that our regular fall communion service was held with splendid attendance and a fine spirit prevailed. The wedding of Mary Morris to Marvin Spear was solemnized in the parsonage of this church by the pastor. May God's blessing rest upon this marriage. Mrs. Spear and the Morris family are all members of our church. Besides this wedding there has taken place two others among this membership. Lucille Miller became Mrs. Paul Hines. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Hines are both members of our church here. Then Violet Rodgers became Mrs. Guss Ritchey. Mrs. Ritchey also is a member of our church, serving as pianist for us. It was our sad but blessed duty to preside over two funerals. The first was that of Mr. Zachariah Long, the father of Mrs. C. Roush and Mr. Kirk Long both the latter being members of our church. Mr. Zachariah Long was a member of the Church of the Brethren. He requested that Luke 23:28—"Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and your children," be used as his funeral text, and we were pleased to comply with this request. Then the other funeral was that of Mr. Emery Kaiser. The widow, Mrs. Kaiser, is a member of our church, while Mr. Kaiser was a member of the Lutheran church.

The W. M. S. is endeavoring to be a Banner Society this year and is putting forth great effort to reach their goals. The Society as well as the church proper, is maintained purely by giving and the Lord has richly blessed the gifts of his people. Once a month the Children's Society, Signal Lights, enjoys a missionary program. The boys and the girls of Junior and Intermediate age are taking an unusual interest in missions. Already they have given gifts to the various fields. We pray that God will use many of them as workmen in his vineyard.

One young man has given his life to be used of the Lord in definite service in the ministry and plans to attend Ahlsand College, for preparation, the Lord willing. Our prayers are that many will enter full time service for their Master.

W. B. KING, Pastor.

ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The Sunday school of the First Brethren church, Allentown, Pennsylvania, gave a splendid and impressive Christmas pageant, as well as Primary program to a full house.

The Lord has wonderfully blessed us spiritually in this new year. We started with a watch night service under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor. Five of our young men gave talks on Christian living, stressing the importance of taking Christ into our every day life. We also had prayers, a talk by the pastor and singing of hymns. The meeting was deeply spiritual and proved a good beginning for the new year. The first Sunday of the new year three came forward, two for baptism and a closer fellowship and one for the first time, also baptism. One brother was also received into membership, having been previously baptized. Since then eleven more have come forward and been baptized of which all but three have had laying on of hands. For the remainder the service will be done Sunday, March 5th. Thus we have received fifteen new members since January 1, 1933. Our Christian Endeavor is also very active and faithful. Making a rule requiring attendance to at least three meetings before being accepted into membership, and stressing winning members for Christ and the church, rather than receiving idle transients, they have nevertheless received twenty new members. Seventeen of these were publicly inducted into the society, each signing an active or associate pledge. We never had a finer or more consecrated force of young folks in the church than our Christian Endeavor officers. Last Sunday night our Junior Christian Endeavorers had charge of the program. The Junior Superintendent gave an object talk. It was wonderful to have those tiny tots sing duets and choruses. The older ones read Scripture references and answered questions. The society as a whole also sang several selections. God grant they may always be as unafraid to glorify the Master as they are now.

It means a great deal to have a conscientious, consecrated superintendent as is Iva Silberman, and also her assistant, Carol Parks. These young folks are patiently and prayerfully trying to teach our children of the Christian Endeavor the worthwhileness of the spiritual life.

Last Sunday our two new babies were consecrated by Brother Christiansen. They are Ralph Jr., son of Ralph and Ruth Randall, and Virginia Rae, daughter of Raymond and Esther Morgenstern.

Our pastor has faithfully been instructing the new converts on how to follow the Master all the way, in all things. We can truly praise God for his wonderful blessings, and pray we may be as faithful in doing our share. Respectfully,

MRS. JAMES KAMOIE,

Corresponding Secretary.

FAITH THAT WILL NOT SHRINK

The fortitude, courage and patience of the Chinese Christians should challenge our attention and restore our confidence in the work of the missionaries and their associates. Only God knows the sacrifices, sufferings and sorrows that are required of those who call themselves followers of Christ in China.

All the opposition does not seem able to scare men off. The worst they can do is to kill and non-Christians get killed just as readily. The heart seeks peace, and they find it in Christ. So the government can legislate but people still turn to Christ. The Russian Government said "As soon as we down capitalism the Church will vanish." Since this was not the natural consequence they began to persecute in their indirect way, and would not punish those who persecuted the Christians.

Let us thank God that Chinese Christians are ready to follow the path Christ trod to Calvary. This is the way we must go if we would own his cause, and become more than conquerors through him, who loved us and gave himself for us.—A. R. Bartholomew in Outlook of Missions.

Cod liver oil bread and cod liver oil milk, two new health foods, products of ten years' research at Columbia University, were recently described at a meeting of the American Institute of Chemists in New York City. The foods are made by adding to bread or milk a few drops of the vital essence of the fish oil. Milk so treated was reported as already having cured forty babies of rickets.

do? Whatever may have been the case, the new President seems to have spoken his mind without fear, and his answer to the threat of the money rulers is the weapon of "executive power" such as may be invoked in time of war.

IN THE SHADOW

SNYDER—Doranna Ebersole Snyder was born near New Enterprise, Pennsylvania, February 3, 1851, and departed this life February 16, 1933. On November 16, 1873 she was united in marriage to David R. Snyder, and for almost 60 years they two journeyed the uneven paths of life together. Brother and Sister Snyder have lived a very active life. In their early life they homesteaded in the west. She often lived alone for weeks in a little sod house, with wolves howling at night, while Brother Snyder was away at work. Their life unworldly blessed the souls of many, and enabled them to lay up a large amount of earthly goods. Now in later years they have remembered their Lord with several thousand dollars worth of property in annuities to the Foreign Missionary Society. Funeral services were held at the First Brethren church of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, conducted by her pastor, the undersigned. R. I. HUMBERD.

CALDWELL—Georgia Lou Caldwell, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Caldwell, departed this life at the tender age of 7 months and 19 days, at the home in Fort Scott, Kan., on Feb. 15th, 1933.

Funeral service was conducted by the writer, at the Cheney Chapel on Feb. 16th and the body was laid to rest in the family lot in Oak Grove cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

THORNBURG—Mrs. Oresta Thornburg, among the old settlers of Stanislaus County, passed to her reward on the last day of December, 1932. Her maiden name was Oresta Curtis, and she was born in Wirron County, Pa., Feb. 22, 1840. At the age of thirteen years she with her parents, migrated to Mitchell County, Iowa, where she received her education in the primitive log school house. In 1870 she came with her husband to Stanislaus County. She leaves one brother—J. E. Curtis; two sons—L. E. Thornburg and W. L. Thornburg; nine grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild.

Sister Thornburg was a member of the Turlock Brethren church. She had been afflicted for several years. It was my privilege to have fellowship with her in her home just a few days before she went home to be with Jesus.

N. W. JENNINGS.

SEILER—Helen Ione Seiler, youngest in the family of Geo. and Eva Seiler of Lanark, took her sudden departure from among us on January 23, at the age of 11 years and 23 days. Helen was one of those affectionate, kind-hearted sympathetic spirits that made friends with all alike. She was a member of the First Brethren church, having been baptized by her pastor a little over a year past. She was faithful attendant at the Bible school, and very active in the work of her church. Her home at the time of her death. We cannot understand why a youth so full of life and hope and promise should be taken, but we humbly submit to the Father's will who makes no mistakes in the care of his children. This beautiful life that has been permitted to bud on earth we believe will blossom and bloom in the home of the redeemed throughout eternity. Funeral services were conducted by her pastor in the First Brethren church on Jan. 25th in the presence of an unusually large concourse of sympathizing friends. C. C. GRISSO.

BALDWIN—Anna Elizabeth Baldwin, youngest of the Peter Horner family, died at her home in Lanark on Jan. 25, being 50 years of age. Sister Baldwin had been a sufferer for several years and death was a relief. She was patient throughout the years of suffering and faced death with the courage and hope that characterizes the child of God. Twice during her sickness her pastor was called to anoint her in the name of her Lord. The home of God was precious to her and her place was seldom vacant until hindered by sickness. She had been a Christian from childhood, having united with the Church of the Brethren early in life and transferring to the Brethren church with her husband in 1916. Funeral services conducted by her pastor, the undersigned, in the First Brethren church, January 27, 1933. C. C. GRISSO.

PUTERBAUGH—Amanda Puterbaugh, a member of the Henry Puterbaugh family, born near Lanark, Illinois, March 24, 1853, and passed on to be with her Lord from the home of her sister, Mrs. Emma Watkins at Plymouth, Ind., on Feb. 14th at the age of 79 years, 10 months and 10 days.

Sister Puterbaugh has lived in and near Lanark, the greater part of her life, and was a faithful member of the First Brethren church here for more than 40 years, being baptized by Elder Z. T. Livengood. She loved her church and all of its interests. The Lord's table was especially precious to her. She loved to read the Word and spent much time with it. Among its most precious themes to her was the return of the Lord, for whose coming she longed. Her hearing had been impaired from childhood, and though she could not hear the Word preached, yet she found a delight in God's house and in the association of God's people. Two years ago the pastor, assisted by Elder Geo. Cone, anointed her for healing, from which service she received a great blessing. In her going she leaves behind friends and relatives who alike find joy and comfort in all the promises of God's Word concerning his believing children.

Funeral services were conducted by her pastor from the First Brethren church in Lanark, on Lord's Day afternoon, Feb. 6, 1933. Elder Z. T. Livengood assisting in the service. C. C. GRISSE.

triumphed over. So it was in the triumphal entry graced by Saul and Jonathan. They had perished at the battle of Gilboa (1 Samuel 31). The Philistines found their dead bodies, cut off Saul's head to carry to Bethshean in triumph and placed their trophies in the temple of Ashtaroth in that Philistine city. In fact the Philistines held this great fortress till, in the reign of David, he wrested its control from them and that finally. Within the last years the excavations by the University of Pennsylvania at Bethshean have not only confirmed the narrative of the Bible, but have set a background as startling as helpful to the story of Israel of that age. The excavators going down in their work from the Roman, Greek, Christian, and Israelite remains in the ruins at this place, came at last to the level of the days of Saul as shown unmistakably by the pottery, the determining criterion in every such case now. At that level they found the temple of Ashtaroth; not an insignificant shrine, but a great temple, sixty feet wide and ninety feet long. Cult objects identified it unmistakably. The trophies of Saul and Jonathan were not found—not yet—who knows what may yet turn up, though probably they were carried away long ago.

In addition to the identification of the temple of Ashtaroth, and of far greater significance, was the discovery that the Philistines, who had so often troubled the Israelites and still were able to hold the great fortress at the junction of Esdraelon and the Jordan, were but the cat's paw for the Egyptian monkey. Behind the troublesome Philistines,—always had been behind them in the troubled centuries since the Exodus,—was the mighty power of Egypt. At Bethshean, not only abundant Egyptian relics attested the presence of Egyptians, but great inscribed tablets announced the presence and power of the suzerain nation in the persons of Seti and his son Rameses the Great. When David finally drove out the Philistines from Bethshean, he pushed back the Egyptian frontier in Palestine to the lower part of the Plain of Sharon and, at last, by diplomacy and a domestic tragedy, Solomon finally persuaded the Hawk of Egypt to return to the palm-groves of the Nile.

(4) Jabin, king of Hazor (the great fortress on the north "on its mound"), was the greatest of all the leaders of Canaan arrayed against Joshua (Joshua 11). He gathered a great host to meet the invading army of Joshua and awaited them at the waters of Merom. There Jabin was utterly routed; his mighty chariot corps was made helpless by houghing the horses, more effective than spiking a cannon. Then Joshua burned that city and utterly destroyed it, the only place so utterly destroyed in his great northern campaign of the Conquest. Until very recently the site of Hazor was unknown, until in 1928 Dr. Garstang identified it a little west of the waters of Merom in the highlands of Naphtali. The pottery showed the early history of the place down to the Late Bronze Age and the beginning of the Early Iron Age. There the pottery absolutely ceased. From that time on it was not occupied at all. This date, the beginning of the Early Iron Age, is exactly the time of the Conquest. (Bibliotheca Sacra, July, 1926; October, 1928).

Business Manager's Corner

Old Subscribers

The campaign we have carried on, during the winter just drawing to a close, for new subscriptions to The Brethren Evangelist has stirred up the memories of a number of the older readers of the paper to the extent that we have heard from a goodly number of our people who have been readers of the paper from forty to fifty years or more.

John S. Wisler—Age 91 years

Just last week we received a card from an aged brother in Pennsylvania who said he is not able to pay his subscription for the paper right now, but if we will continue sending the paper he will pay for it in a couple of months. He further states he has been a subscriber to the Evangelist for more than fifty years and he would regret to have his subscription discontinued.

We most certainly will continue sending him his Evangelist until he is able to get the price of a subscription. Appreciative readers like this "father in Israel" have our sympathy, and we are willing to do anything within reason to help them in their desire to not miss any of the papers.

California Heard From

Not to be outdone by any of his younger brethren from away back east, Brother John S. Wisler, (a parishioner and good friend of the Business Manager while serving as pastor of the Nappanee, Indiana, Brethren church), now a resident of California who is past 91 years of age sends us a picture which was taken on his 90th birthday, and says he has not missed a number of The Evangelist since he joined the church in 1896. Brother John is one of the faithful "died in the wool" brethren, and the Brethren church would be stronger today if we had more members who have been in the past and who are today as loyal to the Brethren cause as he and others of his generation are.

A Kindly Request

This is moving time for a great many people, although it seems to be moving time for some of our subscribers every week. At least there comes to our office notices of "change of address" almost every day; but it would help us to keep our mailing list up to date and save us quite a bit of expense, if our subscribers would notify us in advance of a contemplated change in address. When a subscriber fails to notify us the home post office sends us a card of notification, and we have to pay two cents postage on each one that comes to us. This is one of the more recent changes in postal rules that were made to bring in more revenue for Uncle Sam, so, if our subscribers will just notify us of their change in advance it will help us in two ways.

How About the Annuals

A great many pastors have not yet made remittance for the copies of the Brethren Annual that were sent to them. It would be well for them to do this before it slips from their minds entirely. Furthermore it will save us the expense and time necessary to send them personal notices.

Just a Word More

Since the banking facilities of the country are rather uncertain at this time we would appreciate it very much if our customers would make all remittances in Post Office Money Orders, or in cash. It is reasonably safe to enclose two dollars in currency, the present price of a year's subscription to the Evangelist, in an envelope and mail it to us. We have never heard of such a remittance to us being lost in the mails. We have not been able to realize on all the checks that have come to us, and that is the reason we make this request; and we need all the collections we can make just at this pressing time.

R. R. TEEETER, Business Manager.

The last census has revealed the interesting fact that, excluding farmhouses, four out of every five homes in the United States are now wired for electricity. Cities of over 10,000 have a percentage of 91.68, towns under 10,000 a percentage of 67.43, while only 12.32 per cent of the farmhouses are wired. The New England States rate highest among the various sections of the country with 91.66 per cent of their homes wired. The Middle Atlantic States run a close second with 88.41 per cent.

pealed to the western powers for help against Japan, and as one correspondent puts it, she got "little besides a few kind words and a glass of water." Japan offers powers. This may mean the beginning of a world race conflict.

The "kings of the East" are to be among those who will assemble at last in the place called Armageddon. (Rev. 16:12-16).

THE Way War Begins

For the present, actual war is going on between Japan and China, although there has been no formal declaration of war. If Japan, out of the League of Nations, declares war against China, she will probably immediately declare a blockade. And then if our merchant ships try to crash the blockade, there will be trouble. We have gotten into more than one war by insisting on the right of our ships to travel as neutrals through blockaded zones. We got into the World War thus. International trade has been floated on oceans of blood. Read Revelations 18.

When our ships began to have trouble traveling the high seas during the blockades of the World War, William Jennings Bryan proposed to stop all shipping from this country to Europe. He was laughed to scorn. We were making too much money selling war munitions and supplies to the fighting nations. The result was inevitable: it was only a matter of time until we were in the war fighting, not to make the world safe for Democracy, but for our right to make money through international trade.

Bryan was right. It would have been cheaper for the United States to have bought all the war supplies from our merchants and kept our ships at home. We hope that the lesson may not be forgotten if open war breaks out in the Orient.

ME No Care"

Giuseppe Zangara, misguided fanatic who tried to kill President Roosevelt and succeeded in wounding several people, was first sentenced to 80 years at hard labor in Florida road camps. As the judge pronounced sentence, Zangara shouted, "Don't be stingy. Give me 100 years."

Later, when Mayor Cermak of Chicago finally died of his wounds, Zangara standing in the shadow of the electric chair cried, "ME NO CARE."

It is a tragic matter to find a man so determined to kill someone, so completely disinterested in how many were injured. But the deepest tragedy is to find a man so utterly indifferent as to his own fate. More than one murderer has been saved by the Grace of God. But there is no power in heaven or on earth that can save a man who has no interest in his own present or ultimate destiny.

AMID Scenes of Wild Excitement

While I was in Washington the House of Representatives passed a Resolution which in part reads as follows: "The Eighteenth Article of Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed." According to newspaper reports, the passage of the Resolution was accompanied with "scenes of wild excitement."

If a sufficient number of States ratify this repeal resolution, there will be more "scenes of wild excitement." In these days, it would seem, if you wish to retain your respect for government, you should keep away from Congress and be careful what you read in the newspapers.

SHADES of Bryan!

In reporting the passage of the Repeal Resolution, a picture appeared in one newspaper showing the Speaker, John Garner, and Ruth Bryan Owen, representative from Florida, conversing with smiles on their faces. The caption over the picture was "REPEALISTS' REJOICE."

The lady, most readers will recall, is the daughter of the late William Jennings Bryan. It is said that she is personally a dry, but that because of the apparent change of sentiment in the country she decided to become a wet for political purposes.

Her father was made of different stuff. He was no novice at the game of politics, but he also had some convictions. And when there was a conflict between the two, he did not hesitate to follow the latter regardless of consequences. When he was Secretary of State, a position awarded him for putting Wilson into the Presidential chair, he saw clearly that Wilson's policy was steering the nation into the whirlpool of war. To fall in line meant the abandonment of his own peace convictions. To oppose meant resignation and political oblivion. Without hesitation he chose the latter. We also know, without guessing, what he would have done had he stood in his daughter's place more recently.

Courage is not always inheritable.

AT the Capital City

The week of February 19 to 26 was spent in Washington, D. C., conducting a Bible Conference at the Wallace Memorial United Presbyterian church. The pastor, Dr. Hawthorne, was a classmate of mine in Xenia Seminary. It was a great pleasure to renew the fellowship of past days, and to find that after sixteen years we are closer than ever in our common faith as to the great fundamentals of the Word. This church and pastor are bearing a fine testimony in the city of Washington. There is a splendid fellowship between this church and our own

THE New Heaven and Earth

President Roosevelt did not forget God in the midst of the momentous circumstances attending his inauguration. Just before the inauguration ceremonies he went as a private citizen to his church to spend a few moments in meditation and prayer. The final paragraph of his speech was a prayer: "In this dedication of a nation we humbly ask the blessing of God. May he protect each and every one of us. MAY HE GUIDE ME IN THE DAYS TO COME."

Whatever we may think of his political views, the President deserves praise for his recognition of God and man's insufficiency without his help. The final petition, "May he guide me," was especially impressive, a personal prayer which surely could not have been a mere formal gesture. We could have wished, however, that somewhere the Name of Jesus might have been heard. Apart from him there can be no approach to the true God. Doubtless, the President knows this truth, for his membership is in a church whose creed affirms it.

On the day following the inauguration a special service was held at Washington Cathedral for the purpose of commemorating the entrance of Roosevelt into the Presidential office. The New Testament lesson was read from Revelation 21:1-7, beginning, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth." It was a singularly inappropriate passage, referring not to the work of man but of God. The responsibility for the choice of Scripture, of course rests with the preachers, not with Mr. Roosevelt. Preachers are generally more optimistic than statesmen, especially the liberal kind.

No matter how optimistic we may be about the ability of the new President, there will be neither new heaven nor earth under his administration. Even if Mr. Roosevelt could solve all our financial and agricultural and political problems, HE CANNOT ABOLISH DEATH. And as long as Death sits with us at the feast of life, its splendor will be mocked by pain and tears. In that new heaven and earth ushered in by the work of Christ there shall be "no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither ... any more pain."

A better passage to have read at the commemoration service is Romans 13:1-7. This text lays down the duties, authority and responsibilities of human rulers IN THE PRESENT AGE.

THE Danger in the East

Difficult as the problems are which confront the new President in domestic affairs, he must face others even more serious in foreign affairs. Japan has virtually severed her connections with the League of Nations; and only a few days ago there assembled in Tokio some two hundred leaders for the purpose of organizing the "Pan-Asiatic Association." This is to be the foundation of an Asiatic league of nations, and Japan expects to have the role of guiding power. Already overtures have been made to the Chinese to come in. China ap-

Was and Is Jesus God?

This is not a mere academic question raised in order to get a start into a discussion that one wishes an excuse for launching. It is taken over bodily from a discussion that was waged with some heat in a Sunday school. Nor was the question raised by a minister, but by a layman Sunday school teacher. There had been no question in the minister's teaching on this point; he taught very positively that Jesus was and is God. There have been ministers in some pulpits who have questioned the deity of Christ, and so have scattered the seeds of doubt among his people. But that is not always the source of such unsound views, as it was not in this case. Laymen sometimes originate their own doubts and false notions. While we can be sympathetic with honest doubters, yet when their doubts call in question such vital Christian doctrines as the deity of our Lord, they need correction and their faith strengthened. And until a person is able to accept Jesus as divine Lord as well as incarnate Friend and Counsellor, he has no right to be a teacher of the Gospel in any capacity.

If one professes not to believe the Bible, it is useless to quote the Bible to prove a point, but to him who presumes to have faith in that blessed Book, its clear statements ought to be sufficient to correct a dispute and to determine one's views. Consequently we present the following passages as faithfully representing the undoubted Scriptural teaching of the deity of Christ. And these are only a portion of the references that might be cited.

First, consider that the Old Testament prophets predicted that God would visit the earth in the person of the Messiah. Isaiah (7:14) says: "Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a Son, and shall call his name Immanuel," which means "God is with us." Again he writes: "For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace" (Isa. 9:6). Hear the word of another: "Behold the days shall come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, . . . and this is his name whereby he shall be called, 'the Lord our righteousness'" (Jer. 23: 5, 6). The prophet Daniel (9:25) refers to the coming one as "the Messiah the Prince." Micah (5:2) sees the coming ruler of Israel to be one "whose goings forth have been of old, from everlasting." Only God is "from everlasting." To Malachi the Christ is revealed as "the messenger of the covenant" and as the "Sun of righteousness", who shall "arise with healing in his wings" (Mal. 3:1; 4:2). Surely those terms indicate characteristics of deity.

Second, recall that witness was borne direct from heaven that Jesus was God, the fulfillment of prophecy. An angel appeared unto Joseph informing him of the Holy Spirit's conception of Jesus in a virgin, and that he was to be "God with us" and the one to "save his people from their sins" (Matt. 1:20-23). To Mary also did the heavenly messenger appear announcing the high honor that was to be hers, of becoming the virgin mother of her Lord, who was to be called "the Son of God" (Luke 1:26-35). Again, "the angel of the Lord" appeared unto the shepherds, saying, "I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day a Savior, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:9-11). And on two different occasions the voice of the Father was heard from heaven owning Jesus as his Son. When Jesus had been baptized we read that "the heavens were opened unto him," that "the Spirit of God" descended upon him, and that "a voice from heaven" said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. 3:16, 17; Mark 1:11; Luke 3:22). When Jesus was transfigured on the mountain in the presence of Peter, James and John, they heard "a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him" (Matt. 17:5; Mark 9:7; Luke 9:35). Nothing could be more marvelously convincing than the very word of the Father spoken from heaven that Jesus was God.

Third, Jesus himself claimed to be God, to be come down from heaven, to be equal with the Father, and clothed with all authority. He said to Nicodemus "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven" (John 3:13). On another occasion he said, "I and my Father are one." The Jews then were about to stone him, when Jesus asked them for which of the good works he had done were they going to stone him. They replied, "For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy; and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God." Jesus did not deny the charge of claiming to be God, but rather declared it the more strongly, saying that not only his words but his works proved that in very truth he was "the Son of God." Hear his challenging statement: "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works; that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him" (John 10:30, 33, 37, 38). What could be a more definite claim to deity than that? He claims deity when he says "All men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father" (John 5:23). Again he makes the claim when he exercised and declared his right to forgive sins. The Scribes accused him of blasphemy, saying, "Who can forgive sins but God only?" And they were right in their reasoning that only God could forgive sins, but were wrong in assuming that God was not there. Jesus lays claim to deity also when he says he will hear and answer prayer: "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it" (John 14:14). He lays claim to deity when he says, "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:54), and again when he says, "I am the resurrection and the life" (John 11:25). He lays claim to deity when he says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me" (John 14:6), and again when he says, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life" (John 3:36). And yet again he lays claim to deity (and many more instances might be mentioned) when he says, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and proceeds to commission the church to the incomparable task of world evangelization, promising, "I am with you always even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:18-20). And when Jesus claims deity we must recognize that claim or throw the gospel plan overboard. If he is not God, he is not our Savior.

A fourth kind of witnessing that is both interesting and convincing is that offered by the disciples of our Lord. Space allows for but a few samples. Peter's testimony is important, when he said, "Thou hast the words of eternal life. And we believe and are sure that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (John 5:68, 69). The words of Thomas are convincing, for he himself was a doubter: "My Lord and my God" (John 20:28). The Apostle Paul has most positive testimony: "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law" (Gal. 4:4, 5). He speaks of Christ as "being in the form of God," and "thought it not robbery to be equal with God," and declares the "every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. 6:11). Again with boldness and without equivocation, he asserts that "in him (Christ) dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. 2:9). Even Christ's enemies, standing by the cross were made to say, "Truly this was the Son of God" (Matt. 27:54). In the presence of such testimony, how can any friend of the truth doubt? As the "beloved apostle" says, "But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name" (John 20:31).

President Roosevelt's Beer Message

President Roosevelt had made an unusually brilliant beginning of his administration. The vast majority of the American people were with him in his expeditious and effective handling of the bank problem. Then in his economy proposal he has been given very strong popular support outside a few interested groups. The best citizens of the country were boosting for him as they have not boosted any president since the days of Wilson's popularity. And now, in the midst of the nation's financial disaster, when many men, women and children are without food and clothing, he sends Congress a message recommending "the passage of legislation for the immediate modification of the Volstead act in order to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer, and other beverages of such alcoholic content as is permissible under the constitution; and to provide through such manufacture and sale, by substantial taxes, a proper and much needed revenue for the government." Then he concludes: "I deem action at this time to be of the highest importance."

That certainly is a disappointment to the church people of our land. Of course we were expecting some such move on his part, in view of his campaign pledges and party platform, a little later, but surely we had a right to expect that a flood of beer would not be turned loose so suddenly upon the rank and file of our citizenry when we are suffering the most acute financial distress in the history of our nation. And he calls for no guard against the return of the old saloon, which we were given to understand in pre-election days would not be permitted. And it is all for the sake of gaining a few dollars for the public treasury.

No one doubts the importance of putting forth every proper effort to balance the budget, and we believe the best people of the land would be willing to make any sacrifice within reason and give the utmost loyalty to our government in every move that does not contravene righteousness and sobriety. But conscience must certainly prevent vast numbers of our people from following the president's leadership and giving him their support in this instance. The liquor traffic is no right and proper means of national support. No nation can afford to recruit its depleted treasury by taxing the human weaknesses of its people. The United States cannot drink itself back to prosperity, but if any one thinks it possible, how can he justify the selling of the nation's soul in such an attempt? Every nickel spent for beer will be a nickel less for bread on the part of multitudes of beer patrons, and in addition will put such a price of cheapness on the moral welfare and physical safety of our people as to make all past records of national dissipation look like prosperity and security. May God give our people new courage to fight the iniquitous liquor traffic that is about to be reinstated.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother Samuel H. Buzard writes that the Brethren at Vandergrift, Pennsylvania, are persevering in the word of the Lord in the face of difficulties. A baptismal service soon to be held indicates that the Lord is adding unto the church some that are being saved.

Brother W. R. Deeter of Carleton, Nebraska, writes that the union meeting with Brother A. R. Staley as the evangelist is progressing nicely, that the people are coming in goodly numbers to hear the good sermons, and that thirteen confessions have already been received, and others are coming by letter.

Our correspondent from Dallas Center, Iowa, writes that five have been added to the church at that place since last report, and that two more are expected soon. The Sunday school has been steadily increasing in attendance during the past four years, having risen from 87 to 118. The various departments are doing good work. The pastor, Brother A. R. Staley, is appreciated for his spiritual leadership and faithful preaching of the word.

Brother W. S. Baker, pastor of the church at Lydia, Maryland, is persevering in the work of the Lord at that place. The Sunday school is said to have increased in attendance during the last three years from fifteen to twenty per cent. A splendid Christian Endeavor society has been organized with a charter membership of forty-six young people. The church has been participating in some union revival services, with the pastors of the churches taking turns in doing the preaching. Brother Baker has been retained by the Lydia church as pastor for the sixth year of service.

Dean J. Allen Miller invites correspondence on the part of worthy and capable young men who may desire to prepare for the ministry. Young people who are to enter the ministry or missionary work of the Brethren church, ought, if at all possible, secure their education at Ashland College and Seminary. There is no other place quite so good to make Brethren preachers as in our own Seminary.

Brother Paul R. Bauman, student pastor of the Sterling, Ohio, church, reports that attendance and interest are increasing and that the outlook has greatly brightened since the first of the year. He preaches there every Sunday morning, and one Sunday evening a month a special service is conducted, which is attracting the attention of the people of the community. The last Sunday evening service consisted of a program by the "California Four", a quartet of singers and preachers, composed of Ernest Pine, Paul Bauman, Donald Carter and Edward Colburn. The house was packed, we are told, and the people are looking forward eagerly to the next special Sunday evening service, when on March 19th, Dr. K. M. Monroe will give a stereopticon lecture on the Holy Land.

Our good Sister Mary Deffenbaugh, who is known to many of the middle-aged and older ministers, and who in earlier years was one of the standbys of Brethren faith in the neighborhood of Glenford, Ohio, writes this week, stating that she has been a reader of Brethren publications ever since their beginning, and still reads and appreciates The Evangelist. Sister Deffenbaugh is 87 years of age and resides in Ashland with her daughter, Sister Ethel Tinkey. Though health conditions do not permit her to attend church, she is still true to the faith and enjoys reading her Bible and her church paper. We congratulate her on her loyalty and appreciate her good spirit and words. We are wondering how many others are eligible to membership in the Original Subscribers' Club.

Evangelist readers will be anxious to learn about the safety of our Brethren in Long Beach, California, which was laid waste by the recent earthquake. A telegram received at Ashland by Brother Paul Bauman from his father, Dr. L. S. Bauman, reads in part as follows: "Long Beach looks vast ruin. Mary Seelig only member church killed; none seriously injured that we know. . . Church withstood shock best of any in city. Few outside brick, loose plastering, basement and first story cracked. Chimney down. Brethren exceedingly fortunate. All families Ashland students safe." We have no information regarding the Second Church of Long Beach. Sorrow, suffering, death and disaster are the lot of many in that stricken city and we sorrow and sympathize with all who were thus unfortunate, but thank God that the casualty list and damage of the First Brethren church are so small.

Another very wonderful evangelistic campaign is reported from Masontown, Pennsylvania, where Brother Floyd Sibert is pastor, and who served as his own evangelist, but was assisted by Brother Thomas Presnell as song leader and Bible lecturer. These two young preachers were college students together, had training on the same Gospel Team, and now proved a most congenial and effective team in proclaiming the Word and winning souls for the Lord. They were granted the privilege of seeing 122 souls make the good confession, ninety-eight of which have been baptized and received into the church. Truly the convicting power of the Spirit was with them and the Lord honored his Word. And like true servants, the honor is given to God for the great victory secured. The success of this meeting is the more remarkable when it is recalled that last year God gave them 100 souls in their revival, and during the year fourteen more were added to the church. The meeting closed with a communion service so largely attended that it was difficult to find table space for all. One of the unusual regular features of this work is the Christian Endeavor society with an average attendance of 150; another is the branch Sunday school work being done; and another, the largely attended Bible classes conducted weekly, one taught by the pastor and the other by Mrs. Sibert. We rejoice in a peculiar way in God's blessing upon this field, which is the scene of our first pastorate, and the home of some of God's choicest people.

Every Man a Debtor

By Louis S. Bauman, D.D., Treasurer Foreign Missionary Society

A debt is something every honest man will pay if it is within the limit of his ability. A Christian is an honest man. Therefore, a Christian will pay his debts if it is within his ability to do so. You cannot reconcile Christian character with the growing habit these days of ignoring to pay that which we honestly owe. It is not to the credit of Daniel Webster that he permitted other people to pay his debts.

Men sometimes boast that they are free from debt. The boast is not good. No man is free from debt. He may not owe any man dollars and cents because of having borrowed them, or because of having received directly material value from them. He may boast that he keeps the commandment: "Owe no man anything." But in the sense of moral and spiritual obligations, no man is ever free from debt. And, moral and spiritual obligations are as much debts as pecuniary obligations. Dives may have justified his lack of interest in the beggar on his doorstep on the ground that he did not owe him anything. However, as a matter of fact, Dives was morally and spiritually deeply in debt to the beggar; and, the fact that he ignored this debt sent him hellward.

Moral and spiritual obligations rest upon us not because of what other men have done for us, but because of that which God has done for us. "For, in him we live and move and have our being" (Acts 17:28). Saying nothing about the life he gave us in the first place, the earth (that "is the Lord's") and the sunshine and the rain upon it which sustain that life—ALL his own. But above all this, he gave his only begotten Son for us, so that, though we have sinned, we can escape the terrible penalty because of his atonement on the cross. Thereby we have our hope of eternal life. Consider this, and remember that we have given back to God little or nothing in return for all his exceeding great gifts to us.

We once heard of a man who lost his life in saving the life of a comrade. And, as his life, given for another, was slowly ebbing away, the comrade asked frantically: "O what is there that I can do for you in return for what you have done for me?" By that question, he acknowledged his great debt. The dying man replied: "Brother, you can do nothing for me personally. But somewhere in this great world, I am leaving a poor crippled brother whom I greatly love. If ever you have a chance, do him a good turn." Now, in one sense it can be said that that man, for whom another died, owed the crippled man nothing. What had he ever received from the cripple? Nothing! Yet, who will say that he was not tremendously in debt to him? His debt was just as real as though he owed him ten thousand dollars borrowed directly from him.

Our Lord Jesus Christ hung on a cross and, in unspeakable agony, redeemed us from sin, paid the penalty, and through his death we have hope of life eternal. What can we do for him? Nothing! But listen! In the shadow of the cross, we hear him say: "I have sheep that are not of this fold. Them also do I love. Them also must I bring. Go seek for those sheep for me!" "Freely ye have received, freely give!"

In the light of God's gifts to us and his commands upon us, let no man say that he is out of debt. Even though he should give all his goods to feed the poor and his body to be burned, yet he could only say to God: "I am an indebted servant!" The realization of such indebtedness was the incentive which drove into action the greatest missionary of all time: "I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also" (Rom. 1:14, 15).

Men talk of being stewards of God. They think of the material wealth which God may have placed in their hands, and then they think of tithes. We are stewards of God in things material. But, that which makes us stewards is not so much our material wealth as our spiritual wealth. It is not gold in our hands, given of God, that needs to worry us. It is the gospel that God has placed in our hands that should make us tremble under the weight of tremendous responsibility. Gold only matters as it becomes an instrument for sending forth the gospel. I possess the gospel—the good news of eternal life. Therefore, I am the trustee of eternal life that belongs to millions who do not know of the will of God, written in the blood of the cross, testified by his Son, and sealed by the Spirit of God. And this is the good news: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. . . . For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved" (Rom. 10:9, 12, 13). And, a lost world awaits this good news!

Now, this good news is placed in our hands. We are trustees of the Gospel of Christ. "To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; AND HATH COMMITTED UNTO US THE WORD OF RECONCILIATION. Now, then, we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God" (II Cor. 5:19, 20). Not of the ordained preachers alone, not of the missionaries, not of any select group is this written. Every "new creature" (I Cor. 5:17) is an "ambassador"—a trustee of the gospel. No Christian can shift his responsibility to another. No man can say, "I must be excused in this matter!" No wonder the great apostle cried out: "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel!"

Remember, sending the good news of the salvation of God out to a world of lost men is not a matter of charity. It is a matter of debt,—a matter of tremendous obligation. If we have the gospel of salvation, and then let these millions go into eternity without their once having had the opportunity to "call upon the name of the Lord",—if we stand responsible for their eternal loss—their awful, appalling loss—if we let them go without having done "as much as in me is", how shall we ourselves stand before God in the last great day of reckoning? God help us to think it over! God help us also to cry, "Woe is me if I preach not this gospel!"

Yes, remember that the sending out of the gospel is not a matter of charity. Charity claims only a little of your spare cash. Debt, if you are an honest man, demands more than just your spare cash. It comes in ahead of all other things, even ahead of the very "necessities of life"! God, if it be thy will, let me starve; but, O do not let me enter eternity without a discharge of my honest debts!

Medical students, we are told, are graduated under a solemn promise to make known any medical discovery they may make in life—make it known for the well-being of afflicted humanity. It is a moral obligation—no more than that. And yet what a tremendous obligation! Now, the distinguished scientist, Lord Kelvin, was once approached by a pompous would-be scientist, who asked him which one of his discoveries he considered to be the most valuable. The great Lord Kelvin, a peer of peers in the scientific world, bared his head, and humbly replied: "The most valuable of the discoveries I have ever made was when I discovered my Savior in Christ Jesus!" Lord Kelvin was right. No other discovery man has ever made is even comparable with that discovery. And, when once a man has made that discovery, his moral responsibility for making that discovery known to lost humanity is the most solemn of all responsibilities. The gift of a little of our spare cash, the gift of a bit of our time, or the habit of making an excuse because of financial depression, is not going to relieve any soul of that responsibility. "Woe is me if I preach not this gospel!" "As much as in me is, I am ready!" If "as-much-as-in-me-is" is less than one-half cent a day (which is even more than the average member of the evangelical churches of America is actually giving to discharge the great obligation), all well and good! But, Christian, think it over! Remember that God Almighty in the coming day of judgment, when each of us shall give an account to him, will lay that one-half a cent a day spent to send the gospel to a heathen world, along beside the dollars we have spent upon our own selfish desires, and thereby shall our works be judged! If every member of The Brethren Church would actually give even one-half a cent a day for foreign missions, no missionary would have to be recalled this coming year! But, let no man think that thereby one-half a cent a day, is the full measure of his responsibility. The measure of responsibility is "As much as in me is!"

If salvation—if regeneration—does anything at all for a man, it ought to make him accept the Golden Rule laid down by the Lord Jesus as one of the rules of his life. Hear it: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them" (Matt. 7:12). Apply that rule to the foreign mission field. Suppose that were YOU (in Romanized Latin America) penitentially crawling on your hands and knees over rough stones from idol to idol, seeking to ease the burden of sin and fear of God,—what would YOU want the man or woman to do who is in possession of the glad good news that the penalty for sin is fully paid, and that nothing needs to be DONE except to receive the salvation of God as the free gift of his grace? Suppose that were YOU over there in India, with the babe, dearly beloved by every mother heart in the world, on your breast—suppose that were YOU carrying that babe down to the "sacred Ganges" to cast it into the gaping jaws of the crocodile—because "the gods must have the best",—if that were YOU, what would you want the person to do who knows that the sacrifice has all been made—that God gave HIS Son, and because of that, we may keep our loved and our own upon our breasts forever and forever? If that were YOU in Africa, and the superstition of your tribe demanded the death of your twin babies, because of the belief that they would bring ruin and evil upon your family—what would YOU want the person to do who has the marvellous light of the gospel of Christ in his possession? It is the burning shame of the church of Christ that she has not given the message to every human being!

What shall be the result of our failure or refusal to pay that which we owe? Dare we meet our Lord before his judgment throne, without having done our utmost to bring every human being in all this world to a saving knowledge of his grace?

HOW MAY WE DISCHARGE OUR DEBT? By giving "as much as in me is!" When once we have done that, no matter how insignificant it may then seem, it will prove to be the necessary "loaves and fishes." The Master wanted ALL the lad had. Had he had but one little loaf and one tiny fish, it would have been enough. The blessing of Omnipotence would have met the need of the hungry multitude! With God, the question is not, "How much have you given?" but, "How much have you RE-SERVED?"

Things Behind and Before

By R. R. Teeter, D. D.

A sermon preached at Ashland, Ohio, on January first, nineteen hundred thirty-three, the fortieth anniversary of the writer's ordination

(Concluded from last week)

What to Forget

II. Then, secondly, side by side with admonition, practically illustrated by the Apostle himself, there comes another. Let that bright, certain infinite future dwarf for us the narrow and stained past—"forgetting the things that are behind."

This may seem a strange advice, and one which goes dead in the teeth of a great deal that calls itself experimental Christianity. But it is a very wise advice for all that, and reaches, I think, very deep into the secret of the strength of the Christian character.

Paul meant, I suppose, only, "I don't count that these past efforts are complete, I don't build anything upon what I have done already; I recognize the mark of imperfection over it all, I fling it behind me and press onward." But I think we may widen the application a little further than that, and include all sorts of backward looking, as being (except under very special conditions and in a very limited degree) a positive weakness and impediment to a man running in the race that lies before him. Why? Well, for one thing, plainly and simply enough, time given to such an occupation is time withdrawn from the actual work of life. A man cannot run with his eyes looking over his shoulder; he is sure to run against something or somebody, and thus be delayed and hindered. There may have been running in the Apostle's mind, combined with the image of the racer, some remembrance of the old story in the Book of Genesis about Lot's wife. She looked back, and as she stood there gazing behind her, precious time was irrevocably lost, the fugitives swept on in front, and the swift-flying death that struck her with terror, as she saw it pressing close behind, caught her up. She was whelmed in the fiery destruction that filled the air; and as the shower of ashes at Pompeii moulded themselves over the poor wretches that were smothered by them, and preserved till today the print of the very waves of their hair and the texture of their dress, "salt" was crusted around the living core, and she perished, because she wasted in trembling retrospect the flying moments which, rightly used, would have set her in safety. And if you stand there looking backwards instead of making the best of your way out of evil, the evil will catch you up, or, at least, will be so much nearer you because of all the time wasted.

Remembering always tends to become a substitute for doing. The temperament which is perpetually looking back, the praiser of a past period, is in all respects the antithesis of his who takes occasion by the forelock, and is vigorous just because he is full of hope. Politically and socially, the great things are done by the men whose minds are full of "all the wonder that shall be." Their visions impel to labor that their visions may become realities. Little work is done by people whose fond regrets dwell in the good old times, and whose word of command is "as you were." The same thing is true of the individual life. "The native hue of resolution is sicklied o'er by the pale" pensive light cast upon the past, and he who lives in his former self is a dreamer, not a worker.

But then take the injunction more specifically, and think whether it does not especially hold with reference to our Christian life, and that in all its aspects.

Forget past failures. They are apt to weaken you. We are prone to take them as measures of the future, and say, "Oh, I shall never do any better; I have always broken down just at that point, and it is no use trying to expect to ever get beyond it. Experience teaches me my limits."

Yes, experience does teach us our limits. It teaches us, if I may use such a phrase, the limits of our possible "lateral extension;" that there are certain things that we never shall be able to do if we try all our lives, and all eternity as well; but it does not say anything about the limits in our line of things. It teaches us what is not congruous to our temperament and character, but not what perfection our temperament and character can reach. There is no limit in that respect; and to look back and say, "I take the past, with all my blunders, and weaknesses, and sins, as the measure of my possible future," is to deny the infinite power of God's gospel, the indefinite expansibility of the human soul, and the sure promise of the Divine Spirit. "Forget the things that are behind." The failures do not indicate what we shall be. In reference to me it is not true, "that which is to be hath already been," but it is that I may day by day grow more like my Lord. "The path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more until the noon of the day."

Then I would say again, be sure to forget past attainments.

They are apt to become food for complacency, for every vain confidence. We are tempted to look back to past religious emotions and experiences as grounds of our hope. We are apt to say, "At such and such a time I saw clearly God's truth, I felt deeply the love of Christ, I was profoundly conscious of my own sin. Then I was converted, or then I was growing in Christian attainments. I did conquer evil. Then my heart was cleaving to the Lord, and filled with his fulness." Yes, and you ate your dinner twenty years ago; will that serve to strengthen you for today? And the rain fell on the young wheat when you and I were boys; will that do anything towards next year's harvest? These past emotions were good for the time. If you turn them into the occasion for complacent confidence, as to the present and as to the future they are simply bad. "Forget the things that are behind." And still further remember, too, that these attainments in the past, like failures in the past, do very often become practically to us the measure of our notion as to what we shall be able to do in the future. You find some certain type of Christian character, or exercise of Christian grace, that is easy and natural to you, and you come to know how to do it. It becomes your special habit, which is all right, but it also tends to become your limit, which is wrong."

Habits are like fences, very good to guard the soul from sudden incursions of trespassers, but very bad when the trunk has grown up and presses against their stubborn rings.

And many of us simply keep on doing the round of things that we fancy we can do well, or have always been in the habit of doing, like hand-organs, grinding our poor little set of tunes, without any notion of the great ocean of music that stretches all round about us, and which is not recorded upon our records at all.

"Forget, then, the things that are behind," your failures, lest they should seem the measure of your future, and teach despair; your successes, lest they should be the measure of your future, and so teach you either a vain confidence, or a limitation of that noble ambition which ought to impel every Christian heart "to fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness and the work of faith."

But I would venture to say still further, forget your past circumstances, whether they be sorrows or joys. The one are not without remedy, the other not perfect. "God is able to give thee much more than these;" to bring again blessednesses which surpass all those joys, and compensations which shall make the sorrows seem like a dream. Both are past; why remember them? Why should you carry about parched corn when you stand in fields white unto harvest? Why carry stagnant water in the bottom of a rancid skin, when living in a land of foun-

VOICE OF THE CHURCHES

THE GOSPEL OF GOOD NEWS TO ALL SINNERS

1 Tim. 1:15—"This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief."

This text contains six great propositions: 1st, "This is a faithful saying." This means a sure declaration of truth. 2nd, "Worthy of all acceptance." This means a safe investment. 3rd, "Christ Jesus came,"—a divine mission. 4th, "Into the world,"—a needy place. 5th, "To save sinners,"—a great work. 6th, "Of whom I am chief,"—a personal confession.

Indeed the Bible is full of sure declarations, for it is the one complete declaration of God to man. It contains more than three thousand promises and these stand out as the unanswered challenge of God to man. God through the prophet, in the last book of the Old Testament, extends this challenge by saying: "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing." While this is concerning the tithes and offerings, it stands as a challenge for every activity of faith.

Again: 1 Thess. 5:24—"Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it." Also in 2 Tim. 2:19—"Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his."

"Worthy of all acceptance."—Yes, this is a safe investment, but so few are investing in this greatest enterprise on earth! 2 Peter 1:4-10—"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." Then by adding the Christian graces ye shall never fall.

"Jesus Christ came." This is by divine arrangement, and the expression of God's love for all sinners. This was the event that was regarded by angels as sublime and of everlasting interest. At his Incarnation, the angels were given the honor of announcing him. Yes, the Judean hills rang clear that night, as the angel choir sang: "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace and good will to man."

The angels also ministered to him at his temptation, in the garden, on the cross, at the tomb, then furnished his escort to glory. Then Peter makes a wonderful statement—1 Peter 1:12, "Which things the angels desire to look into." If angels who did not need salvation, were so much interested in this mission, surely we who are so vitally concerned should hail him with rapture.

"Into this world"—this is a needy place, for the gravitation of this old world is away from God. Rom. 8.—"The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be."

Let us take courage: 1 John 2:17—"The world passeth away with the lusts thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

"To save sinners"—This is a great work, and the greatest proposition of which you can think. You can not save a sinner, the whole combined force of believers, can not save one sinner; but by witnessing to him and by your personal influence, you can lead them into the presence of One who can save.

Some would have us believe that the Bible is now out of date; but it only proves that their own brain is muddled, and they have lost their bearings. But thank God, the old STAR still shines, the ONE unerring and unchangeable guide out of sin into holiness, out of death into LIFE. Thank God for that scholarship today that pauses at the threshold of revelation in reverence. Christ demands not only admiration, but identification, and it is our privilege to crown HIM Lord and King of our lives.

"Of whom I am chief." This is a personal confession, and in order to claim a part of his great mission we must classify ourselves. He came to save sinners. Are you one of them? If we classify ourselves here and now, God's grace is abounding and abundant. Christ will forgive and receive. "BEHOLD THE LAMB OF GOD."

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

GOOD WILL—PLUS

John Haynes Holmes, an ultra liberalist in religion of New York is advocating a "religion of good will as a substitute for all other religions." We also would be glad to offer our conception of religion as a substitute for all religions that do not harmonize with it. But we would remind Mr. Holmes that we have a religion of good will, proclaimed by him who taught men to love one another, and heralded by messengers from heaven as a bringer of "peace on earth and good will to men." Holmes is an example of a class of religionists who would take a fraction of Christ's Gospel and make that the whole of their own religion. But a fraction won't work unless all the rest of the Gospel goes with it. Let men accept Jesus Christ and realize in actual experience his transforming touch in the new birth, and then they will have a religion of good will—and more. Yea, they will have the power, the only power, to make the religion of good will effective.—Religious Telescope.

JAPAN DEFIES THE WORLD

Japan has at last clearly branded herself as an outlaw among the nations of the world. When, last week she flouted the carefully considered opinion of the civilized world and withdrew from the League of Nations, at the same time inaugurating a new military drive for the conquest of China's province of Jehol, she so stigmatized herself in the eyes of the League, and of the United States as well. Forty-two countries had condemned the Japanese course in Manchuria; instead of yielding to the judgment and counsel of these nations, Japan has chosen to pursue her own course of violence, in defiance of the League, the Kellogg-Briand Pact, the Nine-Power Treaty, and the public opinion of most of the world.

What is to be the result of all of this? That the issue in the Far East is complicated and that both sides to the dispute have given great provocation to hostilities does not justify the Japanese defiance of world opinion, as shown by the League's adoption of its report based on the investigations of the Lytton Commission and the American Stimson-Hull endorsement of the League's policy. Japan has opposed the old doctrine of might (learned largely from imperialistic Western nations, be it remembered) to that of right, and no one can foresee how grave the consequences may prove to be.

Meanwhile, as always, there are those who are willing to profit by the bloodshed that their own nations have condemned. One British firm is reported to have shipped thirty-six million rifle cartridges to the Far East; another, a thousand machine guns. From Pittsburgh steel helmets made for American use in the World War have been sent to China. As always the munitions makers are content to feed the flames with no sense of responsibility except to earn dividends for their stockholders. The world hasn't progressed far, after all, since 1914.—The Living Church.

CATHOLICISM IN LATIN AMERICA

President Rodriguez of Mexico tells the papacy that "if the insolent, defiant attitude continues I am determined that the churches be converted into schools and shops for the benefit of the nation's proletariat." The state of Vera Cruz has confiscated all church property and deprived Roman priests of citizenship, at the same time suggesting to the other states of Mexico to follow its example. So are the chickens coming home to roost.

In Guatemala a book has been adopted in the schools in which the children are told of the attitude of Rome toward freedom of speech and freedom of teaching. "In recent times the Holy Inquisition has condemned innumerable teachers to death by burning at the stake. Who would believe that actually in the present time the same fight against education is going on, that the reading of certain books under the penalty of 'anathema' is still forbidden!"

This book "The Elements of Civic Instruction," by Dr. Mariano, has been made a textbook in all the schools of Guatemala. It declares that "the sect which has fought religious liberty most consistently is the Catholic sect. It has persecuted to death those who do not profess its cult. The Holy Inquisition devised so many and such barbarous and monstrous tortures that they seem rather the dreams of criminal cowards thirsting for blood than a diabolical reality desired of those who then and today affirm themselves representatives of God.

"The most bitter wars, the most frightful hecatombs have been provoked by the Roman priesthood. The Crusades, the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and many other sheddings of human blood would never have taken place had it not been for the Catholic priests."—S. S. Times.

OBJECTIVES OF THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE

Six definite objectives have been set forth by the Anti-Saloon League as it faces the task of 1933. Dr. E. H. Cherrington, director of Education and Publicity, announces them as follows:

1. The defeat of the beer modification measure in the present Congress.
2. The defeat of a second attempt to pass a repeal resolution in the present Congress.
3. To defeat both beer modification and a repeal resolution in the extraordinary session of Congress which is expected to be called after March 4.
4. If any form of beer bill is passed its constitutionality must immediately be challenged.
5. In the possible event that a repeal amendment resolution is passed after March 4 we must then already be prepared to meet the anti-prohibition agitators in every state of the Union to prevent the ratification of such an amendment.
6. A unified, aggressive program is essential. We must hold our legal defenses against assault; but more than that it is vitally important to enlarge our educational field and checkmate the wet propaganda. We must build firmly the foundation for intelligent and voluntary observance and obedience to law.

JEWISH APOCALYPSE WRITINGS

We are indebted to the December issue of Our Hope, Dr. A. G. Gaebelein, editor for a worth while reference to the claim of certain modernists that nearly all the eschatological teachings of the New Testament are taken from apocalyptic books which were in possession of the Jews before the New Testament was written. The critics assert that our Lord only echoed some of these Jewish inventions when he spoke of his return and the signs of it. They also impeach the testimony of Paul as to that blessed hope, and claim that he constructed it out of these writings. They treat the book of Revelation in the same way.

During last summer, Dr. Gaebelein made a special study of these Jewish apocalypses, going into the question of their authorship and date; for example, the Apocalypse of Baruch, the Ascension of Isaiah, the Assumption of Moses, and the Book of Enoch. As a result, he reaffirms what has been stated in the Monthly more than once, that no one knows the authors of these books which appear indeed to be a composite authorship, remnants, traditions and superstitions put together anonymously.

The foregoing statement is true especially of the Book of Enoch, for while some scholars quoted by Dr. Gaebelein maintain for it a date earlier than Christ, yet others whom he also names, place it between A. D. 90 and 125.

It is the judgment of Dr. Gaebelein that the author of the Book of Enoch was familiar with certain parts of the New Testament and used them in a distorted way. For example, the passage in Jude dealing with Enoch was thus used some sixty years after Jude had received the message from the Spirit of God. The testimony against this book is practically identical with that against the Assumption of Moses and the Ascension of Isaiah. There is good reason to believe that the first named was unknown until nearly the middle of the second century of the Christian era. As Dr. Gaebelein maintains, these apocalyptic writings in their dispensational teachings are as different from the New Testament as day is different from night. They are incoherent, disjointed rambles, while the New Testament is, as our readers know, a constructive, logical and inexhaustible unfolding of the truth of God.—Moody Monthly.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humbert

Study Number Thirteen

The Second Seal

Up in heaven, the Lamb snapped another seal and the second living creature thundered, "Come," (R. V.) (Not "come and see" as in Authorized Version. John is already there. The command is given to the horse and his rider).

Let us remember that the book of Revelation is given in sign language (Rev. 1:1). Judgments are going forth from heaven, upon a sinful earth. Power is invisible and if there is any difficulty concerning these horses, we may at least say that they are power personified. Newspapers of our day use the same method. When they want to use the sign language and picture "war," they personify it by using a big ugly giant. When they want to "signify" the end of the year, they picture old Father Time with his sickle and hour-glass.

When this horse goes forth, peace is taken from the earth and murder is the order of the day. Like in the time of king Asa, "There was no peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in" (II Chron. 15:5). Under this seal it is hate and kill; war and bloodshed; revolution and rebellion.

Peace and Safety

At the close of the church age and at first under the antichrist, men will think that they have secured a permanent peace. Everyone will be saying, "Peace and safety" (I Thess. 5:3). Peace conferences and newspaper propaganda will convince the world that another war is impossible. But just when they think that peace is assured, "then sudden destruction cometh upon them" (I Thess. 5:3) and a time of unparalleled tribulation will break forth upon the earth (Matt. 24:21).

We might remind ourselves of the turn of affairs in our own time. Not many years ago, war was glorified. But now, peace conferences and newspapers have turned the tide of human thought and everywhere, there is talk of "peace and safety." This sentiment is most certainly preparing the world to receive the delusions under the antichrist. Christians, however, are not in darkness and should not be deceived into crying "peace and safety" and in thinking that the world is getting better, for the light of prophecy reveals to them the impossibility of peace, without the Prince of Peace himself. Let us wait for our coming Lord, who will cause the nations to "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks", neither shall they learn war any more (Isa. 2:4).

No Christians In the Tribulation

Let us remind ourselves that Christians will not be here to endure the pangs of the great tribulation. The tribulation is the time of "Jacob's trouble" (Jer. 30:7). It is a time of judgment upon a world gone mad against its creator. The church is the bride of Christ. It is his body and in the last instant will be removed to a place of safety.

God always does that. Not a drop of God's judgment water fell upon the earth until the day that Noah and his family entered the ark (Luke 17:27). Not a spark of God's judgment fire fell upon Sodom as long as Lot was there, (Gen. 19:22) but the "same day" he left the city, it rained fire from heaven, (Luke 17:29). God's judgment will not fall upon commercial Babylon until his people are warned to "Come out" (Rev. 18:4).

The Tribulation and the Jews

It is thus with the coming tribulation. Although we do not know how far we may go into the "beginning of sorrows" (Matt. 24:8), yet the tribulation itself is concerned with Israel and her seven year covenant with the antichrist, (Dan. 9:27). It has nothing whatever to do with the church which is a body of people called out from among the nations for his name (Acts 15:14).

The church is composed of both Jews and Gentiles (Eph. 2:14) while in the tribulation period, Israel and the Gentiles are dealt with separately. One hundred and forty-four thousand Israelites are sealed and then we see an innumerable company of all nations before the Lamb (Rev. 7:9).

The antichrist is not to be revealed until after the church is raptured, (II Thess. 2:8). Some take Hebrews 9:28 to mean that only part of the church will go in the rapture but "them that look for him" has to do with Israel, whose high priest has entered into the holiest with his own blood and having accomplished the services of God, he will come out to his waiting people, as the high priest did on the day of atonement (Lev. 16). During the break between the sixty-ninth and seventieth week, God does not count time with this earth, so he does not consider the some nineteen hundred years as being any break in the type.

When Christ returns for the church, the "dead in Christ shall rise first; Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds" (I Thess. 4:14-18). This will include ALL of the dead and living Christians. If Christ takes only those living saints who knew about his Second Coming, what about those who have died without this knowledge?

The Third Seal

Again the Lamb opened a seal and the third living creature said "Come." At once a black horse sallied forth and its rider held a pair of balances in his hand. No longer will profiteers set the price of the necessities of life. A voice from heaven cries, "A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny" (Rev. 6:6).

Today it seems that God has touched our earth with fertility and we in this country have more food than can be used. Well might the government, like Joseph of old, gather "corn as the sand of the sea" (Gen. 41:49) and fill the storehouses during these times of plenty for the time of famine just ahead, when a whole day's wages will buy but a pint and a half of wheat—scarcely enough for the man himself, let alone his family.

The Oil and the Wine

The order is also given, "see thou hurt not the oil and the wine". Oil from the olive tree and wine from the vine, does not depend so much upon the direct labor of men as do wheat and barley. The implication here seems to be that if it were not for the fruit trees and the vines, there would not be food enough to sustain the human family. The famine in Egypt extended even up into Canaan and they had no corn. However they did have "spices and myrrh, nuts and almonds" (Gen. 43:11). Under the second seal, peace is taken from the earth and men have been so busy fighting and fearing each other that they have no time to put out their crops.

"If the Foundations Be Destroyed, What Can the Righteous Do?"--Part III

By Melvin Grove Kyle

(5) Looking a little farther up the stream of history to the beginning of the Conquest we see a great host encamped on the east side of the Jordan in the Plains of Moab. Their sprawling black tents are scattered far and wide over many little valleys which make up the Plains here. In the Book of Numbers (22-24) we have the historical record of this host, the great company of desert wanderers under Moses, and at last under Joshua, and now about to attempt the conquest of the Promised Land. The account is somewhat circumstantial, indeed more circumstantial than appears in the narrative itself. Only the cities of the region are named and the points of vantage from which Balak would have had Balaam curse Israel, but from which, according to circumstances in each case, he blessed Israel instead. It is only when the topography of the region is studied that the circumstantiality of the account appears. It is certainly that of an eye-witness, and as graphic as a military description of a battle field.

In 1929, Pere Mallon of the Pontifical Biblical Institute of Jerusalem, who was also a member of the Staff of the Xenia Seminary Expedition to the Cities of the Plain in 1924 (Bibliotheca Sacra, July, 1924), went over east of the Jordan to see what could be learned concerning the geography and topography of that region. It is only within recent years that the science of pottery has been worked out for Palestine. The first principles were laid down by Sir Flinders Petrie about twenty-five years ago, but only within ten years have they been thoroughly worked out, tested, and turned into a real and trustworthy science in the service of history. Pere Mallon is one of the experts in pottery chronology, and so was a member of our staff at the Cities of the Plain, and so, also, now went to examine the Plains of Moab. Bit by bit the whole Old Testament narrative is being thus proved up.

Beginning with the names of the cities mentioned in Numbers, he was immediately able to identify each one of them among the names of towns on the sites known by modern Arabic names. Being accomplished in the colloquial, he found it easy to recognize the Hebrew names in these modern appellations. Besides, the locations themselves were exactly in order topographically as viewed by an observer on the ground. One thing, however, was at first puzzling; in addition to the towns mentioned in the Biblical narrative, some other sites were noted, not now occupied as towns, but evidently of importance in olden times. Why then were not these places mentioned in the account? An examination of the pottery at these places at once told the whole story and added another touch to the graphic accuracy of the narrative in Numbers. There was only the rough heavy pottery of the Early Bronze Age with the ledge handles and the lug handles so characteristic of that Age. There was nothing of any later Age in the culture of the land. The places had not been occupied after the close of that Age 500 to 600 years before the Israelites camped here. Of course, these places were not mentioned in the account, since they were then uninhabited. Interest in the matter deepens, when it is noted that it was just about the end of the Early Bronze Age that the Cities of the Plain, Sodom and her allies, were destroyed. These cities of the Plains of Moab may have been enveloped in the same deluge of fire and sulphur and salt; a wind might easily carry the ashes so far. I have been in Naples in a mild eruption of Vesuvius, when the city was sifted, as with a light snow, with the ashes from the volcano fifteen miles away. Or it is more likely that, not in the destruction of Sodom were these places involved, but in the greater besom of destruction in the form of some conquering host that swept the whole of Palestine very soon afterwards and completely changed the civilization, brought in, in fact, a light and beautiful pottery almost as attractive as China ware. At any rate, these cities had ceased to exist half a millennium before the account in Numbers and so, naturally enough, were not mentioned.

It was, however, when Pere Mallon turned to the story of Balaam's prophecy that the complete attestation of the narrative came. He found that the account, in its order and in what is seen from each point of vantage to which Balak took the prophet to view the menacing host, it is that the wonderful accuracy of the writer appears. From the first place of the prophet's view, only a small part of the camp of Israel could be seen. Perhaps Balak was rather afraid for Balaam from afar to see how great was the menace of the invading host. But instead of cursing the invaders, the Prophet blessed them. Then Balak took him to another place from which a much wider view of the camp of Israel was had, yet still instead of cursing was blessing. Then from the heights of Baal Peor also, completely identified, not only by the topography and the pottery, but by the evidence of the High Place, the whole vast assemblage of Bedouin tents of the desert was spread out to view, and the greatness, the terror of this invading menace was visible in all its horror. Yet still the prophet blessed, and, in blessing, gave one of the most glowing of the Messianic visions of that early stage of the Messianic hope. Altogether we have here one of the greatest triumphs of the science of pottery culture in Bible lands.

(6) Only a little while before the camping on the Plains of Moab for rest before attempting conquest of the Promised Land, the host under the leadership of Moses had passed by Kir of Moab, now Kerak. It is rather curious, that some critics have set up the idea that Moab did not exist as a nation until the time of David. When the Pentateuch is shoved away forward to Exile times, then, in consistency, it becomes necessary to pull after it a great many events; the existence of Moab is one of them. But Moab in the time of Moses, the traditional Moses, not the Moses of the critics, is well attested. In 1908, I was at work at Luxor in Upper Egypt. I got permission from M. LeGrand of the Department of Antiquities, hired some diggers, and borrowed a ladder and set to work around some statues of Rameses the Great in front of the temple of Luxor. About the base of the statue were inscriptions, rows of cartouches containing names of peoples and places which Rameses claimed to have conquered. It had been suspected that Moab was in one of these lists. I cleared one list after another until I came to the last, and to the last name in this last list. When I scraped the bud from the inscription, there stood out the name Moab spelled out in phonetic characters of the hieroglyphs, as clearly spelled indeed as if in Roman letters (Recueil de Travaux XXX). Here was Rameses a little before the Exodus, boasting of having conquered Moab, evidently a place of sufficient importance, though far away across on the east of Jordan, to be the subject of a royal boast. This certifies the existence of Moab as a nation in the time of Moses.

But what of Kir of Moab? Was it in existence, when Moses passed this way? In 1924 we searched for some days for the evidence of that early city amidst the many ruins of Kerak but did not find it. One day our geologist, Professor Day of Beyroot, came in and announced that he had found the pottery of that old city on the precipice east of town. We jeered at him, "that no one ever built a city on a precipice." But Dr. Albright said, "I will tell you what it means:—the castle just above that spot is Crusader work. The Crusaders were Europeans who cleared the ground before they built. They threw the rubbish down over the precipice." There we found a great layer of it. The pottery was not that of the time of Abraham and Lot. Certainly not, for Lot was himself the progenitor of Moabite civilization. Here was the pottery of the time of Moses; the strange shapes of the end of the Late Bronze Age and the Early Iron Age. Kir of Moab was certainly on the ground, when Moses came this way.*

(7) For a glimpse into the life of the Israelites in the wilderness, we must look in upon them in Egypt and then see what they were like after the wilderness life and they were settled in the land. The difference noted will tell us what they lost in the desert. Menepthah, the Pharaoh of the Exodus, tells us that he used the Asiatic slaves in the army, in industrial pursuits, and on public works.† The Bible mentions only the employment of the Israelites on public works, because it was there the insurrection took place and that only had immediately to do with the Biblical story. The Bible never tells us anything merely to gratify curiosity, as do most historical books. That the Israelites were used in industrial pursuits is evident from the skill of Bezaleel and his fellow craftsmen and artists who made the Tabernacle. God endowed them especially for their work but he chose them first for their fitness. It is equally certain that the men of Israel had been used in the army from the celerity and the success of the preparation of an army to combat the Amalekites, the most fearful cavalry in that world of Bedouin horsemen. This army drill they kept up, for they had need for it in the desert life, and when they came to Canaan. But what became of their arts and crafts? After the Tabernacle, they built no houses. The old Egyptian-trained workmen all died off and the boys had no opportunity to learn. In two generations they would certainly lose their arts and crafts, except the simplest ceramic art needed to make bowls and flagons for use in the wilderness.

*Explorations at Sodom, p. 136.

†Moses and the Monuments, p. 16.

At Kirjath-sepher, when in 1928 we had cleared away the houses of the late city of the kings of Judah after Solomon and came to the city below, which had been built by the Israelites when they came into the land, we had a surprise, a surprise, indeed, that exactly fitted the Bible history. That first city built by Israel on this site was a mere squatter settlement. It had no plan, displayed no skill, was, in fact, the crude efforts of a people without the arts and crafts. Compared with the Canaanite city that they destroyed or the city of the kings of Judah that later followed, it was a huddle of shanties. In the wilderness, God taught the Israelites religion and trained them in citizenship, but they lost their arts and crafts. Did God leave them helpless? Not so. He provided them teachers. The Philistines were skilled and the Israelites learned from them. From this time on the debt of Israel to the Philistine potters is soon manifest and for a long period. Thus the history of those days seems to unroll before our eyes like a scroll.

(To be concluded)

listen to the gracious words as they fell from his lips, although, as we know, there were many who did not properly value them. But it is even so today: He caused the Word of God to be written for us, but men do not value them as they should. Even Christians seldom give the Word the place in their lives that God would have them give it. Pray that men may realize that whenever they open his Book Jesus is preaching to them his gracious words of comfort, and hope, and truth.

WEDNESDAY

God's Regard for the Body. Matt. 6:25-34

These verses constitute indeed a "hard saying," and who can hear it? Most Christians will give at least mental assent to the statement that "God will provide for the needs of his people;" however, our lives evidence the fact that our belief is with reservation, and we are not quite willing to seek first the things of the kingdom, leaving God to provide the other things that are needful. We know from the gospel record that Jesus was greatly concerned with the bodily needs of the people about him, and he has not changed today. In these trying times, pray that our faith may increase and that many may be quickened to seek first the things of the kingdom.

THURSDAY

Conditions of Forgiveness. 1 John 1:1-10

Jesus is very precious to us, because we all need him so. As John reminds us, all have sinned, and all are in need of forgiveness. We must first of all confess our sins, not only to him but also to one another. Then, in his strength, we must walk in the light, forsaking the ways of darkness and sin, and we shall have fellowship, one with another, and with him. There are other conditions, too; for example, Jesus taught us to pray, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." Let us neglect no conditions that stand between us and forgiveness.

FRIDAY

The Promise of Enduement. Acts 1:1-8

"For I have given you an example," said Jesus on the night in which he was betrayed, and we know that those words apply to more than the ordinance of feet washing. In the words of our Golden Text, "He went about doing good," and we should follow his example in this also. If we have been filled with the Spirit, we will be found doing the things of the Spirit. Pray that his Spirit may have unhindered sway in the life of every Christian.

SATURDAY

Christ the Power of God. John 5:15-23

Jesus here identified himself unmistakably with the Father, as the Jews plainly understood. The Father has committed all things into his hands, that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. Let us spend some time meditating as to how we may honor him. May the supreme purpose of our lives be this: That in all things HE may have the preeminence!

SUNDAY

Jesus the Righteous Servant. Isa. 42:1-7

What a blessed hope this passage presents to those who labor and are heavy laden. We weary and stagger under the load of political oppression and ballyhoo today, but there comes One who, without pomp or show, shall yet rule justly and without fail. His mighty power shall ensure his blessings for even the humblest. Surely many would long for his coming, if they only knew. If they only knew—what tragedy and challenge lies in those words! Let us follow the example of the Righteous Servant as we bring the good news to them that sit in darkness.

MONDAY

John's Testimony of Jesus. John 1:25-36

By direct revelation John knew that there was One living among men who was the Son of God, and had previously existed as God; and he positively identified Jesus as that One. How he must have thrilled as he came in personal contact with the Son of God! Little wonder that he was glad to efface himself and give all honor to his Lord. To John he was the Lamb of God; to us, he is the Lamb that was slain and is alive forevermore. Let us not only praise him in our hearts, but let us also ever be glad to bear witness unto him, even as did John.

BRETHERN BRINGING CHRISTIAN CHURCH UNCONSECRATED EXTENSION EVANGELISM

Poster-Making Hints

By Oran F. Hawley, Publicity Superintendent of the Iowa Christian Endeavor Union

Materials

White or light-tinted cardboard makes the best foundation for a poster. Light buff, tan, pale blue, apple-green, and fawn are good colors. Avoid bright colors such as bright red, green, or blue, as lettering on these colors is difficult to read. Also avoid lifeless colors such as a dark brown, deep gray, or brick-red. An excellent poster entered in the State poster contest at Waterloo lost a prize because it was made up on a dead background color.

Cardboard suitable for poster-making comes in various sizes, the standard cuts being 17 by 22 inches, 22 by 24 inches, and 24 by 30 inches. 17 by 22 and 22 by 24 both make fine posters. The large one can be cut in two, making two smaller posters.

Ink makes the best material for lettering. India ink in various colors is best, although ordinary ink can be had in good colors. Show-card colors may be used also, but they are more difficult to handle, and require more skill. Inks are applied with either brush or pen. An excellent method is to use the speed-ball pens which can be had at any stationer's. With these lettering and border lines can be drawn neatly and rapidly. Show-card colors are best applied with a brush.

Some unique color effects on posters may be had by using a small hand spray-gun or a discarded atomizer. This can be used to apply ink in a clouded or mottled border scheme. Solutions of water color and even cake coloring added to water can be used in the spray.

There are many sources from which to secure illustrations for poster-making. Advertising pictures may be cut from magazines. Hundreds of illustrations for missionary posters can be found in Asia and the National Geographic Magazine. Paper napkins and decorative crepe paper furnish some good material. Cartoons and outline drawings may be used. These can be easily enlarged if too small for poster work. First draw a square border about your cartoon, and divide it into small squares with pencil lines. For example, you have a cartoon around which you draw a border $2\frac{1}{2}$ by 3 inches. You wish to enlarge this to four times its original size. Divide the cartoon into quarter-inch squares, making it measure ten squares one way and twelve the other. On a blank piece of paper draw a rectangle 5 by 6 inches and divide it into half-inch squares. Then begin to draw in your cartoon, doing one square at a time in its correct relative position. When finished, transfer your picture to your poster with carbon paper, outline in India ink or show-card colors, and there's your illustration.

If you enjoy making posters, why not get together a poster-making outfit? A drawing-board, T square, and triangles will be found useful, although not absolutely necessary. A fifteen-inch metal-edge rule, some thumb-tacks, several pencils, including one hard lead pencil, three or four assorted speed-ball pen points and penholders for them, a box of water colors, several bottles of India ink, assorted colors, two or three jars of show-card color, a pair of sharp scissors, a discarded safety razor blade, and a jar of good library paste will make an ideal outfit.—Iowa Christian Endeavor Bulletin.

tains and brooks that run among the hills? Why cling to a handful of poor withered flowers, when the grass is sown with their bright eyes opening to the sunshine? Why live in the Past, which, after all, was not so precious when it was a Present, since we have God and Christ now as then, and in them may find peace for today, and endless hope for tomorrow? "Forget the things that are behind."

Past Not a Blank

Of course one need not exaggerate this advice. To cut oneself utterly loose from the past is revolutionary madness in a nation, and it is quite as bad in a man. To teach oneself nothing out of the past would be to fall down below the level of the dumb brutes; or to prove oneself as untameable as flies, that have not, we suppose, any memory at all worth speaking of.

But God gives us remembrance in order that we may make great and blessed use of it. It may teach us humility and hopeful thankfulness. Often in our hearts may shine an after-glow of unfading light from a sun that has set, more lustrous, more calm, more mellow than when its hot fervours were falling on our heads—a pensive, clear, and still Indian summer of memory after the sultry autumn has gone. But when we have given memory its rights, and learned its lessons of practical wisdom and of softened hearts, let us take care of letting sentimental indulgence in it sap our souls, and eat out our energy for the strenuous work of the moment. That "book by the way" is but to refresh us as we go on to the fight. A few drops caught up in the palm as we run will help us, but if we fall on our knees to slake our thirst, we have to fling down our sword and unbrace our helmet, and we prove ourselves too self-indulgent for the army of God, according to the test made in Israel centuries ago.

Some of you may say, "Ah, easy to SAY forget; but how can I forget? The Apostle tells us: not by resolving to do it. Such efforts simply deepen the impression in our minds of the thought which we want to get out of our minds. The way is, as he says, "reaching forth unto the things that are before." That is to say, this wise oblivion is to be won, not so much by forcing ourselves to forget as to let ourselves to anticipate. If we will occupy mind and heart with that sunlit future, it will dim the past, however bright it may be. The billows are white along the track astern, but he does not see them who stands at the bow, and marks the foam of the waves that leap up to meet the good ship as she comes onward. It is when you turn your face to the sun, that a golden path of light stretches across the sea, right before your feet. It is when we look forward and Christward, letting him fill the future and the future fill our hearts, and it is only then, that we can forget the things that are behind.

II. And then, to come to that final piece of practical wisdom that lies in the text: Let hopes for the future and lessons from the past alike lead us to strenuous work in the present. "This one thing I do." Be the past what it may, be the future what it may, I know that I can not reach the one nor forget the other, except by setting myself with all my might and main to present duties, and by reducing all duties to various forms of one great Life-purpose. Concentration of all our strength on a single aim, and that aim pursued through all our days with their varying occupations—what a grand ideal of life that is! Such concentration has for its complement a wise infusion, which two are practically hard to reconcile, and yet, if separated, tend to evil, the one to rigid narrowness, the other to desultory frivolity. But when the "many things" are regarded as branches of "the one thing needful," and the choice of that for ours consecrates and restrains within bounds the care about these, then the life will become serene and harmonious, and we shall be able to mingle in all active duties, nor move from our place at his feet. We shall work hard and heartily at various tasks, and yet the good part shall not be taken away from us by outward activity, any more than our possession of it will separate us from vigorous service of God and man.

The Strength of Purpose

What a noble thing any life becomes, that has driven through it the strength of a uniting single purpose, like a strong shaft of iron bolting together the two tottering walls of some old building!

"But," you say, how is that possible? My life is cut up into bits, frittered away into fragments, and I can not bring it into unity, even apart from the breach that is made in it by the difference between things sacred and things secular. I cannot make even the week-days one whole, and how can I bring them and Sunday into harmony?"

Well, it is the spirit in which, not the thing at which, we work that makes life a unity. The action of occupation may vary, but the purpose and goal may remain the same. A hundred processes may go to the manufacture of one article, though it were nothing more than a pin, and all the multitudines of our engagements may, if we will, be stages in one great journey.

We may always be trying to be like Jesus Christ, whatever be the material at which we toil. He was subject to his parents; He, it is presumed, worked in a carpenter's shop; he had passed through all varieties of earthly life. Whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, we may do all to the glory of God.

Such work will be the natural issue of Christian hope for the future, and of Christian oblivion of the past.

Take that as the test of your Christian hope. If it makes you work, it is right; if it does not, there is something wrong with it. If it makes you think that it does not, there is something wrong with it. If it makes you think that it does not matter how you scramble through this life, because you are going to another, you mistake the relations of the two lives. If it makes you restless, impatient, uneasy here, forever sickening to get out of this place where God has set you, in order to sink into some restful region beyond, you have not learned the nobleness and greatness, either of the religion to which you are to go, or the religion in which you live. But if your hope proves itself by the patience that comes from it, and your faith by the work which it produces, and your love by the labor which is its result, then you may believe that the faith and hope and love are of God, and will abide forever. Being in Christ, it is safe to forget the past, it is possible to be sure of the future, it is possible to be diligent in the present. Then how blessed is such a life!

For the past—"I was chief of sinners, but I obtained mercy;" for the future—"We shall bear the image of the heavenly;" for the present—"I press toward the mark."

And all our course, if we have him with us in the vessel, will be like sailing down some fair widening stream amongst rocky mountains and vine-clad slopes, with the blue sky above, every now and then seeming to be landlocked, and yet, as each rocky headland is rounded, the shining river stretches itself into another distance, and, washing the base of another verdant hill, slides broader and deeper to the great sea to which we come.

"Wherefore, forgetting the things that are behind, and reaching forth unto those that are before, let us press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

THE LUTHERANS AND MISSIONS

A correspondent in the Methodist Protestant Recorder writes: Not one mission under the auspices of the Board of American Missions of the United Lutheran Church in America was closed during the last year, and the 682 mission congregations and 78 preaching stations showed a net increase of 32,000 members, according to the Rev. Dr. Franklin F. Fry, executive secretary of the board. He reports further that 38 of the missions, which are located in Canada, Alaska, Nova Scotia, the United States and the West Indies, became self-supporting on January 1, freeing the funds previously used for their maintenance for other mission activities. Forty-two new missions have been started in their place, representing a 5 per cent increase. He reports that the membership of the mission congregations is now in excess of 125,000, and that 525 missionaries are in the service of the board. More than $1,000,000 was expended by the United Lutheran Church for home mission and church extension work during the past year.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

LYDIA, MARYLAND

Dear Evangelist readers:

Since we enjoy reading the news from other churches, we feel it is befitting that we should also contribute our share.

At the quarterly business meeting held in December we were called to continue the work here for another year. This will make our sixth year with the St. James people. This church, like every other, has problems peculiar to itself, problems that at times were trying even to our patience. But after all they were times of testing of our faith and we were made the stronger because of them. In the main, our stay so far has been both pleasant and profitable.

We felt that at times our attendance was not what it should be. But when comparing our attendance with that of neighboring churches, we found we had no reason for discouragement.

Our Sunday school is doing splendidly. During the past three years we had an increase in attendance of between fifteen and twenty per cent per year. During the past two months our attendance has suffered some because of sickness, but is starting back to normal now.

Our W. M. S. ladies are hard at work, quilting and serving sale dinners, trying to raise money to "balance the budget."

Recently, with the help of Brother Williams and the Y. P. S. C. E. from our Hagerstown church we organized a Christian Endeavor society here. The organization started off in fine shape, with 46 charter members. These young people are taking hold of the work with interest and enthusiasm, and are putting on some very helpful and interesting programs.

During the two weeks following February 13, we joined with the other churches of Hagerstown and Washington county in what was called a Simultaneous Union Lenten Service. The churches in different communities formed groups and held union services, the different pastors in most cases doing the preaching. But it was arranged so that no one but the ministers knew who would do the preaching from night to night. This added to the interest. In our particular group there were four churches taking part. These meetings were so well attended, of such high Spiritual order and with such deep interest manifested, that at the county Ministerium on Monday, February 6, a motion prevailed that the effort be repeated next year. My own conviction is that out of these meetings has grown a spirit of cooperation and fellowship that is worth far more than the effort it cost.

We are not going to complain about the depression and its effect, for enough has been said already without changing conditions. As for myself God is still on his throne, and when we as a people turn to him, as Israel had to do when they had sinned, all will be well.

I am praying that God's work will prosper everywhere. We ask to be remembered by all God's people, that we may be sustained and kept in his service.

ANOTHER GREAT REVIVAL AT MASON-TOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Another great revival at Masontown has come to a close. Yes, it was even greater than the one last year, as the human eye sees it.

Last year Rev. Sibert, with Mrs. Sibert as helper and children's worker, held a three weeks' campaign; one hundred came to Christ, the majority uniting with the Brethren church, though some went to other churches.

This year 122 came to Christ, 98 have already been baptized, and there will probably be more. One came since the meeting, and others are almost persuaded.

Rev. Sibert was his own evangelist again this year. Rev. Tom Presnel, our neighbor, from Aleppo, Pennsylvania, was Bible lecturer and evangelistic singer. During the third week Rev. Sibert contracted a heavy cold, and Rev. Presnel stepped into the pulpit, and the meetings went on gloriously as they had started. No matter which man preached, the crowds came and souls were born into the kingdom.

Masontown had a real spiritual feast during the revival. Sometimes the auditorium was comfortably filled at 6:30. By the time the Bible lecture began at 7:00, chairs had to be used. An average of 300 or more attended the Bible lecture every evening.

By the time song service began at 7:30 every available space was filled, and our church is not a small one. At 8:00 preaching services began.

A heavy program? Yes, but one which the Lord blessed mightily, we had a Bible conference, a sacred song feast, and an Evangelistic service all in one.

Rev. Presnel is a masterful Bible lecturer. He knows his Bible and his Lord. He presented the Scriptures so simply, so interestingly, and so powerfully. His gospel singing was indeed a joy to us. May God richly bless him as he gives his life in his service.

As for the Siberts, we cannot express our appreciation for them. Coming to us, as they did in our time of extreme need, they have been wonderfully used of the Lord. He has mightily blessed their ministry among us. In the words of one of our charter members, "We could not have found any better anywhere."

Rev. Sibert is a fearless, powerful, and convincing preacher of the Word.

The Lord has added close to 200 new members to the church during the eighteen months he has worked with us.

Our revival closed with the greatest communion any of us have ever seen. Tables all over the auditorium; tables in the front of the church; tables on the platform; tables even in the center aisle, and all of them filled. What a glorious service it was.

Masontown is now the third church in size in Pennsylvania; Johnstown first, and Philadelphia second, head the list.

Our Christian Endeavor is holding to an average attendance of 150. The two mid-week Bible study classes are very, very well attended. The W. M. S. and S. M. M. are at their best. Both expect to be banner societies this year. The Sunday school is booming, a gospel team has been formed. Every auxiliary of the church we humbly say is "holding fast and going forward." May "God bless us every one," and keep us busy for him, until the appearance of his Son, our Lord Jesus Christ.

MISS MABEL G. WILSON, Secretary.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-TWO AT MASON-TOWN

Once again, "The Lord has done great things for us whereof we are glad." To him be all glory and praise. When the meeting was over last year we remarked that it was an experience of a lifetime. But we reckoned without the Spirit who this year has done "even greater things" and raised the number of precious souls twenty-two above that of last year, with ninety-eight baptisms and receptions into the church. The fact that for the second time in this church the pastor acted in the capacity of evangelist makes the victory even more unusual. We are reminded that "The Lord is not slack concerning his promises." But how oft we do forget his great promise, "Ask and ye shall receive."

Old friendships were renewed and we were wonderfully blest when Rev. Tom Presnel, as evangelist singer and Bible lecturer, came over from Aleppo to help us in our meeting. He proved to be a real bulwark of spiritual power. I think that I have never heard the Word more simply, forcefully and interestingly presented than during his Bible lectures. It has been about six years since we were together in Gospel Team delegations from Ashland College and yet it seemed that our efforts fit together perfectly which is, of course, as it should be if the Lord has had any leeway in our lives. Brother Presnel has been wonderfully used of the Lord and fits readily into any part of the soul-saving program. This was evidenced by the fact that in the third week of the meeting when a heavy cold was pulling us down he took our place and the victory went on without a break. We feel that the "even greater things" of which the Lord spoke, will be evidenced as he labors in the Master's vineyard.

We would not forget the splendid cooperation and support of the members of the church during the services. Everywhere we turned it seemed that hearts were lifted in prayer and hands raised to help. Nearly every night some one came rejoicing to me and said, "We have been praying for this person who came tonight." We feel that faith and prayer was the cause for the success of the meeting. We had no personal workers combing the audience nor did we call for wholesale reconsecrations. There were fourteen reconsecrations. We left it all up to the Spirit and he did not disappoint. We greatly appreciate the splendid talent here which is so great that not all of it could be used in the meeting. Fellowship with many Brethren at the noonday meal was greatly enjoyed. Here again we were swamped with invitations. Yet when our physical wellbeing, because of a cold, would not permit us to accept all invitations they were very considerate and seemed content to do the thing which would be best for the meeting. Such whole-hearted support is a joy to any pastor.

Folks here in Masontown are endeavoring to answer the challenge of their Master and "let their light shine" as is evidenced by the two branch Sunday schools organized and fathered by members of the local school. One of these schools organized and fostered by Brother N. Clark has gone above one hundred in attendance. The other located at Gray's Landing, about a mile from our local school has come dangerously near the hundred mark. This school is sponsored by one of our splendid young couples, namely, Charles and Lily Pearl Lytle. A weekly prayer service is also carried on by these young folks in their community. They are proving a real spiritual force in their community.

The young folks' Gospel Team has entered into the schedule at Mt. Sterling and will supply the leadership for this school along with a similar team from the adult men's class. The team recently opened an evangelistic meeting at the Palmer Community church. They took complete charge, unassisted, of the opening night and were well received. The young people's team is a part of the splendid group of fifty or more young people who are taught the Word at the parsonage every Thursday night. Most of these are present at the Wednesday night Bible study at the church, which has also grown to a hundred forty-five. A study of the Fundamentals of The Christian Faith is taught by the pastor on Wednesday night and a special study of Genesis is taught Thursday night by Mrs. Sibert. It is a real pleasure to see so many young men and women interested in the Word. The lesson is taught, then questions submitted to and answered by the young people.

We had the privilege on the last night of the meeting of administering to the largest number of communicants that we have ever witnessed at a communion service. Thanks to Rev. Presnel who assisted, and to the Uniontown Brethren who so kindly loaned us their communion trays, it was possible to go through with the service without a break. I suppose it is proper to report here fourteen who came to Christ at the regular services since the last year's meeting and one young woman who came since this year's services were closed. To him be all the glory and all praise. These things we have reported that the faithful who with us are watching and waiting for his glorious appearing, may rejoice with us in his present victory.

FLOYD SIBERT.

DALLAS CENTER, IOWA

It has been some time since a report has been sent in from the church at Dallas Center; it seems time passes so quickly that a year can slip by before we scarcely realize it.

We had the pleasure of having Mr. and Mrs. Herman Hoyt with us for several weeks last summer. Herman preached for us while our pastor attended Winona Lake Bible conference and our National Conference.

Since our last letter five have been baptized and received into the church. Two others are to be baptized in the near future.

Last summer we experienced very little decrease in attendance. In fact our average for the last four years in Sunday school has increased from 87-106-116 to 118 last year, average so far for the present year is 131+.

Our Evangelist agent has been working to keep our church on the honor roll.

The Women's Missionary Society made a quilt to send to Kentucky. They also sent clothing.

The S. M. M. girls are endeavoring to make all of their goals this year.

They have been a banner society since they organized some 16 or 18 years ago. The girls plan to have an all-day meeting Saturday, March 11, to roll bandages. They have given several programs, and taken free will offerings, but, they are emphasizing the spiritual more than the financial side this year.

We have a fine group of young people in our Senior Christian Endeavor Society. They too gave several programs, and every one enjoyed them very much.

A Junior Christian Endeavor was organized last fall by Marie Weber and Helen Towner. They have their meetings on Sunday afternoon.

Brother A. R. Staley is now holding a Union Evangelistic meeting at Carleton, Nebraska. He reports they are having a successful campaign.

Our pastor has been delivering some very fine sermons. He has just recently completed his third year with us and we know that with such efficient leadership we will continue to grow, spiritually.

We appreciate very much Brother Staley's knowledge of the Bible, and his faithfulness in declaring the same.

We thank, and praise the Lord for his loving kindness, and may he give us courage to do greater things for him than ever before.

EVA MORGAN.

VANDERGRIFT, PENNSYLVANIA

We are still moving along at this place. We have some crosses to bear, some difficult things to meet, but we rely on God's promise.

"When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the LORD shall lift up a standard against him."

So we press on in hope of victory through grace.

On Sunday evening, April 2nd we expect to administer Christian baptism.

Sunday evening, April 9, our love feast and communion service will be held.

This week I visited all the folks in their homes. There is some serious sickness and

PIONEER RESIDENT DIES AT HALLANDALE

Daniel Crofford

Daniel Crofford, 86, pioneer resident of Hallandale, died Sunday night at his residence on the Hallandale Beach road after an illness of three weeks.

He was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, and came to Hallandale from Johnstown, Pennsylvania, in 1910. He was a retired minister and mail messenger of Hallandale and was a member of the Brethren church of Johnstown. He leaves his wife, Delilah, to whom he had been married 63 years; three sons, C. W., of Akron, Ohio, J. C. of Pittsburgh, Pa., and H. B. of Hallandale; a daughter, Mrs. J. E. Parsons of Columbus, Ohio; two sisters, Mrs. E. Brubaker of Johnstown and Mrs. Sue Helsel, Dunkinsville, Pennsylvania, and a brother, J. H., of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania.

Funeral services were conducted Tuesday, February 21, 1933, at the Union church in Hallandale, by the Rev. Martin Larson, Lutheran pastor, and Rev. J. E. Coryell. Burial will be in Dania cemetery in charge of the Hollywood Mortuary.

Daniel Crofford

A more sweet-spirited, Christlike, friendly Christian character it would be hard to find. Brother Crofford loved the Brethren Church, the faith of his choice. It was our privilege to spend considerable time in his company and in his happy home during the winter we spent in Florida two years ago. He loved his home. He was loyal to the community church in the village and was chosen to serve again as the superintendent of the Sunday school, which position he held at the time of his death and had held for many years before. On every fifth Sunday of the month he filled the pulpit and ably proclaimed the Gospel, although in his 87th year. For years he has carried the mail to and from the local postoffice. He rode a bicycle to and from his gardens and enjoyed working in the soil. He was always active. His faithful wife and children suffer a real loss, as does also the community in which he lived and our whole church, for another of her pioneer ministers has departed to be with the Lord. We have lost a true friend for a little while. May the influence of his long and loyal Christian life continue to do good and draw us all heavenward.

THE NEED OF CONVICTION

By Frederick L. Fagley

John Stuart Mill, the great thinker, once said, "One person with a conviction is worth a hundred mere believers." This is exactly what we need today—men and women of conviction—a clear conviction that God has spoken to men in Jesus Christ and that he is the way of life for all men. We have in these times many and great calls upon our churches for help for people in great need, and we must respond to these. We cannot expect the blessings of God upon our souls if seeing men hungry we feed them not, or withhold from our needy brethren anything we have that will aid them. But even more than this must we do. We must rebuild the inner being of our people, renew the stream of living now run dry, and give to our people a sense of the reality that lies back of the universe we see and which gives to it whatever of value and worth it has.

Man's greatest need is not for bread for the body, but life for the soul. Here is where a minister with conviction in his soul can bring to his people the words of life. Eternal destinies depend upon our power to bring to people a vital and convincing faith in Jesus as the Savior of men. For several years our churches have been working together that the church may minister to the spiritual needs of men with more effectiveness in worship and in solving some of the intellectual problems of our day, and this is all very worth while and necessary. But we must not take too much for granted. Do our people really have conviction as to the reality of God, and that he has spoken to men through Jesus, and that the revelation of God in Christ Jesus is everlastingly true? Do our people have conviction that a man may win the whole world and yet lose his own soul? That though the body perish yet shall he see God?

These are times when we cannot evade nor overlook the one supreme responsibility of our days, however heavy the task of social rebuilding may be. These must not be left undone, but this first thing must be ever kept in vision. We must return to our essentials and to our simplicities. We must not give too much thought to mere outposts as if they were the citadel itself. The redemption of the soul is the one great task of the church, and we should recall Bushnell's saying, "The soul of reform is the reform of the soul."

Let us have conviction that sin does destroy life and that we must rid the soul of sin if life is to be. Help us, O God, in these our days, to have such conviction that we may bring a saving knowledge of thee to multitudes who know thee not. Give us victory and many souls in our day.—The Congregationalist.

Recent surveys indicate that there are five thousand unchurched communities in the United States, embracing five million people.

The president of the republic of Guatemala, Central America, is pursuing vigorously a clean-up policy in all governmental affairs. But the president is not alone. "He could do but little if he were not backed up by a lot of people," says the Guatemala News. Missions through their converts are rapidly multiplying those who cordially back the administration.

LYNCHED

Principal Robert R. Moton, of Tuskegee Institute, reports that eight persons were lynched in 1932. This is just eight too many, but we may at least be grateful that it is five less than in 1931, thirteen less than in 1930, two less than in 1929, three less than in 1928, and eight less than in 1927. Of those lynched in the year which has just closed, seven were in the hands of the law; four of these were taken from jails and three from officers of the law outside the jails; the bodies of two of the victims were burned. In 31 instances officers of the law prevented attempted lynchings. Of these 27 were in Southern States, four in the North and West. In seven cases armed force was used to repel the lynchers. In all, 42 persons (of whom 7 were white and 37 Negroes) were saved from death at the hands of mobs. Several of these were women. Let us keep on hoping and praying for the day when all the American people will be civilized.—Reformed Church Messenger.

Brethren church, the pastors sometimes exchanging pulpits.

It was also a pleasure to have several visits with Brother and Sister Kent whose ministry has meant so much to our denominational progress in Washington. Some of their people were present at nearly every service. Only the urgency of our immediate return to Ashland kept us from accepting a kind invitation to remain for a service on Monday evening in the Brethren church.

On our way to Washington, Mrs. McClain and I stopped for a few minutes with our friends, the Colemans, at Hagerstown. On the trip home we had a brief but enjoyable visit with Brother and Sister Humberd, having occasion to stop at Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, on foreign missionary business.

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENCE

ANOTHER MEMBER OF ORIGINAL SUBSCRIBER'S CLUB

Dear Editor:

Brother Leslie said in his correspondence he was thankful for our paper. I too am thankful for it. To me it is next to the Bible.

I have read our church paper ever since I can remember one was published. It was the "Gospel Visitor" published at Columbus, Ohio and edited by our Elders James Quinter and Henry Kurtz. S. Z. Sharp was a faithful contributor. His articles were long and so deep that I could not comprehend them, for I was but a small child. My father thought they were good, so I thought I must read them too!

I read the "Christian Family Companion." Never read "The Vindicator," but read "The Progressive Christian" and "The Gospel Preacher," edited by S. H. Bashor and J. H. Worst. Then came "The Evangelist" which I read in its very beginning and am still reading.

When I could hear and the minister preached an able sermon I would think surely it was the best I ever heard. I think the same way of the Evangelist. It is the best paper we ever have had.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

DUEY-JACOBSON—On Saturday evening, February 25, 1933, in Carleton, Nebraska, occurred the marriage of Mr. Fred Duey and Miss Lavene Jacobson, both teachers in our city schools. Mr. Duey has been chosen to superintend the Carleton Schools for next year.

They will continue teaching this spring, and will locate permanently next fall. Both have been a help to the Brethren Church school, though they hold membership elsewhere. Both are clean, talented young people, and are well liked by all. Courtesy by the writer. W. R. DEETTER.

IN THE SHADOW

BECKE—Mrs. Anna Becke was born in St. Louis, Mo., August 2, 1862, and departed this life in Modesto, Calif., Feb. 12, 1933, aged 71 years, 5 months and 12 days. He was united in marriage to Anna Chapman in 1911, to which union were born two children, Nathan, who preceded his father in death four years, and Samuel, who with his mother remain to mourn the loss of a dear father and husband. Besides the immediate family he leaves a father and mother—Samuel and Mary Price; four sisters—Mrs. James Zimmerman of Yellow Creek, Pa., Mrs. S. K. Clapper and Mrs. G. R. Crist of Washington, D. C., Mrs. C. A. Kline of Huntingdon, Pa., and one brother—Lewis, at home.

Mr. Price has been a faithful member of the Yellow Creek Brethren church for the past eighteen years. Funeral services were held in the Reformed church, near the home, where a large audience of relatives and friends gathered to pay respects to one who was loved by all. Services were in charge of the writer, assisted by Rev. Stair, of the Church of the Brethren. E. S. FLOIDA.

MAGERS—Thomas Magers was born September 23, 1858, and departed this life, after an illness of several months, on February 8, 1933, at the age of 74 years, 4 months, and 15 days. On May 26, 1887, he was united in marriage to Martha Ross, who preceded him in death almost ten years ago. To this union were born five children. Surviving him are: three daughters, Mrs. Stella Conrad, of North Liberty, Ohio; Wilma and Nellie, at home; one son, Ross J. Magers; also two sisters and two brothers, and many other relatives and friends. He was a faithful member of the Danville Brethren church for forty-five years. SAMPSON—Mr. Marvin C. Sampson departed to be with his Lord December 17, 1932, at Emergency Hospital, Washington, D. C., as the result of an accident which took place at his work. While Mr. Sampson was not a member of the Washington church at the time of his death, he was awaiting his letter from the church in Virginia. He had had a consecration of his life to the Lord at our revival meetings shortly before his death occurred. Mr. Sampson was 23 years of age, and leaves to mourn his passing a beloved wife, a father and mother, and three small boys. His wife and the two older boys, Vernon and Martin, are members of the Washington church. The funeral was held at the church and interment took place at beautiful Cedar Hill Cemetery. Our sympathies are extended to the members of the bereaved family. HOMER A. KENT.

HAYRE—Mrs. Margaret Hayre departed to be with the Lord she loved and served, Feb. 18, 1933. Her departure was due to a prolonged illness and released her from much patient suffering. Her life had been spent in Washington, where for many years she had been a faithful member of the First Brethren church. Her beloved husband who was a man of God, preceded her in death by several years, leaving her with the responsibility of the care of the family—God, given her, and her age was 66 years. His wife desires to mourn her home-going five children, namely, John, Mrs. Susie Dyer, Sarah, Mary and Helen. Funeral services were held at the First Brethren church at Washington, Feb. 22nd, 1933, and burial took place at Congressional Cemetery with the minister. Her sympathies go out to the members of the bereaved family. HOMER A. KENT.

FREEMAN—Mrs. H. J. Freeman departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mr. Ahrens, Deshler, Neb., at the age of 64 years and eight days. She was a member of the Brethren church for many years. She leaves a husband, three daughters and two sons. Funeral services were conducted from the Brethren church, Carleton, on Sunday, Feb. 12, 1933, by the writer, her pastor. W. R. DEETTER.

MORIN—Mrs. Alice Jeanette Morin, was born at Church Hill, Frederick County, Maryland, June 17, 1868, and died at her home near Fairplay, Md., Feb. 5, 1933. She is survived by two children—Mrs. Charles Wyand of Keechville, Maryland, and William Alford, a member of the Sister Morin was for many years a member of the St. James Brethren church. Funeral services were conducted from the home by her pastor. W. S. BAKER.

THE Road to Rome

Only a few years ago, when the star of Mussolini was rising in Italy, some of us can remember how that many of the wise men pooh-pooed the idea that he would ever attain a position of first-rate importance in world affairs. But in spite of all prophecies to the contrary, Mussolini has arrived.

It is no secret to those who read, that for the past several weeks Europe has been on the perilous verge of another war which might easily involve the world. The statesmen of the nations have been shivering at the prospect, knowing that a single untoward incident might touch off the explosion. Practically no progress was being made at Geneva in the way of a solution. In the midst of this desperate situation, Ramsay MacDonald, premier of England, decided that something had to be done. And what did he do? Appeal to the League of Nations? Invite a Conference of world powers? Nothing like this. HE WENT TO ROME TO TALK WITH MUSSOLINI!

THE Prestige of the Black Shirt

There was a time, and not very long ago either, when the Premier of Italy would have come to London. But now London goes to Rome. What are the causes for the sudden prestige of Mussolini? Three things may be mentioned:

1. The political philosophy of Mussolini, once laughed at, is increasing in favor and extent. Germany has virtually embraced it by giving authority to Hitler. Other nations are looking at it with interest. Even in the United States thoughtful people are discussing the advantages of a mild form of dictatorship.

2. Behind Mussolini stands the vast influence and power of Roman Catholicism as represented by the Papacy. Actually they are not very good friends, but for political purposes they have agreed to play together. The Scarlet Woman is not yet riding the Beast. That is still in the future. In the present situation Mussolini is leading the procession, or thinks he is.

3. The rise of Hitler in Germany has brought Europe to the brink of another war. And Mussolini is the only man in Europe who can tell Hitler anything. Thus Mussolini has come to hold the power of life or death. As the editor of a leading eastern paper writes, "The course of time has brought to Mussolini the greatest power wielded by one man since Waterloo."

The Christian should pray that this power will be used in the interest of peace.

MUSSOLINI'S Opinion of Democracy

In a personally written article recently circulated widely throughout the world, the strong man of Italy tells what he thinks of Democracy: "As regards this democratic pastime of ballot boxes and voting on tickets, by which the electorate is intermittently given the ridiculous illusion of being

"the sovereign people," I can only say that I despise it most decisively."

To students of the prophecy of Daniel, all this is deeply interesting. Only a few years ago, as the kings were falling and democracy was marching in triumph, it began to look as if the "iron" would completely disappear from human government and that the feet of the image would become wholly "clay." (Read Daniel second chapter). But now once more the iron appears, thus vindicating the truth of prophecy.

A careful study of Daniel's prophecy will teach you more about the true philosophy of history than all the learned books ever written by the hand of man.

PEACE for Five Years

Ramsay MacDonald, in going to consult Mussolini at Rome, has few illusions about the ability of Europe to keep the peace. By his plan, if it secures support, he hopes to preserve peace for the space of FIVE YEARS.

It is not the place of the Christian to wax cynical over what may seem to be a deplorable modesty of hope on the part of Mr. MacDonald. Five years may seem to be a very brief space of time, a mere handbreadth. But five years WITHOUT WAR is a long time. And if the plan succeeds, it will be a notable achievement.

While we pray for this five year plan for peace, let us not forget to pray "Come, Lord Jesus." (Rev. 22:20) When he comes, Peace will be more than a mere breathing space between wars. "In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth." (Psa. 72:7)

THE Need of the World

The most uncompromising antagonism to the Christian doctrine of Christ's second coming, I used to find, came from the men who believed that the people through democratic rule could work out their salvation, socially and politically. I once said to a professor of Social Science, who seemed to be sincerely interested in the welfare of the human race, "Would you not like to see, in charge of human affairs, a Person who is wise enough to know what ought to be done and powerful enough to get it done?"

His answer was very strange, I thought. "No," he said, "that would not be good for the people. They ought to work out a solution for their own problems."

You do not hear much of this kind of talk today. The world is staggering under so many problems needing immediate solution that the long-winded method of open discussion by popularly elected representatives is being impatiently shoved to one side. People are feeling that the solution of their problems is vastly more important than any theory of government. Consequently they are more ready than ever to commit their cause to any man who displays the promise of wisdom, initiative and the power to get things done. Witness the popularity of Roosevelt, and the unpopularity of Congress.

This state of mind offers a great opportunity for the teaching of the Bible doctrine of the second coming of our Lord. The preacher who is wise will not miss the opportunity. It will not last forever. Remember the Lord's admonition about "meat in due season."

THE Communistic Blunder

A few months ago a revolutionary committee took charge of the government of Chile and declared their intention of turning it into a socialistic republic after the Russian model. A part of their Manifesto reads as follows:

"When we shall have realized the golden dream of Simon Bolivar everyone will be compelled to admit that we were not actuated by motives of personal gain. Two thousand years before our time, Jesus Christ adopted our ideas, promising better living conditions to those whom fortune had disinherited. This better life was to be enjoyed in another world. We, more humane and diligent than Jesus Christ, offer to the proletariat a better life in this world."

Passing over the blasphemy of this claim, I would like to suggest that its communistic authors should read the New Testament to learn what Christ offered to men. It is true that Christ offered men a better life "in this world." Read his words in Mark 10: 29-30, "There is no man that hath left home, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the Gospel's, but he shall receive an hundredfold in this time . . . and in the world to come eternal life."

So the real difference between the promises of Communism and the promises of Christ is that Communism offers a better life in one world, while Christ offers a better life in two worlds.

And best of all Christ is able to make good his promises, as millions of people could tell you, both on earth and in heaven.

A recent report of an official of the Department of the Interior states that there are approximately 400,000 teachers employed in the rural schools of the United States, teaching nearly 11,000,000 children. Of the total number of teachers, about 150,000, or 40 per cent, are teaching in one-room schools. The average rural teacher receives a salary of $926 a year, teaches for 163 days, and has an education equivalent to a little less than one year beyond high-school graduation. Forty thousand of the rural school teachers are Negroes.

A Conference to Secure United and Aggressive Action

The forces of righteousness are on the defensive in this land of ours and have already suffered a number of serious losses. Unless united and aggressive action is secured, and that right promptly, defeat of Prohibition is certain. And with the loss of Prohibition will go many other notable achievements in the field of moral reform. Christian leaders are beginning to realize the seriousness of the situation as they have not realized it before, though it is regrettable that the awakening has come so late, and efforts are being made to bestir and organize their forces for a mighty campaign to save Prohibition.

It was with this thought in mind that a national conference of temperance and prohibition leaders was called to meet in Washington, D. C. on March 7 and 8, 1933. Being anxious to pass on to Evangelist readers what transpired there, and being unable personally to attend, it was the editor's good fortune to secure the cooperation of Mr. F. E. Simmons, a prominent layman of our Washington church and a man experienced in newspaper reporting, to send us some data and personal impressions. We are also indebted to Rev. T. C. Lyon for some newspaper clippings of conference reports. We are therefore to get a glimpse of the conference mainly through Brother Simmons' eyes.

The gathering was mainly "a conference of church representatives" from thirty to thirty-five denominations, rather than a convention of organized temperance bodies. The time of the meeting was most inauspicious, so it proved to be, though the banking holiday and the climax of the depression could not have been anticipated by those who called the conference. In spite of this fact, however, there were approximately 1000 in attendance at the two-day conference, gathered from the far corners of the country, representing at least 36 of the 48 states, among them being California, Washington and Oregon. That is significant as pointing to the rising zeal on the part of the church forces in defense of the prohibition issue as the seriousness and imminence of the crisis is being borne home to them. The probable influence of that conference will be all the more encouraging by reason of the fact that the delegates were mainly ranking members of the various denominations and congregations and would return to their respective communities and church groups and spread the opinions and spirit of the conference.

Though the gathering was composed primarily of churchmen, yet there were among them some of the outstanding temperance and prohibition leaders of the country, attending presumably in their private capacity. Among the leaders present were: Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, Methodist resident bishop of Washington, and a moving spirit in the calling of the conference; Mrs. Ella A. Boole of the W. C. T. U.; Canon Wm. Sheafe Chase, of the International Reform Federation; Dr. F. Scott McBride of the Anti-Saloon League; Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Church, South; Deets Pickett of the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals. Dr. Daniel A. Poling was not there, but we are informed that one of his colleagues, Hon. Grant Hudson, a former Congressman from Michigan, was present. These leaders were of one voice in saying they would "do anything they could to defeat repeal." Bishop Hughes, who presided over the conference and gave the key-note message, stressed the importance of unity in these words: "The present crisis demands a real unity as the price of our success. We have been called here primarily to unite in an effort to save and strengthen the Eighteenth Amendment. . . . Personally I can think of no vaster disservice, or damage to our cause in the immediacy of its crisis than for any one of us to say a word or to do a deed that would retard the speedy unifying of our forces."

There were those at the conference who were ready to indict the churches for not having been sufficiently interested in the fight for prohibition heretofore. The churches had not given the instruction they ought to have given and some church folks had taken the position that the fight was not theirs. Mrs. Leigh Colvin, New York State president of the W. C. T. U. called upon for an extemporaneous expression, told her experience in New York State,—how certain political fixers ingratiatingly sought her help in "saving" as much as possible for the dregs, and how she had refused to compromise and had replied that she wasn't even sure that she would support a measure to prevent saloons being opened within certain proximity of churches, saying that "if they were to be opened, possibly it would be well for them to be built right next door to the churches." In other words, let the churches pay for their inactivity, was her implication. If saloons are allowed to return, or some other liquor selling institution, there will be few states in which there will be any laws protecting churches and schools against the proximity of these liquor joints, and we will want protection. We had better do our utmost to prevent their return, than seek to regulate them once they have returned. And our opposition should be persistent and uncompromising. Bishop Hughes said: "We are so sure of our moral and political stand that we cannot favor even a compromise of temporary halting in order that there may be later progress. Some good, but we think, mistaken men, have said that if we let the wets do their worst and most terrible part, the reaction toward our cause will be speedy and decisive." The bishop calls it the "counsel of despair," and we would say, What a terrible harvest would be reaped by the nation until that reaction might come! And who knows but that it might all be avoided if church people would put forth earnest effort unceasingly and without compromise! And what of conscience! Bishop Hughes says rightly: "A strategic retreat is a difficult thing when you are travelling on a moral road. In this case we may be perplexed about conditions, but we are not confused about our direction. We decline to compromise by inaction. Or, to change the figure of speech, we cannot consent to submit to ad terim ravages of typhoid, or smallpox, or the Black Death, in order that the people may directly be more impressed by the horror of the diseases. Our spiritual convictions shut us up to unceasing opposition— . . . The victory for repeal and for beer must be won, if won at all, only against all the opposition that uncompromising hearts can produce."

Another feature of the conference which impressed our correspondent—almost amazed him—was that in a meeting south of the Mason and Dixon line, the "biggest hand" was given to the testimony of a bishop of the African M. E. Zion Church. His testimony was valuable because it was specific—that the precedent of a repealed 18th amendment betokened the possibility of a repeal of the 14th and 15th amendments, and perhaps other portions of the constitution, and therefore was singularly formidable to his people. He added also that the 18th amendment had not only protected the physical and moral welfare of his race, but had compelled them to save, acquire homes and become more cultured and

"The Power is Off"

It happened at a great church gathering, an annual conference, and was reported by the Richmond Christian Advocate, but it also happened in our own church not so long ago. The organist was seated before the organ ready to play, in fact, had already started to play, when suddenly all sound ceased. No one asked what was wrong; everybody knew. It had happened at our church before. In connection with the incident at the conference, it happened before the organist had begun to play, and a visiting minister was in the pulpit. The organist struck the keys, but there was no music. The minister waited, then turned in the direction of the organ just as the organist was saying, "The power is off."

"The power is off?" softly queried one of those present. And his mind questioned not so much the fact as the significance of the words, and he meditated within himself: "What a word that was! 'The power is off!' The organist was there, and the delicate machinery of the great pipe organ was there. The minister and the audience were there waiting, but there was no sound. The power was off!" As that Methodist man meditated, he said: "We have the greatest program of any denomination, and the best machinery. We have well equipped men and great buildings. But we are lagging on all fronts, and we are hardly touching the fringes of our responsibilities in many communities. We prayed long for open doors, and all of them are open wide, and the windows, too; but we are bringing back our best workers instead of sending them to answer the Macedonian call of all nations. What is the matter? The power is off,—that is the trouble."

Then the spokesman for the Reformed Church takes up the confession and says, "If that is admittedly true in some Methodist churches, what right have we to say that it may not be true of some Reformed churches? Is it possible that the charge may be laid at our own door? In Lent of all times we need to recognize the wisdom of that petition said to have been used by Chinese Christians: 'Oh, Lord, revive thy work, and begin with me!'"

If others have found that to be the secret to their trouble, may it not be well to think on it in relation to some of our own slowness and inefficiency and lack of ability to take possession of our opportunities? Is some of our work lagging because "the power is off"? Are some of our churches standing still or slipping back because "the power is shut off"? Are some of our church members devoid of influence and vitality, and others indifferent and self-satisfied, and others poor in love and sacrifice, because "the power is shut off"? May God help us to maintain that contact that will keep us in touch with power.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

On the Christian Endeavor page, Brother W. H. Schaffer of Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, asks, "Can Endeavorers be trusted?" It is a challenge to the faithfulness of young people. The future leadership of the church depends much on the type of young people we develop, and faithfulness is a fundamental virtue.

In a personal communication from Brother Leo Polman of South Gate, California, we learn that the church at that place is enjoying a splendid quickening and souls are being saved. At the first of March seven had been added to the church since the first of the year, one was to be received into membership the following Sunday and one was awaiting baptism.

From the Smithville, Ohio, church bulletin we learn that the Sunday school at that place has launched a seven weeks' attendance contest to culminate on Easter Sunday. The first Sunday in March the attendance was 182, and that, as those who happen to recall past attendance records will know, is a high mark and indicates a keen interest. Dr. G. C. Carpenter is the aggressive pastor.

The church at Goshen, Indiana, where Brother S. M. Whetstone is pastor, has recently closed a successful revival and ingathering, with the pastor himself doing the preaching and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richer having charge of the music. There were thirty-eight to come forward during the meetings, thirty-three by confession and five by relation. The attendance was splendid throughout the meetings, ranging from 350 to 850. The young people had a large place in this revival and their faithfulness had its influence on other young people. One result of the meeting was to make the Young People's society 100% Christian. The Sunday school has been increasing steadily until the average attendance for the five Sundays concluding with March 12 was 525, the high number in attendance being 657.

Brother S. E. Christiansen writes of his assistance given to Brother I. D. Bowman in a revival meeting held in the Delaware church near Georgetown. After Dr. Bowman had given a week to Bible lectures, Brother Christiansen came on with a series of evangelistic sermons, resulting in eight confessions. He also reports two more confessions at his church at Allentown, making a total of sixteen to be added to the church since the first of the year. Brother E. E. Fehnel, a local elder of the Allentown church, aside from serving as Sunday school superintendent, proves his helpfulness by supplying the pulpit very satisfactorily while the pastor is away helping in the Lord's work elsewhere. Brother Christiansen rejoices in the growth of his Christian Endeavor society, and with good reason—it has grown from twenty to eighty-five.

Brother James S. Cook, the faithful pastor of the church at Portis, Kansas, believes his people are the kind who will not "surrender the fort" into the enemy's hands. A people and a pastor with that spirit will win, even though victory be delayed for a season. The work is reported to be holding its own in spite of sickness and financial handicaps. A revival was recently held under the leadership of Brother H. H. Rowsey of Falls City, Nebraska. It was a meeting spent primarily in behalf of the membership and not without good results. One hundred and fifty calls were made during the meetings and mostly on church members. This was the first of exchange meetings by these two pastors. Brother Rowsey is now preparing his people for the return meeting. One baptism is reported at Falls City and others express interest.

Brother W. R. Deeter reports twelve additions to the Brethren church, six to the Methodist, one to the Church of the Brethren and one unclassified, as a result of the union evangelistic meetings conducted at Carleton, Nebraska, under the leadership of Brother A. R. Staley of Dallas Center, Iowa. It would seem that the teaching of Gospel baptism had not been neglected by the pastor since most of the converts going to the Methodist church were thus baptized, as were others who joined that church on previous occasions. The Methodist brethren are also learning to enjoy the Brethren communion service. Very likely it is the kindly spirit on the part of the Brethren people as well as the teaching of the pastor that is winning them. And that ought to be quite natural. It ought to be as natural to find a kind and fraternal spirit manifested on the part of Brethren people as to find trine immersion and feet washing practised, for that spirit belongs to the very name of our people. And it is a necessary characteristic of a truly "whole gospel" people.

A card received from Brother E. L. Miller, whose address for six weeks has been Harrisburg Hospital, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, was written from Maurertown, Virginia, and dated March 15, 1933, and says: "Arrived home from hospital last Friday, P. M., and was glad to get home. The folks all seemed glad to see me too. Attended services Sunday A. M. and taught my Bible Class. Expect to be in my pulpit next Sunday. I must wear a collarette for some time, but otherwise I am none the worse for the wear and tear of a broken neck and a case of 'flu' all in six weeks." Then he wished us to thank in his behalf the scores who remembered him in prayer, and the many who wrote him. He will not be able to answer all personally at once. We were surprised at the last previous message to learn of his rapid improvement, and now we are again surprised to learn that he has been able to get back to work so soon. But we thank God that it is so, and pray that he may be guarded until recovery is complete.

Another very unusual evangelistic meeting is reported this week, this time from Kittanning, Pennsylvania, where Brother R. D. Crees is the capable young pastor. It was a three weeks' campaign with various local ministers taking turns at preaching for the first week and after that Brother R. Paul Miller preached for two weeks. The meetings were preceded by very thorough preparation, which doubtless had much to do with the exceptional results. There were 129 persons to take a stand for Christ. The attendance was good throughout the meetings, the last week the audiences overflowing the church. Large place was given to prayer during the campaign as well as during the six weeks' preparation for it, and prayer was being continually answered by the conversion of souls. The meeting is said to have been remarkable for the number of men and boys to be converted. On the last Sunday preceding the report, thirty-four were baptized and thirty-two received into the church. It is worth noting that the mid-week prayer meeting has jumped from twenty-five to almost a hundred.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

By Dr. Martin Shively

XXXVII.—Elder J. M. Tombaugh, D.D.

The subject of this sketch was born on a farm, in Washington County, Pennsylvania, November 10, 1857. It was not my privilege to know any other of the members of his family, but from his own lips I heard so much about them, that I was long ago convinced that it must have been a very unusual group. While I am sure that the children, of which there were five who reached maturity, were of the normal rollicking type, the atmosphere in which they grew up was one of culture, the mother especially having been both deeply spiritual as well as keenly intellectual. No word of praise was too extravagant when Dr. Tombaugh said anything concerning that mother. Thus both by inheritance as well as precept, her children were led to high thinking and clean living. The four sons became teachers in the public schools early in life, one later entering the legal profession, another the medical, the eldest remaining close to the soil in his later life, while James, the subject of this sketch, pursued his studies further, completing a college course. The only daughter of the group, at her mother's request, did not enter the teaching profession, marrying a physician, and lives now with her family in Virginia. At an early age, the home influence, as well as the call of the Spirit, led Dr. T. to make confession of his Lord, and he cast his lot with the church of his fathers,—known then most widely as the Tunkers. He was soon called to the office of the ministry by his Brethren, and not long thereafter was advanced to the so-called second degree, the ordination having been at the hands of Elder P. J. Brown. When the division came, he cast his lot with the Brethren, and soon began his definite work in its ministry. His first pastorate was in the Fairview church, near Washington C. H., Ohio, where he broke the Bread of Life for eighteen years. At the beginning of this pastorate, he taught school also, because such a thing was necessary to enable the preacher to eke out a living. Later, and not much later, he added Bear Creek and Miamisburg to his charge, alternating between Fairview, where he preached one Sunday, and at both the other places on the following Lord's Day. It was while serving this circuit that the Ashland College Board of Trustees, of which he was a member, called him to assume the presidency of the institution, which he did, returning to his pastorates over all week ends, then back to his classes for the balance of the week. True, the load he carried at the college was not so heavy as it has since become, but even then it must be admitted that this double task must have tried the strength of even such a powerful frame as that which he possessed. But he carried the load without complaint, for his devotion to the church would never permit him to refuse its call for service. Twice during his Ohio ministry, he yielded to the wish of his Brethren and assumed the leadership of the college. He was long a member of the Board of Trustees, as well as an active member of various boards of the church, both in the general conference, as well as the district conference, in the bounds of which he labored. In addition, he served many times as moderator of the general conference and also the district conferences, and always with such kindness and courtesy that it was a pleasure to behold. In fact it lies between him and Brother Knepper as to which served the more frequently, but at any rate, each served more times than any man among us. After serving the Ohio pastorate 14 years, he accepted a call to the pastorate of the church at Hagerstown, Maryland, and here also he served 14 years, after which he returned to the Fairview church for another 4 years, hoping that the change would result in the improvement of the health of his wife. At the expiration of this term, he returned to Hagerstown, and retired from the pastorate, but continued to preach as supply, until three years ago, when his health broke, since which time he has only waited for the release from troubled flesh.

He was married in 1908 to Miss Anna Bausman, of Hagerstown, and to them were born three daughters, one of whom, with her mother survives him. His deeply religious nature found expression in the names given his daughters,—Mary, Grace and Martha. I have never known a father more deeply attached to his children, nor children who responded more wholeheartedly to such attachment. Grace passed away in her infancy, and Mary lived to reach the age of 12 years. He never recovered entirely from the shock of her death, a victim of malignant diphtheria, for I doubt if it could be possible for a father and child to be more in love with each other. In fact he was like the Master whom he served, in his love for all children, and all children responded instinctively to his attachment for them. He had a fund of wholesome stories for them, and whether for stories or not, they gathered round him in flocks wherever they found him. He had a happy home life, with a wife who was a helpmeet indeed, in the midst of a community in which he was sincerely loved and admired. He passed on to be with the Lord in whose service he was wrought for more than 50 years, on March 1, 1933, at the age of 75 years, 2 months and 20 days.

Dr. Tombaugh had, I believe, the most sensitive conscience I have ever met in a man. He was one of the most sincere Christians I have ever known, a keen student of the Word, and a devout believer in its entire message. A man with a trained mind, and a keen student, yet never questioning either the authenticity nor the authority of the Book. And he was a powerful preacher, either as an expositor or topical teacher, always giving his hearers a message helpful to both head and heart. The fact that he held only two pastorates in his 32 years of pulpit service, speaks volumes for both his sermons and his life. His place in the hearts of his fellow townsmen was evidenced when we laid away his mortal remains in the city in which he had lived for 35 years, when many hundreds came to pay their homage to the memory of a friend whom they loved and trusted completely.

I had known Dr. Tombaugh for almost 46 years, having met him first in 1887 at the general conference held in Ashland. He was then a young man of 29, and I think that he was then the most courtly, dignified and handsome man I have ever yet seen. He was well dressed, and spoke more or less frequently during the sessions, always kindly, and always in such a manner as to leave no doubt as to his meaning. I am sure that I was not the only person whom he deeply impressed then, but his courtliness made me shrink from meeting him, and I could not think of its being possible that we should become the Jonathan-David kind of friends which we afterwards became. I said, as I stood above his silent form, on the day of his burial, "He was the closest friend I have ever had among men," and I felt that not a few others in that group would have said the same thing if opportunity had been given. He had been out of the active ministry too long to be very widely known today, for it is largely a new group which one sees at the conferences of the church, but in his day of active service, none was more widely known, nor more sincerely honored. But he will live long in the hearts of those who knew him, and in the lives of those whom he led to the feet of his Lord he will continue to serve. Not a few of the men now active in the ministry, were led to enter it at his suggestion, and though his tongue is silent now, he speaks through their lips. To have lived such a life as he lived, to have wrought as he wrought, and to have served as he served, is to do the will of God, and to be worthy to enter into his rest.

Church Music and Great Hymns of the Church

Second of a Series on the above subject by Robert E. Kline, Organist of the National Cash Register and of the Dayton Brethren Church

The Church of tomorrow is dependent upon the youth of today. It is my purpose in the following article to stress the importance of youth in the musical life of the church.

The number of adults interested in the activities of our churches today would be much greater had a consistent program for our young people been carried out. The progressive church today is the Church that provides musical activity for folks of all ages. Most of our large churches have at least four choirs which give opportunity for all interested to take part. Musical training should be provided boys and girls starting at six years of age. A primary or tots choir, ages six to nine, has proven very successful for the boys and girls of those ages. It is very important that a competent person supervise this work as it must consist entirely of rote singing. Care should be taken to arrange the songs in the key most suitable for their voices. Voices are often ruined at this age because they are allowed to sing too loud.

The next group that has proven successful is the juniors. Possibly the most interesting work with young people has been accomplished with the Junior Choir, ages nine to fourteen years. It is possible to do two-part work with this group and many fine compositions may be secured for the Junior Choir.

Another group which offers possibility, is the Young People's Choir or High School Choir. It has been found difficult to interest the young people; however, it can be done if a worth-while program is outlined for them. After the boy or girl has completed the work in the High School group they should be eligible for the Senior Choir.

A program as outlined above, provides musical training for people of all ages in the church. The church that promotes a program of this kind will find little difficulty in enrolling a large adult choir.

Music is indispensable to the worship service. Try to imagine a church service without music. J. G. Brainard has written a great tribute to music in the following lines—"MUSIC—God is its author and not man; He laid the keynote of all harmonies; He planned all perfect combinations, and he made us so that we could hear and understand."

Investment in musical activities in the church pays good dividends for many persons become interested in Church work through the channel of music. A singing congregation will inspire any pastor and will overcome any obstacles.

It may not be possible to carry out a program such as I have suggested in all churches in our denomination. However, small or large an opportunity should be given those who desire to sing, to enroll in some musical organization.

I have always stood for the best in music. To accomplish results it requires effort and hard work. The best is none too good for praising our Lord and Master. Many verses of Scripture have been set to beautiful music by our great composers, especially the Psalms have served as the text for many good anthems.

The successful choir will select a combination of the simple with the most difficult anthems. In rendering the more difficult numbers the singers realize the progress they are making and, as a result, their interest in good music becomes greater. It is a matter of education of both the choir and the congregation.

As we are approaching the Easter season may I bring to your attention one of our greatest hymn writers, Charles Wesley. "Christ the Lord is risen today" is one of his best known hymns, and is sung by Christian people everywhere. As a religious poet and writer of hymns, Wesley is unsurpassed. He wrote them at all hours and on all occasions. The great heritage which he left the Christian Church consists of more than 6000 hymns of his own composition. Surely we must believe these men were inspired by God in writing the hymns, and may we in perpetuating their memory receive a blessing and inspiration that will carry us on to greater victories in his kingdom.

Thou, Lord, art the Father of music,
Sweet sounds are a whisper from Thee,
Thou hast made Thy creation all anthems,
Though it singeth them silently.

The Grace of Giving

By Mary Pence

Grace characterizes this dispensation as law characterized that from Moses to Christ. Grace as a divine method is constantly contrasted with law and law-works. The doctrine of grace is a practical one, both bringing to us our salvation through Christ, God's love-gift to an unmeriting world, and the power to live a holy life. What phase of the new life in Christ Jesus does grace not touch? From the Scripture grace has to do with our salvation, justification, sanctification, glorification, and worship and our service. Then does the matter of giving to the cause of Christ come under law, or under grace, or is it left to the inclinations of our own fleshly nature? From the teachings of Paul the Apostle of grace, to whom above all others the revelation of the doctrines and practices of the church was given, New Testament giving is of grace, II Cor. 8:7.

It was the grace of giving bestowed upon the churches of Macedonia that enabled them, while in a great trial of affliction and in deep poverty, to give in such a gracious way their liberality was called rich. First of all they gave themselves to the Lord and entreated Paul to accept of their willing offering to administer to the saints in need. II Cor. 8:1-5. This same grace Paul longed to see manifested in the Corinthians, verse 6. As they already abounded in many good things as faith, utterance, knowledge, diligence, and love to the servants of God, Paul exhorts them to see to it that they "abound in this grace also," verse 7. What grace? That of giving as the context shows. In verse 19 Paul again refers to giving as "this grace" which turns out to the glory of God.

In chapters 8 and 9 Paul gives us to see how the grace of giving works when put into operation. He first mentions a willing mind ready to give "out of what ye have." If the giver be of "willing mind" the gift is "accepted according to what a man hath." Verses 11 and 12. Grace never demands along any line what a person cannot do. He is able or it enables him to do what it asks of him. Grace is never fanatical.

We can see from what Paul says, here illustrated by the Macedonians, that when a man has the grace of giving in his heart he is not hunting for excuses behind which to hide for not giving. He comes rejoicing, offering his gift of his own accord. When a man can give ever so little and will not; when he does not like his pastor to preach on the subject or to ask for money; when he downs everything that calls for a little money; imagines he is imposed upon if a little is required of him; opposes paying his pastor a living wage, or the support of missions; when he subscribes but leaves payment to the other fellow or when he waits to see if an amount cannot be made up without his giving anything; when he displays such an attitude that the financial committee of the church dreads to visit him,—such an one is not of a willing mind and it is evident the Lord has never bestowed upon him the "grace of giving." The Lord cannot be looking to such a person for the support of his work, and that person had better beware lest another get his reward. The spirit with which we must meet the needs of the church of Jesus Christ surely is an indication of our spiritual state.

Another manifestation of the grace of giving is that it purposeth in the heart, not grudgingly, or of necessity, but cheerfully (Ch. 9:7). Did you ever have a person do you a favor under compulsion, in a grudging way? Did your heart delight in such an one? Nay, rather we like to receive service and favors from generous, cheerful spirits, who manifest real grace. Some folks seem to be so filled with such grace that they do even small things in such a sweet attractive way, putting so much heart into their words and deeds that others are made to feel indebted to them. Is it any wonder then that our heavenly Father loveth a cheerful giver? With all grace he offered his Son for us; full of grace did Christ give himself for us and to us, becoming poor that we might be rich. II Cor. 8:9. How we should "abound in this grace also," the grace of giving to the work of our Lord Jesus Christ! With what zeal, fervor and joy we should offer ourselves and our gifts!

Great blessings follow the giving by grace. Our beloved missionary, Estella Myers, once pointed out the truth that God has so arranged his plan for his children that we can really make no sacrifice. It is true that however sacrificial a thing may seem, humanly speaking, there is always promise of so rich a blessing that we only stand in the way of our own regard not to serve God with all there is in us. If we sow sparingly, shall we not reap sparingly? And if we sow bountifully shall we not reap bountifully? II Cor. 9:6. He that disperseth abroad giving to the poor, "his righteousness remaineth forever" (vs. 9). "Forever" is a long time. The seed sown is multiplied, and the fruit of one's righteousness is increased, (vs. 10.) "Being enriched in everything to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God" (vs. 11). Grace manifested in giving not only supplieth the wants of the saints but causeth an abundant thanksgiving to God (vs. 12). God is glorified by the submission of oneself to "the gospel of Christ" and, by one's "liberal" distribution (vs. 13). They who profit by your gracious gifts pray for you, and "long after you for the exceeding grace of God in you" (vs. 14).

He who gives under grace, has this all sufficient promise: "God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work" (ch. 9:8). What greater blessing could we covet for and pray down upon our church at Easter, or Thanksgiving, yea, at all times than the grace of giving? Every need of the church would be met and the gospel would be spread at home and abroad. Limestone, Tennessee.

VOICE OF THE CHURCHES

THE MYSTIC WEAVER

I know nothing better to say for these times through which we are passing than these words of an unknown author:

"There's a mystic Weaver sitting high in heaven—
His loom below—up and down the treadles go.
Takes for warp the world's long ages,
Takes for woof its kings and sages;
Takes the nobles and their pages,
Takes all stations and all stages.
Thrones are bobbins in his shuttle;
Armies make them scud and scuttle—
Warp into the woof must flow;
Up and down the treadles go,
As the Weaver wills them so.
Calmly sit the mystic Weaver—
'Mid the noise and wild confusion,
Well the Weaver seems to know,
What each motion and commotion,
With each fusion and confusion,
In the grand result will show.

Glorious wonder! What a weaving!
To the dull beyond believing,
Only faith can read the mystery,
How along the aisles of history
Where the feet of sages go—
Soft and smooth and ever spreading,
As is fit for angels' treading!
Glorious colors fading never,
Tufted circles touching ever,
Each embroidered—what a riddle!
By a cross that gems the middle!
'Tis a saying—but rejected—
That its hues are all reflected
From the sun that shines in heaven.
'Tis believed by all believing

That the great God himself is weaving;
And as warp and woof diminish,
Then shall come the glorious finish
Long foretold by seer and sage;
Then shall come the golden age."

"Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh," (Matt. 25:13). Do you know this Author?

FOUNDATIONS

In some parts of our world may be found old ruins giving evidence of a high state of civilization, which long since has fallen into decay. As one walks through these uncovered ruins, there is evidence of substantial building on the part of a forgotten race. They no doubt felt that the erection of strong buildings would protect them from the ravages of decay and age.

In recent years we have boasted and "boosted" efforts in building a material and industrial age—building upon a foundation that could not be shaken, so we thought.

But we HAVE been shaken. We have become confused. We hope that through this confusion will come a ray of light. We are hearing anew the Message of him whose life was spent in teaching men of the city with true foundations whose builder and Maker is God.

Potentially that city is among us. Its splendors may be revealed when more and more we become actuated with the spirit of fellowship and Christian brotherhood—the willingness to be led by God who does all things well. A spirit which will lead us into immortality.

industrious citizens. And those who know the Negro can understand that argument. It seems unusually strange that Southerners, who have a special dread of drunken Negroes, should have been brought, even with the party lash which they felt after Al Smith's defeat, to favor the return of alcoholic liquors for their black neighbors.

It is a time that calls for courageous and united action on the part of all who still believe in the iniquitous character of the liquor traffic and who understand and have not forgotten the ravages it wrought. Out of this conference came a "Statement to the American People," in which is briefed a "plan of action," and which is a challenge to cooperation in every community. The putting into operation of some such plan will be necessary if the message of truth concerning the drink traffic is to be gotten to the 65,000,000 voters in the immediate future. Vast numbers of those voters are confused and deceived and they must be enlightened and set right, or Prohibition will be lost. And who is more responsible for doing his full part in such a task than the church member. Will the government be allowed to balance its budget with blood money? If so, the stain of that blood will rest upon many who are members of the church of Christ.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

RESEARCH EXPEDITION REVEALS LIFE 6,000 YEARS AGO

A chapter in the epic of human progress has been sifted from the dust of centuries by the Persian expedition of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago. James Henry Breasted, director, January 22 made public reports of the discoveries prepared by Dr. Ernest Herzfeld, field director of the expedition.

At Persepolis, ancient Persian capital, the expedition has uncovered a series of magnificent sculptures. Within two miles of the ruins of the ancient palaces, which were burned in 330 B. C. by Alexander the Great during a debauch, the expedition found a stone age village of approximately 4,000 B. C. in a state of preservation surpassing previous discoveries of the period.

"The discovery at Persepolis is one of the greatest and most important in archeological research," Dr. Breasted said. "There never has been any discovery like it anywhere in western Asia, since excavations began there 100 years ago."

The expedition found a series of wall relief sculptures five or six feet high and totaling almost a thousand feet in length. The carvings include a series of historical inscriptions of importance. The walls of the palaces, overlooking a wide plain circled by mountains, were of sun dried brick, while the colonnade halls, windows, and great doors were of black stone, polished like ebony.

On these black stones is carved a magnificent conclave of Persian and Median officials, with the emperor drawn up to receive ambassadors of twenty-one subject nations. Execution of the scenes, Dr. Herzfeld reported, displays remarkable beauty and detail.

"Such remains," Dr. Breasted said, "disclose to us the earliest prehistoric ancestry of the civilization which reached its culmination in the palaces at Persepolis. The evidences of the intervening evolution are plentifully preserved all around Persepolis."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

THREE DECADES IN THE PHILIPPINES

"The Evangelical Movement in the Philippines is little more than thirty years old; yet few similar movements have made such progress in the same length of time. Various liberalizing influences, the decadent state church, the evangelical preaching, and the arrival of Protestant America had so prepared the people that many were ready to accept the new faith when it was first presented to them. Through its history Christianity has always gained its first adherents from the lower classes, and then gradually reached the upper classes. So in the Philippines the original converts were for the most part barefoot peasants; but now we find evangelical Christians in every walk of life, and the conventions are composed of educated men and women using the English language. The evangelical movement is raising the moral standards of the Philippines. The 70,000 members of the Protestant Youth Movement pledge themselves to wage an aggressive warfare against all vice, ignorance, and social wrong. Although evangelical Christians number less than 150,000, their influence upon the national life, like that of the Huguenots in France, is out of all proportion to their numerical strength. The Evangelical Movement has a mission to other peoples of the Far East as well as to the Filipinos. Through their geographical proximity to China and Japan and their close trade relations with these countries, as well as the presence among them of 7,000 Japanese and 60,000 Chinese, most of whom have married Filipino wives, the Christian Filipinos are in a position to exert a far-reaching influence upon these peoples by making the Philippines a truly Christian land and a 'beacon light to the teeming millions of Asia.'"—Henry W. Munger in Missions.

INTERESTING DOCUMENT

One of the most interesting documents the Editor has read recently is a summary of the report made by Samuel G. Inman, secretary, to the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America. This group seeks to unify the Protestant approach to Latin-American countries and, considering the resources placed at its disposal, has made splendid progress. Mr. Inman, whose knowledge of Latin-American affairs is such that some of his writings have been translated in Spain, points out that the present economic crisis and the communism of Russia are both making for chaos in the countries to the south of us, and that unless there is an intensive evangelistic campaign made by the Church it will be too late to check this tendency. But he then proceeds to point out a very encouraging and little known fact, namely, that the communism of Latin America, when native and not imported, is not antagonistic to religion. He lists three types of communism in South America that are religious, and names a radical leader in Peru who was converted to Russian communism but afterward repudiated it because of its lack of idealism and religion.—Christian Advocate (Pacific).

TWO MORE PUBLICATIONS STOPPED

Again last week came disappointing news to the effect that two important and influential publications would suspend. One is The United States Daily, edited by David Lawrence at Washington and offering to the public complete and wholly impartial news about national affairs. The paper has been published for seven years, but is now forced out of business. The other is our official monthly, The Presbyterian Magazine. It has rendered a fine service and never better than under the brilliant, progressive editorship of Dr. Hanzsche. It has provided for thoroughly interested Presbyterians just about what The National Daily provided for thinking patriots; yet the cost has been so heavy that discontinuance seemed inevitable. The official statement is to the effect that the church, which means the benevolence boards, is having to furnish this year $18,000 for the deficit of The Magazine in addition to the considerable sums expended on it through paid advertising. Once more the question arises, how is a great church to move forward with anything like solidarity unless its members keep informed concerning its plans, programs and projects?—The Presbyterian Advance.

WORLD BAPTISTS TOTAL NEARLY ELEVEN MILLION

The returns to the Baptist World Alliance, up to December 31, 1932, shows that there are 656,669 members in Europe; 395,603 in Asia; 87,840 in Africa; 9,587,826 in North America; 70,746 in Central America and West Indies; 45,426 in South America; 38,169 in Australia and New Zealand; making a total of 10,882,279 members throughout the world. The church membership shows an increase over the past year of 190,000.—Selected.

Light, God's Gift to a Ruined World

DARKNESS A JUDGMENT

Following the great preadamic judgment which, as we have seen, left the earth waste and empty, "darkness was upon the face of the deep." Darkness is a frequent accompaniment of the great judgments of God. When, in Pharaoh's days, judgment fell upon Egypt, great darkness covered the land for three days,—darkness so dense that it could be felt, but could not be pierced by any light known to man (Exod. 10:21-23). When the awful judgment for the sins of men fell upon the Son of God, at noonday "there was darkness over all the land" (Matt. 27:45). When the terrible judgments that are to close the present age, come sweeping in, "the sun shall be turned into darkness and the moon into blood" (Joel 2:30). John, the Revelator, confirms the prophecy of Joel, assuring us that when the Antichrist comes to the zenith of his power, suddenly "his kingdom" shall "be full of darkness," wherein men shall gnaw their tongues for pain. The "angels that sinned" (II Peter 2:4) and "kept not their first estate" are even now "in everlasting chains under darkness" (Jude 6); while for all mankind that walks "in the way of Cain" there is "reserved the blackness of darkness forever" (Jude 11, 13). Yes, the very "darkness" that was "upon the face of the deep" is strongly indicative of an appalling judgment that closed the days of the whole preadamic race.

Sin culminates not only in spiritual darkness, but, far more terrible, it brings spiritual darkness to its victims. How often do we hear some unbeliever say: "I can't see it! This being 'washed in the blood of the Lamb, sounds like foolish superstition to me! Those Bible tales, such as that of Jonah, and of Adam's rib, and of the sun and the moon standing still, are utterly ridiculous! I repeat, the Bible may be true, but I can't see it!" Of course he can't see it, because of the darkness that engulfs every lost soul, no matter how much he may believe himself to be walking in exceeding great light. It is said that a scoffing infidel once said to Mr. Moody: "Mr. Moody, I cannot believe your Bible. That rib story about Adam, that fish story about Jonah, that barrel story about Elijah, is utter foolishness to me." "Well," said Mr. Moody, "at least you and the Bible agree on one thing; for it is written: 'But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned'" (I Cor. 2:14).

What a mistake it is to permit your faith to waver, because some Einstein, or some Edison, or some Burbank, or some other intellectual scoffer "cannot see"! Especially since, as we have seen, the Word of God expressly states that a man who has not been born again "cannot receive the things of the Spirit of God, ... neither can he know them."

THE BENIGHTED EARTH—A TYPE

What a terrifying scene to contemplate! The face of the whole earth covered with one vast waste of tempest-tossed waves, rolling mountain high, beating each other into foam, boiling as if heated from hell beneath, and the whole covered with the utter blackness of utter darkness! An earth under judgment!

What a picture is all this of a lost soul, or of the soul of a lost world. Darkness and restlessness! "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked" (Isa. 57:20). Dark, troubled waters, ever a Scriptural type of the unregenerate nations of the earth. "The waters which thou sawest ... are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues" (Rev. 17:15). And, even now, as we write these words, "There is sorrow on the sea; it cannot be quiet" (Jer. 49:23).

LIGHT, THE GIFT OF GOD

Yes, "the earth became waste and empty; and darkness was upon the face of the deep" (Gen. 1:2). Then Omnipotence, Who in the midst of judgment always remembers mercy, moved: "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Light be! and light was!" (Gen. 1:2, 3). And instantly, upon this, the first recorded utterance of the Almighty God, light, clear, glorious, refreshing—shot across the whole expanse of the inky deep, and as the midnight passed, there rolled along in its path through the heavens, an earth that sparkled and glittered and flashed beneath the sun as one mighty sapphire, wondrous to behold!

How like this is the work of God upon the benighted, restless soul of a man. Without God, he only "casts up mire and dirt." He gropes about in spiritual night, and seeks in his own wisdom for light. And, as he gropes, the darkness only deepens. The voices which he sometimes hears, promising now and then a bit of light, prove to be only the voices of lying spirits, themselves shuddering in their world of darkness. But God, in the midst of judgment, ever remembers mercy, and the grace of God appears. A cry for light ascends from that soul, lost in the night. The Spirit of God moves—broods over that soul. God says: "Let there be light." And, suddenly, in a blaze of glory which blinds the physical, but leads into a spiritual realm of sapphire splendor, that soul kneels to cry: "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Ever remember that light is not an attainment of the lost souls of a ruined world. Light is the gift of God. "No man can say that Jesus is Lord but by the Holy Ghost" (I Cor. 12:3). Faith is the gift of God. And the gift of God is not for those who have set their hearts to do evil, and to refuse to "be persuaded though one rose from the dead" (Luke 16:31). The Spirit of God broods over the honest seeker who desires Philip (Acts 8:31), and who, when light breaks in, responds to that light: "See, here is water! What doth hinder me to be baptized?" (Acts 8:36). The "words" of God are sent to every Cornelius who fears and fasts and prays in the darkness (Acts 10). "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine" (John 7:17).

THE THIEF ON THE CROSS

Two thieves were hung on crosses, one on each side of the Lord of glory. Both were dwellers in the darkness. Both scoffed and cursed when first they hung there. Suddenly, a wondrous thing happened! Was some one standing before them teaching or preaching? No! Everything tended to harden even more their hearts and increase even more their darkness. But, the one thief suddenly changed his attitude of heart. Instantly, God in the midst of judgment, remembered mercy. The Spirit of God moved! The voice of God spoke: "Let there be light!" The thief cried: "Lord!" Faith, the gift of God, was his! A light broke in upon the soul which no physical agony of darkness could dispel—the light of joy and peace and love. "Today thou shalt be with me in paradise." In paradise today? Then nothing else mattered!

Even so, "Seek and ye shall find."

"For God, Who commanded light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (II Cor. 4:6). Hallelujah! Long Beach, California.

"If the Foundations Be Destroyed, What Can the Righteous Do?"--Part IV

By Melvin Grove Kyle

(8) Now at last we have been able to read the date on that scroll of history. It is not a certain year B. C., for they never dated things that way in those days, but it is a very definite and reliable date nevertheless. The date was first read distinctly in our excavations at Kirjath-sepher (Bibliotheca Sacra, 1926, 1928; Sunday School Times, same years). When we opened the great chariot gate of the city on the east side, we found within at a certain level in the debris a great layer of ashes and charcoal, indubitable evidence of a great burning; the city had been destroyed. Who destroyed it? An examination of the pottery was most illuminating and conclusive. Below that level, before that time, there were the strange shapes and unusual decorations of the imported Cypro-phoenician wine pitchers and similar jugs for perfumes, and Mycenaean stirrup vases, unmistakable evidence of the Late Bronze Age, and all below that nothing but Bronze Age pottery, from Canaanite times. Undoubtedly up to the time of that great fire, the Canaanite held the city. Immediately above that layer of ashes, without any neutral layer of dust to denote a time when the city was unoccupied, but at once, there was the utterly different and simpler pottery of the Early Iron Age, garishly decorated in imitation of Philistine pottery. It was, at that time and ever afterward to the top of the mound, Israelite pottery. Evidently after that burning, the Israelites held the city down to the end of Israelite national history. And have we not already learned that the Israelites lost their arts and crafts in the wilderness and learned from the Philistines? What a tell-tale layer of ashes! The complete change in civilization shows that there was a conquest, a foreign conquest. The Israelite character of the pottery ever afterwards show that it was an Israelite conquest, and the continued holding of the city to the end of their history shows that this was The Conquest and not any later one. Then it is to be noted that all below that layer of ashes was of the Bronze Age, and all above that layer was of the Iron Age. Undoubtedly then the Conquest was just at the beginning of the Iron Age. Why so sudden? How possible so immediate a change? Well, how long did it take America to make the change from the Horse Age to the Automobile Age? Not twenty-five years. When the auto became cheap and abundant it drove the horse out. So when iron became abundant and was cheaper, it very quickly drove out the expensive bronze.

(9) But why the change just at this juncture in Israelite and Canaanite history? Only about twenty-five miles southwest of where we were at work discovering the incoming of Israel at Kirjath-sepher, Sir Flinders Petrie at the same time was uncovering the Philistine remains at Gerar. The most amazing find was the iron smelting furnaces which the Philistines at that time introduced into Gerar. Where they learned the secret, and still more where they got the ore, is still a mystery, but the smelting furnaces explain the sudden change from bronze to iron. It was just at that time that Israel came in for the Conquest. Now when was that? I have said that no dates "B. C." are ever found in that age, before the birth of Christ. But the date can be made out from the pottery in comparison with Egyptian and Greek remains found in the layers of debris. The date can be determined to within about fifty years, a possible error of twenty-five years on either side of a point. The best estimate for the date is about 1275 before the birth of our Lord.

Here is a cultural date for the Conquest and so for the exodus about fifty years earlier (Kirjath-sepher was taken probably about ten years (?) after Jericho). There has long been a dispute about the place in Egyptian history at which the Exodus took place. Most Egyptologists believe it took place under Menepthah the successor of Rameses the Great, who was the builder of Pithom and Raameses. Some, especially certain critics, insist most vociferously upon an earlier date in the reign of Amenhotep IV, and that Thothmes the Great was the Pharaoh of the oppression. There are difficulties, no matter which horn of the dilemma is taken, but this cultural date of the Conquest found at Kirjath-sepher is decisive, and the chronologers will have to adjust themselves to the facts. By no possibility can the beginning of the Iron Age in Palestine be thrust back to the middle of the fifteenth century B. C. That difference of opinion of three hundred years for the date of the Exodus has been the great disturbing element in all calculations of Old Testament chronology. If it be said that pottery chronology is not exact, with a possible error of fifty years, it certainly is a great improvement over an error of three hundred years. In any case it must be remembered that these errors are not errors in the Bible, but errors in the calculation of dates which are not given in the Bible. Again the pottery is the touchstone which tests and determines the time of Biblical events.

(10) Moving backward along the course of history, the next great landmark for the archaeologist is the Great Break, the something that happened in the Jordan Valley which put an end to all civilization in the lower part of the Valley around the Cities of the Plain for twenty-five hundred years. The civilization of the Jordan Valley has been worked out by careful study of the pottery from the base of great Hermon away down to the Plain where stood Sodom and her allies. Everywhere appear the great ledge handles and the lug handles and the net decoration of the Early Bronze Age followed by the beautiful shapes and delicate pottery—I had almost said China-ware—and the imitation alabaster of the Middle Bronze Age, the mid-patriarchal times, and the importations and imitations of the Late Bronze Age at the end of which came Joshua and his host, all found regularly, except in one place. In the region of the Plain down below Jericho something happened. At the end of the Early Bronze Age, the time of Abraham and Lot, there is a great break. In 1924 the Xenia Seminary expedition to the Plain rode day after day for two weeks, around the Plain, up into the mountains, down the water-courses to the Sea, away to the lower end of the Plain; then dug down in the debris of later construction to virgin soil seeking that Early Bronze pottery to certify that the civilization of the days of Abraham and Lot was actually on the Plain. In all that search we found not only not a scrap of that civilization, but not a scrap of any kind of civilization earlier than Arabian, Crusader and a little Byzantine; nothing within twenty-five hundred years of the time of Abraham and Lot.

Then, at last, away up on the mountain-side we found the High Place, the Great High Place of the Plain—manifestly of the first importance from the elaborate defenses provided—and beside it graves, and from the graves the great pottery of the Early Bronze Age, assuring that the civilization, the ancient civilization of the Cities of the Plain which long have hidden their shame beneath the overflow of the Sea, was of the time to which it is ascribed by the account in Genesis. Then there dawned upon us the significance of the two weeks' fruitless search over the Plain; that region has no history from the destruction of the Cities to the end of Bible history; it was so utterly destroyed that for two millenniums and a half the place was uninhabitable. As there was no civilization, of course, we found no trace of any! Here was the Great Break, as plainly written in the pottery as in the leaves of Holy Writ. The pottery of Bab ed-Drac (the Great High Place) is all older than the eighteenth century B. C., at the latest, since none of the characteristic Middle Bronze or Hyksos types appear, and everything is "first Semitic." The date we have fixed for the catastrophe of Sodom and Gomorrah, about the early part of the eighteenth century B. C., seems to be exceedingly probable. In any case, there was a great convulsion of nature which destroyed the towns of the Southern Ghor, and made an ineffaceable impression upon the survivors!*

(11) And now that Abraham has come upon the scene, we must seek that home town of Ur, the domicile of the Abram who at direction of God went out "not knowing whither he went" and set agoing all that wonderful train of providential events which we have been tracing. But who can tell that story? It has become so wonderful that the men of sober science doing the work have almost lost their heads in their efforts to give adequate account of the wonders they have found. Though some have questioned the exact identification of Ur, and it may be that it is not positive, yet that question scarcely affects the significance of the remarkable things found. If they be not from Ur, they are from the same region, represent the same civilization, and go back equally far beyond the time of Abram and reveal to us that ancient world for as long before Abram as Abram was before our Lord or we are since his time. So insistent has been the assertion that the earliest times must represent a very crude state of culture, that we must all confess to some feeling of disappointed expectation to say the least, when the civilization of Abram's day turns out to be quite comparable to the marvels supplied from the sands of Egypt, and we stand

JESUS MINISTERING TO JEWS AND GENTILES

(Lesson for April 2)

Lesson Text: Mark 7:24-37; Golden Text: John 10:16

Daily Readings and Suggestions

Ceremonial Defilement. Mark 7:1-13

The Jews were far more concerned with keeping the outside of the cup clean than with the contents of the cup. They paid much more attention to what some leader said about God and godly things than to what God himself had said. There are churches and individuals just like that today: more concerned with following their founder's interpretation of Christianity than with following the plain teachings of the gospel itself; giving intellectual assent to the pronouncements of this or that great teacher, or even to the great doctrines of the Bible itself, yet forgetful of the real significance thereof. Let us ever be on our guard against this type of hypocrisy, ever watchful of the things which really defile.

TUESDAY

Real Defilement. Mark 7:14-23

The whole race of men had become defiled by sin; their hearts became warped and twisted, and out of them flowed shameful deeds that separated them forever from a holy God. It was to cleanse them of this, the real defilement, that Jesus came; it was this that concerned him most. Yet strangely enough, it did not greatly concern the Jews, and it does not seem to greatly concern many today. Pray that those who profess to be Christians may purge themselves from this real defilement, and so become meet for the Master's use—vessels which shall carry the cleansing Water of Life to a sin-defiled world.

WEDNESDAY

Ministering to Gentiles. Mark 7:24-30

"Regardless of race, color, or previous condition of servitude"—so runs the historic phrase granting liberty to every American citizen. The ministry of Jesus was even broader: it was for "whosoever." It included this Greek woman, it includes you and me, and it also includes countless thousands throughout the world who are still waiting for their liberty, not yet knowing that One came nearly two thousand years ago, that they might be free. Let us read John 17:18. Then let us pray.

THURSDAY

Ministering to Jews. Mark 7:31-37

Back in his own land again, Jesus continued his ministry, directing the attention of his hearers to God and his power, through his miracles of healing. This time it was a Jew whose deaf ears were made to hear, and whose halting tongue was made to speak. Christians still have a definite ministry among the Jews of our day, and may have the joy of making ears that have long been deaf hear the voice of their Messiah, of making tongues that have long been silent to praise the name of the Holy One of Israel. Remember this work often in your devotions.

FRIDAY

Ministering to a Multitude. Matt. 15:32-39

To feed so many with only a few small loaves and fishes was truly a great miracle, but the greatest miracle of all must ever be the way in which Jesus cares for the least needs of his weakest ones. He would not send them away hungry, lest some might faint by the wayside. He is just the same today: as he beholds a world that is hungry unto starvation, he is not willing that any should perish, but commands us: "Give ye them to eat." The tragedy is that so many starving men refuse the Bread of Life.

SATURDAY

The Jews made the mistake of seeking after the things that Jesus could do for their bodies while they overlooked the greater things he wanted to do for their souls. This great invitation is universal in its appeal: who is there among men who is not heavy laden with the sorrows and troubles of this life, sickness, death and the fear of death for our loved ones? To all such does our Lord appeal. Let us praise him for burdens eased and for the rest he has brought to the souls of men.

SUNDAY

Perfected Ministry. Isa. 11:1-10

Much publicity has been given in recent days to the heartless greed, graft, and corruption of many in high positions. Instead of caring for the interests of their people they have been lining their own pockets. From such abuses our hearts turn to this picture of our Lord's future ministry among men as unto a hope that is blessed indeed. Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly! The whole creation groaneth for thee!

Can Endeavorers be Trusted?

By W. H. Schaffer

This question may be resented by some Christian Endeavorers. We anticipate that "Why certainly, Christian Endeavorers can be trusted," comes the quick reply. But consider a moment, how about that pledge you signed when you joined the Christian Endeavor Society? Are you living as true to that pledge as you promised? Do you remember now that you promised to attend ALL the regular services of the church? That included the mid-week service also and now you confess that you don't know what the pastor has been talking about in the mid-week services nor what the "faithful few" have been praying for. Does your church not have a mid-week service? Wouldn't it be a fine thing for the Christian Endeavorers to start one? It has been done other places with much success and we are sure you can make a success too if you try.

Now, you see, if your Christian Endeavor pledge has not been faithfully kept, it may be hard to convince some folks that you can be trusted in other things. But after all we believe you mean well, only you have been a bit careless. Perhaps it is just a case of putting the call of the world before the call of the Lord. If I am wrong in this, just come right out and tell me.

Then again, remember, you promised to support the Church as far as you were able. We are well aware of the financial conditions prevailing at present, but on the other hand, how many Endeavorers have you seen during the past week spending nickles for candy and chewing gum, dimes for tobacco and dollars for gasoline, all of which were unnecessary. Now maybe you are beginning to see that the "poor face" you have been "pulling" about tithes and offerings for the Lord's work isn't going over so big—especially with the Lord!

This is a great day for the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, a great day in which to prove herself as the custodian of things worth while in this life and the only hope for the future. While material things are crashing down all about us and give us little if any hope, we can proclaim to the world, either by our spoken or living testimony, our faith in an Eternal Savior who is "the same yesterday, and today, and forever."

As Christian Endeavorers, your pastor will be delighted to accept your personal or collective offer to assist him in a continuous revival and evangelistic effort for lost souls.

First of all, we must be true to our pledge as Endeavorers to attend all the regular church services and thereby show our friends and community that our word can be trusted.

Secondly, we must be true to our pledge in our tithes and offerings to the Lord's work.

Thirdly, if we are intensely interested in the Lord's work we will make our Christian Endeavor Society a real force in evangelism not only in our local church but in our whole community.

WEST KITTANNING REVIVAL

For many years this community has not been so stirred spiritually as during the past few weeks. The Lord used Evangelist R. Paul Miller in an intensive campaign for lost souls, and West Kittanning experienced one of the greatest revivals in its history, 129 making a public stand for Christ.

The best of preparation possible was made. Cottage prayer meetings were held in twenty homes over a period of two weeks. Tracts were widely distributed. Lessons in personal work were given for the six mid-week services preceding the meeting. Before Brother Miller came, we held services every night for six nights, using different local ministers to bring the message. Then Brother Miller came on the scene, and took care of the meeting from February 21 to March 5. We had despaired of having a good meeting in only two weeks, but we found out the Lord does not always need the traditional three weeks we usually prefer for a real revival. The attendance was good every night, and during the last week we had to use extra chairs procured from several local undertaking establishments. Every night there was a prayer meeting for half an hour before the services, and we attribute the victory to the prayers of the earnest soul winners that met with us every night. One night we would pray for individuals in the community that had resisted the call of the gospel for many years. Then a few nights later we would see these same individuals come down the aisle to give their hearts to the Lord. One fine feature of the meeting was that so many men and boys took a stand for Christ. Brother Miller preached the gospel in a fearless manner, and his heart searching appeals brought many a church member to reconsecrate their lives to the Master. During the services, a young people's choir, hastily organized for the meeting, performed wonderfully, aiding the singing every night. Since the meeting, 25 of them have been formed into a regular choir and will sing Sunday nights. Much credit is due the music committee for the fine selections they had prepared. Special music was rendered every night, several other denominations lending us their musical talent during the meeting. The chairman of the music committee, Mrs. Howard Taylor, led the young people's choir. One that was at her post every night was the faithful pianist, Mrs. Wm. Lemmon.

A feature of the week-night services was the Question Box. Brother Miller was able through this box to settle many disputed questions with the Word of God, and also to defend the Brethren position on the Bible. Several delegations came from other churches. On the first Thursday a group came from the Brush Valley Brethren church, and another from the Center Hill Church of the Brethren.

The church has received a new vision of the challenge of the Christian faith. Personal work is still going on. The prayer meeting attendance jumped from 25 to almost a hundred since the services. Last Sunday 34 were baptized and 32 received as members of the church. Twenty-five of these were men and boys. Several whole families have been taken into the fellowship of the church, and another baptismal service will follow soon. We covet for every church in the brotherhood a similar revival. May we work and pray—till he comes!

ROBERT D. CREES,
Kittanning, Pennsylvania.

THE REVIVAL AT WEST KITTANNING

Eleven years ago we came to West Kittanning to hold a meeting. Then our dear departed Brother Marcus A. Witter was pastor here. We shall never forget the happy days of soul-winning we spent with him then. Nor shall we forget the sad day when we were called upon to give the message at his funeral the day we laid him away in Philadelphia not long after. The years are slipping by. It won't be long till we shall hear his welcome voice again.

It was a greatly changed congregation and situation we met on this occasion. So many new faces were now making up the congregation. Mere children were now grown and carrying offices in the organized church. The whole complexion of circumstances was altered with an entirely different industrial situation all around. But the Lord hadn't changed, and the hearts of men still needed the Savior's grace. Whether men ride in chariots or airplanes makes no difference in the need of the human heart. So, we had a revival!

Brother Robert Crees is pastor of this, now swiftly growing, church. It is his first pastorate, but he is doing a fine work here already. His wife is doing a good work among the young folks, and is proving a splendid helper in all his work. Brother Crees has the vision that is necessary to accomplish a great work here, and we believe that he will, through prayer, and a great passion for the souls of men, achieve high things to the praise of his Lord. Brother Crees is well liked both in and outside the church. He stands well in the community, and this means much to any work.

We believe that the men of the church are gaining the vision of what a church should be in character and work, which was so greatly lacking when I was there before. For this we praise God. Strong churches can only be achieved by the aid of strong laymen with great hearts, great love for Christ, great sacrifice, and great humility.

We could also discern a deeper experience with the Lord among the members. There was more separation from the world, more conscience about the right and wrong of things. It is the worldly, inconsistent church member, that is the worst enemy Christ has.

So we thank God that the church at Kittanning is on its way to greater days for the glory of God. There is a wonderful field here for a future if the Lord tarries. This is the only church among a community of two thousand people. Talk about a real opportunity, here it is. May the Lord enable these dear folks to rise up and avail themselves of it for his sake. It is only on their knees that this can be done. It is a kneeling people only who can see God and experience growth in faith. A people that do not pray much are always filled with fears, and are overwhelmed with difficulties so as to cripple any initiative that leads to progress.

We greatly enjoyed our home with the pastor, his wife, and mother. This is a truly happy home where Christ dwells. We rejoiced in the sweet spirit that dwells in their hearts. The memory of those happy days shall long remain with me. The hearts of the people were open to us and we were regaled with their rich hospitality. It was fine.

The wealth of young people who are now a large part of this work makes up the assurance that the future of this church will surely be great. Their pastor is well aware of this and is doing all he can to win and hold their love and service for Christ. The young folks like their young pastor and will follow him we are sure.

The Lord gave us a fine meeting and a shower of blessings for which we praise him. For two weeks only, we feel that this is about the largest meeting we ever held anywhere. To him be all the glory.

R. PAUL MILLER.

GOSHEN, INDIANA

January 5 of this year marked the beginning of a two weeks' revival effort, which was most wonderfully successful, in the church at Goshen, Indiana. Stress was laid, during these meetings, on a revival among our own church members and from that standpoint we have been very well repaid for our efforts.

Our pastor, Rev. Whetstone, who came to us from Waterloo, Iowa, last September, conducted his own services, as has been his custom in past meetings of this sort. Rev. and Mrs. Richer assisted in the capacity of song leader and accompanist, and too much can't be said in appreciation of their fine work.

The attendance at all services was fine, the smallest crowd numbering about 350 and the largest, which filled our auditorium the last night of the meetings, numbering about 850. The services were featured from time to time with delegations from the surrounding Brethren churches, the Nappanee group being the largest. There were about 150 people in that group.

There were 38 who came forward during these meetings, 33 by confession and 5 by relation. Of the group that accepted Christ, 31 were young people, a record that we are proud of. With this fine group of young folks entering the church, our local Christian Endeavor Society boasts of a membership which is 100% Christian. There is not one member of this society who does not own Christ as his or her Savior. The revival effort was featured by the work of the young people all during the two weeks. Every night before the service, a group of from 12 to 20 would gather in a room by themselves and pray for the Lord to enter the hearts of all those who did not know him. The choir was three-fourths young people, and as a result of their association with Rev. Richer, who is a fine director, a young people's choir has been organized. Two male quartettes and a mixed quartette of young people are in action now in the service of the church and Sunday school.

Rev. Whetstone's fine messages were well received and very much appreciated by all who heard him. His plain Bible preaching and straight-from-the-shoulder sermons were a great factor in the revival of our church membership. Both our church and Sunday school attendance have been on the upturn since early in 1932, until today we have fine audiences at the worship services, and, as an indication of our growth in the Sabbath school, our attendance for the last five Sundays has averaged 525 each Sunday. The last Sunday, March 12, was marked by the largest Sunday school attendance since our pastor has been here. There were 657 in attendance at that time.

The young people of the church, one of whom the writer is proud to be, learned a powerful lesson in the results of prayer. We feel that our prayer meetings were of immeasurable value to the services during those two weeks. We do know that the large number of young people who are church members and church-goers are responsible for the conversion of one young lady. In her own words: "I never knew that so many fine young men and girls attended church anywhere as they do here." If only other young people who are not church-goers could see the boys and girls who do attend, more of the youth could be reached. We as young people are thanking the Lord that the example we gave to that girl, led to her salvation.

The adults of the church also worked in a fine manner during the meetings. It was their fine attendance which more than helped to make the services a success.

With the full cooperation of the young people, and adults with Rev. Whetstone, we feel that we are going on to conquer new heights for Christ.

LLOYD CARPENTER,
Chairman Publicity Committee.

A "WITNESSING" REVIVAL AT CARLETON

We are happy to report concerning our "Witnessing Revival" which began on February 26 and closed March 13. And yet, we cannot always say just when the Spirit of the Lord "begins" to work and when he "ceases" to move folks for the Lord, so we habitually think of "dates" when we mention anything special or unusual.

For some time previous we tried to lead the thoughts of our people toward a goal in religious activity. So on February 26, we opened the campaign in the morning on "Repentance and Prayer"—both so necessary in beginning the Christian life. In the evening our twin brother, who is a business man in Kansas City, Missouri—but finds time to speak for his Lord on Sundays, was with us for the evening services. We had a PACKED house too, and delegations from other churches round about. Brother's message was on "What's Around the Corner?" It dealt with world conditions, prophecies concerning the end of the age, the coming of the Lord and the return of the Jews to Palestine—World Signs, economic conditions, etc. He held his audience in a grip of rapt attention not often seen and felt in these days.

Rev. A. R. Staley, of Dallas Center, Iowa, came on Monday and that evening he delivered his first message to a splendid "Monday night" crowd. He soon impressed his hearers as a man of God and one who understood the Scripture. Folks began coming forward the third or fourth night, and before the week was over eleven expressed their desire to unite with the churches. Others came the second week; the attendance was exceptionally good throughout. On the closing Sunday we held FOUR preaching services,—at eleven to a full house, at 2, to men, at 3 to women and the regular evening service.

Monday evening Rev. Staley gave a short message on "The Meaning of Church Membership," after which we held baptismal services. Fourteen received the holy ordinance, followed by confirmation and reception of members. Then after we dismissed the audience, conviction had so settled upon one who had been raised in the faith of another church, that she felt she could not leave till she had been baptized, and because of her decision, another woman of another faith said if we would go over home and get her husband to come with her she would be baptized too. So in our "after service"—when everybody else had gone home but about a dozen or more, we again entered the waters and baptized two more, and confirmed them, and the husband of one of these came by relation, as he had at one time belonged here.

The final results of the union meeting in our little city are: Twelve have been received into the Brethren church; six into the Methodist and one to the Church of the Brethren; one unclassified. One unusual feature was that we baptized by trine immersion the one who will go to the Church of the Brethren, and four who went to the M. E. church—these last four we "confirmed" just as we did the ones who were received into the Brethren church. That is cooperation and fellowship not often seen in years gone by. Since the two churches in Carleton have been having union worship services—30 months,—we have administered trine baptism to at least 14 who joined the M. E. church and at two or three Communion services we have had eight or ten ministers and laymen take part in them. So if we want to go to heaven and enjoy the fellowship there, we must "act" like it here through cooperation and fellowship together.

Rev. Staley is a powerful Gospel preacher. Fundamentally, he is sound and his theology will stand the test. He won the good will of all who heard him, and he now has many friends who will not soon forget his helpfulness and inspiration. We call him "our boy," for eighteen years ago we baptized him, assisted in his ordination to the ministry, and we loaded our goods into the same car and journeyed to Ashland Seminary together and spent four years there. These years of fellowship are all the more secure now, for this last revival was our fifth one together, in various states. The Lord has been good to us both, we are sure.

The offerings were beyond our expectations, considering the closed bank situation and economic conditions. Our brother went home a happy man in more ways than one. Praise the Lord.

W. R. DEETER.

GEORGETOWN, DELAWARE AND ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Dear reader:

As the District Evangelist of Eastern Pennsylvania, the call came to the undersigned, "Come Down to Help Us." And I confess it to be a treat to work with Brother I. D. Bowman in a service. May I say, that, Brother Bowman had been at work in the Mt. Olivet Brethren church of Georgetown, Delaware for ten days before the District Evangelist came down, and the people from that section of Delaware had enjoyed the sermons of Brother Bowman immensely. Many of them stated, "We never heard such prophetic sermons or lectures in all our lives, and the way he portrays the 'Second Coming of Christ', is far better and a fuller Bible description than we hear in lecture courses at the different Bible conferences." We, who know Brother Bowman, know that this record is true of him in most of the Brethren churches.

It was a great joy to follow with some evangelistic sermons in a path so well laid for an evangelist. Our stay in Delaware was from March 4th to the 10th, preaching each night and Sunday afternoon. The two last days—Thursday and Friday, God blessed the Word with eight confessions. One of these was taken in the home of one family, due to the man's health. May I refer to a very touching incident? There was one man for whom prayer and tears had been shed as well as much preaching and personal work done during the last eleven or twelve years. When he came forward, there were tears of joy and praises unto God by many of the church members. Even the pastor, Brother Bowman, was among these mentioned. Brother Bowman continued the service over Sunday and I hope that many more came to confess Jesus as their Lord.

As for Allentown, Pennsylvania, you have already read the report from our secretary, Mrs. Kamoie, and I will say that God's grace has visited us and granted us souls for our Master. We have two more to be baptized March 19th, making a total of sixteen received into the church during 1933.

While the pastor was in Delaware March 4th to 10th, Brother E. E. Fehnel preached here over Sunday, March 5th and one came forward for whom we praise God. Then there is a young lady of my Sunday school class who has confessed Jesus as her Savior. The same would have been baptized in January, but our baptistry was not ready for service until some time in February, and when we were ready to use our rebuilt baptistry this lady was away from town. Some of our good members gave the money for the materials and we have always been fortunate in having men who could do the work. Brother George Silberman and his son Russel, spent the most of four days and Brother W. H. Schaffer gave most of two days, and now we have a fine baptistry which will last as long as the church building.

I also want to mention that Brother Fehnel has been a wonderful help to me while in this city. I could not have been so free to go out to preach if it had not been for his kindness in substituting for me. The people here and in the Third church of Philadelphia speak very highly of his sermons, and the Sunday school is doing well under his superintendency.

The Christian Endeavor, under the leadership of Carrol Parks in 1932 and under the leadership of James Huffert this year, has gone forward from a number of about twenty to eighty-five. "Praise ye the Lord." The first mentioned young man is now working with Sister Iva Silberman in the promotion of the Junior C. E. and both are doing fine.

Brethren, I thank God for these fine people which we have in Allentown. Some thought this the most discouraging place on earth, but it is the best place for a man who seeks a closer fellowship with God. The Allentown church will hold its thirty-fifth Anniversary on Sunday, May the 15th. There will be an all-day service. Services at the following hours: Sunday school at 9:15 A. M.; Morning worship at 10:30; Young People's program at 2 P. M.; Evening service at 7:30, evangelistic sermon. Full program and speakers will be announced in a later Evangelist. Basket dinner, 12:30-1:30.

We will be glad for the presence of all who can come. Come, even if you have no basket dinner. Such as we have, we will share with you.

Pastor S. E. CHRISTIANSEN.

PORTIS, KANSAS

I enjoyed that short article by Brother Ashman, entitled, "Hold the fort for I am coming." I am glad he did not say "hold on to the fort," as so many seem to think, for I am persuaded that holding forts is more than any one man's job in these days. It is going to require the united efforts of the church, coming forth with the best she has. And that is not all, these men and women who come forth need the whole equipment, a piece or two of the armor will prove inadequate. It is not enough just to stand, we will have to withstand. If Christ so FREELY gave his life, what are we willing to give for his cause—the Church to which he has entrusted the GOSPEL. If I have not misjudged my people in Portis, many of them will go down in the battle before they will surrender the fort into the hands of the enemy. God grant that it may be so.

I scarcely know where to begin with our news as it has been quite a while since we have written. Suppose I begin with our District conference which was held at Portis last fall. We did enjoy having the brethren from the other parts of our field with us. They gave us much encouragement to press on. We perhaps did the unusual thing, we fed our delegates at the restaurant and gave our women the benefit of the conference. Aside from the ministers in our district bringing helpful messages, Prof. Stuckey and Dr. Bell added their splendid contributions and in all we had a worthwhile conference.

The writer went shortly after the conference to both Mulvane and Fort Scott for a meeting which has already been given publicity through the paper. Since that time we have confined ourselves to our local tasks. We do not have any flourishing reports to make at this time, and the best we can say is, we have about held our own. There has been so much sickness these last few months which has held our average attendance down, and that usually affects the offerings as well. But in spite of all that, I believe the amount of our indebtedness can be designated at this time with two figures.

Brother H. H. Rowsey, pastor of our church at Falls City, Nebraska, was with us for a two weeks' meeting closing Sunday evening, February 26. He was to be here on Monday evening the 13th, but about 6 P. M. he called me saying he had car trouble and could not reach us that night, and naturally our people were somewhat surprised and perhaps disappointed to see nothing but the "old broom" in its usual place. But Brother Rowsey made up for that when he got on the job. We thought we were about through with the "flu" and other sickness, but about the time our meeting started, many of our people seemed to have a relapse and were kept away from the meeting for a week or more. However, the attendance gained until the last week the house was pretty well filled—and a full house the closing night. The sad thing about many of our meetings, I find, is that so many we would like to reach give the things that affords worldly pleasure the first place. But the seed has been sown and we hope to reap it in the near future. Brother Rowsey worked hard; he talked each evening to the boys and girls, then gave the Scripture lesson by pictures, after which he brought a short but interesting and helpful message. Aside from the regular services we made nearly 150 calls within those two weeks. We enjoyed the fellowship with Brother Rowsey and he made for himself many friends while in our midst. May the Lord bless him and his people.

The writer expects to be with Brother Rowsey and his people at Falls City, Nebraska for a two weeks' meeting, closing with Easter, and we solicit your prayers in our behalf.

SPECIAL MEETINGS AT PORTIS, KANSAS

I had the happy privilege of working with the Brethren at Portis, from February 14th through the 26th. I say, happy privilege, for any faithful minister would be made happy to see the intense interest in the Word, the deep interest in spiritual things and the efforts to be of service, which I found in many of the homes. Even the church building was cared for with as much concern as many mothers give to their babes. And why shouldn't this be true, when a clean, comfortable, well ventilated and attractive building is such a help to the Lord's work? It was a real pleasure to hold meetings in this building, and to have fellowship and friendship with the faithful at this place.

The interest was not what it should have been, until the middle of the second week. As is usually true, the Devil was very busy. And what a tragedy it is that so many professing Christians allow him to work through them. Our work was principally with those who were already members of the church, most of the messages were entirely for them, and our visiting, with one or two exceptions, was in the homes of those who were members. And we did much visiting, being on the go every afternoon and many of the mornings.

My home while there was with Brother and Sister Clarence Aikens, and they entertained me royally. Every day the hospitality of other homes was extended, and, if anything, they surpassed the famous hospitality of my native Old Virginia. At the close of the evening services we had mental, physical and spiritual refreshments with the Cooks. As we lunched we talked of the problems of the day, and asked for God's benediction upon the efforts of the day, and guidance for the morrow.

Brother Cook is a hard worker, and his work is surely making an impression upon the community as well as the church. Not only a worker, but a man of prayer and so rightfully gave it a prominent place. We are looking forward to the two weeks preceding Easter when he will be with us here at Falls City, Nebraska.

In preparation for his work with us, even before the Portis meetings, we started a class in "Evangelism" which is being taught by our efficient helper and fellow-minister, Brother J. G. Dodds and a class in "The Meaning of Church Membership," taught by the writer. The first class is to prepare the older folks of the church for definite work preceding and during the meetings. The latter class is to lead the children of the church to the definite step of making the good confession and taking an active place in the work of the church. Both classes have a large attendance and unusually good interest.

Already we feel the Spirit is working in a special way. Recently a grandmother in the 70's was baptized and we have the expressed desire to do likewise, from a grandfather, 86 years of age. Several children in the above mentioned class have already asked that they might be baptized. So we are looking forward to a great meeting, and ask the prayers of the "Evangelist" family in behalf of all our work here.

A Statement to the American People

The Washington Conference on Temperance and Prohibition, March 7, 8, 1933

We, the members of the Conference called by the representatives of more than thirty church bodies of the United States, assembled in Washington, D. C., this 7th day of March, 1933, hereby express to the American people our convictions in reference to the proposed repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

The 72nd Congress has submitted a proposal for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment by Conventions. No state is under any obligation to call such a Convention, but to the citizens in states arranging for such Conventions we make this declaration of what we conceive to be the issue involved.

We are unalterably opposed to the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and the legalization of the traffic in alcoholic liquor for beverage purposes in any form. Such traffic, whether legal or illegal, is contrary to the highest American ideals and detrimental to the physical, moral, social and spiritual well-being of the people and to the highest interests of the nation. If this traffic, now outlawed in our country, should be restored to a legal status in accordance with the repeal proposal now pending in the states, it would throw wide open the door to a return of the saloon, an institution which even the most ardent friends of liquor declare to be a gigantic evil and which none of them would dare to defend. Our homes would be subjected to an invasion of liquor advertising through the secular press, the radio, and other advertising agencies. Neither childhood nor youth could be safeguarded against its baneful influence. No state could set up any effective barriers against publicity methods of the present day high-pressure salesmanship, nor could any state which elects to maintain prohibition adequately prevent an inflow of liquor from wet states. We hold it violative of the true spirit of organized government to protect by law a business which prospers on the downfall of its patrons.

National prohibition means the outlawry of the beverage liquor traffic. It is the most effective method of dealing with this age-long evil. In spite of the campaign of opposition and misrepresentation and nullification persistently carried on, we believe it has been better observed and better enforced than has any law ever devised to regulate the liquor traffic. The glaring fact is that the opponents of prohibition offer no constructive plan for dealing with the traffic in the event of repeal, nor will repeal eliminate the abuses of which they complain. The proposed amendment submitted to the states, if ratified, will continue all the present abuses, plus the greater evils which invariably accompany the legalized traffic.

We therefore recommend:

1. That all prohibition and temperance organizations and all other organizations supporting the 18th Amendment and all persons opposed to the liquor traffic to unite in a nation-wide campaign under the leadership and direction of committees to be appointed according to the plan adopted by this conference for the purpose of preventing the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

2. That the friends of this cause supply a united campaign fund to be administered by this committee in reaching the more than 65,000,000 voters of the United States with the facts involved in this stupendous issue.

3. No amendment to the Federal Constitution has ever before been submitted to conventions in the states for ratification. No state is compelled to call a convention, or to incur the expense of an election and convention. Each state is left free to constitute such convention as it sees fit.

In states where conventions may be held the election of delegates should be by established districts, either by the same districts by which delegates to a convention to amend the state constitution are elected, or by the districts by which members of the General Assembly, or one branch thereof, are elected. This is the historic method of representation. The election of delegates by districts in which the candidates are known to the electorate tends to insure a larger vote and a more accurate expression of the sentiment of constituencies. We are therefore opposed to legislation which seeks, either through the gerrymandering of districts or by the election of delegates at large, to give undue advantage to great centers of population. We respectfully call attention to the platform of the dominant political party which pledged purely representation conventions in the states call to act solely on that proposal repeal.

The candidates for delegates should be selected without reference to party caucus or convention, upon their announced stand for or against the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. The ballot should be so worded as to avoid any confusion in the mind of the voter.

A method of determining the delegates elected should be provided which will insure that those seated in the convention will represent the majority sentiment of the district from which elected.

Any election, whether general or special, as may seem most appropriate in the particular state, should insure the fullest expression of the people and should be held only after a sufficient time has elapsed to allow adequate discussion of the subject before the people.

The provisions of existing law respecting the purity of the ballot, bribery and intimidation of voters, watchers at the polls, should be made applicable to the election of delegates to such a convention. If existing law is inadequate, necessary safeguards should be enacted.

4. We summon the friends of prohibition to renewed faith and courage in this critical hour. We call upon the friends of the prohibition cause in America, both in and outside of our churches, to organize by precincts, counties and states for the purpose of electing delegates pledged against repeal, and to face this mighty issue in the faith that the complete destruction of the liquor traffic is the will of God for our country and for humanity.

DR. J. M. TOMBAUGH

Another servant of God has gone home to glory. He was a loving husband and father. His loyalty to Christ and the Church was unwavering. Serving as his pastor and co-worker for nine years we found him to be a real friend of the minister. His cooperation and support through these years were all that we could have asked. His advice and counsel were wise. He rejoiced in the progress of the church and the Lord's work far and near. In his preaching he was loyal to the Brethren faith and to the whole Book. After serving the Hagerstown church faithfully in a long pastorate of fourteen years he continued to live there and has always enjoyed the confidence of the church and of the whole community and also of our whole brotherhood. His loving wife and daughter suffer a great loss until the family circle shall be made whole again on the other shore, but the loss is shared by a host that called him friend and by our entire church that looked upon him as one of the pioneers of the Brethren faith. May the influence of his life continue to strengthen and encourage those who remain to greater loyalty to Christ and the Church.

aghast when it appears that 2000 years before Abrams' day there was a culture which, at its best loses nothing in comparison with the finest works of art of the Egyptian and the Greek world. The farther back toward the flood the excavations penetrate, the more remarkable is the evidence of culture. The jewelry, the decorations, the implements and weapons in pure gold, even razors of gold hardened to a cutting edge! They not only possessed a skill unsurpassed, but discoveries in metallurgy of which we are totally ignorant. We begin to get a hint of the marvels of antediluvian civilization. For is not this as it ought to be? The post-diluvians did not begin at the beginning; they were not primitive men, they inherited the civilization of the early world which the flood swept away. In the wonders of Ur, in the stupendous architecture of some of the south sea islands, perhaps even the marvels of the Mayas and the Incas, and the cave temple of the Island of Sicily, we got hints of the great world which the flood of Noah destroyed. Some day we will learn more, and more definitely about it.

Such is the witness which the field work in Bible lands is giving to the historicity, the entire trustworthiness of the Biblical narratives; such the answer the archaeologist is able to give to the fundamental question of the whole Biblical controversy. Is the Bible story true? or does our faith rest only on the shifting sands of legend and folklore? Such also is the scientific character of the answer the archaeologist is able to give. "A lot of imagination about it." Yes, but it is scientific imagination; the historical imagination which sees things as they were, not that sees things that never were; the mathematical imagination of the surveyor with his compass and his level, and of the pottery expert whose science is today as accurate as any other historical science. Wherever the pottery test can be applied to the narratives of the Bible they are found to be correct. Such is the value of the evidence that is moving one theological seminary after another to the work of Biblical archeology and the training of specialists who shall study and read the message of the potsheds, and to collect great museums of Bible lands' antiquities that every man sent out to preach the Bible message will have an ineffaceable impression of the trustworthiness of the Book.

One little fact may overturn the most splendid and alarming theory. It is but a short time since the wonderful discoveries of skeletons deep under geological strata in France, were seized upon by the anthropologists to demonstrate to us the fabulous age of man upon earth, going away back into geological time! It did look terrifying. Is it any wonder high school young folks become a bit skeptical when confronted with such things? But nothing more is being said of those skeletons. Why? The eager anthropologists are not shouting the explanation, but here it is. Some more skeletons were found in the same strata; one of them that of a young girl, and on her wrist a Roman bracelet! Of like character and to like end are the artifacts from Bible lands. Now will anyone ask, "Why the archaeologist?"—The Evangelical Student.

Signs of the Times

THE River of Beer

The Democrats, having kept their platform pledge, the river of beer will begin to run in those states which are ready to legalize it. As far as the federal law is concerned, it can be sold to almost anybody and by any place of business.

IF THE CHURCHES REALLY BELIEVE IN PROHIBITION THERE IS ONE THING THAT THEY CAN DO. THEY CAN OFFICIALLY SERVE NOTICE THAT THEY WILL BUY NOTHING FROM ANY HOTEL, RESTAURANT, OR GROCERY THAT SELLS BEER.

Such notice would make some business men stop and think. Why don't the prohibition leaders try something with teeth in it? Or would they rather confine themselves to mere talk?

CRIMINAL and Immoral

A great Protestant convention held in Brazil recently passed a strong resolution calling on the United States Congress to stop the sending of degrading motion pictures to foreign countries. Following is a part of the resolution:

"Whereas, criminal and immoral pictures give a distorted conception of American life that results in prejudice and anti-American sentiment, hurtful to this great Republic, therefore be it resolved, that we petition the Government of the United States to forbid the exportation of such pictures to this country."

Nothing, of course, has been done in response to the petition. The "business men" of Hollywood need the money. The worst of it is that the same pictures are shown in this country without protest. To forbid their exportation would be an admission of low-mindedness on our own part!

PROGRESS of Civilization

A labor controversy between the theater owners and their employees has closed every moving picture house in the city of Cleveland, Ohio. The Mayor of the city, feeling that the people are being deprived of the very bread of life, has done his best to get them open again but without success, thus far.

It is well known that many people attend the movies almost every night. If you wonder what such people do when deprived of their steady diet of pictures, the answer is supplied by a dealer in jig-saw puzzles. He reports a tremendous increase in sales since the movies closed.

Intellectually, the movie and the jig-saw puzzle are on about the same level. Morally, the latter represents a distinct forward step.

HUEY LONG Quotes the Bible

A writer in a prominent national magazine said recently, "I believe in America even when Senator Huey Long is talking." If you have followed the discussions of the Senate for the past few months, you will realize the greatness of such faith.

Fortunately, Senator Long knows something about the contents of the Bible and quotes it occasionally in his rambling speeches. The other day, while discussing the problems of over-production, he advised the nation to go back to the Law of Moses and declare a "Sabbatical Year" whenever we produce more than we can use. And as a remedy for the concentration of wealth he suggested its redistribution every 50 years according to the "Year of Jubilee" plan.

These were very sensible suggestions. But it is not probable that many of the Senators knew what he was talking about. Congress might get some splendid ideas from the Bible, if they would study it more.

HITLER and God's Providence

Some time ago Mr. Hitler announced that if he ever became ruler of Germany, his first act would be against the Jews. Now he has realized his ambition and, if one may credit reports, the Jews are suffering severely. Hitler is determined to deprive them of their places of leadership in educational and financial circles.

The result is that many prominent and wealthy Jews are leaving Germany. And where are they going? BACK TO THE LAND OF PALESTINE. For some time the Zionistic movement has lagged. Most of the Jews who went back to the land of their fathers were of the poorer classes. The wealthy and intellectual Jews were willing to help the movement, but preferred themselves to live in other countries. But now the "rod" of Hitler's persecution is sending them back home.

Hitler, of course, is not motivated by any desire to accomplish the Will of God. He is like the "Assyrian" king of Isaiah's day. (Read Isaiah 10:1-15). By his persecution of Israel, this king carried out the purpose of God without ever intending to do so. He was merely a "rod" in the providential hand of God.

God will reckon with Hitler at last just as he did with the Assyrian. Indeed, we might read Hitler's name in the 12th verse, "Wherefore, it shall come to pass, that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon Mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of MR. HITLER, and the glory of his high looks. For he saith, 'By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom.'" "SHALL THE AXE BOAST ITSELF AGAINST HIM THAT HEWETH THEREWITH?"

THE Rod of Depression

Besides the recent wave of German persecution, there is another cause which is sending Jews back to Palestine. According to the Statist, England's most conservative financial paper, the world-wide financial depression is causing the Jews to become interested in Palestine as a place of investment. They have found that money put into Palestinian projects has been safer and more lucrative than in some other places. Palestine, according to this paper, has no dote, no unemployment, no income tax, and no national debt!

It has often been said, to the disparagement of Biblical prophecy, that Palestine could not support the Jews if they went back. I quote from the Statist: "Industry is now represented by every sort of manufacture—textiles, silken goods, woodwork, printing, furniture building material, oil, soap, artificial teeth, cigarets, matches, petroleum. Factories and workshops are springing up almost every other week. During the last eighteen months, Jewish urban buildings in Tel-Aviv, Jerusalem and Haifa have increased threefold."

Over three thousand years ago, God made the following promise to Israel: "Jehovah thy God will gather thee from all the peoples . . . will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it."

It will be fulfilled. God is faithful.

A PRAYER FOR THE FUTURE

By John I. Wright

*Lord, we pray for that glad time
When the world true peace shall know,
When war's blighting, withering blast
O'er earth's field shall cease to blow,
When life's pathway shall be fair,
Cheered by hope's inspiring ray,
And the gloomy clouds of care,
'Mid our sky, shall pass away.*

*Lord, we pray for that glad time
When in rapture we shall find
All the madness of the past
Is forever left behind;
When the woes, today so rife,
Shall no longer vex the sight,
Nor the joys and sweets of life
Melt and fade in sorrow's night.*

*Lord, we pray for that glad time
When love o'er the earth shall reign,
Binding o'er hearts in one
With an everlasting chain;
When all nations joyful move
Where bright freedom's glories shine,
And thy grace its power shall prove,
Free, eternal and divine.*

*For the glory yet to be,
For the joys we hope to see,
Lord of all humanity,
In this our darksome day,
To thee we pray.

Sacrifice Alone Will Meet Our Needs

Most of us have never known what sacrifice means. But we are due to learn something about it before this depression is over, if we are not already learning it. And it may not be a wholly unprofitable lesson, even though the experience may be unpleasant. The highest values are costly, and none are diviner than sacrifice. It is fundamental to all true religion and no one can read the Bible seriously without discovering it. The spirit of sacrifice finds its noblest expression in the giving of God's Son—sacrifice prompted by love and willing to give without measure. In like manner it is manifest in the Son who denied himself the glories of heaven, took upon himself the form of man and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Having learned from their Master and received from him something of the self-same spirit, the disciples were nerved to say to the rulers of the Jews, "We must obey God rather than man." That spirit gripped the soul of Stephen and enabled him to bear a witness unto death for his risen Lord. It was that spirit that gave Paul courage and perseverance to preach the Gospel in the face of all manner of persecutions and to pour out his very life in service for the exalted One who appeared to him on the Damascus road, and inspired him to appeal to others to give their bodies as "living sacrifices," which he declares to be only their "reasonable service." And it was that sacrificial spirit that Jesus enjoined upon his disciples of all ages when he said that they who would not take up their cross daily and follow him, were not worthy of him. In many words is that spirit set forth. It is the bed-rock of Christianity, and until we have learned that we have not known Christ or his religion.

We have long been in need of learning the lesson of sacrifice, but we have shrunk from it on every hand. A few have been willing to enter into it, and have been ready to do what they could to fill up that which was lacking of the sufferings of Christ. A few—a very few—have been willing to pay the price of that high communion with their Master, but most of us have not. Most of us have deliberately skipped the school of sacrifice; we shunned the experience; we would not willingly accept the discipline. And now we find ourselves ill-prepared in the face of circumstances that are demanding sacrifices. We know not how to sacrifice gracefully, and yet sacrifice is forced upon us. We have come to the place where there is no other alternative to sacrifice save unfaithfulness and desertion. The battle is drawn at a critical stage, and it requires the giving of life and of substance to the point where it hurts and causes hardship. And we are handicapped by not knowing how to enter graciously and heartily into the spirit and act of sacrifice. But we must learn it, somehow. There is no other way out. Only the spirit that is willing not to withhold anything but to give all if necessary, can save us from trenchment and loss in the foreign mission fields. Will we manifest that spirit indeed?

There is just one thing that will make possible the presence of that sacrificial spirit in our hearts, and that is the quickening and deepening of our love for the Lord Jesus Christ to the point where he is in very truth worth more to us than ten thousand times ten thousand units of earthly values. If we can develop within our hearts a great passion for our Savior and Lord, or rather, if we are willing to open our hearts to the impartation of the love of God in such measure as will cause us to desire to do his will and to meet with his good pleasure more than anything else in the world, then will there be no question about the outcome of our Easter offering campaign. With love filling our souls no sacrifice will be too great, but without it any sacrifice will be irksome.

Our concern is due to the fact that our love is so feeble, so soon exhausted. We would not all admit it, but the test is to be found in what we are willing to do for him. We are supposed to love God with all the heart, might, soul and strength, but that is a mighty passion, such that few Christian people really possess. Such a love is so powerful, so great, so enduring, so thrilling, that it would seem a strange manifestation to us and we would marvel to stand in its presence. Of all too many of us it must be said that our love is not powerful enough to move us to make great sacrifices, or to endure real privations, or even to persistently deny ourselves of luxuries for the Gospel's sake. We will have what we want, if it is possible. Self must be gratified first, then we will give to the Lord's work of that which we can conveniently spare. Yet we imagine that we really love God! May he forgive us the selfishness and fickleness and pinniness of our hearts, and cause our love to be enlarged and deepened and made more passionate and permanent, so that we shall be not only willing but anxious to make any sacrifice necessary that the Word of God may be preached to the ends of the earth, that many souls may be saved and that the name of our blessed Lord may be glorified.

Christianity Limited and Devalued

Stanley High once said he had a friend who was alarmed about the teachings of Jesus; they were so radical and revolutionary, he thought. Mr. High assured him there was no need to become perturbed inasmuch as no one was taking those teachings seriously and so there was little danger of them causing any trouble. Said he: "The New Testament is a revolutionary book. But it is not likely to be suppressed as subversive literature. Not until more of us begin to live in the revolutionary fashion it prescribes. At present one doesn't need to be unduly alarmed about Christianity, not until it becomes more alarmingly Christian." And we must confess that what he says is all too true. How far is profession from practice! How few make any serious attempt to carry out on Monday the teachings they have heard from the pulpit on Sunday! And yet there seems to be very little troubling of conscience about the matter. Many act as if they were not supposed to live what they profess to believe. How do you explain it?

The Reformed Church Messenger says, "If the question is raised why some men, apparently loyal church members, can assume attitudes in Congress or State legislatures, which are utterly at variance with the standards of the New Testament, you have your answer in this attempt to divide life into compartments and to imagine that a man can be a Christian in one compartment and a non-Christian in others." It seems that people seldom stop to think of the impossibility and the inconsistency of such a policy. Our contemporary goes on to say, "It is true that the Church, the State and the home each produce distinctive duties and responsibilities, but all these duties head up in an indivisible personality. One cannot be really religious, for example, in one's family and secular in one's business or politics, religious on Sunday and secular on the other six days of the week. This attempted Dr. Jekyll and Hyde performance is always fatal to character."

Another esteemed contemporary, The Lutheran, calls attention to this same inconsistency in the following striking words: "One stands aghast at the way in which some believers seem to hoodwink themselves into thinking they can be several human beings instead of one. The greatest contradiction in terms thinkable is that exhibited by the man who undertakes to be a Christian and a citizen instead of a Christian citizen. May the righteous Judge have mercy on us at the last day when we present our alibis before him for our neglect of duty to the State! Observe for an example the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in which Lutherans outnumber every other Protestant group. Dotted with churches, boastful of its wealth and traditions, it is the victim of organized bosses, its people are exploited, its youth are exposed to temptation and its citizens are mulcted for political purposes. The voters, the majority of whom are Christians, delude themselves into self-division between their obligations to the State and to religion. So anaemic have this Commonwealth's Church members become that they have difficulty in retaining even lax legal protection of one day out of seven which the State has set apart in order that the Christian religion and Christian ethics might be preserved and propagated. In other States and in economic and moral spheres the same delusion appears. Sunday Christians and weekday mammonists; Sunday Christians and weekday business folk; Sunday listeners to the Gospel and seven-day hearers and readers of putrid piffle. Yet these same people must in the end render an account in their own persons for all their deeds and beliefs."

There is cause to be alarmed, not at the revolutionary character of the teachings of Christ, but at the limited, devitalized nature of the Christianity that is popularly on display. His teachings are practically ignored in life, greatly to his disappointment. In the words of Stanley High, "Jesus said: 'I am the light of the world.' He didn't say, 'I am the light of the Sunday-morning-at-eleven o'clock world'; or 'I am the light of the after-business-hours world.' He said: 'I am the light of the world,' and he lived as though he meant it." And not only so, but he demanded in very definite words that his followers should live the consistent Christ-centered life. The Gospel truth was given to cover the whole of life, every department of it. Christianity is all-inclusive; everything that has to do with life is to be brought under its sway. No compartments are exempt. "No man can serve two masters," said Jesus. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. G. C. Carpenter says the Sunday school contest in his church at Smithville, Ohio, is developing keen interest, the attendance last Sunday, March 26th, being 194, the high-water mark. This contest is preliminary to an evangelistic campaign of two weeks closing Easter Sunday and conducted by the pastor. The California Quartette of Ashland Seminary will be with the Smithville folks in their Sunday evening service of April 2nd.

Our church in Roanoke, Virginia, announces the change of their congregation's name, for local reasons, from the First Brethren Church to the Ghent Brethren Church, and this they think will work to their advantage. This church is proving to be a church mighty in faith, and by their faith they are proving God to be mighty in power. In this manner they are meeting emergency after emergency.

A card from Brother W. I. Duker, who re-entered school work in the Goshen, Indiana, schools the first of September of last year, informs us that he also became pastor of the Milford, Indiana, church the first of January, of this year. He is also candidate for election to the State Prohibition Convention, and we are hoping he will be elected for we know, without asking him, that his vote will be against "repeal."

Dr. I. D. Bowman writes of the evangelistic meeting recently conducted in his Mt. Olivet Brethren church in Delaware, concerning which Brother Christiansen made report last week. In addition to the latter's splendid help, Brother Bowman had the assistance of some of his children in the music. As previously reported, eight souls were the result of the meetings. Brother Bowman is soon to begin a three weeks' campaign at Sergeantsville, where his son, Brother J. Milton, is pastor.

Last week we had a report of the pastor, Brother W. R. Deeter, of the union revival at Carleton, Nebraska. This week the evangelist, Brother A. R. Staley, writes his impressions. He found the field well prepared by the pastor, and the cooperation of the local ministers and churches is commended, particularly the Church of the Brethren. It is always good to hear of the growing spirit of good-will on the part of our co-sharers of the Brethren heritage. It points to the time when we shall be one fraternity, working shoulder to shoulder in a common cause.

We have an interesting letter this week from Mrs. Hattie Cope Sheldon, giving encouraging news concerning the work at Bellevue Mission Station in French Equatorial Africa. Miss Mabel Crawford, the latest recruit to the African field, is proving a valuable addition to our mission forces there. Three mission chapels have been built in villages nearby and three other chapels are under contemplation. They are built mostly by native funds. The Sunday school averages over 400 and at their Christmas program they had an attendance of 1200. Still other evidences of progress are enumerated, all of which are in themselves a challenge to sacrificial giving at this approaching Easter season, that the work of the Lord in this and other needy places be not hindered.

Send your Foreign Mission offering to Dr. Louis S. Bauman, Treasurer, 1925 East Fifth Street, Long Beach, California. We urge upon our people to give both generously and promptly. It is not going to be easy to give generously at a time like this. It will mean self-denial for many; it will mean hardship for some. We doubt if any one can do what he ought to do at this critical time without going to the point of sacrifice. Unless our people in large numbers are willing to sacrifice, we shall not be able to maintain our front line positions on the African and South American fields, and retreat at this time would be a calamity.

Brother Charles W. Mayes, pastor of the church at Whittier, California, writes that the work of the Lord at this place is moving forward with harmony and Christian love. A recent revival resulted in ten accepting Christ as their Savior, some of whom have united with the church by baptism and some are yet to come. Four Christian Endeavor groups are meeting regularly for Bible study and training in Christian work. Prayer is being much emphasized and is having a good influence upon the people, as it always does when God's people engage in it faithfully. Brother Mayes' Bible study classes are growing into a community Bible School, with several other Bible teachers cooperating, and the interest and attendance are steadily increasing.

A typographical error was permitted to slip into Prof. A. J. McClain's department last week and it was of such a nature that we owe it to Brother McClain and our readers to make correction. On page 2, column 3, in paragraph 3 an omission occurred, making the writer say: "It is true that Christ offered men a better life 'in this world'", whereas he really did say: "It is true that Christ offered men a better life 'in another world.' It is better to depart and be with Christ. But it is also true that Christ offered a better life 'in this world.'" We are sorry for the error, and beg the pardon of our readers and Prof. McClain, but hope our readers will take the time to make this correction in their last week's paper and in their impression of the article.

TO OHIO CHURCHES—The Secretary-Treasurer of our Ohio Mission Board is Brother R. A. Hazen of Ashland, Ohio, and upon him falls the responsibility of issuing the pay checks to our Ohio Mission pastors. He says he has reached the bottom of the money barrel and that unless the churches replenish the treasury between now and the middle of April, these pastors will be compelled to go without their checks. That would work real hardship in practically every instance. Their income is small at best, but it does help to supply them with the bare necessities of life. Every church is in hard straits, and we are not insisting on our people doing what they cannot do. We know some are not in position to meet their entire apportionment at present, but we do ask that every church or Sunday school will do its best. Just make the best payment you can, and do it promptly as possible. That is all we ask.

The church at Berne, Indiana, is in the habit of having successful revivals and this year was no exception. Brother C. H. Ashman of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, was the evangelist and Brother John Parr is the pastor. There were twenty-seven who stepped forward for Christ, twenty to confess him for the first time, fourteen of whom had been baptized at the time of the report, and seven to reconsecrate themselves to the service of Christ. Brother Ashman says conditions were not favorable to a revival, but, with the earnest effort, faithful preaching and praying of the leadership, God gave victory and his name was glorified. Brother Ashman is right when he says now is the time to emphasize evangelism, for in this time of adversity and human extremity, many men are receptive of the Word as they have not been for a long time. And in a number of instances our churches have reaped rich harvests by claiming with mighty faith the promises of God.

Sacrifice Alone Will Save Retrenchment in Foreign Missions

Shall We Fail and Quail Because Marching is Rough and Hard?

By Louis S. Bauman, Treasurer Foreign Missionary Society

The Office Secretary has just made out the February Report of offerings received during that month. She handed it to the Treasurer with the remark: "There is the report of our February receipts—the smallest amount we have ever received in any one month!" We glanced at the total—$364.90! And, from this amount should be subtracted $114.10, which came in as payments for books,—"Undaunted Hope," by Mrs. Gribble. This leaves the amount—$250.80. Of this, $100.00 is a special gift from a Long Beach individual who requested that it should be applied on the purchase price of a lot in Rosario, Argentina. Another $100.00 is from the North Manchester (Ind.) church, to apply on the salary of Brother and Sister Romanenghi, toward whose support they contribute so faithfully and so regularly. This leaves $50.80 as the total February gifts of all other churches combined.

It is quite evident that, not only the February report, but the reports of other months since last Easter, show conclusively that if the Brethren Church is to continue her small contribution to the evangelization of the world, she must prove it by making the greatest really sacrificial gift she has ever made, and she must do it on this coming Easter Sunday.

We know the times are terrifically hard. We know that tremendous sacrifices have already been made. We know that at this moment, as we write, practically every bank in America has closed its doors, and that the American dollar has gone off the market in the foreign exchanges of the world. We know that never has such a condition confronted this nation before.

But is this a time to retreat, when never, never before has a benighted world needed the gospel as it needs it now? We will either keep the lights of the gospel burning, or the world will not be fit for our children to live in tomorrow. We have no choice in the matter, —we must place the gospel absolutely as the matter of first importance and give it to the world, or we shall revert to paganism ourselves.

Is this a time to retreat, to hoard uncertain dollars, when the coming of the Lord seems, O so near? If he should come today, then whose dollars will those be which you have tried so hard to save? The only way to make treasure secure is to lay it up in heaven, even as Christ himself has said. Is there a better way to lay it up in glory than to use it in obedience to his marching orders, so that those we have sent into the regions beyond need not be recalled, but kept there to tell to those who never before heard the story of redeeming love—the story of salvation from eternal death? The souls of men are at stake—our souls as well as the souls of the heathen. The command of God is upon us. The marching is hard just now. But then, those who marched under Washington, for God and country, left blood that oozed from frozen feet, through rags (not shoes), upon the snows at Valley Forge. Shall we who march for God and his Church today, quail and fail because the going is a bit rough just now? We do not believe we will! But, our Easter gifts will tell!

"For His Name's Sake"

By Alva J. McClain, Secretary Foreign Missionary Society

Among all the various missionary motives which have been urged upon the people of God, there is none loftier and more powerful than the one recorded in Third John 7: "For his Name's sake they went forth." The first missionaries were spoken of as "Men that have hazarded their lives for the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ." In this present day of missionary indifference we need to turn back to this great original slogan of the early Church: "For his Name's sake." What does it mean?

First, it means that by our missionary gifts we must prove to the world that our Lord has a right to the name of "Savior." At his birth it was said, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." But today men are denying the power of his Name. They are saying that he is only another Buddha, a great teacher, but nothing more. Now we know that the Name of Jesus has not lost its power. But we must realize that his Mighty Name, by his own sovereign choice, reaches men in saving power only as we take the Name to them. This is the awful responsibility which rests upon the people of God, to demonstrate by the outpouring of our lives and substance that our Lord has a right to be called the Savior of the world.

Second, to the extent that we fail in this important matter, to that same extent we shall be guilty of dimming the lustre of his Name in the eyes of men. Men who go out into eternity without hearing the Name of Jesus will rise up in the Judgment Day and ask why he committed his message to unfaithful men. And thus, if we fail in our present duty, we shall bring reproach upon

of Africa and South America—will it be Christian or Pagan?
It is being determined by what we do for foreign missions

that worthy and matchless Name.

Third, in the last Book of the Bible it is said that "on the foreheads" of the saved shall be written the Name of the Lamb, our Lord. Have we realized that by sending the message of the Gospel to Africa and South America, we are actually writing the Name of Jesus forever on the foreheads of men and women, as an everlasting token that they belong to him? How wonderful to meet some day in that eternal home some who bear the Name because my gifts and my prayers caused it to be written there!

"For his Name's sake." I have no doubt but that, in these difficult and trying times, most of us can think of a hundred reasons why we cannot give as we would like to the Easter offering this year. Good reasons they are, doubtless, every one of them. But if we drop them on the scales of eternity, we shall find that the Name of Jesus outweighs them all. Let us go forth this year, as never before, "For his Name's sake."

"The New Deal"

By A. L. DeLozier, Member Foreign Mission Board

We have entered upon the period of the "New Deal" in the political realm. Assuming that "new deal" means a new and better chance after a period of reversal, why not individually resolve to give our missionary work a "new deal"?

Wondering what I might write here, I picked up the "Decisive Hour of Christian Missions" bearing the date of 1910. As I perused this once famous volume I was amazed at its prophetic tone. The author argues on the basis of the plasticity of nations.

"In all history there has not been a period when such vast multitudes of people were in the midst of such stupendous changes, economic, social, educational and religious." May we not agree with Mott that the Gospel has a great opportunity now in 1933 because of the changes that are taking place and hence the willingness to take on something new?

Speaking at length of the nations, the author asks: "What is to be the future of these nations?" In 1933 every statesman is asking this question: "What is to be the future of this nation?" Again the question is asked: "If we do not give them (the nations) our religion, have we given them our best? If they adopt our civilization without our religion, what moral disasters may not result? Have not, therefore, the Christian people a special responsibility at such a time as this?"

Again, "The point of chief emphasis is, that what the church expects to do anywhere it must do soon."

This is certainly more true today than it was in 1910.

But of all the truths uttered, let us ponder this: "Nothing less than a church whose individual members are tremendously in earnest can evangelize the non-Christian world."

As my parting shot I quote again: "The superhuman factor . . . a mighty, almost irresistible power is conveyed in an ordinary-looking wire cable on two main conditions, proper insulation and perfect contact."

Let us pray that we may not prove to be non-conductors in this needy moment!

BRETHREN MISSION FIELD ARGENTINA - Province of Cordoba

Who will vote for retrenchment at any point in this wonderful field?

Passion for World Evangelization will lead us to sacrifice in other things rather than permit one Missionary to be recalled or one Station to be closed or any one Thing to be cut off from our prospering Fields. A missionary passion will bring in more money in times like these than a missionary impulse will in the most prosperous of times.

Oh, for a PRAYER PASSION! "Lord, teach us to pray." Not, "How to pray", for the word, "How", is not in the text, but "to pray". Prayerlessness is one of our outstanding sins today. We need prayer more today than ever in our history as a church. Lord, give us a PRAYER PASSION.

Oh, for a WITNESS PASSION! "Ye shall be my witnesses." Are we? At home? "Unto the uttermost parts of the earth?" We have only one mission, the proclaiming of Christ and the Gospel. "We've a story to tell to the nations." "This is a day of good tidings and we hold our peace."

Oh, for a GIFT PASSION! Our giving should be stabilized by such a passion. Just give because we cannot help it,—possessed by the passion for souls. As never before,—this Easter Offering will prove whether the contributors for Foreign Missions have been prompted by an ANNUAL IMPULSE or controlled by a deep-seated PERMANENT PASSION.

When Two Deacons Met

By Charles W. Mayes, Member Foreign Mission Board

"Good morning, Brother Smith."

"Good morning, Brother Jones. Where have you been?"

"Well I am just coming back from looking over my property across the river. You know I have lost $40,000.00 in the last two years. The values were once good there, but how things have changed!"

"Isn't it true," replied Deacon Jones. "Things HAVE changed! The world is different. The nations are in terrible distress and no one knows what a day will bring forth."

"Wasn't that a helpful sermon the pastor delivered yesterday morning!" continued Brother Jones. "Those things have been running through my mind ever since. We have never had less money at our house in our lives, but we have never been happier."

"And have you noticed the attitude of the people in

A Missionary Impulse, or a Missionary Passion

By Charles H. Ashman, Member Foreign Mission Board

This year will prove whether the Brethren Church is possessed by a MISSIONARY PASSION, or has been moved by a MISSIONARY IMPULSE. Bishop Taylor one time said, "I'd rather preach in India than in America because in India, when a sinner accepts Christ he becomes inoculated with the PASSION OF SOUL-WINNING." This year will prove whether we as a people have been moved by a temporary impulse or dominated by a genuine passion. Our offering will demonstrate whether we have been controlled by a MISSIONARY GLIMPSE or a MISSIONARY VISION. A vision of our responsibility and the need will tide us over the present period of depression. A genuine the church,—and the prayer meetings—aren't they great? They used to be so cold and formal but now everything is alive and on fire every minute. I sure enjoy the testimonies, too. When I see the way the Lord is so abundantly supplying the needs of the Brethren and how happy we are through it all, I just feel like thanking the Lord for the depression."

"That's the proper attitude," said the other, "For we KNOW that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." "In everything give thanks."

"Say, I want to tell you something," said Deacon Smith. "I awoke at about 3:00 this morning and the first thing I thought of was one of those passages from the Word which the pastor mentioned yesterday morning. 'Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and thieves break through and steal! We did not think a few years ago that the Lord really meant that. We never thought of money rusting. But much of it must be rusting now, at least it does not seem to be in circulation. We did not think much then about the thieves and hold-ups. But now just read the morning papers!"

"Brother Smith, do you know that if I had that $40,000.00 now, I would turn the whole thing over to the offering for Foreign Missions. Just see what good it would do!"

"Now since you have told me of your business affairs," said Brother Smith, "I will tell you that I lost $25,000.00 in a defunct business myself. If I had that now I would also turn every cent of it over to the cause of Foreign Missions in the Brethren Church."

After a moment of thoughtful silence Brother Jones replied, "I believe we are both liars. If we had that money back we would hang onto it today just like we did a few years ago. Do you know—I believe that the people of the Brethren denomination have lost millions in the last few years. And they are all doubtless saying just what we are saying, but the question after all is not what we would do with the millions which we do NOT have, but the question is, WHAT WILL WE DO WITH THE FEW DOLLARS WHICH WE HAVE? Isn't that right, Brother Smith?"

"Yes, it is," replied the other. "How much better it would be if we right NOW would lay up treasures in Heaven from what we have. You know the pastor mentioned that the figure set by the Foreign Mission Board for the denomination is only $2.00 per member,—less than a penny a day. May the Lord forgive us if we cannot do better than that! Suppose that we suggest that the pastor call the Official Board together and have a special prayer meeting of the board, then suggest that the Bible School Superintendent call the teachers together for another prayer meeting and let us all ask the Lord to lay the burden and responsibility for this great work of Foreign Missions upon the heart of every member in our church. Let every member begin now to save dollars, dimes, or pennies if necessary, that we will not need to call our missionaries back from the field. The Lord said, "Occupy till I come." It would be a tragedy if at his return he would find us calling back our missionaries, and failing to send out the glorious Gospel. I am willing, Brother Jones, to do all in my power to keep our people on their knees about this work."

"Yes, so am I," said Brother Jones. By his strength we will be successful!

There Is No Retreat

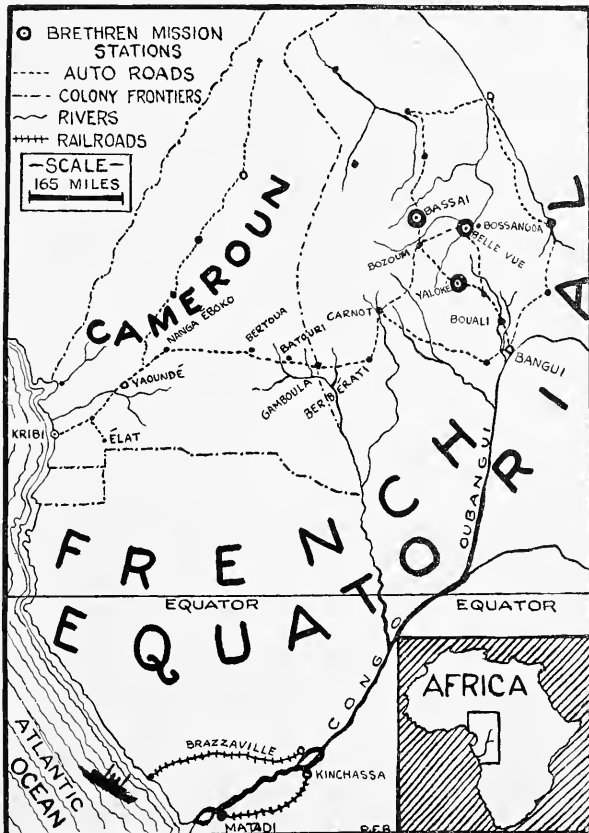

By J. Allen Miller, President Foreign Mission Board

In this year 1933 under the world conditions which obtain can the Brethren Church afford not to carry on her Foreign Mission Work?

I am raising this capital question in the mind of every reader whose eye falls upon this contribution. There can be but one answer to the inquiry. We must not recall a single worker from either field and we must not reduce the workers on either field so as to retard the progress of the work already begun.

My first reason for a faith that we will not falter is just this: The seal of divine approval has rested upon our work and still rests upon it. Up through almost insuperable difficulties the work has forged ahead until today it stands in both fields as an unchallenged marvel of achievement. This is not through what we have done. It is the work of God. A work which can overcome all the obstacles our work has had to face and emerge always farther on is clearly approved of God. God has led by his blessed Spirit in every advance step and neither Board nor missionaries has ever dared cut in ahead of his leadership. For my part I believe that a work thus owned and blessed of God can not fail. It can fail only with and in so far as any one individual member of the Church fails to do his or her full duty in the support of the Missionary undertaking of his or her Church. GOD'S WORK CAN NOT FAIL.

I have a second reason

And where would you reduce forces in this field with hundreds of souls now dying without knowledge of the Gospel?

for believing that our great Foreign enterprise can not fail. It is the faith I have in my brethren and sisters of the Church. To this group I wish to add that other fine group of men and women of other bodies who are faithful and loyal supporters of this work. We just will not allow this work and its promise of progress to be thwarted or hindered. It may be that for a little while we shall have to stand by and see God working more effectively with less because even God will not require of his people the impossible. I hasten to add though that probably in the past, in spite of the fact that our offerings have been quite assuring from year to year, we have never yet done what we should have done. In that event is it not possible that under the stress of the current situation if we do our full proportion toward this work we shall not see any diminution in the interest in giving nor in the amount given? The dollars we give this year may reach farther than a larger sum did five years ago. No, we shall not allow our work to be either crippled or greatly hindered. THE BRETHREN CHURCH HAS MADE TOO GREAT A SACRIFICE UNDER GOD'S LEADERSHIP TO FAIL HIM NOW. It is because of this fact that I believe we shall make an offering this year that will make possible the carrying out of the program of the Foreign Board.

Finally, We must remember that we have sent our workers to the Fields with the full pledge of every last man and woman of the Church to support them. Shall we ask these choice souls of our brotherhood to spend life and years in the midst of toil and sacrifice and in a strange land and then when a little hardship falls upon us at home forsake them? That would be not only disloyalty but cowardice and a shameful exhibition of broken faith. No, the Church will support Dr. and Mrs. Yoder and Brother and Sister Sickel, Miss Neilsen and all their associates in Argentina. And will not the same Church loyally support Dr. Gribble, Miss Myers, the Jobsons, the Hathaways and the Sheldons; the Fosters and the group of wonderful young women workers in Africa? TO ASK THIS QUESTION IS, IT SEEMS TO ME, SUFFICIENT ANSWER TO IT.

Tell Man but Ask God

By Carl H. Seitz, Member Foreign Mission Board

"God is our refuge and strength." How many folks have repeated these words for their comfort and help in times of distress? As material things for which we have labored seem to have melted away, we are rejoicing more and more in the blessed "Word of Life."

Our thoughts have been dwelling on the Easter offering and the great need in Africa and South America. If we here in America with an open Bible and opportunity in study and worship to be revived spiritually feel we are living in terrible times—what must be the lot of our faithful Missionaries surrounded by demon worship and idolatry?

Let us not be satisfied with our former praying and giving, nor excuse ourselves because we have suffered loss, but let us with prevailing prayer and joyous giving of our money fulfill our debt to those for whom Christ died.

To quote James Gribble, "It is not the question of being able. It is a question of being willing. These are days when our Lord wants his people to undertake great things for him. He will roll back the Jordan and the Red Sea if his people will only go forward. In this Canaan there are giants. But if we love our Lord Jesus, shall we be afraid of the Cost? He is not! I know that the Lord is faithful. His leadings are wonderful. . . . more information and less appeal, is I believe the ideal method to stir the Church for Missions. To tell man his duty and privilege, but to ask God is our policy."

You have been informed of our need, the time to act— is now. May you be impelled by the Power of the Holy Spirit to so understand the need that you will be willing to make a real sacrifice this Easter in your giving that our work will not be curtailed but advanced.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

BACKWARD LEGISLATION

A number of state legislatures in session have shown a disposition to move backward, not only in Prohibition legislation, but in other forms of legislation where moral principles are involved. In a number of cases efforts have been made to remove from the statute books all laws for safeguarding the Sabbath. Others have tried, with more or less success, to legalize various forms of gambling, particularly that connected with horse racing and dog racing, but some would place no restrictions upon gambling of any kind.

Still others have endeavored to liberalize all laws pertaining to divorce, and scarcely a legislature in session has been free from persistent effort to cast into the discard almost every legal restraint that has been placed upon liberal tendencies so characteristic of this present age. The spirit of the underworld seems to have been unleashed, and there are men in legislative halls who would create a veritable hell in our Country if they could have their way. The alarming phase of such a situation is the moral state of our citizenship that makes it possible for such men to be elected to places of public trust.

Good people among the masses have been so prostrate through their economic difficulties that they are not lifting their voices in protest with the force that is necessary to make them effective. The selfish elements and those whose interests are in line with the lower moral currents are making a great noise. Those who smart under moral restrictions are taking advantage of the present chaotic condition of society to cash in. This is their chance and they are wasting no time.

It is doubtful if there ever has been a time in our history when Satan manifested his character, purpose, and power, as he is doing just now. All honor to those in legislative assemblies and elsewhere who retain their moral convictions and the courage to defend them unperturbed by the jibes and sneers of a godless majority! The time calls for moral heroism. While Satan has his chance amid the chaos and distress that prevails, the person of heroic mold also has his or her chance. Christ is being crucified afresh, and with as relentless a spirit as that which prevailed when his physical body was nailed to the cross. How long are we to continue in this downward course, and what is to be the outcome?—Religious Telescope.

CHURCHES IN THE STORM

Statistics indicate that churches are weathering the economic storm better than secular enterprises. Last year in thirty-seven states church building contracts of almost $30,000,000 were awarded. In no other field except public construction was there a smaller decrease in construction in 1932, and many public buildings were undertaken, of course, in aid of unemployment. In the last three years the ratio of failure among the industrial concerns of the country has been one in ten. Among the 54,000 churches of six leading Protestant denominations, the ratio has been one in 2,344.

Nor have contributions for religious purposes declined as might naturally have been expected. Gifts fell off in 1932 from the average for 1931 only eleven per cent per capita, with a total for twenty-five Protestant denominations of $418,000,000. The decline per capita in the Lutheran church was from $20.26 to $17.29, in the Baptist from $23.76 to $19.61, in the Episcopal from $38.69 to $20.15, in the Methodist from $24.81 to $21.13, in the Congregational Christian from $30.95 to $21.61, and in the Presbyterian from $39.11 to $25.75.

It is not at all unlikely that various churches will come out of the depression stronger than they were in a period of prosperity. The number of large donations may dwindle. The grand totals may be smaller. The activities of the organizations will, therefore, be curtailed. But, with more members contributing, the foundations will be firmer. A wealthy congregation dominated by a small number of liberal givers may be inferior in various ways to a less wealthy one where everybody lends a hand.—Boston Herald.

STANLEY JONES AND MARSHALL FENG

The following is an account of a visit of Dr. E. Stanley Jones to Marshall Feng Yu Hsiang, who once was styled, "the Christian general", at his army headquarters in a temple in Shantung, China. It was originally reported by the China Christian Advocate as follows:

There was no time wasted when two such purposeful men were together. Doctor Jones wanted to know why the marshal had shown a change of attitude toward Christianity, and received the reply that because certain outstanding Christians, both Chinese and Western, had been inconsistent in their living, he felt that there must be something wrong with Christianity. He was reminded of the words of Jesus when a disciple was critical regarding another man, "What is that to thee. Follow thou me." The marshal saw the pertinence of the application, and, moreover, admitted his acquaintance with as many loyal and consistent Christians as he was with the kind which had weakened his faith.

Doctor Jones boldly challenged Marshal Feng to come out strongly and aggressively for Christ, and to give to the Chinese nation the moral leadership which is now so sadly lacking. It was the bold speaking of a Paul before Agrippa and utter frankness characterized both Doctor Jones and Marshal Feng. Near the end of the conversations, the marshal gave expression to a most significant word as he said that while full agreement with his guest was impossible, yet he could say that the message and these contacts would certainly have great effect upon his life.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humberd

Study No. Fourteen

The Fourth Seal

The pangs of hunger are terrible and we might think that the first three seals have filled up all of the horror possible, but a still greater monster is yet to stalk over this earth. The Lamb opened the fourth seal and the fourth living creature thundered, "Come." A horrible sickly horse appeared upon the scene. Death sat astride and Hades, the abode of the dead, personified as a great monster, followed close behind and swallowed up the victims of the sword (second seal) and of hunger (third seal) and of death, or pestilence (fourth seal).

There are some two billion human beings upon the earth today. These fearful judgments have "power over the fourth part of the earth." If that means that one-fourth of mankind are destroyed, it would be some four times the population of the United States.

Beasts of the Earth

In our time of guns and scientific protection, we might wonder how the "beasts of the earth" (Rev. 6:8) could be accounted an enemy of mankind. Our mind is naturally drawn to think of lions and bears when we hear of beasts but, might not grasshoppers and even disease germs be included under this heading? Certainly they are "beasts" that are far more difficult to control than the larger animals.

Concerning disease germs, we need only remind ourselves of the terrible havoc of the flu, when even ships a thousand miles from land suddenly broke out with the terrible death; undertakers were taxed to the limit as they plied their trade, while fear and death was on every hand. The pale horse rider will again bring such scenes and indeed will greatly intensify them. How we, as Christians, can thank God that we will be kept from the "hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth" (Rev. 3:10).

The Fifth Seal

The fifth seal is opened but there is no voice of thunder. Instead, there is a cry for vengeance. John looked and "saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the Word of God,— and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" (Rev. 6:10).

What a strange cry. Certainly not the spirit of Stephen, who cried, as the stones flew thick and fast, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge" (Acts 7:60). This is not the cry of a church saint, it takes on the character of the imprecatory psalms (Ps. 35:26, etc.).

Satan Fighting Back

During the first four seals, terrible judgments will be upon the earth. Some people will be able to interpret them as judgments from God any will turn to him. This will so infuriate the Satanic forces, that any who will affirm allegiance to the God of these judgments will suffer persecution and multitudes will be slain. The fifth seal reveals nothing but death for the godly. The souls under the altar are the result of Satan fighting back during the first four seal judgments.

It is ever thus. When the three years' famine was upon Israel, Elijah met Ahab and immediately Ahab charged Elijah as being "he that troubleth Israel" (I Kings 18:17). The ungodly always blame the godly for their troubles and so it will be under the fifth seal. The godly will be blamed and slaughtered, but not a hair of their heads will perish for God has a place beneath the altar where their souls may rest secure and resurrection will care for their bodies.

Soul Sleep Unscriptural

Let us note that these souls are conscious and that they know their tormentors are still alive on the earth. Death does not deprive us of our senses. Abraham and Lazarus were both "comforted" after death. And the rich man, whose body was buried in the surface of the earth, could still talk and see and hear and know that his brothers were still alive on earth (Luke 16). Christ promised the thief that before the sun set that very day, they would meet in Paradise (Luke 23:43). Paul speaks of being absent from the body and present with the Lord (II Cor. 5:8). Our loved ones, who have fallen asleep in Jesus, have departed to be with Christ (Phil. 1:23) where they are alive and in conscious bliss.

Just how much our loved ones may know of our present life, we do not know. However these souls were watching the earth enough to know that their murderers were still alive. The writer has often tried to imagine himself as leaving this body and taking his place among the heavenly throng. Although we cannot begin to realize what it will mean, yet a deep feeling has often surged across our soul and our heart has been filled with thanksgiving to God for the privilege of being a Christian.

Why Judgment Is Delayed

These souls are told to "rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled" (Rev. 6:11). These souls have presented their bodies even to die a martyr's death and vengeance is delayed because there are others who are to enter into the joy of giving their "All" to the Lord.

With all of the suffering about us, our heart often cries out for the Lord's return, yet I am very thankful that he did not come forty years ago, for had he come then, I would have missed the joys of heaven. I am even glad that he did not come ten years ago or even five, for I have used these years to grow in grace and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ (II Pet. 3:18). Although I often long for his return, yet every day he carries I know that others are entering into the joys of the Lord, so I thank God and wait.

These souls must wait until their fellows join them and the Lord delays judgment upon their enemies for this very cause. It is thus today. It sometimes seems that God has forgotten—his time is so long. But no, he is not slack concerning his promises, he is waiting to give others a chance because he is not willing that any should perish (II Pet. 3:9).

There is but one thing today that keeps the sun shining; the rivers flowing; the rain falling and the wind blowing. It is because God is calling out a people for his name (Acts 15:14). Until that number is completed, the judgment is delayed. The time is near when the church will be complete and then without a moment's warning, the church age will end (I Cor. 15:52).

The Story of Creation

By Robert R. Fritsch

"How can you believe the Bible story of creation which states that God created light on the first day and the sun on the fourth day?" is a question frequently asked. The obvious answer is that the word "create" occurs neither in the account of the first nor in that of the fourth day of God's activity as described in the first chapter of Genesis. Let us, accordingly, examine the creation story in its relation to the scientific problem involved in the use of the word "create" in the verses where it occurs.

The Book of Genesis may be divided into three divisions. The first comprises chapter one and two under the general subject of "Generation". The second division begins with chapter three and includes chapter eleven. It speaks of "Degeneration". The third section opens the main Bible theme, namely, "Regeneration" or "Redemption" and begins with chapter twelve, the call of, and the promise to, Abraham. It not only embraces the rest of the Book of Genesis, but the rest of the Bible as well. The first very rapidly-sketches eleven chapters are merely introductory to the main theme of the Bible as a whole.

The first of these three sections of Genesis begins with these four words. "In the beginning God", that is, Elohim, the Creator. The second division begins with the three words, "Now the serpent", who is more fully defined in Revelation 20:2 as the Dragon, the Devil, and Satan. Section three opens with this phrase, "Now the Lord", that is, Jehovah, the Redeemer.

Genesis, the name of the first book of the Bible, is derived from the name of this book in the Septuagint, the Greek translation of the Old Testament. It means "beginning". As a word it occurs in the first verse of the New Testament, translated "generation". In the Book of Genesis we are taught (necessarily by revelation) the origin of all things. Thus it is by faith, not by laboratory research, that "we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God" (Hebrews 11:3). Science is helpless here. Much has been said and written, many theories have been advanced, concerning the interpretation of the first two chapters of Genesis. Let us select one of these many proposed interpretations, not original with the writer, but the one most satisfying in view of the difficulties involved.

There is some reason to believe that Genesis 1:1 concerns the original creation, as distinct from the so-called six-day section of this chapter, stated in seven Hebrew words, with no indication as to when or how God did this work. The Bible fails to answer many questions which, though interesting, would be irrelevant to the purpose for which the Bible was given to us. The Bible wastes no time arguing the existence of God, for only the fool says, "No God" (Psalm 14:1). The universe declares the glory of his wisdom and power (Psalm 19:1). Just as back of the watch are the wisdom and skill of the watch-maker, so back of the universe are the wisdom and skill of the universe-maker. What forms of life, vegetable, animal, and what may have approximated human life, were then created, who knows? Many ages may have passed until the condition of the earth as described in verse two came about through one of perhaps many cataclysms in the long course of the age-cycles of terrestrial history. The Bible speaks of the ages to come after this one in which we are living and speaks of at least one fearful cataclysm at the end of our age. (The word for Noah's "flood", mentioned four times in the New Testament, is in the Greek text this word "cataclysm".) Verse two says, "The earth was (same word as 'became' in many passages) without form and void", the Hebrew words being "tohu" and "bohu", but Isaiah 45:18 says that God did not create it "tohu". It must have become so. Many theologians think that Satan's jealousy of man's dominion over the earth, given to him by God, arise from the fact that he had once been entrusted with dominion over the earth, but through pride rebelled against God and was driven out of this sphere, only to return in order to win man's allegiance and thus become once more, "Prince of this world". Did he for this reason have authority to offer the kingdoms of this world to Jesus at the time of his temptation?

It has been suggested that a cataclysm to which we referred may have been associated with a considerable increase in temperature (in direct contrast with what scientists tell us took place during the glacial period), causing many solids at the surface of the earth to become liquids, and the normal liquids to become gases, causing darkness over the face of the earth, because the rays of the sun could not penetrate the dense atmosphere under these conditions. "The Spirit of God", we are told, "moved upon the face of the waters." If the writer by this word translated Spirit means the "breath" of God, poetically used for the "wind", (as this same word is translated in 8:1 as the active agent in drying up the waters of the "cataclysm", that is, the flood) we may observe in the story the progress of the cooling process whereby, according to the ordinary laws of physics, normal conditions are restored during the re-creative or re-formative week of six days of this chapter, which would, accordingly, have nothing to do with the original creation of the first verse as suggested above. It was a comparatively recent event, geologically speaking; for all the geological ages occurred between verses one and two. Thus the circumstantial account of the six days would have to do with that age which concerns Homo Sapiens and the forms of life associated with him, the fossils being the reliques of the life forms of former ages.

The natural progress of events towards a normal state would follow the program or outline indicated in the course of the six days. On day one, with the beginning of the cooling and condensation process, the rays of sunlight would penetrate the gaseous atmosphere to such an extent as to make the differentiation between night and day apparent. Therefore evening and morning were day one. On day two of this re-formative week the process continues with a further clearing of the atmosphere, so that a sky (firmament) separates the lighter mists and vapors ("waters above") from the waters that are settling on the surface of the earth ("waters below") forming seas and lakes, so that by day three; dry land appears with vegetation appearing also (not created), perhaps surviving the catastrophe. Seeds can and do survive in unexpected ways and places, sprouting when the environment again becomes favorable. On day four the mists are quite cleared away and the discs of sun, moon and stars become visible to a supposed observer, and can once more serve for signs and for seasons.

Perhaps for some the events are moving too rapidly for day periods of twenty-four hours. But have we not known days when weather conditions ranged from summer warmth to winter cold, accompanied by fog, thunder and lightning, hail and rainbow, all in one day? He who can turn the rains from heaven into the juice of the grape in the course of six months and then again can do it in a moment of time at Cana, he, I say, may choose to do the work of a day in a thousand years, and again the work of a thousand years in a day. He is not limited by our categories of time and space, he who inhabits the eternities.

The point of greatest significance from the scientific standpoint arises from the fact that it is not until the fifth day that God exercises his creative power (verse twenty-one) in the creation of sentient life. The cataclysm, accounting for the condition of the earth in verse two, had destroyed all such life, giving us the fossil evidences of gigantic creatures and perhaps of pre-Adamic races. No such creative act was necessary after the later cataclysm of the flood, because of the preservation of life in the ark. Here, as in verses eleven and twelve, reference is made to a variety of more or less fixed species in the oft-repeated phrase, "after his kind", "after their kind", which would apparently make evolution unnecessary and would at the same time avoid confusion of species which would necessarily develop if nature tolerated inter-breeding of life forms developing arbitrarily or evolving from a primordial speck of protoplasm, for which, of course, there is no iota of evidence.

Confused images of corruptible man, birds, and four-footed beasts and creeping things (Romans 1:23) do not exist in nature, because nature doesn't work that way. They exist only in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of man (Genesis 6:5) who departed from God and whom God gave up to a reprobate mind (Romans 1:24, 26, 28). There is confusion today in the interpretation of scientific data because the mind of the natural man thinks of the wisdom of God as foolishness. Thus theories come to be invented and accepted without sufficient basis in fact, and philosophic schemes are accepted and taught, although quite contrary to facts. Paul speaks of science falsely so called, and warns us against being spoiled by philosophy and vain deceit after the traditions of men (Colossians 2:8).

Again we come to a higher plane of creative activity. For the third time on the first page of the Bible, God creates—and this time it is man. True it is again, as with the problem of origins always, that we know not how God formed the first human body. Only one thing do we know certainly and that is that we know nothing at all about it. Man was created in God's image, which must mean, and all evidence points that way, that there is as great a gap between man and animal as between animal and vegetable. For the first time we have a creature who is God-conscious. No animal can become so, even if we were to preach to it for fifty years. Every man, and may our service be such that he shall increase (v. 30).

THURSDAY

Paul's Loyalty. Acts 20:17-27

Bonds, afflictions, persecution—none of these things moved Paul. He was willing to lay down life itself in the service of the Lord he now loved. It was only a little while after this that he did lay down his life, and we can easily imagine him repeating the words of Jesus: "But he that will lose his life for my sake and the Gospel's, the same shall save it." Let us be ashamed of the petty trials which so often tempt us to turn back, and let us say with Paul, "None of these things move me."

FRIDAY

Friendship with Jesus. John 15:1-15

Jesus requires confession and loyalty—but how well he repays us! He calls us friends, and takes us into such a close relationship with himself that it is as though we were the branches and he the vine; he reveals unto us his plans, the very counsels of the mighty God; he loved us, even unto death, and finds joy in us, even as we find our joy in him; he has cleansed us through the word, and made us ready to be with him in the heavenly home he went to prepare. All this, and more. How we ought to love and praise him every moment of our lives!

SATURDAY

The Final Reward. Rev. 7:9-17

This is indeed a picture to make glad the hearts of mortal men. These white-robed throngs have come through great tribulation, but that is all ended now, forever; they shall be always in the presence of the Lamb, who will henceforth provide for every need. If this life were all, we should indeed be miserable; it is the final reward, in the life to come, that makes the present life worth living. And it is his presence on the way that enables us to endure.

SUNDAY

The Supreme Loyalty. Rom. 8:31-39

There are few scripture passages so stirring as this one. In the face of sorrow and death we may read it and find courage and comfort. It is easy to picture some of those early martyrs of the faith reciting these verses as they were led to the lions, or to the stake. And if at some future time we are called upon to make the supreme sacrifice, it is the sublime faith that is expressed in these verses that will make us more than conquerors.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

Jesus Requires Confession. Mark 8:27-30

It was no small testimony to the power of Jesus that men thought he was Elijah, or John, both mighty men of God. But the time had come when Jesus wanted his disciples to know definitely that he was the Son of God, and to confess him as such, for their own souls' sakes. In this incident we are again reminded of the necessity for turning away from the opinions of men unto God himself. There is a great confession which Jesus would have every one of us make; read it in Rom. 10:9, 10. What joy to know that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord—as Lord—shall be saved!

TUESDAY

Jesus Requires Loyalty. Mark 8:31 to 9:1

Jesus requires not only that he be given first place in our lives: he would FILL our lives. If we would follow him acceptably we must deny self and its claims utterly, acknowledging his lordship over all. If the price seems too high, we simply lose all. Even in a worldly sense, what profit is it to Mr. Insull to carry a satchel containing ten million dollars into Greece and lose his country, his countrymen, his self-respect, and (we fear), his soul? Just so, in spiritual things, we may hold on to something that will bring us great loss. Pray that we may be loyal to him in these difficult days.

WEDNESDAY

The Baptist's Confession. John 3:25-36

John did not hesitate to remind these Pharisees that he had told them from the first that Jesus was the Son of God, while he himself was only his messenger, or forerunner. His stirring confession will never cease to burn in the hearts of men. Incidentally, his deep realization of the nature and mission of Jesus was one of the chief secrets of his own earnest ministry. May we ever be ready to confess that he is God,

The Little Black Book---A True Missionary Story

By Justa Lee Allen

There was a wistful look on Tevan's face as the drums began to quiver and roll in the distance. As the moon rose high and big in the heavens above the little, sun-baked Indian village, there could be heard on that spring evening the noise of dancing and singing by the excited villagers; for this was a night in honor of Mother Holi.

Tevan and his younger brother turned toward their father.

"Please, father, let us go," they teased. "You can not go," sternly declared their father.

"Not even to the beautiful bonfire?" they persisted.

"No, not even to the bonfire. Remember, we are Christians."

As usual, on such nights the father went early into his little mud house with his boys, and barred the door made of split, interlaced twigs.

"It is always so," pouted Little Brother; "we can never join in the fun."

"Father," asked Tevan a bit more patiently, "what does it mean to be a Christian?"

In all his life Tevan had never seen a Christian preacher or teacher. He only knew that being a Christian made his family different from others. His mother was not allowed to build an altar to the evil spirits; he and his brother did not have the long lock of hair on their heads like the other children in the village; and, when he asked his father why, he always answered proudly, "Because we are Christians."

This time, without speaking, his father went to a niche in the wall and took out a little black book all wrapped in rags that were yellow with age. He unwrapped it and turned it over and over in his hands. He looked at it longingly, then he spoke

"I don't know exactly myself, son, what it means to be a Christian. This book would explain it all if we could read. When I was a lad like you, a man came and read from this book to my father; a missionary, they called him. Then something happened. He didn't come back any more. Father told me to keep it until some one else came who could read. But no one has come, no one has come," he repeated sadly, as he carefully wrapped the book, and replaced it in the niche in the wall.

Next morning a great surprise was awaiting the boys when they awakened. Their father had started, hours before, to the mission headquarters, sixty miles away. Such a trip was very thrilling for Indian boys even to think about, for sixty miles is a very long way when one has to travel in the slow ox-cart. And Tevan was thrilled at the thought of his father's return. Maybe he would bring some one who could read! Maybe he, too, could learn to read; then he could become a teacher to the people in his village.

But Tevan was to be disappointed. A week later, when his father returned all tired and dusty from his long journey, Tevan thought he looked very sad. They had told him at the mission station that they could not send pastors to all the villages, because the people across the black water in America had not sent enough money to pay so many sahibs.

Soon after that the father became very ill. One day he asked Tevan to bring him the little black book. He took the cloth that formed his white turban, as his father had done before him, and wrapped it around and around the little book. As he handed it back to Tevan, he said: "Son, when I am gone, take good care of the book, for some day some one will come who can read it. And remember, son, you are a Christian," he said earnestly. "You are not to allow the long lock of hair to grow on your head, and you are not to take part in the idol-worship of the villagers."

Tevan loved his father very dearly. He wanted to do something to make him well and strong again. If only he could get some one to read the little book to him! He felt sure it would help. But how could he? There was no one to get. Then he thought of one possibility. He ran to his mother with a plan.

"Mother!" he begged. "Please let me drive the ox-cart to the mission station. Please let me try, mother!"

It was a big undertaking for an eleven-year-old boy, but his mother gave her consent. So Tevan put some food in the cart for the oxen, and a little for himself, and a blanket to lie on; for he would have to sleep on the ground several nights. Then on and on he went in the heat and in the dust, until finally he reached the mission. How he hoped every minute that he would not be too late to help his father!

"Please," pleaded Tevan after he had told the missionary about the little black book, "won't you come just this once?"

"I will come," said the missionary kindly. So, leaving the oxen behind, she and Tevan and an old, white-haired Indian pastor hurried back in her Ford car to Tevan's village. When they came to the little mud hut, Tevan hurried to his father.

"Father!" he cried joyously. "I got her, father; and she can read."

"Lady, can you read?" his father asked eagerly.

Tevan went to the niche in the wall. He took out what looked to be a bundle of rags. Fold after fold he unwrapped until at last there lay before the missionary a little Testament.

"It is the little black book," said Tevan simply.

It was afternoon. The sunlight came streaming in through the open door of the tiny mud hut. The brown faces of Tevan and his family were turned hungrily toward the missionary, as they drank in every word. Once she paused for breath.

"Please do not stop," begged Tevan's father.

Silently the missionary handed the Bible over to the white-haired Indian pastor, and he read until it became too dark to see. Then they all knelt for the first Christian prayer the little family had ever heard.

"And now," asked the missionary, "how would you like to have a pastor all your own?"

Tevan was so happy he could not say a word. Now he knew his father would get well.

"My brave boy, you came to us just at the right time," continued the lovely lady. She drew a letter from her pocket.

"I have word from the missionary board in America saying that a boys' and girls' society there wish to support a village pastor in India. I am sure those boys and girls would want Tevan to have their pastor in his village."

Tevan only said, "Thanks, Miss," as he put the palm of his hand on his forehead, and bowed his head and body very low; but to himself he was thinking of that glad day when he with his own hand would be able to write a letter of thanks to the boys and girls in America for their great gift to his village.—Junior C. Not to India, but to Africa and South America, Brethren boys and girls, and young people as well, are sending missionaries who can read and teach the Bible to the many who are anxious to know what it means to be a Christian.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

The Lord continues to prosper the work here and we praise him for the growth we see in the native Christians. Gradually they are taking more and more responsibility in the church.

There are three chapels in the villages that are cared for by the native pastors. Some of the natives in these villages have to undergo real persecution because of their stand for Christ. On the station the Christians are protected somewhat from these evils but oftentimes they are not as strong as those who have no protection. We hope to build three more chapels soon, the Native Christians furnish most of the money for these chapels.

Misses Bickel and Crawford are now visiting some of the chapels and giving the Gospel to the villages in between as well. They expect to be away about three weeks. Miss Crawford was a welcome addition to our missionary force recently. She expects to start French school as soon as her permission arrives.

Recently, we enjoyed visits from Dr. Gribble, who so recently returned from the homeland, and from Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway, and Mr. Jobson. It isn't often that we see our fellow-missionaries, therefore we enjoy their fellowship all the more when we do have a little unexpected visit.

Our Sunday school continues to average over 400. Christmas Day we reached our high mark when there were more than 1200 present. We had a program and the Christians gave an offering of their grain. There were about five barrels of Kaffir corn which was sold and the proceeds go for new chapels.

Our classes in the vernacular are progressing. We have about 75 who are beginning to read the songs, and that is more than they could do four months ago. Recently we made 60 song books, and it has been a laborious task in spite of the fact that our song book contains only 12 songs! The first 13 chapters of the Gospel of Mark have been translated into the Baya language and we hope to finish it and have it printed soon. How much we need some reading material for those who are beginning to read, and the Bible is the best Book in the world that we could give to them. How grateful we should be for this Book and yet how many fail to realize the great blessing that it would be if studied. Perhaps if we were deprived of it for a little while we would appreciate it more.

A large number continue to attend the enquirers' class, some coming from the villages. There are enquirers at all the chapels also.

The medical department continues to minister to more than 100 daily (except Sunday). Just now some of the natives around here have measles.

Continue to pray for us as we labor in this dark land.

An Old Papuan Pastor

Koani Miki of Port Moresby was the last of the old band of Papuan pastors. While still a lad, his life was saved by Chalmers and Lawes. One day, while a group of boys were playing leap-frog, a young man joined in, and as he reached Koani, he stopped saying, "You are too weak to bear my weight." So he brought from a nearby house a broken length of a canoe pole and told Koani to rest on that. As the heavyweight jumped, little Koani bowed under the strain, and the broken pole pierced the leaper, so that the young man died shortly afterwards.

The relatives of the dead youth carried him home, and armed themselves to attack Koani's section of the village and kill him. Lawes and Chalmers, from the mission house on the hill, heard the tumult and rushed down through the armed and noisy crowd in the village, up into Koani's house, and seizing him by the hand, they walked him between them, daring anyone on either side to lift a spear. Lawes forbade Koani to leave the mission grounds, lest the avengers should kill him.

He grew up in Lawes's household, and on attaining manhood entered the college. In 1888 he was ordained and with his wife, was sent to Porebada, about twelve miles from Port Moresby. When he went to this village it was comparatively small, but the virile people increased in numbers, and Koani's work bore fruit. When he retired in 1930, he had been schoolmaster, pastor and friend to the whole village. Out of a total population of 550, 120 were adult church members, and 108 more were in the day school under his tuition. Practically all of the inhabitants are able to read the books published in their own vernacular.

Koani was one of God's gentlemen; courteously in manner and speech; and full of fire when preaching the Gospel he loved. He was a true friend and a father, beloved by his colleagues, Papuan and European alike. When Koani Miki retired as pastor, he was, at the earnest request of the villagers, succeeded by his son, Gorogo.—J. B. Clark. in the L. M. S. Chronicle.

MT. OLIVET BRETHREN CHURCH

Dear Evangelist: I closed a two and a half weeks' meeting at Mt. Olivet Brethren church, Millsboro, Delaware, March 12. I had some misgivings because I have preached there so long and we were unable to get an evangelist, so for ten days I gave evangelistic-prophetic messages all bearing on The Second Coming of Christ. For the first week the interest and crowds grew until Sunday night we had the largest crowd we have had for several years. The second week for two nights we had a reduced crowd then improved again when on Friday of the second week Brother Christiansen, our District Evangelist, came to our rescue for a week, then the crowds increased more rapidly and he preached for a week. I never heard better evangelistic sermons. After a few nights some of the best people in the community made a profession.

Seven made confessions in the church and one sick man confessed Christ in his home—eight all together. We will have baptism a little later. Christiansen had to leave on Saturday and I closed the meeting over the last Sunday with splendid interest. Christiansen came to our help at a great sacrifice to himself and his church as he has been having additions in Allentown nearly every week for some time. We wonderfully appreciated the great work he did for us and we believe the Lord will greatly bless him for it. My son Kenneth came over each Sunday and led the music. This also helped our meeting. This was also appreciated as he drove home 125 miles after church each Sunday night. Last Sunday night he brought me home after the service which made 175 miles to drive and then go to work at 6 A. M., Monday morning. My oldest son and youngest daughter drove down from Camden, New Jersey, gave us special music Saturday night, then they drove me 25 miles to the Church of God for 10:30 service, then 25 miles back to Mt. Olivet for 2 P. M. service and 7:30 service, then drove me home, 125 miles, Sunday night.

After two and a half weeks' campaign of strenuous work and preaching three times and driving 200 miles the last day, I was tired and brain weary but happy in the Lord because of the souls saved and because of returning home after an absence of three weeks. After a two weeks' rest I will open up a three weeks' campaign for my son at Sergeantsville, New Jersey. This will be a very hard field. It is overchurched, and has not had a revival for years and most of the people belong to church. Brother Christiansen has consented to drive 200 miles and preach three or four week nights at Mt. Olivet while I am at Sergeantsville. Please pray for our meeting at Sergeantsville and also for the Delaware work.

BERNE, INDIANA

Just a line to let you know we are still among the living. We closed our "witness revival" on Sunday night, March the 12th. There were 27 that came out to confess and renew their covenant. We baptized 14 on Wednesday night, March the 15th.

Brother C. H. Ashman was our evangelist. It is useless for me to tell of his ability as an evangelist. There is none better. He preached the Word faithfully, was willing to go anywhere and do personal work. We were pleased with his work. We feel there could have been a greater ingathering if we could have gotten the unsaved to attend, but we hope the seed sown will still bear fruit.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

WITNESSING REVIVAL AT BERNE, INDIANA

Six years ago, we enjoyed a season of refreshing with the Bethel church at Berne, Indiana. The Lord blessed our united efforts at that time, so in faith we accepted the call for another revival. The Lord blessed us again. There were 27 confessions in all, 20 of whom had never been a member of the Brethren church prior to this revival.

We faced special difficulties. Conditions were not ideal for a revival. A spirit of discouragement had gripped some. Others felt that a revival was impossible at this time. But, that is just the time when a revival is an absolute necessity. If ever the Brethren churches needed to put on a most intensive program of evangelism, it is now!!! So, the revival began as originally planned. From the very beginning, the "faithfuls" got behind, under, and all around this revival. This church has some of "the finest of the wheat." It is always "earnestly contending for the Faith once for all delivered unto the saints." It is instructed in "rightly dividing the Word of Truth." Pastor and people form a group of Bible-believing, Bible-studying, and Bible-teaching folks. With this foundation and background, we sought to stir them to prayer and personal soul-winning. Personal evangelism is the need of this hour in our churches. The day is past when the pastor and evangelist can do it all or even a major part of it. At last, the vision and the passion for lost souls came. The last two Sundays and the week between them witnessed an awakening. Attendance increased, spiritual fervor intensified, conviction settled, the revival closed with a full house, a number of confessions, and a fine spirit of joy and unity.

We were entertained royally. It was our privilege to speak to three high schools. In spite of the bank situation and other conditions, the church gave us a liberal offering, mostly in cash and some in produce. They filled our "Buick full of "things to eat." Thanks, again, Brethren, thanks! This church has some problems to solve but we believe that they will face them in the spirit of unity and find their solution to his glory.

Evangelist, CHARLES H. ASHMAN.

REVIVAL AT CARLETON

On March 20th we began a two weeks' evangelistic meeting with Brother Deeter and his good people at Carleton, Nebraska. This was a union meeting with the Methodist and Brethren churches cooperating. These two churches have been working together for more than two years and Brother Deeter is serving them as pastor.

While this was our first visit to Carleton, the pastor and the writer were not strangers; as we have worked together in similar meetings several times. We have always found him to be untiring in his efforts to advance the Lord's kingdom and the salvation of souls. Together we made almost a house to house canvas of the town and surrounding community.

The pastor had done his work well in preparing his people for these services. From the very first a fine audience greeted us each evening. I don't believe that I have ever preached to a more attentive people. They were always eager to hear the old story of Jesus and his love. This was an inspiration to the preacher and we enjoyed a real freedom in delivering God's message. God honored his Word as he always does and many precious souls found Christ as their personal Savior. The pastor has reported the results of these meetings.

We were most favorably impressed with the fine cooperation that the pastors and churches of the surrounding towns gave us. I want to especially mention Rev. Sink, of the Church of the Brethren, who with his family was with us in almost every service.

These people are seriously affected by the low prices of farm products. The bank holiday came during the last week of the meetings, but they remembered the evangelist with a very fine offering. For this and the many kindnesses shown us, we say, Thank You.

Our home was with the pastor and his good wife, and it was a real home. We enjoyed our stay with them very much.

May the Lord continue to bless the pastor and his people at Carleton.

AUSTIN R. STALEY.

attends the young people's group, which follows the method of studying some lesson from the Bible. Besides this there is a period of prayer and testimony. The children's Societies under able leadership give opportunity for special songs, the memorizing of Scripture and teaching the children to pray. How they do pray! They put some of the older folks to shame.

Special Prayer Meeting

We continue in our church the special Tuesday morning prayer meeting. From a dozen to twenty people attend this weekly. It is a period of real intercession. I cannot recommend such a special prayer meeting too highly.

Services in General

All services are showing a notable increase over last year, and the years preceding for which we are praising the Lord. Never before have we had so many people attending our services who have not yet become members of the church. Some are from other churches and some need salvation.

Recent Revival

We recently enjoyed a refreshing revival in our church with Rev. I. D. Kirkpatrick, associate evangelist with John Brown. Ten accepted Christ. Some have been baptized and have joined the church. Others are yet to come. We have baptismal services every few weeks, and enjoy seeing people coming at all times of the year.

Prophecy Class

One of the special features of our church for the past year has been the Pastor's Prophecy Class. This has met in various places in the city with an attendance of above one hundred. Most of these were people from other churches. This class has helped to form the background for the organization of a systematic Bible school.

Bible School

The Bible school is not directly under our church although ten classes each week meet in our building. The school is organized for the purpose of giving systematic Bible instruction in the Word of God to those who for financial or other reasons find it impossible to attend the regular Bible schools. Classes are conducted in the study of Personal Evangelism, Principles of Biblical Interpretation, Bible Doctrine, Prophecy, History of the Bible, Synthesis, Christian Evidences and Biblical Pedagogy. Four of our teachers have formerly been connected with the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, either on the faculty there or in extension work. Classes are conducted four evenings and two afternoons each week. I teach two regular classes, one in Bible Doctrine and the other in Prophecy. Fifty-eight students are now enrolled. Most of these are from other churches, and most of the students are young people. Some attend the classes of their choice who are not regularly enrolled. The plan is to continue for sixteen weeks. (Catalog upon request.)

The people of the church enjoyed a splendid Communion service last evening. It was the largest in the history of the church.

We greatly appreciate hearing from other parts of the country, and note with pleasure the blessing of the Lord upon the Brethren Church. May he keep us true to the faith until he comes back again.

CHAS. W. MAYES, Pastor.

A Vital Message by a Leader in Moral Reform

The Editor of "The Nation" has recently said, "We are living in a bankrupt world. The country has gone bad religiously, morally, economically and politically. It will never be restored in economics or in politics till it gets right in religion and morals." The writer recently talked with the editor of the most popular weekly in America who predicted, "If the Church does not get back to God, and the nation experience a revival of genuine religion to make us all conscious of the upper forces, you will not only lose prohibition, but every Sabbath law on the statute books of each state, the laws against gambling and prize-fighting, and all the enactments of social purity such as the Mann Act, and the triumphant secularists will place a tax on church property that will crush out all but the richer ones; and they are not the ones that bring salvation to those most in need of it."

If the underworld gets the upper hand by the destruction of prohibition, it will ride rough-shod over everything in church, home, school and state that does not aid in secularizing the commonwealth and debauching mankind for money. The legalizing of liquor is the movement to put money ahead of men. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." These politicians all know that as well as we and they are choosing a Mammon. It has been amazing to see a whole Congress swept from its moorings by the love of money and willing to let loose an unbridled liquor traffic on the American people for the sake of beer dimes and brewers' millions. But our hope is not in politics or economics. It is in God and religion; in a total and irreversible self surrender to live the Godly life in this present world of need.

Men are looking to the Church to show the way out of the depression and the distress. When they ask for bread, shall we give them beer? When they ask for God and his salvation from sin, shall we substitute fine music, comfortable pews, elegant sermons breathing doubts, extending the elements of uncertainty? There are men who read nothing but critical stuff and then doubt all their beliefs and believe all their doubts. They leave their people in mist. They have talked so much about breadth that their notions are spread out too thin. We doubt if there can be an intense Christian life, intense enough to make headway against the drift without a definite faith and conviction strong enough to make an issue with the world and to fight it out on that line if it takes a lifetime.

The purpose of Gospel preaching is to save individual souls and to create a social betterment for the race. A plant draws nourishment from unorganized matter and grows thereon unto perfection, but an animal requires for its nourishment and growth food that has been vitalized. The human intellect may be nurtured by the study of dead fact and law, but the soul of man requires to be fed on truth that has been vitalized on the experience of other souls. Real preaching is heart speaking to heart with intuitions kindled from above. There is a psychological law which prevents a message making a deeper impression on the soul of a hearer than it is making in the heart of the speaker.

That touches the sore place in our modern church life. There is not enough vital preaching. We have lived through a day of "highbrow" objection to emotion in religion. There was no cool dignity on the football field or in the baseball game or on the golf links; the stock market was not dull or cold and the political convention was not formal. Only religion was to be circumspect and lifeless. If one becomes enthusiastic over games and sports, he is called a "Fan." If he enthuses over religion and morals, they call him a "Fanatic." When the campaign against emotion in preaching was well done, the periods of fads, the rural church, and religious education came on. Under both agitations our congregations went down, our Sunday schools fell off, our children drifted away; a million dollar shortage a year in the benevolent giving of the Church showed what substitutes had done for the church of Christ.

We cannot blame our present state on emotionalism for we have not had it. You cannot blame it on evangelism for it has been absent.

A child must be born before it is educated. "Ye must be born again" before you are ready for the religious educational progress. Those who begin religious education before the new birth are putting last things first. The process of changing from sin to sainthood is from above. The good people of the land, interested in the welfare of their children, are trembling for the ARK at this time.

Prohibition is in grave danger but has a fighting chance to win in the states.

A deeper need of the times than even the maintenance of prohibition, important as that is, is a turning of the eyes from Mammon to God, a getting right with the foral commandments which are an expression of his will, a surrender on our knees to him who has a plan for every human life and who alone can make a life a success,—in short, an old-fashioned recognition of God enthroned in human lives, giving an eager desire to do his will and keep his commandments to save our civilization, and nothing else will. If there is no God, there is no brotherhood of man. It is his fatherhood which makes our brotherhood. If we do not recognize God, we will fail to see our human relationship and society will be headed for catastrophe. You can't build up a civilization with your hand against every man and every man's hand against you.

Back to your Bibles, O church-member; down upon your knees and seek the secret of the power of the fathers, the clean heart and endowment of the Spirit from on High, straight preaching of sermons that are after souls, a total surrender of self to live the Godly life in this present world. "Then shall we teach transgressors thy ways and sinners shall be converted unto thee." A revival of that kind of heart religion in individuals will spread to communities and make social relations Christian. May it come through the Church of Christ to a needy world in this emergency!—Clarence True Wilson, General Secretary Board of Temperance Prohibition and Public Morals of the M. E. Church.

LITTLE BLACK HOGGIE

When the little black Hoggie lost himself, he was round and fat, and he had a curly tail, but when he lost himself he lost his tail also.

The little Hoggie lived in a clover field. How do you suppose he lost himself? Listen and I'll tell you. He lost himself under a cornfield. You are wondering how he could get lost under a cornfield. This is the way he did it. He crawled right under the rows of growing corn.

At the far end of the clover field a big red tile came out from under the cornfield and poured its water into a merry little brook which went splashing on its way through the clover field.

The little Hoggie and his brothers came there every day to play in the brook. One day when the little black Hoggie came the big red tile was dry. Not a drop of water was coming out. The little Hoggie blinked his eyes and looked again. But there was no water. "Now that is strange," thought the little Hoggie. Then he scrambled up the bank to the big tile and peeped in. "The water's gone, sure enough. Perhaps the ducks drank it," said Hoggie to his friends and brothers who were with him. "The ducks are always drinking water, you know." "Beware!" exclaimed an old Hoggie. "Once I peeped into that tile and a weasel nipped my nose."

"No difference," said the little black Hoggie, and he climbed into the mouth of the tile. Just then a black furry thing flew past him and scampered away among the clover blooms. But the little Hoggie was used to minks.

The little Hoggie started up the tile. "There is plenty of room here," he said to himself. "If anything comes, I'll turn around and run out again." So he went up the tile, which was getting smaller all the time. "Now," thought the little Hoggie, "if anything comes, I'll have to back out for I can't turn around." But nothing came out of the dark, and the little Hoggie kept brakely on, slowly creeping up, up the tile.

It began to feel pretty tight. But he was a brave little fellow and blinked his eyes in the dark.

"Nothing is going to happen to me if it is dark. Nothing is going to happen to me," he kept saying over and over to himself.

Then all at once something did happen. The little black Hoggie was fast in the tile. He pushed and grunted and strained his muscles, but he could not move, could not even wiggle a toe.

"Now here I am!" he exclaimed, "tight as a knob in a door. Whatever shall I do?" He began to think pretty hard. "What shall I do?"

What do you suppose he did do? Squealed, of course. Pigs always squeal for help when they get into trouble. The little black Hoggie kept squealing until he was so tired he could not make a sound.

"O dear!" he said. "I think it is supper time, and now I shall have to stay here all night. It is so dark, darker than the night in here. Out in the clover field there is always the moon or the stars, but in here—O dear me!"

Then the little Hoggie fell asleep. All the time a weasel had been coming up the tile. When the weasel saw the little Hoggie he sniffed: "Now, what's this? A pig, to be sure." Then he took a nip at the little Hoggie's tail. O how he squealed! The weasel ran away, but the little Hoggie kept on squealing.

The little Hoggie's master had missed him the night before, and now he was plowing corn right over the little Hoggie's head. The farmer had told his wife that the little black Hoggie, the one with the ring in his tail, was missing.

"O surely," said she. "the little Hoggie can take care of himself."

All the time he was fast in the tile under the cornfield. He had neither supper nor breakfast. He was tired and hungry and full of cramps. Little pains went darting all over him. He began to squeal with all his might. Then all at once he heard a horse neigh. "Now, that's old Billy," shouted the little Hoggie. Then he squealed again.

The farmer heard him and stopped his horse and looked all up and down the corn rows, but no pig did he see. He went on to the end of the field and back again. The little Hoggie heard old Billy whinny, and he squealed his loudest.

Once more the farmer heard and stopped his horse. "Surely that noise comes right out of the ground," the farmer told old Billy. "Where can that pig be? Can he be in the tile?"

The little Hoggie squealed again, and then the farmer was sure that he would find him in the big red tile. He hurried away to the barn and came back with a long shovel. He dug right down to the tile, broke it open with a hammer, and pulled the little Hoggie out.

Pretty soon the little Hoggie had forgotten all about the dark and the cramps. Then he scampered away to the clover field, laughing all the way to think what fun he was going to have telling the other hoggies about how it feels to stay all night in a dark tile under the cornfield. He didn't mind so much about the loss of his tail. Wasn't he going to be a hero now? And he was.—Mrs. James E. Morris, in Christian Observer.

THE STORY OF CREATION

on the other hand, has the capacity for God. Evolution can not account for this.

The marvel of this first page of the Bible is its scientific accuracy with respect to the use of the word "create". Exactly where the honest scientist admits no rational explanation possible, namely, as to the origin of matter, of sentient life, and of man, there we have God's creative activity specified.

Thus man was created so as to be able to apprehend God Who created him. He was created a moral being and placed on probation. He yielded to the voice of the tempter and since then he has been in rebellion against God. He tries to read him out of his universe, and apparently, with his mind darkened, longs to link himself up with the inferior forms of life as though related to them by way of a hypothetical missing link, all the while ignoring what the Bible was given us to reveal, namely, our relation to God, which was broken by sin, but which relation may be restored by the link at the other end of the chain, the Son of God and the Son of man, in whom is life in all its fullness and understanding. Only through him do we come to know the meaning and purpose of life. He becomes to us the wisdom of God who is not only Elohim the Creator (Genesis 1:1) but, in personal relation with man, is Jehovah (Genesis 2:4) our Redemer and Lord. Through Jesus, who was Jehovah manifest in flesh, all things were created and by him all things even now hold together. Only as we know the Written Word and him who is the Living Word can we know the truth concerning God and man and the environment into which God has placed him to prepare him for his larger destiny in the ages to come.—The Evangelical Student.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

The Brethren church of Fort Scott, Kansas, will hold the spring Love feast service on Easter Sunday evening.

An invitation is extended to all that can be with us at that time.

Name Changed from First Brethren to Ghent Brethren Church

In a called meeting of the membership of the church last Sunday morning (March 12, 1933) the Church Board made a recommendation to the church that the name be changed from the First Brethren Church to the GHENT BRETHREN CHURCH. This new name was suggested because of the confusion that was constantly arising between the many churches of the city that have about the same name. Also it was thought that by naming the church after the section of the city in which it is established it would be easier for the people of the city to locate it. The church voted to make the change in name, so now let us always speak of our church in Roanoke, Virginia as the GHENT BRETHREN CHURCH.

“I Was Afraid, and Went and Hid Thy Money”

It happened in the city of Cleveland. The United States government had warned the hoarders of gold that their names would be made public unless they turned it back. And the yellow metal was flowing back over the counters of the Federal Reserve Bank, clinking in its own peculiar and pleasant fashion. Not merely the rich but all classes of men and women were coming in; some with much, others with little.

The hard working bank tellers were very courteous as they received the gold, counted it in little stacks, and stored it away. And yet, if you observed closely, you could see a flush of embarrassment on the faces of the involuntary depositors. Quite plainly, it was not easy to do what they were doing. Some tried feebly to joke about the matter. Others attempted rather desperately to explain how they happened to have the gold in their possession. Still others hurried in and hurried out as if to escape attention. One man, laying down a couple of worn ten-dollar gold pieces, whispered fearfully, “You’re sure they won’t give out the names of those who had the gold.”

The words of this last man have been ringing in my ears for the past several days. At first I smiled at them. It seemed utterly amusing to see a man with so little gold worrying about public exposure as a hoarder. It is the rich hoarder, I said to myself, that the Government is after. And then I suddenly remembered the Lord’s parable of the Talents, how that the servant who had the least was the one who turned out to be the hoarder. “I was afraid,” he said, trying to explain, “and went and hid thy talent in the earth.” And for all his pains and foresight, he lost it in the end. Which is always what happens to the money that we fail to invest in the Work of God.

I do not know whether, when at last we stand before the Judgment-Seat of Christ, we need to fear that he will “give out the names of those who had the gold” and kept it in the face of the world’s appalling missionary need. If he does, probably the most of us, even the poorest, will find the blush of the hoarder’s shame upon our cheeks.

But we do know that, in this uncertain world, there is at least one place where we can put our precious savings with the assurance that they cannot be lost: that is the MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE.

In this enterprise, the Eternal God guarantees the safety of our deposits, and, best of all, the payment of dividends throughout all eternity.

LET US NOT BE AFRAID.

An Easter Song

Every face is beaming,
Every step is light,
All the world is beautiful
From merry morn till night.
The little streams are dancing
And flashing, just for fun,
And joyfully to meet the sea
The mighty rivers run.

And twice ten thousand flowers,
And twice ten thousand more,
Are waking in the lonesome woods
And by the cottage door.
To count the Easter lilies
Is more than you or I
Can hope to do the long day through,
How hard soe'er we try.

Every face is beaming,
Every step is light,
For o'er the threshold Easter slipped
At waning of the night,
And little birds are singing
Like mad for joy of life,
And all the hours, in sun and showers,
With brimming joys are rife.

Uplift the songs of Easter,
Let none today be still,
When this great world is like a cup
That flowers overflow;
When blossoms deck the orchard,
And boughs are pink and white,
And winds go by, like wings that fly,
From merry morn till night.

5,000,000,000 Dollars!

According to Walter L. Miller of the United States Department of Commerce, since the close of the World War the American people have invested fifty billions in various kinds of "securities," home and foreign.

Of this staggering amount, says Mr. Miller, at least one-half must be written off as practically worthless today: a loss of 25,000,000,000 dollars, or two hundred dollars for every man, woman and child in America.

If the membership of the Brethren Church be counted as 25,000, the loss within our own denomination would be in the neighborhood of five million dollars!

Five million dollars would pay the present foreign missionary budget of the Brethren Church for ever one hundred years, an investment guaranteed by God himself, paying interest throughout eternity.

All of us need to pray for sound business judgment as we approach the Easter Offering this year.

THE "Strike against Light"

In the little Ohio village of Windham, a few nights ago, the lights went out at midnight in 184 homes. The electric power company had refused to lower their exorbitant rates, and the people declared a "strike" against the use of light. Once the people learn the power of organized effort, some of the great power concerns which have systematically plundered the consumers, will wake up to the fact that electricity is worth nothing unless you can sell it. With such a "strike" most people will sympathize.

But there is another strike against light which is infinitely more serious, a strike which is wholly without any justification, a strike which can injure only those who strike. "This is the condemnation, that Light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light." (Jn. 3:19).

Men do not strike against this Light because of its high cost to them. As a matter of fact, this Light is paid for by the one who gives it. The consumer pays nothing. The reason men reject the Light of God in Christ is because they "loved darkness rather than Light." For such there is no hope. For them "the mist of darkness is reserved forever" (2 Pet. 2:17). They love darkness, and they are given darkness—this is the terrible irony of the divine judgment.

THE "Holy Year"

On April 1st, Pope Pius XI with extraordinary ceremonies proclaimed the current year to be a "holy year" in commemoration of the Death of our Lord nineteen hundred years ago.

Dressed in a mantle embroidered with gold, holding in his hand a hammer of gold, surrounded by cardinals and archbishops richly dressed and brought from all over the world, in the presence of the royalty and aristocracy of Rome, brilliantly costumed diplomats and papal knights, the Pope proclaimed a year of "prayer and faith" which he "hopes" will end the economic depression.

There is no economic depression in the Vatican.

The main feature of the ceremony consisted in the "breaking" down of the "holy door" in the basilica of St. Peter. The Pope struck the door with his golden hammer, the door fell, and the Pope appeared dramatically in the opened doorway to bestow his blessing upon the waiting thousands of spectators.

Doubtless all this was very colorful and interesting, but it can bring no permanent cure to the ills of a stricken world. Some day, it may be soon, the door of heaven will be broken down and One shall come forth from that heavenly sanctuary who is able to do what man cannot do. He will come in a glory beside which the glory of Rome will become as the pretending of little children at play. And every eye shall see him, not merely a few thousand.

"Oh, that Thou wouldst rend the heavens, that Thou wouldst come down . . . to make thy Name known to thine adversaries, that the nations may tremble at thy presence." (Isa. 64:1-2).

IT'S All Below"

Zangara, recently electrocuted for the murder of Mayor Cermak, was offered the opportunity of receiving counsel from a minister as he was led into the execution chamber. His response was to shout: "No! I no want minister. There is no God. IT'S ALL BELOW!"

Not long ago I read extracts from a book written by Professor E. G. Conklin, famous biologist of Princeton University. Professor Conklin proposes to take Christianity and make out of it a "scientific" religion. He would scuttle all the supernatural elements and retain only what science can demonstrate. In this new religion there would be no transcendent God, no heaven, no new birth, no resurrection, no life after death for the individual soul. EVERYTHING IS ON EARTH, AND IS OF THE EARTH EARTHY.

From the standpoint of intelligence and education, the difference between Zangara and such men as Conklin is vast. But at bottom their religious philosophy is identical. Everything is "BELOW." There is nothing ABOVE. The logic of this philosophy leads inevitably to the religion of the final antichrist, for man will worship something. He is made that way.

Zangara's final word struck infallibly the fundamental difference between Christianity and the religion which refuses to recognize anything outside the realm of physical science. The one is from ABOVE. The other is wholly BELOW. The Christ of the one said, "I am from above." The final leader of the other will come up from beneath. Read Revelation 13th chapter verses 1 and 11.

Fortunately, there are some scientists who are also Christians, men who know both from the Word of God and from their own personal experience that there is something ABOVE, a blessed realm where the methods of physical science are wholly incompetent. Such men believe there is a God in heaven, a Christ who come down from heaven, became incarnate by virgin birth, died on the Cross in the stead of sinners, rose again from the dead on the third day, and ascended back into heaven. They believe that men can be born from above. They do not believe that the physical world is a closed system, but hold that Christ once broke into it supernaturally, AND THAT HE WILL ONCE MORE BREAK INTO IT WHEN HE COMES A SECOND TIME.

Such men utterly repudiate the philosophy of Zangara, "It's all below." They are Christian scientists. The others may be scientists, but they are not Christian.

How Many Loaves Have Ye?

By Mrs. F. C. Vanator, Advisory Member of Foreign Board from the W. M. S.

Christ taught his disciples a lesson when he fed the multitudes that should bring us, at this Easter season, face to face with our privilege. The disciples saw in the hungry mob that had followed Jesus all day long, a task that would have been a great one for even a group of wealthy men. They pointed out to Christ that even two hundred pennyworth of bread would not be enough to make a beginning with this crowd.

Today many are saying that even if the whole church tithed, with conditions as they are, there would not be sufficient to give the gospel to all nations; but Christ said to his disciples, "How many loaves HAVE YE?" And they scornfully told him "Five LITTLE loaves and two SMALL fishes." Everything was made to appear as small as possible. But CHRIST took the loaves and fishes, even so small, and BLESSED them and they became SUFFICIENT for the multitude, with a great many fragments left over.

He is saying to us today, not "what would do for the Easter offering if times were normal", but "HOW MANY LOAVES HAVE YE?" If we are faithful in presenting our gifts from our storehouses, no matter how meager, then God will bless our gifts and so increase them that they will cover the great need in our Foreign Fields.

May we be faithful in counting the loaves and fishes at this Easter time. Then we can praise God who gives the increase.

Remember the Morning Cometh

The Easter season is bringing to us that very reminder. It is telling us that though the night be dark, yet be of good courage, for the morning cometh.

"The Morning light is breaking;
The darkness disappears."

That is the message of Easter for these times. After the night of gloom and sorrow and suffering and defeat, there comes a day bringing gladness and joy and hope and victory. It is the promise of life after death, of day after night, of meeting after parting. It gives assurance of the ultimate triumph of righteousness and spirituality and godliness over the world, the flesh and the devil.

That is the message we are needing when distress and discouragement and failure and fear everywhere abound. We are needing something to lift us out of the slough of despond and to place our feet upon solid ground, something that will cause us to set out anew upon the King's highway, looking away to the eternal city, whose builder and maker is God. Our eyes are so glued to the earth, so blinded by this material world, with its passing show, its ephemeral values, its superficial attachments, its increasing vice, its growing corruption, its decadent morals—all of which tend either to allure and fascinate or to discourage and dishearten us.

Some are losing sight of the things of eternal worth and no longer give allegiance to the higher and finer purposes and aims. While others, though continuing in the high road of life personally, have lost hope and zeal and are filled with a gloomy outlook as black as night. During the days of our Master's week of passion there seemed to be everything to make for sadness and discouragement and nothing to give brightness of prospect. Then came the morning of the resurrection and the light of hope broke over the eastern sky and spread until there was the brightness of noonday's reality. And in these days of acknowledged discouragement, despair has settled over many hearts and resistance is gone. We need to have flashed afresh before the eyes of our minds the glories of that first Easter Day when life and power began to be manifested anew. It is heartening to give thought to the resurrection and to the glorified life of our Lord. And it is inspiring and reassuring to contemplate heavenly realities and the Power that guarantees them. It is a tonic to our souls to remember the promise of a day when death shall be no more, when there shall be no more sorrow and sighing, when God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes and when we shall be forever with the Lord and shall take part in the eternal chorus of praise unto our God. When discouraged, just remember that the morning cometh, and it will help in every way.

Many people avoid thoughts of heaven and of the future life, as if they were suitable only for the weak and sickly. They look upon such sentiments as that expressed in the couplet,

"I look away across the sea;
Where mansions are prepared for me," as being too otherworldly for common use, and consequently impractical. But on the contrary such sentiments are wholesome and enobling and very practical. They help to neutralize the hardening, selfish, despiritualizing influences of the world, and to keep the soul more serious and conscientious in its attitude toward life's problems and more tender, just and considerate in its contacts with its fellowmen. There is not one of us but needs the mellowing, refining, purifying power of such spiritual forces upon his life. When the morning cometh we would not be found unprepared.

Nothing is more comforting in times of sorrow than the thoughts of the heavenly life as set forth in the Word of God. Jesus comforted his own disciples when he was about to leave them by telling them of the many mansions in his Father's house and of his purpose to prepare a place for each one of them. And it is going to mean a lot to have a home in heaven, even as it does here. Home! that is something every normal person wants. There is no greater blessing on earth than to have a home, a real home where love reigns and happiness dwells. And it is difficult to conceive of any greater handicap in life than to be deprived of a home. If home in these temporary, imperfect conditions is so highly prized, how much infinitely more desirable will it be to have a home eternal in the heavens! That will be the true home of the soul, and every faithful disciple of Christ is promised such a home, when the morning dawns.

And more than having a place set apart in heaven that we can call home, we are assured that Christ, our blessed Lord, will dwell with us, and that, after all, is what is going to make heaven home. He said, "I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." Who can think of a more wonderful promise than that? To live with Christ and to hold daily sweet fellowship with him—that would make heaven of any home anywhere! And with such a promise held out to us in the future life, what sincere Christian heart will not look forward to the prospect as to an unspeakable privilege? It is no wonder that Paul said to depart to be with Christ is far better. He understood, as many do not, what surpassing joy is in store for those who shall enter into that intimate and precious fellowship with the Lord Jesus in heaven. We are looking forward to such fellowship in the morning.

The late Bishop Quayle spoke these beautiful words before a Methodist conference not long before he died: "There was a man I knew who had a daughter, and that daughter had never been away from home at all, to speak of. There came a time when she was going to be married. Her father's custom had always been to tuck that girl in bed at night. No matter how late he came in—and he was out late of nights on the Lord's errands—the door was left ajar and he was ordered by his child to come in and tuck her in bed; and so always, whatever time of the night he came in, he would go in softly and tuck her in and kiss her; and sometimes she would be partly awake, and say, 'Hello daddy.' And he would say, 'Good night, sweetheart.' And so it came to the last night that she should be under his roof and under the shadow of his love, and he tucked her in, and she put her arms around his neck and drew him close, and he put his arms around her and said, 'Oh, my daughter;' and she just said, 'Daddy;' and he tucked her in. wonder if God in the last night that we are to be in our home on the earth, will not come down and tuck us in. When our eyelids droop, and our voices falter, and we can hear no sound, some one will be there, and it will be God, and he will tuck us in; and he will say, 'Sleep sweetly,' and then he will stay right there, and will not go away, and by and by he will awaken us with a kiss and say, 'It is morning!' Communion at Smithville on Easter Monday evening at 7:45.

Brother L. V. King, the newly appointed secretary-statistician of the Ohio district conference, announces that he has sent out statistical blanks to the various churches. His is a task that requires cooperation, and we bespeak for him the prompt cooperation necessary by all Ohio pastors and church officials.

Aprpos Dr. Bauman's article descriptive of the Long Beach earthquake, we remark that Brethren churches have been singularly fortunate both in Long Beach and in Los Angeles, in that none is seriously damaged. Let us thank God that we have thus been saved great loss, but at the same time pray divine blessing upon those churches that did suffer severely.

The secretary of the Indiana Ministerial Association is Brother G. L. Maus of Nappanee, and in that capacity he comes to the ministers of that district with an announcement. The ministers of that district are called to study a proposed "ministerial application blank," and a proposed "certificate of licensure." Action is to be taken at their meeting at Shipshewana Lake in May.

Miss Gladys Spice, general secretary and treasurer of the Brethren Christian Endeavor Union, gives report of receipts covering the period from the middle of August, 1932 to the last of March, 1933. Societies will be interested to see if their name appears in the list. Perhaps some who have not yet been included, are planning yet to get in on the report by making an offering.

Brother George E. Cone, pastor of the church at Milledgeville, Illinois, reports twelve received by baptism, and three awaiting the rite, as a result of an evangelistic meeting conducted by Dr. W. S. Bell. The meeting was preceded by a union campaign. The pastor states that one-fourth of the present membership of the church has been added during the past eight years of his leadership there.

Brother J. L. Bowman, pastor of the church at Linwood Maryland, writes that the attendance at the regular services is increasing and the success of the prayer service is especially worthy of mention. A revival meeting will be conducted from May 14 to 28 and the prayers of the brotherhood are requested. We thank Brother Bowman for his kind words about The Evangelist, and we want to say that he is among those who do their full share to make the paper a valued visitor to many Brethren homes.

We have an encouraging report from Nappanee, Indiana, where Brother Gilbert Maus and his capable wife are the highly respected leaders. A revival conducted by the pastor resulted in six persons confessing Christ as their Savior. The young people of that congregation are displaying commendable loyalty and activity, and that kind of young people usually add others to their number, as these are doing. Another promising feature concerning the church's outlook is the harmony and cooperation that have come to prevail

Several members of the Foreign Board make further appeal this week in behalf of the Easter Offering for Foreign Missions. Dr. Bauman, the treasurer of the Society, and pastor of the First church of Long Beach, makes a real contribution in giving us a splendid description of the recent earthquake and the disaster it wrought. Though his people have suffered much through the destruction of property, yet he says they are determined not to allow this misfortune to be an excuse for not doing their very best for Foreign Missions. Knowing the sacrificial record these people have made in the past, we can well believe they will continue to set a worthy example in their support of this great cause.

President E. E. Jacobs, in his college notes, informs us that the various members of the faculty are canvassing the high schools in Ashland's district for prospective students, and he also appeals to pastors to cooperate in turning worthy young people toward Ashland College. This is a most important service to the college, it is true, but it is also an important service to the young people thus influenced. It is highly worth any pastor's time and effort to induce a promising young man or young woman to enter upon a course of further preparation for their life work, and it is a service done doubly well when that young person is influenced to take his college work in his own church school.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes from Argentina of the work at two of the mission points, namely Almafuerte and Rio Tercero. The Christmas season was celebrated by the two Sunday schools together. An evangelistic meeting was held at the former mission, in the tent, resulting in the addition of six new families. And when people ally themselves with the mission in Argentina they must be ready to endure persecution for Christ's sake, because of the severe opposition of the priests. But because of the low repute in which the priests are held by the populace, the people are not so easily stirred to ill-treatment of the missionaries as once was the case. We are given again an illustration of the ignorance and superstition and godlessness from which our missionaries are trying to rescue these people. May God give us, who have remained at home the loyalty and devotion to support this work to the limit of our ability. The tent meeting in Tercero resulted in the development of large interest in the Gospel, so that the private home in which the meetings were being held was no longer adequate and a hall was rented. The annual conference held at Rio Cuarto, is reported to have been very successful, though the attendance was not up to normal, due to the depression.

It is the belief of the Family Altar League of America, of which Dr. W. E. Biederwolf is president, that Easter ought to be made the starting point instead of the ending of a great spiritual harvest time. And that view is right, only it is good to have already gotten started, as Brethren churches seem to have done, long before Easter in a great revival and then to go right on through Pentecost and past. More and more we are coming to wonder why limit evangelism to a particular season of the year. It should be the year-round spirit and purpose of every church. There are doubtless certain seasons of the year that seem to fit in better with man's convenience for evangelism, but that matter of convenience should not be allowed to interfere with the laying hold on special opportunities which God definitely places before certain congregations. Not all Brethren churches have been privileged to rejoice in a successful evangelistic campaign, and sometimes the fault has been the unwillingness to depart from a particular season in order that the man God would send may find it possible to serve a particular church. The evangelistic fervor, the sacrifice of selfish interests and intercession have by far more to do with success than the particular season of the year.

Last week Brother Thoburn C. Lyon supplied his last copy as writer of the Sunday school lesson notes and Family Altar column, due to his request to be relieved, and this week Dr. R. R. Teeter takes up the work. We cannot speak too highly of the very excellent work Brother Lyon has done for several years. We were sorry when he wrote us that the time had come when he felt he must turn over the work to some one else, because he has written such splendid comments and has invariably prepared his copy as nearly perfect as if it were being entered in a contest. Only those who have seen his copy can realize how nearly perfect it is. And he has been regular and dependable in his work. We have therefore greatly appreciated his cooperation and unselfish service from every standpoint, and we wish to thank him most heartily in this public way, as we have frequently done personally. We feel ourselves fortunate in being able to induce Brother Teeter to take up the work thus laid down by Brother Lyon. Our Business Manager is an experienced hand at editorial work and so we are due to continue receiving good copy as well as splendid devotional comments on the Sunday school lesson. The Evangelist family, along with the editor, is indebted to him for his willingness to render this splendid service, and we hope there will be large use made of the department, both as a family altar guide and as an aid in studying the Sunday school lessons.

What the Resurrection Means to Me---A Symposium

The Best Attested Fact of History

By Tom Hammers

"He is risen", the message which on that first resurrection morning electrified the disciples and hundreds of others in and about Jerusalem, continues to energize the forces of Christianity. Amplified on the lips of millions down through these nineteen hundred years, the thunderous roar of that message strikes upon the ears of believers like the majestic strains of a grand symphony, while its mighty reverberations cause the wobbly faith of unbelievers to totter and then go crashing over the precipice into the chasm of oblivion. Unquestionably it can be said, there is no fact of history better attested or more firmly established by the evidence than the literal bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. It is the historical fact—indestructible, the foundation—impregnable, even a Gibraltar—as the bulwark of our Christian Faith. It is the event, that puts the "super" in "supernatural".

Marshal the evidences and what do we have? Not, a fabricated, inconsistent, impossible account; but instead, a perfectly consistent, straightforward, natural, and simple record of the event where every bit of evidence is so perfectly interlocking as to make one graphic picture.

Turn to the four gospels and listen to these four men as they present the different viewpoints of the same event. They—leaving nothing untouched, even to the slightest detail. And the strongest evidence they present is that of eyewitnesses, not of one witness, but of many, each confirming the other. Nowhere in all history can records be found of another event in which there is such an array of reliable and trustworthy witnesses as have testified in this case.

Search the various accounts and note the perfect agreement in respect to the various incidents attending the resurrection. We see it in the failure of the disciples to recognize Jesus after he was risen; in the words spoken to Mary at the time of their first meeting, in the occasion of Peter and John hurrying to the tomb, the appearances to the disciples at various times and various places, in the thrilling experience of Thomas, in the tender scene between Christ and Peter. And the minute details of the condition of the grave clothes, the failure of Christ to appear to those who were enemies or those who opposed him, these are all facts, variously confirmed by the bearing of one account upon another.

But to hurry beyond the Gospels, into the Acts as we see the apostles threading their way through Palestine, Asia, and Europe, carrying the good news to all quarters. Everywhere their message rang with the thrilling tones of the resurrection of Jesus. See these very men thrown into prison, beaten with many stripes, stoned, and even killed because they preached such a message. Is it not incredible, even impossible, that so many men would die for a falsehood? And recall the background of these same men, note the moral transformation that has taken place in their lives. Each account of the three desperate, dark days after the crucifixion is filled with the pathos of men whose spirit, whose morale has been broken. But the first note of the message, "He is risen", transforms them into new men. So throughout the epistles, the evidence continues to ring out, Paul in First Corinthians appealing to more than two hundred and fifty living witnesses who saw the risen Jesus.

Therefore, in the face of evidence from hundreds of eyewitnesses, can there be anyone so presumptuous as to deny the resurrection of Jesus while at the same time accepting the historical account of the Battle of Waterloo or any other great event of the ages? To me the resurrection of Jesus Christ is the difference between Christianity and all other religions, it is the guarantee of my salvation, it is the Divine Stamp of Authority to the entire Word of God.

A Living Savior and Lord

By Everett Niswonger

The Resurrection has vastly different meanings to different groups of people in Christendom. To some it is the supreme event in the history of the Universe; to others it is merely a beautiful thought.

Concerning the "Jesus way of living" one hears the babbling of many voices. The self-styled "Liberal" is content to emphasize only the Ethics of Jesus. And we agree that the standard of right given by God the Son is perfect and complete in every respect. The Law of God is so perfect, that even the Liberal stands before it a lawbreaker under the just wrath of God.

A certain group of ministers who have as their keynote, "back to Jesus" (but who never actually go back) held a religious conference, including most of the religions of the world. And they reminded the world that the Confucianist, the Buddhists, the Zoroastrians, the Mohammedans, and the Christians are all going home to God, but by different routes.

In other words, the ancient Pagan philosophy of the misnamed "Modernists" finds a so-called salvation by attempting to obey a system, rather than by grasping Jesus Christ as the Son of God, as the Object of Faith, and as the only Savior.

Were the Apostles and early disciples content to stop with the moral teachings? And is there any consolation for me in mere ethical systems of ideals and platitudes? What are the facts?

The darkest hour in the history of eternity struck when the sinless Lamb of God hung on Calvary's cross. The Apostles, the faithful women, and many other disciples, stood at the foot of that cross and saw their Messiah die. There was Mary, his Mother, and John the Beloved. Oh, the anguish of that dreadful day. Surely something must intervene? But broken hearted and despairing the Disciples saw the Hope of Israel die.

What should be the reaction on the part of Christ's followers? When Confucius died, did not his disciples rejoice in his moral teaching? When Abraham Lincoln died did we not say, "A noble martyr has departed. His life and precepts are worthy of emulation." But the disciples of Jesus were broken-hearted, bewildered, and utterly hopeless. Yea, they despaired of life and the future. "We had hoped that this was he who should have redeemed Israel." Yes, but Jesus of Nazareth was dead. About this there could not be the slightest doubt. The believers were glad to escape the public eye because to them all was lost. But, did not they have his teachings? Yes, they did. But Jesus was more than a teacher to them, he was the Anointed of God, their Savior and national Deliverer. Their feelings can be expressed by that outstanding word in Poe's Masterpiece of despair, "The Raven."

From their troubled breasts they must have sobbed that word, NEVERMORE, NEVERMORE, NEVERMORE. The impenetrable darkness of midnight had smothered their souls.

And, then, on that memorable first Lord's day morning there echoed throughout the historic hills of old JUDAEA the most beautiful, the most sublime, the most joyful, the most glorious words that mortal ears have ever heard, "HE IS RISEN, HE IS RISEN." Hallelujah, Christ died and arose for you and me.

The Believers saw him. They saw the nailprints in his hands, and the spear-mark in his side. They talked with him, they handled him; why, he even cooked them breakfast on the shores of old Lake Galilee. And everyone of them knew assuredly that his Redeemer was alive from the dead, victor over sin and its consequences.

This was the Impetus which (along with the Coming of the Comforter) made the early disciples flaming evangelists of the Good News of Salvation in Christ. This was the Impetus which caused thousands to gladly hazard their lives for the sake of the Gospel. This was the Impetus which caused the "once doubting Thomas" to lay down his life for his Master, and which caused the "once cowardly Peter," to be crucified head-downward for the Risen Lord. This was the Impetus which brought millions to Jesus Christ in the early centuries of Christianity. Men knew that everything Christ said was true. And the "cowardly, weak disciples became the fearless conquerors of the world.

Thus, the Resurrection gives us a LIVING Savior, and Lord. Confucius had a great system of morals. When he died his disciples built their huts around his grave in honor of his teaching. But Confucius is DEAD, yea, has been dead all these centuries. Buddha is dead. Mohammed is dead. They can mean nothing to me, a lost sinner doomed to die. And as Dr. E. Y. Mullins ably suggests, "Call Buddha, and Buddha does not come. Call Mohammed, and Mohammed does not come. But call Jesus and he comes." Hallelujah we have a living Savior. He is real. He is precious. And this Risen Christ has justified us and sanctified us. His Spirit indwells us. By his POWER we are able, therefore, being new creations, to keep the moral law of God. Let the Modernist trust the Pagan God of Self. We worship the Living Lord, the Eternal Son, and all things are ours in him.

It Guarantees Our Justification

By Norman H. Uphouse

The resurrection of our Lord is the guarantee of our justification. Since he rose from the grave he has vindicated his sinless character and proved beyond a shadow of doubt, that his great sacrifice was sufficient to atone for sin. In him we are declared righteous.

Jesus could easily have laughed as he emerged from the tomb or as he passed through the gates of the cemetery, for he was free and unbound. He had no sin, only was made sin for us. Had it been otherwise—that he was sinful, the Father would never have raised him and he would still be in the tomb. By the very event, however, the Father places his stamp of approval upon the life of his only begotten Son. It was the Father's "amen" to the work of the Son.

When the Prince of Life issued from the tomb, that Easter morning, wiping the death dew from his brow, he honored his word. He had said that he would do it. John 16:16—"A little while, and ye shall not see me; and again, a little while and ye shall see me, because I go to the Father." And John 11:25—"I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live". Every claim of our Lord was to be tested when they killed him, and his honor went along to the grave. With no resurrection his influence and claims would have fallen flat and his disciples would have scattered in despair.

Moreover, without his resurrection we would still be in our sins. It is no marvel to me that many men, who have come to experience Christianity, strongly contend for the significance of that event. It is not a fringe on Christianity but a hinge. And Christianity is the sole way of getting rid of sin.

In one of Huxley's essays he said that it would have been foolish for Jesus to risk his all on the validity of one miracle. But that very thing is what he did. Upon the reality of the resurrection rested his name, reputation, truth of his teaching and his ability to save men. Now that he rose from the grave, by that power, he extends salvation to every one that believes in him.

If the day of resurrection opened with gloom, it closed with gladness, for the Son of God rose with healing in his wings. The believer has, not only assurance of salvation from the penalty of sin, but a present Mediator and Advocate with the Father. He, who redeemed us, constantly intercedes for us before the Father, in those instances where the inevitable characteristics of imperfection are in evidence. The power of the resurrection will not cease. At the rapture of the church, we shall be brought into complete conformity to his will. Our Savior is the resurrected Christ—a living Savior and Mediator.

"Living, he loved me; Dying, he saved me;

Buried, he carried my sins far away;

Rising, he justified freely forever;

One day he's coming—Oh, glorious day!"

Justification from Sin and Assurance of Future Life

By Ord Gehman

One of the most tragic factors in the physical universe is decay. How disappointing it is to see the sun bring havoc to the beauty of a stately pine tree gaily bedecked in snow of crystal purity! How saddening it is to see our loved ones become feeble and worn with age. One matter of grave concern to humanity at large is the preservation of physical power and vitality. But how much more essential it is for men to become more deeply concerned about a matter of far greater magnitude—that of Eternal destiny.

At this particular season of the year our minds are turned to that first glad Easter morning when the message "He is Risen" was heralded to the sin-weary world. To Christ's humble followers, the resurrection was the gorgeous dawn after a horrible night of sorrow. They had witnessed the crucifixion of One whom they had wished would be the promised Messiah. They had fondly hoped—but he was dead and buried! Christ had told them but it was too wonderful to comprehend. But now, the tomb was empty! They had talked to him on the road to Emmaus! They had been with him prior to his Ascension! It was true!

But, you may object, what has that to do with me, nineteen hundred years removed from that incident? Simply this: it is the certain proof that Christ paid the debt of sin in FULL. He fulfilled all the requirements of the LAW to appease an angry and estranged God. Only through his sacrifice and death on the Cross can we stand justified before a holy and righteous God. We can come to God through the sacrifice of Christ and rest assured that it will be accepted. Death passed unto all by Adam (Rom. 5:12) but all shall be made alive in Christ (1 Cor. 15:22). If death could have sustained its conquering grip on Christ, then all would have been lost for us and all would have been won for Satan.

Again, the resurrection is the only certain proof of future life. "But if there is no resurrection of the dead, neither hath Christ been raised;" (1 Cor. 15:13) but Christ has been raised, thus there shall be a resurrection of the dead. "Inasmuch as he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by the Man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead" (Acts 17:31).

The resurrection also makes Christ the first-fruits of them that sleep. "But now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the first-fruits of them that sleep. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive. But each in his own order: Christ the first-fruits: then they that are Christ's at his coming" (1 Cor. 15:20-23). By his resurrection, we are assured that we shall be with him, whether we are alive or asleep in him at his coming. The thought of the Resurrection gives new hope as we stand by the open grave of our departed loved ones asleep in Christ. It gives new life and hope to Christian Life.

A Proof and Guarantee of His Deity

By Orville A. Lorenz

To me, the Resurrection of Jesus Christ is the great proof and guarantee of the Deity or God-head of the Son of Man. The Resurrection is the final and most conclusive proof of all his-claims.

No one can read the New Testament Scriptures without being aware of the fact that Jesus claims to be God in the fullest sense of the word. He claims a Oneness with the Father; he invites and demands that worship which should only be rendered to God; and furthermore, he does all that one would expect God to do. "The Son of God," a title which he so often used, makes him the Lord of all. Though some may doubt this, the Jews, nevertheless, knew the real meaning of such a claim, and sought to kill him because he made it. They reasoned that one who called God his Father made "himself equal with God" (John 5:18). The unique sinlessness of his life heralds him as the Lord from Heaven. In fact, the God-hood of Jesus Christ is interwoven into the very structure of the Bible.

This claim of the Messiahship by our Lord was the "bone of contention" between him and the Jewish authorities. In that day, as well as in our own, many verbal battles were staged over this one issue. A climax seems to have been reached on that day when Jesus, in his zeal for the Lord's house, went into the Temple and drove out those who were profaning the Holy Sanctuary of God. The question asked immediately by the Jewish authorities imples the lawfulness of such an act if he had the right to perform it. For this independent authority he had taken upon himself they demanded a "sign." In reality they asked for a "miracle." Jesus answered this demand by saying, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." The Beloved Disciple adds that Jesus "spoke of the temple of his body" (John 2:19, 21).

Here we have the answer of Jesus to the challenge of the Jews as to the veracity of his claims. Upon his triumph over the tomb our Lord places all his honor, his credit, and his Deity. Our Lord claims that his Resurrection was to be the greatest and most important "miracle" he would give confirming his Messiahship. No mere man could make such a statement.

Some time later he was offered as "the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the World", upon the little hill outside Jerusalem's walls. At the foot of the Cross stands these same Jews pointing their long, lean fingers in contempt, and sneer these same words at Christ as he is upon the tree.

That the Lord Jesus Christ died all will affirm. Pilate, the soldiers at the Cross, the Jews, the Disciples, the Roman guard at the tomb, and the sealed tomb itself, are all a united testimony to his death.

The tomb was sealed. The Disciples in utter despair returned to their former occupations. All seemed lost, for the tomb contained him whom many thought would redeem Israel. All his claims seemed mere words. Though he had manifested great power in the miracles he had performed, the consensus of opinion was that such power would never again be manifested.

But the Resurrection Morning dawns upon the earth. Out from the Darkness of Death steps the "Light of the World", the triumphant victor over Death as he had said, and upon the day he had claimed he would rise victoriously over the grave.

The witnesses already mentioned, together with many others, lift their voices unitedly in testimony that he arose. All his claims were proven. The perplexed disciples now knew the significance of those obscure and difficult words Jesus had uttered in the Temple (John 2:22).

Thus, our Lord "was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. 1:4). All the dead hopes of the disciples were revived and confirmed as true because they had been begotten again "unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead" (1 Pet. 1:3).

This Living Christ, proven to be God by his Resurrection from the dead, inspired them in their preaching, comforted them in their moments of trial and discouragement, and confirmed that "Blessed Hope" of his Coming again as King of kings and Lord of lords.

in heaven. We do not want it to be anywhere else. We belong to thee, and thou belongest to us, and we belong in heaven. Oh, give us a long, sweet springtime and summer in the land of eternal life. For Christ's sake, Amen."

May it not be possible for Christ to become so real to us even while we dwell in our earthly homes, that the tie that binds us to him will be stronger and more actual and more sacred than any that binds us to earthly friends? Then when the morning cometh, there will be nothing strange or disappointing about it, it will only mean being awakened to the realization of a yet more complete and vital fellowship. Even so, may the morning come, in his good time.

The Testimony of the Holy Land to the Truth of the New Testament Gospels*

By W. Waldo Weller

A traveler in the Holy Land today carries with him a vast storehouse of practical knowledge of the land which he has secured by Biblical study.

Naturally he enters Palestine with preconceived ideas as to the nature and appearance of the land. Distinguished travelers of many centuries have written of the Holy Land. It has been the center of pilgrimages of countless millions from all Christian nations. It has been the scene of stirring events; such as the Crusades and the various other movements of world history, which have affected or been affected by Palestine.

But our purpose tonight is to observe as an ordinary traveler, who is a student of the Scriptures, the impression of the Holy Land upon us. Does it carry out the New Testament setting? Is it inevitably true that it forms a background which even today speaks eloquently of the truth of the New Testament Gospels? Well, no country, no geography will ever in itself prove definitely the history that has occurred in it. Nor will mere geography compel belief. If no sign were given when Christ was on earth, much less will a sign be given now to the curious and indifferent traveler.

Yet there are such striking and compelling testimonies in the Holy Land today to the truth of the Gospels that even a casual passerby, if he has any knowledge whatever of Biblical backgrounds, must be impressed.

Let us begin then in Galilee. You will disembark from your steamer at Haifa; before you as you are about to land you see the promontory of Mount Carmel: this is the scene of the contest of Elijah with the priests of Baal. In the distance lies the site of the ancient cities of Tyre and Sidon. Behind you are the low-lying mountains of Galilee. In that deep depression to the east, the lake of Galilee; between Galilee and Samaria, the mighty plain Esdraelon; Armageddon. The setting is superb for a mighty drama, yet there is no compelling proof geographically of Elijah's great act. Yet, when one travels but a few miles eastward and looks across the mighty plain of Esdraelon and remembers that great events of history, the coming and going of mighty armies, the decisive results of great battles, the fall and rise of kings, even the contention of Egypt and Assyria, occurred on this great plain, and yet it is not attested by the mere geographical site; one sees that more than geography is necessary to corroborate any historical or sacred event. Yet when one passes into Galilee and finds this country which in the time of Christ was thickly populated (while today it is uninhabited, there being but a few villages in it, a few colonies of returning Jews, a few Bedouin shepherds who come in their season) one is struck by something unexplainable in the very land. For Galilee is more than a location; it is more than geography; for the land lends itself as a perfect setting for the New Testament narratives. Nazareth on the hillside, Cana only a few steps away; the lake itself lying in a basin formed by majestic mountain plateaus on the east, wide sweeping meadows on the west; all eloquent of another day. Nazareth as a small village, the home of Joseph and Mary, the scene of the boyhood of Jesus is not such a village as one will find elsewhere. There is an undefinable atmosphere of peace and quiet that reigns throughout Nazareth and all Galilee. It seems in very truth a Holy Land, not in some pilgrim's imagination, but in the actual impression that it makes upon any traveler who is open to ordinary sensibilities.

Palestine is carpeted with wild flowers. Galilee along the lake is swept by broad green meadows, the uplands covered with grassy slopes. Here and everywhere the familiar sights and sounds known to every New Testament reader are seen and heard today. Here a sower goes forth to sow as he did in New Testament days. Here the tares are bound up in bundles ready to be burned. Here the roads and pathways lend themselves to the innumerable journeys and passages of Christ and the disciples of Galilee. Here the grassy plain beyond the Lake of Galilee forms an ideal setting for the feeding of the multitude. The ruins of the city of Capernaum remind one of the woe pronounced against it by Jesus.

Magdala is only a ruin; yet here was the home of Mary of Magdala. None of the thriving cities that dotted the lake rim remains and no sails break the expanse of the blue water. The lake is full of fish today as it was in the days of Jesus, yet fishermen are few. It was here that the early ministry of Jesus unfolded. Beauty, fruitfulness, peace, harmony, splendor; these elements are ever in any picture of Galilee.

Now, as we leave Galilee and descend into the plain of Esdraelon and then pass into the border of Samaria the land is harsher, the olive tree is less plentiful, the meadow more infrequent, yet this in no way detracts from the growing impression that one is indeed in a land whose testimony corroborates that of the Gospels. A trip through the Holy Land is like the building up of a great climax; to the approach of a mighty finale. Galilee is the beginning, Samaria leads on, Judea, and Jerusalem, and Bethlehem, the Dead Sea, the Wilderness, the Jordan valley, form the mighty climax! The terraced hillsides of Samaria, once covered with vines are still visible, although time has made its ravages upon them; the water of Jacob's Well; as pure and fresh today as the day that Jacob drank of it; Mount Ebal and Gerizim still frown over against each other, as Samaria stood over against Jerusalem and Judea. And here let me digress to say that this land is not a land of debris, of ruins, of dirty Arabs, of filthy hermits, of beggars, of lepers, of weary stones and dry places. Whoever has given this impression to the world has done an irreparable injury to this beautiful country. The fact of the matter is, Palestine from one confine to the other is as vivid, as contrasting, as vitally alive as any land of the world, and it lends itself to the imagination as the scene of dramatic events in the future, as well as in the past.

Now let us pass to Judaea and Jerusalem. What can anyone say of this windswept, rocky city, commanding its hills? It was and is, a holy city; it was and is the spiritual capital of the world. Rome is not the eternal city; Rome is not the center of religion; Rome is gay; Rome is commercial; Rome is a city of the modern Italia, and the movements and glory of the Italian state. Jerusalem is sombre; Jerusalem is hoary with age, replete with religious history. Beneath its ruins such events have occurred as no other spot in the world can boast. Within sight of its walls, at Bethlehem, Jesus Christ was born (there stands today the Church of the Nativity, the oldest Christian Church in the world). On its hill outside the walls, Jesus Christ was crucified. If it has been ravaged, burnt, fought over, has seen slaughter within its walls, by the offender and the aggressor, nevertheless today it has resisted commercialism; it is not a commercial city. Idle travelers pass it by; it is not a gay city. To the outward gaze, it is a dull, old, leaden, sombre city. When gusts of windswept rain drench its narrow streets it is drab, and melancholy. But nevertheless, it is the religious capital of the world. To it, look the Jews of the world. Let me remind you of their song. "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem . . . let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth." To it, look the Mohammedans of the world. From the rock under the dome of the Mosque of the Rock, Mohammed, tradition says, ascended to heaven. The Christians look to Jerusalem. In it there is the Church of the Holy Sepulchre; the site, as well as we may judge, of Calvary and the place of the tomb of the resurrection. I hear people say, "All I found in Jerusalem were praying monks, priests, hermits, sisters, and nuns." Yet let us remember that the five most ancient churches of the world have placed their churches here and keep perpetual vigil by prayer and supplication. Is this something to fear? Is this something to dread? Are we afraid of praying men and women? Must we have eternally the confusion of commercialism? Jerusalem answers that question; it will forever resist the world which it seems to have conquered. No city is as important as the ancient city of Jerusalem. Paris, London, Berlin, Moscow, New York, Washington, all these seem to disappear in comparison with Jerusalem. What a setting it was for the tragedy of Calvary! What a city today! And what a city it will be tomorrow! "I saw a new Jerusalem" records the Seer. It is the type of the coming of the Kingdom of God. It is the promise of God to a confused world that his truth abides; and Jerusalem will yet comfort God's people.

*An address given at the Seventh Annual Convention of the League at Pittsburgh, February 13, 1932.

So we must leave your careless traveler at Haifa and let him make his easy-going way to Egypt and Cairo, passing by the Holy Land; but like many another foolish person, he has passed by the land that has had more to do with the development of the human race than any other land.—The Evangelical Student.

In constructing a subway in a large city in the East, a railroad company had to excavate close to a church; so a concrete foundation was put in beneath the building. "That looks like a good foundation," said one observer to another. "It's all right if it doesn't crack," the other replied. What kind of a foundation are you putting under the church? Are you faithful in financial support, in attendance, in your prayers for its welfare? Disloyalty weakens the foundation.

JESUS TRANSFIGURED

(Lesson for April 16)

Lesson Text: Mark 9:2-29.

MONDAY

Witnessing Christ's Glory. Mark 9:2-8

Peter, James and John might well have been highly exalted in feelings, when they realized just what an experience was to be theirs on that memorable night they were requested to spend with their Lord, on a high mountain and apart from all the rest of the world, and even from the rest of the disciples.

One must live very close to the Lord, if one expects to be able to witness his glory. A mere hanger on, a fair-weather follower can not hope to witness the glory of the Lord. One must belong to the "inner circle" to be able to do that.

TUESDAY

Facing a Great Need. Mark 9:14-18

While a "mountain-top" experience should be of inestimable worth to any disciple, yet, on the mountain top is not where the Christian is to find his greatest opportunity to render service to his fellow man.

Down in the valley, where men struggle and suffer the pangs of hunger, sickness and sin, is where followers of Christ find opportunity to serve him by ministering to the needs of others.

WEDNESDAY

Seeing Christ's Power. Mark 9:19-29

The disciples were now permitted to discover the source of their weakness after their failure to relieve the distress of the demon-possessed lad. "If thou canst do anything" fell from the lips of the lad's father after he had witnessed the failure of the disciples.

"If thou canst!" exclaimed the Master. It was almost an insult to him, but it was overlooked, coming from the ignorant father; but it was an opportunity to demonstrate to the disciples the power of belief and of prayer. So the lad was healed.

THURSDAY

A Heavenly Vision. Isaiah 6:1-8

I will make no effort to place an interpretation on all visions, but will only say the most familiar visions, regardless of any fine-spun theories that may be woven about them, distinctly call to service. The vision the apostles had upon the mount of transfiguration, Peter's vision on the house-top of Simon the tanner, Saul's vision on the Damascus road, Isaiah's vision "In the year that King Uzziah died," were all calls to service. So, unless we are ready to do service for our Master, let us not be too anxious about seeing visions.

FRIDAY

The Glory of Jehovah. Exodus 24:12-18

That there is a divine attribute called Glory was early made known to the children of God. And of course this Glory is as eternal as God himself. It always has been, and it always will be, but not every one is permitted to behold it. The children of Israel would not have witnessed it on Mt. Sinai, had not Moses been an obedient servant of Jehovah, willing to heed the call of his God, willing to trust himself entirely to his care for a time that he might be able in the future to teach God's law to his chosen people.

SATURDAY

The Glorified Christ. Revelation 1:9-18

The Apostle, John was favored in that in the beginning of his Christian experience and near the close of his life he was enabled to behold the glory of Christ. "And we beheld his glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father." John 1:14. And then again on the isle of Patmos as he beheld his intensified glory, it is no wonder he fell at his feet as one dead. But he was told to "fear not," and none of us need have any fear of our Lord, no matter in what manner he may appear unto us, if we have accepted him as OUR Lord.

SUNDAY

The Exalted Christ. Hebrews 1:1-9

Throughout the week we have been meditating upon the glory of Christ, and now we bring our meditation to a close with a reference to his exalted position with the Father.

It is not enough that we should simply take the word of the sacred writer that "all the angels shall worship him," but he should be so enthroned in our own lives that looking to him who is now sitting on the right hand of the Majesty on high, we too may fall at his feet and exclaim Holy! Holy!

WE WISH TO THANK ALL THE SOCIETIES FOR THEIR GIFTS, AND ESPECIALLY CONGRATULATE THE BER-LIN, PENNSYLVANIA, SOCIETY FOR THEIR VERY SPLENDID COOPERATION.

GLADYS M. SPICE,
Secretary.

If I Were a Pastor

Of course I'd have a Young People's Society. I would just as soon think of dispensing with the indispensable Sunday school as I would of putting the Christian Endeavor society out of commission.

Then, I'd try to make the society efficient. Many young people do not attend the Christian Endeavor meetings because there is nothing to attract them. They can sit at home in their Morris chairs and close their eyes and imagine every loose-jointed thing that will be done at the meeting.

Of course, no society can be made efficient without work. Therefore I'd get right down to business.

My first effort would be to train the young people for work in the society. We do that very wisely, and more or less efficiently, in the Sunday school; and what is wisdom in the one place cannot be foolishness in the other.

I'd form a Christian Endeavor training-class open to all that cared to attend, although I'd take care to interest some of the brightest young folks in it beforehand, to be sure of a nucleus. I'd plan a course of study for them that would include the Bible. The Endeavor is nowhere unless he has a firm grip of the Bible. I would not go into details in this study, but would take up the book as a whole and show the relation of part to part, pointing out the main facts about the prophets' messages.

Then I'd give a brief course in psychology—not the advanced kind of the textbooks, but the practical kind dealing with young people and their needs. This is especially necessary for Junior superintendents, for they must understand the children or fail ignominiously.

The society itself would be a subject of study; the constitution, the pledge, the general principles of Christian Endeavor, the history of the movement, and so on. This study would include every committee, its work and the reason for it, the Tenth Legion, and the Quiet Hour.

Then I should give these young people a view of the larger organization, the city or local union, the county or district union, the State union, the International Society of Christian Endeavor, and finally the World's Union.

Then I would hie me back to the leaders, the chairmen of committees, the workers. I would describe the duties of each office; president, secretary, treasurer, and all the rest of them.

This would bring us to methods of work, and by this time, I fancy, the members would have so caught the spirit of the movement that they would be ready to suggest methods themselves.

I'd do a great deal more than this, but I have said enough, I am sure, to convey my idea.

Besides, all the time I was working my way through these subjects I should insist on the members' practising the things that we talked over at our meetings. I should put a premium on originality. I should have an honor roll for this class alone and let the members vote one person on it each meeting night—that is, if any one had done anything worth while during the week.

I'd try to make the young people feel that I was their friend.

I'd hold the training-class meetings in the coziest room in the parsonage.

I'd boom the society until every young person for miles around ran at breakneck speed to get into it.

At least, I'd try.—C. E. World.

"One day as I sat upon the deck looking over your lists," he explained, "a breeze came and blew them all away except this one."

"But how could that be?" questioned one. "Ah," was the reply, "this order was weighted down, it had silver wrapped in it."

Just now, foreign mission work is again very earnestly claiming our attention. All year we have prayed for the work, asking God to protect our missionaries from dangers, to give them health and strength to carry on, and to supply their every need. Every day we have brought them to the Throne of Grace.

Our missionaries to South America and Africa, personal friends to many of us, have gone forth to carry the gospel of Jesus Christ to those who have never heard the story. They have answered the call "to go," counting the sacrifice of leaving home and loved ones, as nothing compared to the opportunity of service to tell the good news of salvation through Jesus Christ to people lost in sin. They are happy for the privilege of going.

These noble men and women have only asked for our prayers, knowing God would supply all their need. Yes, God will supply their need, supply it through us. What an opportunity for us to be channels of blessing. Will we weight down our prayers?

Real, prevailing prayer must have our best offering of self and substance wrapped in it. Will there be any silver or any gold wrapped in your prayers on Easter Day?

Besides, the very joy of the occasion should move us to give gladly and generously. The season itself is thrilling and inspiring. The cold and snow of winter has gone and there have come the warm, bright days of spring bringing green grass, budding trees, beautiful flowers, the song birds and the glad feeling of just being alive. How we enjoy this time of year. But the thing that most of all makes this a happy season is the happiest of all days that it brings us—Easter Day. Who would want to take Easter and its significance to the Christian out of the spring-time? And who does not wish to show the joy of his heart in some practical way?

Then, what is more appropriate than to make gifts of love to the risen Christ? Surely it is fitting that for the entire Brethren church this Easter-time should be a time of love-giving. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3: 16). God in love gave his Son for us.

Can't we, won't we, every member of the Church, say in appreciation of what his Son has done for us, "For I so love God, my Heavenly Father, that I will give him my life and make my gift of substance as large as I possibly can, so that the gospel of Jesus Christ, my Savior, may be taken to those who have never heard the 'good news'?"

What will we do for Jesus Christ this Easter time? This will be the last Easter gift for some of us; next Easter we will not be here.

May we all make this Easter offering what we would if we knew this was really our last love-gift to the Master of men, the Lord Jesus Christ.

An Urgent Final Appeal

By A. V. Kimmell, Member Foreign Board

Pastors! Church Officers!! Members!!! Brethren, more than an ordinary appeal must be made for the Foreign Mission Offering this Easter time. Present conditions will not do as an excuse for lowered interest but should be a spur to greater effort. Some churches plan a systematic campaign and have a good offering every year, others announce the offering and cheerfully forward what comes in, but there are other churches that barely mention this great work of taking the Gospel to the nations that know not God. This responsibility was put first by the Lord Jesus Christ.

It is evident that some of the churches which have given so heavily in former years may not be able to do so much this year. Does this mean that failure is to be the result? Not necessarily, but it does mean that the churches which have not particularly stressed the Foreign Offering must come to the rescue. Will such churches make an urgent plea for an increased offering this year? Pastors, you will understand the Foreign Work better than most others, will you rally your people to this worthy battle and stand by to fill in the gap?

No doubt there were reasons for not stressing the offering in former years but the situation is so vital this year that all excuses must be laid aside and one mighty combined effort made to keep this important department of the church in a healthy condition. It is now too late to spend weeks in preparation but it is not too late to have an urgent appeal made at all the services on Easter Sunday or the Sunday following. The Treasurer of the Society always makes provision for the harvest to be gathered after Easter, when necessary, so let the appeal ring out, let pledges be made and the money gathered in the weeks which immediately follow. Some may feel that the local work is in such condition that a move like this would be suicidal but hundreds of churches have found that a good offering for Foreign Missions has been their financial salvation. Try this in good faith this year for the need is truly urgent from both viewpoints. The other members of the Board have presented the needs, therefore, we make this final urgent appeal to every pastor, church and member. This is the Lord's work. Let us not fail Him, 2 Cor. 8:1, 2. R. V. Moreover, brethren, we make known to you the grace of God which hath been given in the churches of Macedonia; how that in much proof of affliction the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounds unto the riches of their liberality.

Is There Silver in Your Prayer?

By U. J. Shively, Member Foreign Mission Board

Such a question! you say. How is it possible for silver to be in our prayers? We have heard of clouds having silver linings, but not silver in prayers.

This little story may illustrate what we mean.

A man, who was about to take a trip to Europe, was besieged with friends requesting him to bring them various things. Only one man gave him the money to make the purchase.

When he returned his friends found that he had brought back only one of the requested articles.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

ARGENTINA

Since writing last my work has been confined mainly to the northern part of our district and I will therefore write concerning it, leaving the others to report their special work.

Almafuerte

After the splendid work of the Vacation Bible school conducted by Sisters Nielsen and Larson came the Christmas season. The Sunday schools of Rio Tercero and Almafuerte celebrated together, the former coming over to Almafuerte to spend the day. A very pleasant day was passed, the visitors being taken to see the waterfall and returning in time for dinner together at the mission. In the afternoon a nice program was rendered and presents distributed.

Then in January the workers with the Bible Coach and tent came and settled down for a three weeks' campaign. The tent was located in the heart of the town where people were almost obliged to hear whether willing or not, and many who would scorn going to the mission, took advantage of the opportunity to listen from the street.

We had lessons for the children with Bible pictures and quite a number of new children have been coming to Sunday school ever since.

The Catholic Society (Accion Catolica) is very active here and did everything possible to intimidate the people and keep them from coming, but we have six new families that are interested enough to keep coming and we will do our best to hold them. The priest followed up our meeting with a great demonstration to prove that the town is entirely Catholic. He got an old maid in the country to donate to the church an image of the virgin that she had in her home many years. The church was built ten years ago but has been without an image of the virgin because there was not enough interest to get one. When it was presented a great parade was organized with the Spanish and Italian societies, the athletic clubs and "all that is worth anything in the town" (so the poster read) all announced as taking part. A show was given in the theater to pay the expenses of the band, etc.

Then the donor, disgusted with the ungodly nature of the celebration, insisted on bringing the image quietly and presenting it herself in the church. The priest consented on condition that she would do so the day before the time announced. This she did and then, since the image was no longer hers, the priest took it out again and had his procession. It passed in front of the mission where we had the second commandment posted for all to read. The spectacle of such gross idolatry disgusted thinking people, and while many came out of curiosity, no sinner was converted from his sins and the town has relapsed into its former indifference, with a growing sympathy for the work of the mission.

One day Brother Farre heard a Jesuit who has a private school here and pretends great learning, defaming the mission to a crowd of men. He called him to order and by means of a few well directed questions revealed the ignorance of the man so clearly that the crowd laughed and cheered and the Jesuit left in a rage. The incident was soon the talk of the town.

Rio Tercero

From Almafuerte the tent was taken to Rio Tercero, twelve miles to the east. Here we also secured the free use of a central site and crowds were large from the first. After three weeks the interest was still kept in spite of a merry-go-round that located across the street from us. The priest paid rides for the children to help keep up the interruption, but our crowds did not diminish at all. At the close of the meeting so many new people were interested that it was evident that we must have a larger place than the home where meetings have been held. Just at this time came the opportunity to rent a nice hall in an ideal location and the closing meetings were held in the hall which was filled to overflowing. Then we had to leave the coach and tent in this property while we all went to Rio Cuarto.

The Annual Conference

The annual conference was held February 24-26, and while the attendance was cut by the crisis yet the conference was a time of blessing. The program was well rendered and the accommodations were good. The meals, thanks mainly to Sisters Nielsen and Larson, were all that could be desired and all had a feast materially and spiritually. One interesting feature were the two consultation meetings with the pastors and helpers. It will be well to continue these in future meetings.

The carnival season closes this coming Sunday and then we hope to begin a tent campaign in Hernando, eighteen miles east of Tancacha.

Brother Iztueta was given charge of this work, but after the campaign in Firmat became ill and now cannot leave his work in Laboulaye because a pair of Seventh Day Adventists have entered and when these wolves are around a pastor dare not neglect his flock. Brother Reina was instructed to prepare the way for a mission in Hernando, but now that we are ready to go there his oldest boy is seriously ill with typhoid fever. With so many new people interested here and at Rio Tercero, and with my work as superintendent and my writing, I am in no positoin to leave, but some one must go, for the work of the tent is too important to neglect it during this season of beautiful weather.

We certainly do need more workers and we pray that our older missions may become self-supporting in spite of the crisis, and funds may be available from a worthy Easter offering, to enable us to move forward with the evangelization of this great field, and hold the new posts that are taken for the Lord. Let those who cannot give much pray the more and let those who still have wherewith to give be wise. Remember the rich young man who went away sorrowful. He lost his opportunity to become an apostle of the Lord and he lost his riches besides in the destruction of the nation that soon followed. Let us lay up our treasures where they will not be lost.

C. F. YODER.

Almafuerte, Argentina, March 3, 1933.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Life has been so uneventful here that it did not seem worth while cumbering the paper with college notes. However, of late we have been very active with our newly launched student canvass. The committee in charge, laid out the territory near Ashland and assigned some 12 or 15 high schools to each teacher who was willing to undertake their canvass. This together with our regular class work made us busy for the past weeks. Moreover, we have issued some very attractive literature relative to the school.

I earnestly hope that the pastors will assist us in increasing the attendance especially from our own church. More will be said about this later in the spring and early summer.

Moreover, the Faculty has organized to study certain teaching problems and this also takes up time and energy.

A local group has asked Dr. Caldwell, head of the department of Sociology, to make a study with his class of the chain stores of the county, which they are now doing.

Meanwhile, basketball has ended here with the usual County Tournament, put on by the County schools in our Gymnasium and we are now waiting good weather for outdoor sports.

Last year in June we lost one-third of our school by graduation, 106. That made inroads upon us. This year the graduating class will not reach over 70.

The meeting of the North Central Association, which was put off due to the bank holiday, has been set for April 20 and 21. This is just after the meeting of the Ohio Association.

The Board meeting will follow, Tuesday, April 25.

We are now planning our summer school, which is always a leap in the dark, as one never can tell the attendance, upon which so much depends, but we are hopeful. Last summer we had one of the biggest summer schools in Ohio.

With bank crashes everywhere, it is a pleasure to record the fact that our investments here are still intact, having lost nothing so far.

It is a pleasure to note the fact that the Y. W. C. A. this year has been very active. Their recent sessions under the name of the Charm School have been unusually profitable.

We want to make May Day a big success for new we can adequately handle a big crowd. We have given out "courtesy cards" to many high school seniors and all we need now is a fair day and warm weather, Saturday, May 20th.

If it seems advisable the commencement exercises will be held this year in Redwood Stadium under the big elms. We can seat over 1500 with ease and the settings of the place are very attractive.

The College constantly needs the prayers of its friends. These are hard days and those of us here who bear the burden all ways appreciate good words from without.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

LINWOOD, MARYLAND

The Evangelist is the means of outside communication with the rest of our brotherhood. I think I speak for all our people here and say that it is truly enjoyed by its circle of readers here as elsewhere. The Evangelist brings good news from far countries; it also keeps us informed of local happenings that are worthwhile.

Now to the real church news of Linwood. I think our attendance is growing. Our prayer meetings are increasing in attendance and interest. We have a different leader every night. We are developing some fine leaders that will mean much to the work in later years.

At this time we are making preparation for our coming evangelistic campaign which will begin on May 14th and close with a lovefeast on May 28th. May I ask for a united church to pray unitedly for a real revival which will mean much to our isolated work here. There is no Brethren church near where we are and a real revival would do very much to give us a more favorable standing in the community. Our church stands very well, but a real revival would help many that are undecided as to what step to take. Dear Brethren, pray earnestly for us and your prayers will come back to you in many ways and you will be made to rejoice and the dear Father's kingdom will be advanced here, and helped everywhere.

J. L. BOWMAN.

MILLEDGEVILLE, ILLINOIS

At this time we believe it opportune to send a few words of church news to the Evangelist family.

The church in Milledgeville has been at the task of teaching the truth of the Gospel and faithfully preaching the Word of God.

We have nothing spectacular to report but we are glad to report that we had the privilege of a Community Wide Evangelistic Effort from February 13 to 26, under the evangelistic leadership of H. Brooks Lauman and song leader Jerald Kok. Mr. Kok is a Moody Bible Institute student, from Missionary parents working in China.

This meeting, under God, was used to stir this community and bring to the Lord Jesus, for the first time, several precious souls. Also there were some who were brought into a closer relationship with their Lord.

Following the Community Wide meeting the Brethren decided to hold a week of special meetings. Dr. W. S. Bell was invited to conduct these meetings and very graciously consented to do so. The Community was invited to enjoy the blessing and benefit from the meeting which was conducted the week of March 12 to 19. Dr. Bell brought to us a very helpful series of sermons during the week and the attendance grew from night to night. Unfortunately sleet, snow and cold weather overtook us Saturday and held over Sunday, making difficult going and adding the handicap of broken electric light lines. Two lamps and a few candles furnished the light for the last night, Sunday, March 19th.

We are glad to announce that, after a very clear and instructive sermon by Dr. Bell on the subject of "Baptism—Why? When? and How?" it was the privilege and great joy of the writer to lead into the baptismal waters twelve candidates. These were baptized and received into full fellowship in the church on the evening of March 22. Dr. Bell assisted the pastor in this service by bringing the sermon of the evening, assisting the candidates to and from the baptismal waters and in the laying on of hands in confirmation. We find Dr. Bell one of God's choice men in the evangelistic field. We certainly pray the Lord to richly bless the work now in progress at Dayton, Ohio, under the evangelistic leadership of Dr. Bell.

On our waiting list, we find at least three, waiting baptism when conditions are favorable for the service to be held at the river. When these have been received into full fellowship, our records show there will be one-fourth of the present membership of this church will have been taken into the Church in the past eight years.

The various branches of the work of this church are moving on with as rapid stride as seems possible at the present time.

We assure you that we rejoice in the victories God is giving the various churches of the brotherhood. We covet the prayers of the brotherhood that we may be used to the glory of God in his service to the salvation of many precious souls.

GEO. E. CONE.

FROM NAPPANEE, INDIANA

The church here is progressing very nicely under the leadership of Rev. and Mrs. Maus who took up the work with us in January. Rev. and Mrs. Maus have already endeared themselves to the hearts of all.

It is indeed a great inspiration to listen to the soul stirring messages brought by Rev. Maus each Sunday. Each sermon is a message from God's word, not only increasing the knowledge of the listener, but encouraging and edifying the soul as well.

Church attendance becomes a delight as well as a profit to all who attend. Rev. Maus led us in a two weeks' meeting from February 12 to 26. Large crowds greeted him each evening.

One of the special features of the meeting was a chorus of forty young people who assisted us in the singing, beside the adult choir of 30 voices. Six young people confessed Christ.

Miss Helen Garber led the prayer groups in the upper room before each service, bringing special thoughts on this particular phase of the work from the Scripture, which was very helpful and inspiring. She also assisted in the young people's chorus.

The Sunday school under the leadership of Kenneth Tobias and Samuel Sharp, also the Christian Endeavor with Miss Beatrice Hummel as President, are showing gains each month.

One of the noticeable features is the increase of young men who are taking an active part in the Christian Endeavor and other services.

We would not forget the great number of young women from the S. M. M. and C. E. who are filling many responsible positions in every department of the church.

On Easter Sunday the services will be in charge of the young people as follows:

6 A. M., Sunrise Service by the C. E. The Morning Worship Service by the Girls' chorus of 25, and the evening service, by 15 young men and 8 young women, assisted by young ladies as soloists and the Girls' Chorus will render the Pageant entitled, "The Risen Christ."

The W. M. S. is also doing splendid work under the direction of Mrs. H. B. Richmond.

We are sure of great blessings during the coming year, because of the splendid cooperation that is evidenced by the entire membership and of the spirit manifested by both pastor and people.

CORA STUCKMAN.

ATTENTION, INDIANA PASTORS

At our District Conference last fall at Flora, Indiana, the Ministerial Association was presented with a copy of the Ministerial Application Blanks as adopted at the late General Conference by the Ministerial Association. Along with that was another copy "Certificate of Licensure in the Brethren Church". These two copies were placed before us for our adoption or rejection.

At that meeting a resolution was adopted that the Secretary have copies of both blanks printed and sent to all ministers in Indiana for further study and the same to be acted upon at our Spring Ministerial meeting which will be held at Shipshewana in May. The secretary had these blanks printed and a copy should be in your hands before this notice appears in the Evangelist. Some have their copies now and have written me to ascertain as to what we want them to do with them. This will explain this matter. The program for our Spring meeting is now in the making and will appear in the Evangelist within the next few weeks. Bring your copies to this meeting.

great earthquakes will soon pass away. Some timid folks are asking: "How long is 'soon'?"

But, to return to our experience—(and, let us remind you that no two persons, though they stood hand in hand during the shock, will describe their experiences exactly alike). Rushing from our "breakfast room" (in which, however, we were suppering) out to the street, we found that the majority of our neighbors had beaten us into the open spaces. This, however, proved to be the undoing of many. For most of those killed or injured were killed or injured by falling debris as they rushed out of homes and stores into the streets. This would not have been true, however, had the quake occurred three hours earlier, when the school buildings were filled with children; or two hours later when the churches and theatres would have been filled with people. If the God of mercy intervened at all with the forces of nature in this earthquake, it was when he timed it at 5:55 P. M. Many of our own flock, ourselves with them, fifteen minutes later would have been at the Long Beach Division "Booster Banquet" in one of the most badly damaged churches of our city. Many of our young people were actually in their autos en route to a banquet, which was all prepared but never eaten.

Had Mrs. Bauman, her mother, or myself, rushed out of the door of our breakfast room into the open, we would have rushed directly beneath the heavy, falling stones of the fire-place chimney which was built on the side of the house. One minute later, and the writer would have been walking out directly beneath it any way. God was good to us.

Most of the churches of our city have been terribly damaged—many beyond all repair. And the larger churches are usually the chiefest sufferers. Our "magnificent" school buildings, the pride of our city, are ruins—some beyond all repair. One statement we have heard, it seems, from a thousand lips: "The building of those buildings for the housing of helpless little children was nothing short of a monstrous crime!" The reason for the statement is that, while California is not subject to floods, and storms, and cyclones, and tornadoes, she is subject to earthquakes. And the public officials who gave us our building code, and who are supposed to inspect buildings as they are being erected, have had ample opportunity to learn their lessons from previous earthquakes on the Pacific Coast for the past one hundred years. San Francisco especially should have given them all the information necessary. It is known that buildings can be erected that will be proof against any earthquake that has been known to the last several generations in California. Scores of great buildings owned by private corporations are standing as firmly today as they did before the quake. They were built to stand. The Southern California Edison Company in our city has a group of buildings that attain a height of 100 feet. Above these are a number of chimneys towering yet 150 feet above the buildings, making a mass of masonry towering 250 feet into the air. The earthquake left not a trace of its power upon them. Many "Class A" business buildings in the city are practically uninjured. Our new Municipal Auditorium stands as firmly as it ever stood. Our own church is an outstanding evidence that buildings can be

The Long Beach Earthquake

By Louis S. Bauman, Pastor of the

First Brethren Church of Long Beach

On the evening of March 10th, while most of the citizenry of Long Beach were sitting in their homes enjoying their suppers,—suddenly the earth seemed to lift as if struck from beneath by the mighty hammer of Thor! Then we were shaken to and fro, as a dog would shake a rat between his teeth. And, as the shaking process went on, a great shadow seemed to fall over us, and within the shadow an awful roar—a roar of confusion—a roar doubtless caused by the reverberations of falling brick and stone and steel upon the sidewalks and the streets; the shattering of street-lamps without, and of china and glass within; the crashing of fire-places to the floors and of chimneys through the roofs; the grinding and twisting of buildings as they were hurled from their foundations. It was all over in eleven short seconds! But eleven seconds were enough! Just one full minute of continuance, and the scene, the sorrow, the suffering, the disaster would have been indescribable. We have had just enough of it to know that a forgotten and outraged Omnipotence has chosen the right sort of an implement with which to smite the final stroke "the cities of the nations" in the day of his wrath. (See Rev. 16:17-21). It is significant that the judgments of God are frequently accompanied by earthquakes, especially those judgments with which dispensations of time are drawn to a close.

Right at this instant, as we write (10:15 A. M., March 30th), the "hammer of Thor" tapped old Mother Earth again, as from beneath, and the church in which we are writing shook! It was the same this morning, 4:30 A. M. We have grown used to the four or five such jolts per day since March 10th. But they do little or no damage, save to weak nerves. The seismologists assure us that this to-be-expected aftermath of all built which are safe, even for a much heavier earthquake than the heaviest we have known. And why our great school buildings should not have been as safely built, why the same sort of mortar should not have been placed between their bricks,—well, it is a subject that grand juries are now investigating. Around the patio of our church there is a six-foot brick wall. We have not found even a loose brick in that wall. Not far from us is a public school building with a similar wall. It is an utter ruin. The mortar between our own brick can be crushed if you have a good hammer for the job. The mortar between the bricks around the public school can be crushed between your thumb and forefinger with slight pressure. Our church was built by day's labor. The schools were let out to contractors. That may help us understand. We wonder sometimes whether a dictatorship is not, after all, with all of its woes, far superior to our democracies, filled with greed and graft!

Standing out there upon the street, in front of our home, past which the sirens of police wagons, ambulances, and scores of other automobiles were rushing to and fro, adding to the din, our first thought was for the safety of the bodies of the members of our flock. Were any among the many killed or wounded? (Afterward we learned that only one member of our church, Miss Mary Seelig, one of our faithful Sunday school teachers, was among the slain. We could only bow our heads and say: "God can care for his own even in the earthquake shock. He wanted Mary Seelig to be with Christ.")

Our second thought was for our church building. We rushed over to it. We could see little that would indicate that it had even been shaken, apart from some brick veneering that had been loosened a bit. The big brick chimney had crashed down upon one of the projecting rooms to the south of the main building. But while the plastering was down on the inside and the joists were splintered, yet they held the brick from coming through. Plastering was barely cracked in many rooms on the lower floor. The organ was a pile of jumbled, but largely uninjured, pipes. Some ornamental plaster of Paris on the front walls of the auditorium was down. But the fundamental structure of the building was apparently sound as a dollar. The authorities report: "This building in excellent condition." It never moved a quarter of an inch from its foundations. Not a window was broken. The next day, we walked over to the church, and a stranger, looking about upon the chaos, stood looking at the church from the street. He knew us not. We knew him not. But, he said as we passed him: "Mister, that must truly be the house of God!" The church in contrast to the ruin all about it, doubtless caused this remark. Well, if God's hand was in it, it was in it when we

terrible Long Beach earthquake built. He, it was, who may have kept us from building of brick or stone with sand and water for mortar! The Long Beach church is a frame building, heavily and strongly built, covered with stucco. Fortunately, the high ceilings in all our auditoriums, are of insulite. That tells the story.

But, now, the third question which flashed in upon the mind of the writer, (and we have since learned that it was the same with many of our members) knowing the terrible condition of many of our homes and that some of the best were almost utterly ruined, was: "What will this mean to our Easter Offering only several weeks away?" The fact of the matter is, this question concerns us far more than the actual condition of our church, damaged to the extent of not more than $1,000.00.

The Church knows that last year the offerings for foreign missions fell off in the Brotherhood to the extent of $9,000.00. It knows that we cannot maintain our present forces on the fields if we have another such drop. It knows what a retrograde movement in foreign missions will mean to the spirit of the denomination as a whole. It knows what its own offering of about $7,000.00 per year means to The Foreign Missionary Society. The Long Beach church, still out in a tent, Sunday school temporarily disorganized, all services very much disrupted, hard hit with the depression before the earthquake, and now with hundreds of its supporters almost at their wits' ends to get their homes back upon their foundations and their houses in order,—well, the Long Beach church is asking: "Can we do it?"

Badly hit as we have been and are, we still have faith and fighting spirit. This spirit is exemplified in one of the Brethren who walked into our study shortly after the quake, to tell us that it was going to cost him from $1,000.00 to $1,200.00 to get his house back upon its foundation, and set in order. But he laid down before us, $60.00 in bills and $40.00 in shining gold, and said: "There! That is our Easter Offering. We had saved it for the Easter Offering before this quake, and the Lord shall have it now!" His spirit is the spirit of the whole Long Beach church. Earthquake or no earthquake, we shall do what we can. We are not going to make our Lord Jesus Christ pay all the damages for this present distress. We can only pray that our sister churches shall go forth with the same determination to do what they can to support the lightbearers who have gone for us, our representatives, into the darkness of "the regions beyond" with the message of God's love, and God's salvation. Brothers, those who have not yet heard, must hear that wondrous Story! That is the greatest work God ever gave his Church on earth to do. Shall we desert it now, because of this present distress? God forbid!

Earthquake Smitten, We Plead, but not for Ourselves

(The following appeal was read before the congregation of the Long Beach (California) Church on Sunday morning, April 2nd, and was submitted for publication in the Brethren Evangelist, by a unanimous vote of the entire congregation.)

We of the Long Beach church, have been shaken, even as our brethren elsewhere now know, by one of the severest earthquakes America has ever known. The exact amount of damage will not be known yet for some time, but those best in a position to know, estimate that, apart from the loss of life, the quake will cost our city and its neighboring communities anywhere from $60,000,000 to $75,000,000. And this disaster comes at the very bottom of the greatest financial distress this world, in modern times, has seen.

Whole streets of business houses had their fronts, or rears, or both, hurled into the streets or alleys, and many beautiful structures will have to first be razed to the ground and then rebuilt, if built at all. Many of these business houses (as well as homes) were heavily mortgaged for the first building. Now they are gone! But the mortgage has yet to be paid! To use an old expression, "There is a dead horse to pay for!" For example, our nearest neighboring church several years back built a beautiful new "Educational Building" to house its Bible school. The building cost them about $80,000. By sacrificial effort, they have paid $60,000 on it. And now, $20,000 must be paid for the useless heap of ruins before they can think even of rebuilding. Besides this, it will take $7,000.00 to repair their church building beside these ruins so that they can again meet to worship. It might be said that they should have carried earthquake insurance. Those who so say might examine into the tremendous cost of earthquake insurance, in the first place. Again, they might remember that this territory never has had in the memory of man any tremblors worthy of being called an earthquake, and that banks never even thought of requiring such security in case of their loans. We read in the morning paper that scientists back in Michigan say the Great Lakes region is due for a real earthquake some of these days. We wonder how many easterners are wiser than we were and are carrying earthquake insurance in the neighborhood of Chicago, Detroit, or Buffalo? We do not say they should carry it; but, if they do not, then they should not accuse us of negligence. Long Beach is NOW, in all probability, much safer than Detroit. We have settled down, likely for a good many decades to come.

The Long Beach church building has been marvelously preserved. Possibly $1,000.00 will repair our structure. It is not as a church, but as individuals, that we have suffered our greatest losses. Even after we shall set our homes (most of which were more or less damaged) back on their foundations and have repaired them, we realize that an additional burden is going to fall upon us through the taxation that will be necessary for the rebuilding of our school and other public buildings, many of which will have to be wholly rebuilt.

"We are perplexed, but not in despair; ... cast down, but not destroyed." We still have a wonder-working Lord, who will make this one of the "all things" that will work out for us an exceeding weight of glory. "His ways are past finding out." Nevertheless, "He doeth all things well."

In the midst of this terrible disaster, our entire congregation has but one question uppermost in mind just now with Easter Day but two weeks away. It is this: "Will it be possible for us to reach our usual goal on Easter Sunday? Will our present distress also distress the splendid work being done by self-sacrificing missionaries who represent us in Africa and Argentina?" We are conscious that an unprecedented financial depression had smitten us ahead of the earthquake, making our goal seem almost impossible to gain this year. We know that many of our sister churches are passing through deep waters. We know that it will be nothing short of a miracle, God-wrought, if our denomination shall reach last year's goal, which was $9,000.00 short. We know what it is going to mean if we do not reach at least the goal of last year.

In the light of these facts it would seem that we should go, as a denomination, to our knees and pray as we have never prayed before. We feel that we are face to face with another disaster that may prove to be of greater moment to our denomination than merely the physical losses of an earthquake. We are not thinking of returning missionaries or of closed mission stations. We are thinking of a fine group of young people from our various Brethren churches who are in Bible Institutes, Colleges, Seminaries and Hospitals, preparing their lives for Christian service in our denomination. Dare we permit even these disasters that are upon us to take a step that would discourage their holy ambitions, and destroy their visions of service and hope of acceptance? Returning (recalled) missionaries and closed mission stations would mean a backward step from which our denomination would be years in recovering.

Such a step we feel we dare not take. Moreover, we feel that even in our present distress we need not take it if we shall meet the situation with real sacrificial spirit. We must not fail. How dare we go up soon to meet our Lord and confess to him that we permitted a time of depression to turn us from the task of prime importance—telling to those in the darkness of heathen night that there is a Savior unto life eternal for them even as for us. The gospel of the grace of God—the message of eternal life has been committed into our hands. It has to do with the life or death of souls eternally bound! Distress or no distress, "Necessity is laid upon me; yea, Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel!" (1 Cor. 9:16.)

We, the members of the First Brethren church of Long Beach, assembling in our church building for the first time after the earthquake, broken somewhat but not in spirit, pledge ourselves anew to the task of keeping alive every mission station on the fields that God has assigned us, and that no missionary shall be called home because of failure on our part to even now do "the utmost that in us is." We have contributed to this work considerably more than $75,000.00 in the past twelve years. Whether this year we shall succeed in maintaining our average gift, we do not know. But we shall try. Standing here amidst the debris of our shattered homes, we promise God that we shall do our best for Christ and the work that must lie next to his great heart of love—making known to every creature for whom he died the story of his redeeming grace. We pledge ourselves to the task of keeping our foreign mission work from suffering because we have suffered.

We, smitten, plead, BUT NOT FOR OURSELVES. We plead for OTHERS for whom Christ died. We, cast down for the moment, send this message to all our sister churches of like faith, and plead with them to join with us at this Easter time in sacrificial giving, such as will not only prove the loyalty and determination of our denomination to go forward with the tasks that God has assigned his Church, no matter what the weather, but shall be a challenge to our sister denominations to go and do likewise. Souls MUST NOT be permitted to go from a Christless life into a Christless eternity without having had the slightest chance to accept the salvation of God, simply because we are suffering many physical discomforts and losses ourselves. Many years ago the boys at Valley Forge wrapped such rags as they had about their frozen feet and marched on. Their country had called. Today, our God calls. Sore and distressed we may be. Let us march on—for him!

Sister churches, we do not know what we shall be able to do on Easter Sunday. But if we shall fall short because of this present distress, we believe that you will not refuse to bear the burden for others that we would have borne. Our past should prove our willingness. Do not permit this Easter Offering to fail. And, we pledge to you that when another Easter Day shall roll around, Long Beach church will have recovered her breath, and for Christ and his Church, you will find us once again at the goal! Pray for us!

Are We Fully Awake to the Danger?

The wets are trying to stampede the people into a race for repeal before they awaken to a full realization of what they are doing. And there is danger that they will succeed. They have stampeded Congress into submission of repeal and into a legalization of nullification. A year ago many dries would not believe this was possible, and some failed to awaken to the real danger until it was an accomplished fact. Now many of our dries are refusing to believe that Prohibition will actually be taken out of the Constitution. It will not if people can become aroused, but the danger is that the evil work will all be over before the people are really awakened. On the other hand, of course, are a goodly number of dries who have lost all hope, and because of fear or despair are as good as nobody at all so far as fight is concerned. They, too, we believe, are not fully alive to the enormity of the evil that is threatened to be brought upon the country by the return of legalized alcoholic liquors, or else they would maintain their active opposition to the last.

The good people of our land, especially the Christian people, need to be jarred awake to the very imminent danger of losing Prohibition from our Constitution and have the nefarious liquor traffic given a new legal life and permitted to carry on its satanic work under the protection and with the sanction of the Government. The wet forces believe they have the dry rank and file blinded to the real consequences of repeal, and they have started a race for repeal, hoping to achieve their end before the awakening comes. If they can just keep the country on the run and not allow it time to do any really serious thinking, they will accomplish their purpose. The great sentiment forming agencies, the newspapers, are aware of the trouble that may happen to the wet plans if the people in large numbers begin to get a glimpse of what is behind the scenes, and they are warning the liquor dealers to go easy with this new beer they now have and not brandish their wares too plainly before the public until after the repeal vote has been taken. That is an acknowledgment of the vicious and lawless character of the traffic they are seeking to reestablish, and ought to be a warning to the voters, especially to Christian voters. If we will set ourselves against being rushed into this thing, we will surely come to their senses before it is too late.

We must not be deceived into thinking there will be no return of the old saloon, once the Prohibition Amendment is repealed. It will be the old saloon or something worse. And you will notice that the wets are no longer assuring us they are against the return of the saloon. In fact the wet crowd in Congress insisted on the elimination from the repeal proposal of a provision against the return of the saloon. The Government is bound and gagged by the liquor interests and there is absolutely no real safeguard that can be put across against the return of the old evils of the legalized traffic. If we are going to save ourselves from these evils, now is the time to do it. Negligence and indifference up to this point has gotten us into a bad situation, but it will only be worse for us to let conditions drift. It is better to prevent a despairing man from taking poison than try to cure him after he has drunk it. And this is not all figure of speech, for the drink in this case is real poison.

The Christian people need to buckle into this job of saving the 18th Amendment. If it is lost they are going to get most of the blame, and rightly so. There are enough good church members in America to save the cause if they were rallied with united front against the enemy. If they are not rallied, or if they cannot be, it is to their shame. We must do two things: first, begin to teach in our churches the evils of intemperance and insist on a return to serious instruction in scientific temperance in our public schools; and second, to arouse ourselves to meet this present emergency of defeating repeal with all the power we can muster, and we may have access to Infinite Power, if we will use it.

When morals are low, it is a bad comment on the vigor and vitality of the church. Evil forces are always ready to take advantage of the periods of indifference and lack of strong convictions on the part of religious people, and particularly of their leaders. When there is no "Thus saith the Lord," no reechoing of "Verily, verily; I say unto you," concerning the moral and spiritual life of the people, there will be a growing feeling that it neither makes much difference what one believes nor what he does. Such a spirit easily drifts from bad to worse until there is widespread carelessness, unbelief and immorality. We are in the midst of such a period of reaction, and the church forces need to take warning that it is necessary to return to their convictions, convictions in matters of religious faith and also in matters of Christian conduct. And do not imagine that the two can be separated. It does matter what a man believes, and it matters just as vitally what he does.

There are many who do not put enough stress on the importance of honest-to-goodness effort to live the Christian life and to be faithful to all the civic and social responsibilities of a Christian in his community. If Christian people go on in their refusal to accept responsibility, as many do, and continue in their lackadaisical apathy toward the forces of evil, there will be a severe harvest in store. "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering" in the teachings of our Christian religion, including those that deal with righteous conduct and opposition to those forces that tear down and destroy. This is a time for revival not merely of evangelistic spirit and effort, but of zeal for the ideals and standards of righteousness. Senator Sheppard has said, "No profounder disaster could befall this nation than the surrender of an ideal, an ideal embodied in its basic law, proclaimed to the world and demonstrated to be just." Let us hold on to that ideal and hold on with all the spiritual persistence at our command.

The Pope's Idea of Religious Freedom

The Christian Evangelist very generously says: "We have not the slightest doubt that Pope Pius XI is an earnest, honorable, high-minded, devoted Christian gentleman, which is as fine a thing as one can say about anyone in the world." We doubt not that this Roman gentleman has some very fine personal qualities and yet we cannot conscientiously place him along side some of the noblest and most godly Protestant church leaders we know. There are several things we hold against him that we cannot reconcile with a strictly "honorable, high-minded, devoted Christian gentleman." We cannot help holding him responsible for his official policies and acts, which, in accordance with those of his predecessors, are calculated to keep multitudes of people, particularly in Catholic-dominated lands, in ignorance and superstition, enslaved and impoverished, widely misguided by politico-religious priests, vast numbers of whom know not God nor the way of salvation, and often are unworthy of their priesthood. If the time has come when the conscience of the American people will hold great bankers and business executives responsible for their official acts and policies, we must apply the same standard to church executives and no exception can be made of the head of the Roman Church-State. He is no better nor worse than the ideals and standards by which he rules his subjects.

Our esteemed contemporary publication goes on to say, "We have no quarrel either with him or with his church in this country, and we would fight any attempt to restrict the rights and liberties of Catholic Americans." We too would insist on unrestricted rights and liberties for all regardless of sect or creed, but we cannot say that we have no quarrel with the pope or his church in this country in the face of the encroachments of Catholic political ideals and claims in American life.

Consequently we would say, in approving the following paragraph from The Christian Evangelist, not "We dislike heartily, however," but "We dislike, therefore, the pope's insistent (and inconsistent) objection to Protestant activities in Italy. In his recent address to the Cardinals' Consistory he again protested against

EDITORIAL REVIEW

No doubt our readers appreciated the very excellent symposium in last week's paper on "What the Resurrection Means to Me" and perhaps they will be interested in knowing that the writers are all graduate students in Ashland Seminary and all have student-pastorates they are caring for along with their school work.

We learn that a week of pre-Easter services is being held in the church at Osceola, Indiana, the pastor, Brother Frank Gehman, doing the preaching until Friday night, when a Gospel Team from Ashland will arrive and assist in the services over Sunday. The pastor writes, "We have a very promising group of young people in our Sunday school," and he is encouraged with the outlook.

Another district statistician this week calls for cooperation in the collecting of statistics; it is Brother Frank Gehman of the Indiana District. We all like to have good reports made at our conferences, and the only way to have a good report in such a matter as statistics is for every pastor and church secretary to respond promptly and fully.

Christian Endeavorers have a report this week from Peru, Indiana, society. We find, as we would expect where the National Associate President, Brother F. C. Vanator, is pastor, an active society, having interesting meetings. They have thirty-five members and every member is given a chance for development. Christian Endeavor week was fittingly observed. Other societies are invited to send reports to their department editor, Brother C. D. Whitmer, 217 E. Dubail Ave., South Bend, Indiana.

We have an interesting report this week concerning the Brethren cause in the Rio Grande Valley in Texas, where members of both branches of Brethrenism are fellowshiping together, a thing we are always glad to hear. The members are widely scattered and they have no house of worship but they have interesting and regular meetings in the homes of the members. It is refreshing to know that these isolated members have remained true to their Brethren faith through these years, and this effort to build up a fellowship in that section should be a suggestion and an inspiration to others similarly situated.

We have heard of days of prayer for missions before, but the Brethren of Southern California came together in the Second church of Los Angeles and carried out a whole day's program of prayer, and with the thought that it may prove suggestive to others we are publishing both the program and the message they prepared on "Why a Day of Prayer for Foreign Missions." Brother Arthur D. Cashman, pastor of the entertaining church, writes in a personal communication: "It was a day of prayer conference fellowship emphasizing Foreign Missions," and "a most blessed, profitable, and inspiring occasion."

If any one may have thought that the earthquake damages done to the homes and other properties of members of the Long Beach church might give occasion for going easy on the Easter offering for Foreign Missions, the statement over the signature of the officers of that church, as it appears on page two of this paper, ought to dispel any such thought. They pledge themselves to do their very utmost to make it unnecessary for any retrenchment to be made on the foreign field, and they plead that their sister churches shall enter into that same sacrificial purpose. They are right, as we have previously said, it is going to take sacrifice to maintain our front on the foreign field.

The Third church of Philadelphia, where Brother William A. Steffler is pastor, have recently enjoyed a successful revival under the evangelistic leadership of Brother R. I. Humbert, of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania. There were forty-six confessions and three reconsecrations. The pastor states that the work of the whole church is going forward in a splendid shape and in a few months they expect to be off the Mission Board and fully self-supporting. They are, as Brother Humbert remarks, a fine people and they have a mind to work, and under the faithful leadership of Brother Steffler, they have made splendid strides in the last few years. The evangelist's chart lectures proved to be interesting and the attendance is said to have been unusually good.

Dr. W. H. Beachler reports a successful revival at Gratis, Ohio, where he is pastor, and where Brother Claud Studebaker of Pittsburg was the evangelist. There were a number of very splendid results from this meeting enumerated by Brother Beachler, one of which was that thirty-one souls made the good confession, most of whom have already been received into the church. Besides the community was greatly stirred and blessed. This is a great victory for Gratis and will mean much for the future of the church. The field was well prepared for a revival and when the evangelist came upon the scene he proclaimed the word with power and effectiveness to receptive hearts, and God gave the increase. This was the return engagement of the exchange of meetings both of which meetings proved enjoyable to the preachers concerned as well as helpful to their churches.

We learn that the Sunday school page which is being provided with material from week to week by Prof. M. A. Stuckey, is being appreciated and we are glad to get the information. Brother Stuckey is one of our most faithful coworkers in the making of the Evangelist and we know it will be an encouragement to him to know that his efforts are being appreciated. This week the editor of that department supplies us with a short article from Brother Floyd Sibert concerning the eastern young people's camp, the site for which is on the Juniata river. The description of the place certainly sounds fascinating, and we imagine that, once the young people become acquainted with the place, it will be difficult to provide accommodations for all. This Juniata camp is the one for which the leaders were soliciting an appropriate name. We have not learned that the name has been found. Maybe the young people are waiting to visit the place before naming it.

Brother Frank G. Coleman gives us a good report from his church at Hagerstown, Maryland, where the work of the Lord is going forward in spite of all handicaps. A Sunday school contest between the ladies and men is provoking keen interest. The interesting feature about the arrangement is the imaginary visitation of various Brethren churches on their trip to the west coast, and then the unique requirement on the part of the losers to furnish information about the churches where they stop. We can well imagine, as the pastor remarks, that the church has benefited much from such a program. The shadows have passed over the congregation in the loss of two prominent members by death, one of whom—Dr. Tombaugh—was widely known to the brotherhood, and concerning whom Dr. Martin Shively wrote so beautifully in a recent issue of this paper. Many of the ministers of our brotherhood, as well as many laymen, knew well and loved dearly, the very lovable personality of our lamented Brother Tombaugh, and when he passed on, we lost a friend and brother who had been an inspiration to many. His friendship and counsel had been a great help to the editor and we shall long cherish his memory. A revival meeting now is in progress at Hagerstown and Brother Coleman reports one convert at the first invitation. We shall await with interest the final result.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother H. W. Koontz asks for prayer for a revival to be held in his church at Roanoke, Virginia, May 2 to 21, with Brother R. Paul Miller as evangelist.

Pray that the Christian people and all who are concerned about righteousness and sobriety and the welfare of our country, may be aroused to strike down with their votes the effort to revive the legalized liquor traffic.

Continue to pray, as many have been doing, that Brethren may be moved to sacrifice that the cause of foreign missions may not be hindered.

"My Presence Shall Go with Thee"

By H. F. Stuckman

(A Paper read before the Turlock, California Ministerial Association)

This morning I want to direct your attention again, to one of the fine old promises of the Book of books—Exodus 33:13—"My presence shall go with thee and I will give thee rest". With the vast number of problems confronting us there is just one thought that can sustain us. It's the promise of this text. Our position right now is very similar to that of Israel, when God communicated to them in the language of this text. They had been getting on through the way toward the promised land, because God had been leading, and because the territory over which they had gone was well known to Moses, their leader.

At this particular time they were plunging out into an unknown country. Sinai had been a great uplift to them. God had very definitely manifested his presence there with them. But now even Sinai is to be left behind, and the unknown future is foreboding to them. Shall they go on to their destination over a new and strange road, or shall they remain satisfied at Sinai? One thing they are settled on, that is, that unless God very definitely promises to accompany them, they will remain where they are. When Moses consults God he answers him in the words of this text—"My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."

Our own America has been led and blessed of God, as has no other people in all the history of humankind. There have been innumerable evidences of the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night. In this present emergency, no one would make so bold as to say God has deserted us. Manifest are the proofs of his interest in us. We have an abundance, and to spare of everything. Furthermore he has even tempered the winds, to meet our situation. Surely God has been with us. But what has been our attitude toward him? It can hardly be said of us, that we were fair in our dealings with him, we were entirely too busy getting on in our own way to consider our relationship to him. It's a fine testimony of the patience of God, that we were permitted to continue on, at the rate we were going. May I suggest that we seem to be entering into a new epoch of history as a people. What that period holds for us we know little, but we do know that if we permit him, God will go on with us. Israel's experience was in many respects a singular one and yet not altogether so. God did covenant with Abraham to bless him while he was obedient to him, just as now he had renewed that covenant with Moses and his people. It was a plain proposition, that so long as they accepted his leadership, he would prosper them, and when they saw fit to follow their own way, then they were to accept the consequences. Is it not strange that man has never been able to get on successfully without God? This late experience of ours demonstrates forcefully this truth. God gives us an abundance of everything, and yet we have not the ordinary good judgment to distribute and use it properly. One has to blush at the thought of our boasted wisdom in the face of our inability to do successfully with the abundance of things we have from God.

Man's experience has always been just that. It's a plain proposition announced by a kind Father through his messengers, and borne out by centuries of experience. With him we succeed—without him we fail and crumble into the dust of forgetfulness. The most encouraging thing that has happened in a long time was the outward manifestation of our new President to acknowledge Divine leadership. His desire to worship and his prayer for Divine guidance, on the day he began his new duties, are signs of an unmistakable desire to do right. May we, his people, do as well in our own lives to have this Divine presence. Now remember this, that Israel went peaceably and successfully on their way. When difficulties did arise, God stood by their side and directed them to victory over all obstacles. This is precisely the spirit of the men who founded our nation. And what marvelous strength of character they possessed, and what blessings of unselfish service they received. Note also that when the battles of the day were over and they had settled down in this new land to live at peace, that he promised to visit them with rest. God never meant that we should go on in perpetual money chasing. He never meant that we should be continually worried and concerned about material things. There was a place and purpose in the rest which he desired his children to have.

I am of the decided opinion that a new world of things is dawning upon us. We would far better recognize it, and as quickly as possible adjust ourselves to it. But remember this, as we do adjust ourselves to a changing order, we cannot do so apart from God. Unless God accompanies us, that same hunger for him will soon arise, and we will continue to be unhappy. If, in this changing order we take him with us, we can find this rest and happiness which the text promises. Too long we have been like the old lady who was carrying her heavy basket along the roadway. When she was asked by a neighbor to ride, instead of setting the basket down and relaxing herself as she rode on toward home, she held it aloft in her hands just as though she were carrying it.

Christ is saying to us, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden," but we refuse to do so. Later we get a picture of Joshua, as he assumes the leadership of his people—and he hesitates, as did his predecessor. Then comes the Angel of the Lord and speaks, saying,

HIS POWER AND CARE

By J. L. Bowman

*The tiny seed that is in my hand
Is very small indeed.
And yet it has the germ of life,
That Life supplies a need.*

*Without that life no seed could grow,
No fruit or blossom fair;
No color that would greet the eye,
No perfume rich and rare.*

*No mortal man this life could give,
No man the secret knows.
This little seed though very small,
Divinest wisdom shows.*

*His greatness we may daily see
In flower and bud and seed.
His tender care is over us,
Supplying every need.*

*No good thing will HE withhold
From all his children dear,
When through the valley they must go,
There is naught for them to fear.*

*HIS rod and staff their chief support
In tribulations sore;
He'll guide and keep them all the way,
Till trials here are o'er.
Linwood, Maryland.*

"As Captain of the Lord's hosts, I come." He knows God is present, and moves on with him. That is our challenge today. Will we meet it? Elkhart, Indiana.

A CORRECTION

After the first side of The Evangelist had been printed it was discovered that the explanatory line prepared to run at the beginning of Brother Jennings' article had by mistake been inserted at the top of Brother Stuckman's article. The line at the top of the Stuckman article should have been "A RADIO ADDRESS BROADCAST FROM ELKHART, INDIANA."—Editor.

The Work of Evangelism Today, Is It Reaching the People?

By N. W. Jennings

(A paper read before the Turlock, California Ministerial Assn.)

We need in the ministry in these days God called, God anointed, and God sent men as never before. We need men of great patience, and that means to wait upon the Lord. I like that verse in Psalm 40:1, "I waited patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me and heard my prayer". Patience is one of the grandest representatives of the Creator. There is no shining goal of human glory too bright or too remote for patience, no height can tire its wing; it faces the blackest storm with a calm. Nothing is too small and nothing is too large for a noble soul of patience to do.

Patience waiting upon God was a special characteristic of our Lord. Impatience never lingered in his heart, much less escaped his lips. All through his agony in the garden his trial of cruel mockings before Herod, Pilate, and his passion on the Tree, he waited in omnipotence of patience. No glance of wrath, no word of murmuring, no deed of vengeance came from God's patient Lamb. Job on the dunghill does not equal Jesus on the Cross. He towers far above all the sons of men in patience. The Savior's prayer amid the midnight mountains and in Gethsemane, gave him patience in which to possess his soul, and to finish his work to the glory of his Father. As his servants we need his patience.

"I waited patiently on the Lord". There is a waiting time. We even wait for the Lord from Heaven. We say, "Come, Lord Jesus, still we wait." No man knoweth the day nor the hour.

I believe, in the deep citadel of my soul, that the evangelism of today should be the evangelism of the Apostolic age—if it be otherwise it shall fail. The evangelism of today is not reaching the masses, as all intelligent people know, who know the statistics of the unchurched and unsaved people, to say nothing about the very many in the church reached in the flesh and unreached in the Spirit. Brethren, we need to lead the Christ of God forth, and unveil him before the people. We must veil the big self of humanity. A man who was baptized, joined the church because his wife was baptized and joined the church. He said to me: "I have never been born again of the Holy Spirit, I know nothing about this new life in Christ Jesus". He saw his wife instead of seeing Jesus. And many see the preacher instead of seeing Jesus. We have a great task, too great for mortal man uncoupled from the living God and the Savior of our souls.

Evangelism means to go, and go, with an eternal message, which message is the living word of the living God. What a beautiful picture to see the two coming together, the living word and a living soul. The immortal message and the immortal soul going hand in hand for eternity, to be with him, the Author of that eternal message. We have a perfect guide book. The Bible is the great book.

It is the life giving word, it quickens. It is the life sustaining word, it keeps. It is the incarnate word, it is Jesus. It is the indestructible word, it is God. The Bible reveals universal love. "God so loved". It reveals universal invitation. "Look unto me". "Come unto me all". "The Spirit and the Bride say come". "Him that will come". "Behold the Lamb of God". Beholding Jesus we see man as he ought to be. Beholding Jesus we see God in his fullness, "the fullness of the Godhead bodily."

We must be bold in telling the people that there is but one way to salvation and that is the Jesus way. "I am the way, the truth and the life." "I am the Door." "I am the Good Shepherd." "I am the resurrection." "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore." There is power in Jesus' blood to save to the uttermost all who will come, 1 John 1:7—"The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanses us from all sin." Heb. 9: 23. Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." Ex. 12:13.—"When I see the blood I will pass over you" 1 Peter 1:18-19—"Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, but with the precious blood of Christ as a lamb without blemish and without spot" Rom. 3:25—"Whom God hath sent forth to be a propitiation through his blood." Romans 5: 9—"Much more than being justified through his blood we shall be saved from wrath through him. Eph. 1:33—"In whom we have redemption through his blood." Eph. 1:7—"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers to feed the Church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." I say with all reverence, it took God-blood to redeem his church. Acts 20:28—"Who hath washed us from our sins in his own blood." Rev. 1:5—"Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood." Reject the blood of Christ and all is over. The gates of glory and divine grace are closed, the soul stagnated, the heart paralyzed, conscience dead, and the mind blighted, for there is no other remedy.

That word, his blood, is the most significant word in our Christian vocabulary. It is the fountain which purifies all truth; it is the king word in the world; it is the master of all that is good and bad; it keeps pure the pure and makes pure the impure. It ought to be the last word on our lips as we close our ministry.

Emptied of Self

If we are to be used of God to win souls we must be emptied of self and filled with the Holy Ghost. Let me illustrate my thought. A young lady, a teacher in the Sunday school, closed herself in her closet with God. What a picture, a picture of one shut in with God! She prayed, "O God, I want to do greater things for thee, I would like to be a missionary." While she was praying a vision came to her, a man's skull empty and naked appeared before her, which frightened her, still she prayed, and presently a blaze of fire ran in the skull and it became a ball of fire which started to girdle the globe, this terrified her, but a voice came from God to her saying, "My child, if you would do great things for me, you must be empty as the skull, and filled with the Holy Ghost"—she was filled and became a great soul winner. Sometimes the evangelists and pastors are tempted to steal the hearts of the people of God. Isn't it a fact that the people many times marry up to the evangelist instead of God? Who is to blame for this? The people, perhaps in part, but the greater blame falls to the evangelist. St. Paul said, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of Christ", but we, the evangelists, many times

Ahab, the seventh king of Israel, who ruled 874 B. C. to 854 B. C., built an "ivory house" at Samaria, his capital, according to I Kings 22:39. During the excavation seasons of 1909 and 1910 Dr. G. A. Reisner, representing Harvard University, brought to light the remains of the palace of Omri, I Kings 16:24, and above this that which he believed to be the remains of Ahab's palace, or "ivory house."

Archaeological digging is generally carried on in Palestine during the months of February to June, except where the location is high above sea level and then work may also proceed in the summer from June to August.

Dr. J. W. Crowfoot, of the Palestinian Exploration Society, excavated at Sebastiyeh, the Old Testament Samara, the 1932 season. Among other things he found a great number of ivory plaques and medallions, some in good condition and of others only fragments remained. Most of the ivories were ornamental patterns carved on long strips. Some plaques were complete in themselves, while others contained ideas continued in adjoining ivories. Individual plaques averaged about 8 or 10 centimeters (2.54 c. in one inch) in height. They probably originally were used to decorate the panels or framework of couches, tables and other pieces of furniture, which practice was denounced by frey Amos (3:15, 6:4) less than a century later, because it ostentatiously displayed luxury.

The patterns indicate Egyptian influence, for numerous gods of Egypt are depicted; probably also throwing light on idolatrous court life of Ahab's day. "The debt to Egypt is obvious," writes Dr. Crowfoot, "and it is in keeping with what we know of the political relations between the two countries."

The report of the excavator calls our attention to the fine quality of workmanship displayed by these ivories. "The technical skill of the craftsmen and the fineness of the tools at their disposal may be gathered from measurements taken off the fragment of a wing. This fragment is about four centimeters broad and 1.5 centimeters high, parts only of the two outer rows of feathers are preserved, six on the inner row, twelve on the outer. Both rows were inlaid and much of the blue frit and red paste is still in position. The piece is 7 mm. thick; (mm, is one-tenth of a centimeter) the ivory cloisons average about 0.8 mm. wide, the inlaid troughs between them, which widen slightly toward the outer edge of the wing, vary in width from about 1.2 mm. to 1.9 mm.; the depth of the troughs varies from 1.9 mm. to 2.2 mm., the deepest part being at the inner, or narrower, edge. Excavations of this fineness, I am told, would be carried out nowadays with a drill, but there is no trace of drilling in this fragment and all the ivory removed must have been cut away with a very fine scoper."

Today one can visit Samaria and see the remains of wicked old Ahab's "ivory house", walk through the debris of a once luxurious palace, reconstruct the Biblical stories of Court life, and see evidences in stone and ivory of the truthfulness of God's word. Let us rejoice in these testimonies which speak in defense of the historicity of our Bible, and pray that many more things may be brought to light which will overthrow the bulwarks of those who would destroy faith. We need not fear, the Word of God welcomes test by every fact.

The Work of Evangelism Today

glory before the people over a little victory or achievement, then the people many times glory in us, at least some of them, but others are disgusted with our spirit of boasting and glorifying. May God graciously forgive us if we have been guilty. Then sometimes evangelists are guilty of trying to steal the hearts of the people from the pastor. We intimate to the people that if we were pastor things would hum, and the walls of the church would soon be pushed out, and a large building erected to hold the throngs of people, but it might work the other way, we might have to look through a spy glass to see the people. The greatest need of the church today is a revival of prayer. It ought to start in the ministry.

Tempted to Work for Money

Then the evangelist must watch or he will cultivate a spirit of aggrandizement; he will think more about how much money he will receive for the meeting than about the many souls he might be used of God to win to Jesus Christ. To my mind this has been a great hindrance to evangelism.

We are to be brave soldiers, enduring hardness and afflictions. St. Paul could well say, Endure afflictions as the Lord Jesus did, for he himself had suffered. Listen to him: "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes, save one. Once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep. In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils of my own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in the city, in the wilderness, in the sea, in perils among false brethren" and that alone was enough to break his heart. In weariness and painfulness, in watchings, often in hunger and thirst, in fastings, often in cold and nakedness, besides these things that are without that which cometh upon me daily the cares of all the churches. Sure we will have opposition, but it always means opportunity. People will say good things about us and people will say mean things about us. You know the storm of shameful criticisms which they hurled into our loving Savior's face. They charged him with casting out devils by Beelzebub, and said, He hath a devil, you know how firmly and patiently, yet unflinchingly he met every charge with word and argument which they could not gainsay or compete with. Jesus our Master, was crowned with thorns, but I fear sometimes we are crowning ourselves with pride and vain glory. God forgive and God deliver us from such a thing. Listen to this, "Do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry."

Listen to this also, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over thee which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseer, to feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." The message to one is to make full proof of his ministry to do the work of an evangelist, and the message to the other is to feed the flock. Both are ministers, called of God. Both are needed, both have a place in the church, and both ought to work together as a David and Jonathan.

Many pastors are advocating that your own hand picked fruit is the best, and that is all right, but I dare say there are many tall trees that are still unpicked, and they will no doubt remain so until some evangelist comes along who will climb up the tree and shake the golden fruit down in the garden of God's love for the pastor to cultivate and take care of. SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

"WHOSE IMAGE AND SUPERScription"

Christian people have occasion to remember in these days of national crisis a brilliant reply of Jesus to his enemies. From one standpoint it seems quite unfair and absurd that a Government that has promised to pay in gold for certain paper money should not merely refuse to do so, but should threaten dire punishment upon every citizen who would not surrender both the gold certificates and even the very gold itself. "What are we coming to," some one might ask, "that one is not even allowed to have the money he has made by his own labors?" Why should we be compelled to put all the real money in the banks and accept only their promises to pay it, such promises as they are even now refusing to honor?

After all, it goes back to the principle enunciated by Jesus when he asked, "Whose image and superscription is this?" and then said, "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." Evidently the meaning is that since one has accepted the Government stamp that makes the coinage of value for trade, he owes it to that Government to support its taxes and ordinances in general. It is only by the existence of Government that we are enabled to carry on trade in peace and accumulate property in security. Inasmuch as we gladly make use of the Government's protection in happy and normal times, we have the obligation to cooperate in sustaining it by sacrifices in unhappy and abnormal times. And in doing so we learn anew the profound and enduring wisdom that underlies the teachings of him who spoke nineteen centuries ago in a relatively primitive society.—Christian Standard.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY WILL MEET AT COLUMBUS, OHIO

At a meeting of the general council of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., held in Philadelphia March, 1, it was decided to hold the meeting of the general assembly, which is to begin May 25, at Columbus, Ohio, rather than in Fort Worth, Texas, as previously arranged. This move will mean a saving of $30,000, it is claimed. The council also ordered a second cut for the year—10 per cent for all officers and employes of the general assembly and its departments; this will result in a saving of about $163,000 for the coming year. A number of missionaries will be dropped; those retained will be dealt with individually in the matter of salary reductions. J. Willison Smith, chairman of the budget and finance department, estimated that the official boards of the denominations have accomplished a reduction of two million dollars during the past two years, with a reduction of annual overhead of $600,000.—Christian Century.

HIGHER EDUCATION WRONG

The Presbyterian says: We always read anything written by Prof. Leander S. Keyser with great interest. He conducts a department of Comments on Topics of the Times in that excellent monthly, "Christian Faith and Life." In the March issue, he quotes the following, which we deem worthy to be passed on:

"Prof. Walter Boughton Pitkin, of Columbia University, says: 'Almost everything we have done in the United States in education, and especially in higher education, has been wrong. Recently I looked up the educational record of several of those financiers who have ruined others in the past few years. Most of them were either college graduates or the recipients of honorary degrees from our colleges. I cannot be proud of an educational system that turns out guilty barbarians.'

We are wondering if this fault cannot be accounted for in part at least by the lack of encouragement in definite godliness in these great universities and the readiness they manifest to make a little god of every man of great wealth. More Christian character instilled into their students, and less worship of the dollar-chaser might help some.

THE PHILIPPINES AND INDEPENDENCE

No chapter in American history is less glorious than our treatment of the Philippine Islands.

Having promised the Islanders their independence as soon as they achieved "capacity for self-government," we then governed them in such a way that their young men instead of becoming able leaders, conceiving of public office as a public trust, all too often grew up to be "politicos," conceiving of office as an opportunity to feed at the public trough.

Finally, however, we offered independence as a definite gesture — at whose behest? At the behest of the American sugar producers, who wanted the Philippines free so that we could put a high tariff on Island sugar, thus keeping our home market for the benefit of the home product.

One may hope that the Philippines will reject this proffered independence and give us another chance to fulfil our obligation toward them in a less sordid manner.—The Christian Evangelist.

THE POPE'S IDEA OF RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

the 'free and unbridled Protestant propaganda throughout Italy, and especially in Rome.' We suppose that it is annoying to Catholics to have Methodist missions operating almost at the doors of the Vatican, but every time we read of such a protest we feel somehow that we Protestants are being asked for more tolerance than the hierarchy is willing to give in return."

VOICE OF THE CHURCHES

THE GREATEST QUESTION IN THE WORLD— "WHAT SHALL I DO WITH JESUS?"

This question was asked by Pilate, and comes to you and me with all its force and reality.

"Pilate said unto them, 'What shall I do then with Jesus, which is called Christ?'" (Matt. 27:22).

Did it ever occur to you that this question MUST be answered by every individual, including kings and rulers, and by every nation as well?

We must answer it as individuals, because God has proved the whole world guilty—both Jew and Gentile (Rom. 3:9). "That every mouth may be stopped and all the world become guilty before God" (Rom. 3:19).

We must answer this question as individuals, because God the Father has provided in his Son a Savior for those whom he has proved guilty. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16).

The Lord Jesus Christ at the cross met every just and holy claim God had against sin and the sinner. "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities . . . All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him (the Lord Jesus Christ) the iniquity of us all" (Isa. 53:5-6).

The work of redemption was finished at the Cross. The great sin question was settled. It is now the SON question—What will you do with this Man who is called Christ?

There is no getting away from this. You had better plead guilty to the charges that are against you and have this matter settled.

There is pardon for the guilty. You can meet Christ NOW as your Savior, or meet him after DEATH as your Judge. "It is appointed unto man once to die, but after that the judgment" (Heb. 9:27). "God has appointed a day in the which he will judge the world BY HIS SON" (Acts 17:31).

What will YOU Do with Jesus? The question does not mean, Have you been baptized? Have you joined the church? Are you doing the best you can? Are you sincere? Have you given mental assent to a certain doctrine or creed?

No, it is a divine Living Person, the SON OF GOD, that is before you. The One who said, I am the Way, the Truth and the LIFE, no man cometh unto the Father but by me" (John 14:6).

Reader, have you received the Lord Jesus Christ as your personal Savior? Are you trusting in his shed Blood and work on the Cross ALONE for salvation? Or are you depending on what you are in yourself? Are you trusting in your so-called good works, your morality, and on what you think you are doing for God?

Which do you think God will accept—your so-called good works and what you think you are doing for him or Christ's work for you and what he has done and is doing for you? The all-important question is, Have you accepted God's remedy in providing a Savior for lost and guilty sinners?

"But as many as received him (Christ) to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his Name" (John 1:12).

God will, sooner or later, bring every individual to a strict account of his treatment of his Son. Every nation will some day stand before the same judgment bar. What will YOU do with Jesus?

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humberd

(Study Number Fifteen)

The Sixth Seal

When the sixth seal was broken, there was a terrible display of nature. I am at a loss to know just the order of the Book of Revelation in respect to time. Some chapters seem to carry a progression of events, while others merely give more details of these events. It is thus with the sixth seal. Does it take us to the end when the final judgments fall, or are these celestial displays a judgment in themselves. As best I can see, the seals, trumpets and vials are not the same judgments. God is clearing the earth for the Kingdom Age and is putting on these purifying judgments by degrees, so as to give opportunity to all who will to repent.

The Seals and Matthew Twenty-four

Christ, in reviewing the scenes of the end time in Matthew twenty-four, parallels the seal judgments. There are to be false Christs (Matt. 24:5) and under the first seal we see the spirit of these antichrists, headed up in one man. There are to be wars (Matt. 24:6) and under the second seal we see peace taken from the earth. There are to be famines (Matt. 24:7) and under the third seal we see this come to pass. There are to be pestilences (Matt. 24:7) and this is seen under the fourth seal. And there are to be earthquakes (Matt. 24:7), just what we see under the sixth seal. Then lest we mistake these judgments as final, he adds, "All these are the beginning of sorrows", (Matt. 24:8). That is, the seals are the first judgments while the trumpets and vials will bring other and more terrible sorrows.

Also, to bear out this idea, the sixth seal is called the "wrath of the Lamb" (Rev. 6:16) while the vials are called the "wrath of God" (Rev. 16:1). To add great weight to this view, we have the vials called, "The seven LAST plagues" (Rev. 15:1).

Thus, even though the sixth seal shows us a universe in convulsion, yet the earth still remains as a battle ground between the forces of God and the powers of Satan.

Terrified Humanity

Under the sixth seal the sun is darkened, but that is not a new phenomenon. There was such darkness in Egypt that it could be felt (Ex. 10:21). The sun grew dark at the crucifixion also. A shower of stars (or meteors) has often visited this earth.

During the first four seals, blaspheming humanity was confident. As long as the sun was shining, they took special delight in hunting out and killing the godly. They thought they were rid of God when they killed his people. It is thus today. Let a true minister demand a righteous life from his people, and some will "not endure sound doctrine" (2 Tim. 4:3) but they will undermine him and rejoice when he moves on, not realizing that a day of reckoning is coming for them. It is still true that the reproaches that fall upon Christ's people, really fall upon Christ himself.

These people, under the sixth seal, have been used to seeing the sun shine, but now it presents the appearance of a great dark ball in the heavens; no longer the silvery moonlight but in its place a terrible sickly orb of blood; no longer the quiet twinkle of the midnight stars but in their place the meteors are shooting and hissing, burning and blazing through the air; even the clouds are whirling and twisting about like someone trying to roll up a scroll. This terrifying scene cuts the cords of man's self-confidence and they cry out in fear.

In the Presence of His Glory

But this is not all. The sight of the Lamb strikes daggers into their hearts. Inasmuch as they have been persecuting his followers, they have been persecuting him and the day of his wrath is to come (Rev. 6:17).

How different this scene from that promised to the Christian. Here there is great terror at the sight of the glory of God but Christians will be presented faultless before the presence of the very same glory with "exceeding joy" (Jude 24). How we can thank God!

Peace and Fear

My great grandmother was a good old Christian, and in the time in the early part of the nineteenth century, when the stars fell, she had a hired girl who was not a Christian. When the meteors began to shower down upon the earth, she told her hired girl that if she wanted to see Christ come, to go to the window for he would soon be there. Then my old grandmother put on her white cap and sat down by the fireplace and waited—her heart beating high with joy. But not so with that hired girl—she was scared nearly to death.

Men have great confidence while the sun is shining and everything is going on as usual. They can even deny that there will ever be a Second Coming (2 Pet. 3:4) but let the extraordinary take place and they cry out in fear. May we so live that when he comes we will not be "ashamed before him at his coming" (1 John 2:28).

Order of the Events

In the book of Daniel, we have the record of events, but the chapters do not carry everything in order as to time. In Daniel five we have the scene at the death of Belshazzar, while in chapter seven, we have something that happened in his first year. It is thus with the book of Revelation. The chapters do not always carry us on, in point of time. It would be impossible to do so for there are different angles to these judgments. One chapter in Revelation, deals with one event, while another chapter deals with another event that was taking place at the same time but in another direction.

The Conference Program

There is a printed program for National Conference. At a given hour the ministers have a program in the Inn chapel and at the same time the laymen may be having a meeting in the Tabernacle and the W. M. S. in the auditorium. On the printed sheet, they are placed one after another and numbered (1), (2) and (3). Although they are taking place at the same time, they are in fact just different phases of the same conference.

As an illustration of this in Revelation we might take the seals. The first four seals show us judgments earthward, against Satan and his followers. The fifth seal shows us something that was taking place at the same time but looking heavenward. While the terrible judgments of the first four seals were overflowing the earth, Satan was fighting back at God and killing his people, but the fifth seal shows us how God was caring for their souls.

It is very difficult to get the exact order of some of the events, for there are so many different ways to look at them. No doubt the book of Revelation will unfold more as the time for its fulfillment progresses. The writer of Psalm twenty-two probably knew nothing of the crucifixion, but as time passed and fulfillment drew near, the Romans invented the terrible death and the Scripture is very plain to us now.

I will be glad for anything on these Studies that the reader may have, for it is by "comparing notes" that we arrive at some of the great truths of God's message.

Straight Thinking and Christian Belief

By Edward P. Drew

Clear, straight thinking is of the utmost importance at all times. It was never more important than it is today. Older people as well as younger people find themselves in the midst of a welter of conflicting ideas in almost every realm of thought and experience, political, economic, scientific, religious. Religion, in the thought of many people, is fast yielding to the attacks of the sophisticated. "Religion", it is claimed, "is after all nothing but the survival of ancient superstitions. Let in the full shining of the light of science and religion must go." And in the experience of many it is fast going!

Now, in the interests of fair play, to say nothing more, why should not intelligent people give due consideration to both sides of the case? Instead of accepting as established facts certain rationalistic and skeptical conclusions regarding religion, presented with bewildering variety and abundance, in popular fiction, magazine articles, academic journals and "the book of the month", why not make one's own investigation to see "whether these things be so"? Of course, independent, thorough-going, honest investigation does require time and effort, but it is always rewarding. There is the classical story of the two English young men, Lord Littleton and Mr. Cecil West who decided that they would write against Christianity, one taking the resurrection story as his theme, the other the conversion of Saul. Each would demolish the historicity of the ancient narrative, "proving" it to be purely legendary. Each carefully and honestly and impartially studied his theme, weighing argument against argument. As a result, each concluded that the New Testament narrative must surely be founded upon facts, but facts clearly beyond the reach of rationalistic explanation. And each became a staunch supporter of the very thing he set out to destroy.

A college or university that presents to its students in the main, but one type of philosophy, one side of the case only, but one line of approach to religion, whatever its name or fame is in no true sense a liberal institution. True liberality of thought must always mean a faithful and impartial consideration of the various points of view, in order that the student may intelligently and independently choose for himself what he holds to be the best philosophy and the best line of approach. An over-emphasis of the materialistic interpretation of the world, at the expense of the idealistic makes for dogmatism, not for true liberality of thought. Comparatively few students in our colleges and universities are aware that materialism is no longer held as an accepted interpretation of the universe. The new hypothesis of the true nature of matter has effectively shown the complete inadequacy of materialism. What is taking its place? Not yet idealism, but largely the new type of realism. And Neo-Realism, in its American interpretation, bears certain marked resemblances to Platonic idealism. in its doctrine of the subsistence of the ideal identities. Not many students are aware of this altogether significant shift that is taking place in the world of thought. Once materialism was in the ascendancy; now it is realism, a far better philosophy providing at least the possibility of the real existence of moral and spiritual values, for which materialism had no place at all. One day it will be idealism which provides the place of first importance for spiritual entities and the reality of spiritual experience.

It is surely of great importance that students investigate these things, become conversant with the trend of modern thought, refuse to accept the now discarded materialistic skepticism which could not endure for the simple reason that it was not true.

Let us therefore carefully note certain important trends in the thought of today which have a direct and important bearing upon religious belief.

I. The scientific thinking of today is far less dogmatic than it was a generation ago. Formerly it was claimed that mechanism could satisfactorily explain every fact in the universe, "from star-dust to consciousness". All, it was held, is subservient to the law of cause and effect. Ascertain the cause, and the effect is inevitable. Had one sufficient knowledge, every event, whether in lunar and solar eclipses or in the sequence of states of consciousness, would be absolutely predictable. Everything is solidly bound to every other thing in the unbreakable chain of the causal nexus! Human free will? Nothing but a myth! Consciousness itself? Nothing but the efflorescence of attenuated matter!

How strangely different is the saner thoughts of today! Consciousness represents the higher level in life's progressive unfolding, and is beyond the reach of that casual nexus which holds dominion in the lower levels of the material, phenomenal world. Furthermore, the hitherto undisputed sway of cause and effect in the lower level itself is seriously questioned by defenders of the new quantum theory, which defenders include many of the distinguished scientists of today.

And a better and more mature science is seriously questioning the evolutionary hypothesis as a satisfactory explanation of the advent of life, of conscious life and of the moral consciousness. For how can the non-material, the consciousness, be said to develop out of that which is material? How can life evolve from non-living matter? Such questions are seriously concerning the science of today. Therefore there has lately come into common use such expressions as Epigenesis, and the "emergent theory". There must be a something that is "added to" (so present-day science) the developing process. There is something that seems to "emerge", a something that was not inherent in lifeless matter. How account for this "added something"? Here science pauses for a satisfactory answer. The better thought of the day acknowledges that religion has the answer: "In the beginning God".

II. Every scientific theory that has proved to be of value rests solidly upon faith, faith in the undemonstrable. Young people are sometimes heard claiming that scientific conclusions are far more dependable than affirmations in religion, because science rests solidly upon exact, mathematical demonstration. And yet, when one carries his thought further and deeper, he discovers that science rests no more upon the demonstrable than does religion, that both alike rest solidly upon faith, for both alike rest upon certain ultimate, transcendent premises beyond the reach of empirical demonstration. When science speaks in terms of "light years" there is always the assumption that light travels uniformly throughout the universe at the rate of 186,-

First Impressions of New Young People's Camp

A long sought goal has been successfully attained with the location of the new Brethren young people's camp in the mountain fastnesses of the Juniata River in Pennsylvania.

Surrounded by rugged mountains and bordered by the placid waters of the beautiful Juniata River, a pine bordered peak rears itself like a small sentinel guarding the perfect beauties of nature. But this peak which seems small at first sight proves its fitness for a sentinel as one climbs through the Jack pines to the top and from the lookout views the landscape for miles around.

From this vantage point we look down over the hillside and see a row of seventeen small cabins backed up in a semicircle against a background of pines. To the right and at the end of the row is a larger cabin which is equipped for mess hall and indoor sports. By the side of the cabin is a tennis court and in front a ball field. Beyond the cabin and a little farther down is an abundance of clear cold spring water. And still farther down as a result of the spring water is that which makes this camp complete—a frog pond. Yes, you have guessed it. Back to nature is right. With deer in the mountain, birds in the trees, trout in the rushing mountain stream just back of the camp, and boating, swimming and fishing at the river circling the foot of the hill, it seems that the big problem will be to persuade the young people to break camp when the term is ended.

With a camp site like this granted us free it seems that the Lord has made his face to shine upon the Brethren young people of Pennsylvania and Southeastern District. Send in your name for the camp now and make your reservations early.

000 miles per second. But clearly this is a pure assumption, justifiable without doubt, nevertheless an assumption, and justifiable because of that transcendent, a priori premise in knowledge, the law of uniformity. By faith it is held uniformly prevails throughout the universe. Science rests solidly upon that faith, without it there could be no science at all. So also does science hold by faith to the existence of ether and ether waves, of protons and electrons, and builds its epoch-making discoveries upon that foundation.

So also in religion. Before any religious experience is possible, there is necessarily first of all the assumption, "God is". "He that cometh to God must believe that he is". So one begins with the undemonstrable, builds upon it. otherwise one shuts his life out of religious experience. It was a great word uttered by the mediæval theologian, Anselm, "I believe in order that I may know". Will one accept by faith the redemptive power in Christ crucified, commit his life to this Christ, fully, absolutely? Then for him Christ indeed becomes the Power unto salvation, not otherwise. Therefore throughout the New Testament we find the fundamental insistence upon faith. We believe, and thereby we are enabled to know.

JESUS REBUKES SELF-SEEKING

(Lesson for April 23)

Lesson Text: Mark 9:30-50; Golden Text: Romans 13:10

MONDAY

Jesus Rebukes Self-Seeking. Mark 9:33-37

The apostles of Christ were just men. We would say by nature they were just about like you and me. No better and no worse. They had all the human attributes that belong to you and to me. Sometimes they were generous and at other times they were selfish. Seeking what things might bring honor or power to them. There seemed to the apostles at the time of the events of this lesson a prospect of a "new deal" in government affairs. A new ruler seemed to be coming above the horizon. Now was their opportunity to seek an office of great importance in this new kingdom. How humiliated they must have felt when Jesus revealed that he knew what was uppermost in their minds and rebuked them for it.

TUESDAY

Jesus Condemns Intolerance. Mark 9:38-50

Is it not strange that we have such a strong desire to have others recognize our convictions and to accede to our wishes, while at the same time we are so very reluctant to recognize them or theirs? If people will not go our way we are prone to believe they are on the sure way to perdition. We are too inclined to believe our way or our belief is the only way or the only belief. We are inclined to be somewhat conceited and to brand all as heretics who do not agree with us.

Jesus rebuked his disciples for having developed this attitude toward others who "followed not us." Let us take this rebuke to ourselves, if we have acquired such a spirit.

WEDNESDAY

Self Denial for Others. 1 Corinthians 10: 23-33

The Apostle Paul learned that one can not hope to have every one else to take the same view of things, even of religion, that he may hold. And, furthermore he learned that while he might have deep-grounded convictions, another might have convictions equally sincere, and yet they would consider one another's welfare. Paul knew there were some things that he could do with no harm to himself, that, if he persisted in doing them, might work harm to some weaker brother.

What then should be his attitude in this matter? He frankly admits that, to a very large degree, he is his "brother's keeper," and in view of that fact he will exercise a little self denial and refrain from those things that might cause his brother to offend. What a splendid example for modern Christianity.

THURSDAY

Abraham's Unselfishness. Genesis 13:1-13

This is the story of Abram and Lot, familiar to every Sunday school scholar; but how foreign it seems to modern practices and modern life.

Abram must have known the selfish nature and disposition of Lot, but he yet was impelled to manifest the nobleness of his own nature, and the evidence of his own "good breeding" by giving way to Lot's own selfishness. His own nature was ennobled by his act, while the nature of Lot was degraded in a measure, and he was compelled to "pay the price" of his own selfishness, while the unselfishness of Abram brought to him a great blessing under the providence of God.

FRIDAY

The Unselfishness of Moses. Exodus 32:30-35

When Moses returned from the mountain bearing the two "tables of testimony", tables written by the finger of God, and found that during his absence the people had turned unto idols and had made them a golden calf which was to be their god, his heart was heavy. To him it seemed such a sin could be blotted out only by some great offering as a sacrifice. Who should it be? Should it be Aaron? A selfish man might think so; but not Moses. Moses was a great man, and great men are not selfish. So he asked that he might be blotted out of God's book of remembrance, if his people could not be forgiven on any other terms. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend."

SATURDAY

Jesus Our Example. John 14:1-15

Jesus was not self-seeking, he was not intolerant. He was willing to do more than to show the way to his father, he was to BE the way. "No one cometh unto the father, but by me." Though he had to "humble himself", even to the extent of dying on the cross, his unselfish aim was to be the "redemption" of all who would come to the father through him.

He took no glory to himself for, as he said, "the words that I say unto you I speak not from myself; but the Father abiding in me doeth his works."

SUNDAY

The Supreme Motive. 1 Corinthians 13:1-13

The greatest thing in the world is love. This 13th chapter of First Corinthians, from the first verse to the last, holds out love as the supreme motive in life. And while men may be moved to great deeds through the force of love, its greatest manifestation is found in the occasion that caused the writing of John 3:16.

Dear Christian Endeavorers:

Peru, Indiana, wants to report the doings of our Endeavor society.

We have a fine society with an enrollment of about thirty-five members and they are all of senior age.

The officers are: President, Orval Jones; Vice President, Homer Buckalew; Secretary, Ruth Cook; Assistant Secretary, Eulah Crech and Treasurer, Vivian Anderson.

Our meetings are very interesting. Each member answers roll call with a Bible verse. The program is arranged so that each member has a chance to lead and the program committee do their part in making it interesting to all.

We want to tell you about our observance of Christian Endeavor Week.

On the opening Sunday evening, the pastor, Rev. F. C. Vanator, preached an appropriate sermon to the young people.

On Thursday evening a party.

On Friday evening an entertainment. On this evening an offering was taken for the National C. E. work.

PAYING OUR DEBT

For Missionary Committees

By Helen E. Mead

Take Rom. 1:14 as motto of the committee. "I am debtor"—to Greeks, the wise, the polished of the earth, those who are surfeited with gospel privileges in Christian lands—and to barbarians, the heathen, the still unevangelized of the earth.

Three ways of paying that debt are by going, giving, and praying. Divide the committee into three groups, each group to take charge of one phase.

Hang a map of the world on the wall.

I. Going

1. To my next-door neighbor, personal evangelism.
2. To my church, service in Sunday school, choir, etc.
3. To missions, hospitals, street meetings.

4. To the uttermost parts of earth—

- a. Appeal for Life-work Recruits in society meetings.
- b. Uphold the Recruits of the society by encouraging preparation.

Doing all possible to keep them true to their call.

II. Giving

1. Money, at least as much to the foreign as to the home field, by

- a. Tithing.
- b. Self-denial.
- c. Special collections.
2. Missionary boxes.
3. Testaments, jellies, toys, etc., to hospitals.
4. Christmas treats to jails.

III. Praying

1. For souls members are trying to win.
2. For testimony that goes out in missions, hospitals, jails, street meetings.
3. For specific needs of specific missionaries.
4. For special needs of foreign lands, current happenings as revealed by correspondence with missionaries and by daily papers.—Selected.

Soon after Dege became a Christian he was seen coming home with some wood tied in the palm plant which according to the elder men is not to be pulled except during the dry season and if anyone pulls the same during the wet season he is supposed to die. This being an order of one of the gods, Dege, who had left the gods, did not see why he could not use the leaves of this plant during the rainy season. Dege, who had broken the law, was asked to sacrifice a large chicken to the god. He refused to sacrifice anything to the god. The god-man put the fear of death in Dege, but Dege still refused saying if he died God knew about it.

Ajanari recently made grass mats for the roofing of his house out of season. The head man of one of the god dances who is also the chief of the roofing season immediately sent word to Ajanari saying that he must offer a chicken to that certain god. Ajanari refused to offer anything to anyone except to the true God. The Pero non-Christian not abiding by these customs offer that which is demanded by the god-man and the matter is forgotten. Many people spoke angry words to Ajanari because he had refused meat to the god Danbon.

At another time Ajanari was seen pulling out some of his young guinea corn that was planted too thick and thus transplanting it. Immediately he was told to offer a goat but again Ajanari stood firm for the true God.

Bonu, the two-year-old son of Makama, was sick with malaria. Makama's wife, who has not left the pagan worship as her husband has, went with her son to a god-man who like all the Pero god-men is also a medicine man. The god-man after working his instruments declared the son was sick because his father, Makama, refused to bring food to the god house for his dead father. Bonu's mother was told by the god-man that as soon as Makama would bring food to his dead father the son would become well. Makama when told by his wife the decision of the god-man refused to offer anything. The son has recovered.

May these few incidents give you a glimpse of what it means to be a Christian amongst people who are bound by customs rooted in superstitious paganism—The Evangelical-Messenger.

SAFEGUARDING GOSPEL MUSIC

By Herbert G. Tovey, Chairman of the Music Faculty of California Christian College, Los Angeles, California

In this materialistic age with its many self-pleasing devices, the question arises, Is the Christian church bowing to the trend of the times and ceasing her vigilance in the realm of sacred music?

It is true that "catchy" melodies please the ear. It is an easy matter, therefore, for some music of this character, used in sacred connection, to pass unnoticed by listeners, carrying with it dangerous doctrine that robs Christ of his rightful place and makes God merely an idea moving through the mind of mankind. This can never be said of the true gospel hymn.

A lack of appreciation of the gospel hymn leads to a very real and prevalent danger. If this kind of hymn departs, there will go with it that direct appeal to the individual heart, which must issue in a definite act of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; and in its place will come the more general type of

Some Trials of a Christian in Pero Land

By Rev. A. J. Faust, Bambur, Nigeria, British West Africa

To some the world over it means a lot to be a Christian, while to others following the Master is a business that needs very little attention. Let me give you a picture of some of the evils over which a Christian man or woman in Pero land must be victorious.

Polygamy is the ordinary thing. Probably eight out of every ten married men have more than one wife, the majority having either two or three wives. Let alone polygamy being against the words of Christ, it has evil results which tend to demoralize and weaken any people. In Pero land there are only a very few women of marriageable age who have no husband. Now since polygamy is the custom of many African peoples it means that almost every woman whether a leper, an invalid, one who has lost the use of her eyes, or some other real handicap, is married and allowed to bear children. This custom from the start weakens and handicaps the next generation. This custom likewise produces many men who have no wives and immediately as a result of jealousy some marital relation is broken. Jealousy among the wives is very common, even to the extent that each wife has her own hut. In some cases the huts are built a distance apart to prevent quarrels. Nevertheless polygamy is the custom. Every Pero young man looks forward to the time when he shall have two or three wives. The more wives the bigger man he is in the eyes of his fellow tribesmen. Those in Pero land who are fully following the teachings of Jesus must be victorious in this matter of polygamy. It is a big thing for them but thank God that in him every one can have the victory.

Practically the whole life of the Peros is controlled by the god-man, who tells them when to begin planting the various crops, when it is time to begin pulling weeds out of the corn fields, when it is time for harvesting, when it is time for the various festivals and when the building of new houses and the making of the roofs is to begin. The god-man is the medicine man. The breaking of the laws of living as taught by the forefathers who supposedly had been taught by the gods means punishment, the punishment being in accord with the law or laws broken.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

*Is it nothing to you that a sinner must die
For want of the soul-winning Word?*

Can you turn a deaf ear to the heart-rending cry

*Of millions that never have heard
That wonderful story of pardon and peace,
With power to revive and renew?*

*How can you believe it and still be at ease?
Dear friend, is it nothing to you?*

*Is it nothing to you that the harvest is white
And is ready for reapers today?*

It will soon be too late with the oncoming night,

*Consider your fatal delay;
While the call unto service is urgent and clear,*

*And the workers today are so few,
As the call of the Saviour reaches your ear,
Dear friend, is it nothing to you?*

Is it nothing to you, as you hear from abroad

*How millions of heathen today
Are waiting to hear of the only true God,
Who taketh transgressions away?*

*If you have accepted the gift of God's love
And gladly his bidding would do,*

Can you turn a deaf ear to the call from above?

Dear friend, is it nothing to you?

Is it nothing to you that the soul-saving cause

*Is neglected by those who profess
To be saved by the blood shed on Calvary's Cross—*

*And by faith life eternal possess?
When you think of the many in darkness of sin,*

*Must you not to the Master be true?
When he calls you to serve him, lost sinners to win,*

*O, friend, is it nothing to you?
—C. K. Solberg in "The Lutheran."*

hymn, which some modern authorities are advocating. This latter kind sets forth Christ as a great Leader of youth, as a superior Teacher, and as the Father of mankind; it gives no help to the individual that is sold under sin and lost. In it, the simple evangelistic message is lacking, and the outstretched hand of willing faith finds no stable staff to grasp.

The great John Wesley roused the latent church to action through his dynamic hymns embodying evangelistic truth. Luther changed deeply prejudiced minds by his carols built around the theme of a personal faith in a personal Savior. Sankey brought the world to penitential ears through his tender songs of God's love for the sinner. Charles M. Alexander persisted in preaching salvation by means of his magnificent choirs and the gospel singing of his congregations. Is that kind of ministry to cease?

It is true that there are many so-called gospel songs in print that exhibit poor words and music, that were written and published by individuals who were ignorant of the common laws governing song writing. This fact should incite the church to greater care and should cause her to demand a creation of gospel music that is both pure and powerful.

It should be remembered that a hymn is not a gospel hymn unless it carries a definite evangelistic message—the message contained in John 3:16 and John 1:12 and 13. Such were the songs that the early Christians sang. Because the heart of man is just the same today as in those distant years, and the heart of God, unchanged, waits to make sons of God of all who will come to him by way of Calvary's cross, the message of the gospel hymn must still sound forth. The gospel hymn must abide.

vive in afternoon; Communion for our older members who find it impossible to attend at night will be served at 2:30; Communion at 6 P. M. The Easter Communion always taxes our space and ability to care for all who come.

We rejoice as we press into the battle for souls knowing that "Our God is able to deliver." Again we say, Brethren, pray for us as we pray for all of our churches in every place.

THIRD BRETHREN CHURCH'S REVIVAL Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

It is with a good deal of rejoicing we have been reading the reports in the Evangelist of wonderful evangelistic meetings held over the brotherhood. Especially we thank the Lord for the meetings held at Masontown, and at Uniontown, and more recently the meeting at Kittanning. We said, "If the Lord can do these things for these other churches, why not for the Third church of Philadelphia, also."

After much prayer an invitation was extended to Brother R. I. Humberd, Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, to come and hold a two weeks' meeting. Brother Humberd has not been well physically of late and he thought he might have to cancel the meeting, but at the last minute he decided to come, trusting fully in the Lord for the needed strength for the meeting.

We found Brother Humberd a true servant of the Lord. His Bible Chart lectures are excellent. From the first day until the last the church was well filled with people. In fact it was the best attended revival this church ever had from the very first service held Sunday morning, March 19th, people came forward. All together there were 49 in number, of which 3 were reconsecrations, the remaining 46 were those for the first time coming over on the Lord's side.

We feel this is a splendid number, especially knowing that souls are being saved almost every Sunday during the year. This is an evangelistic church as well as a missionary church.

Brother Humberd was a tireless worker and his efforts were blest of the Lord. He has made many new friends in this city of "Brotherly Love."

The work as a whole here is going forward in splendid shape. In a few months we no longer will be a church depending on the National Mission Board. We fully expect to become self-supporting. The people have a mind to work and this they do with the result the church is going forward rapidly.

After baptizing these who have come forward in this meeting our church roll will be well over 250. We only pray that God will have the right of way with the church as we grow larger, as he had when we were a small mission church.

Brethren, pray for us.

WM. A. STEFFLER, Pastor.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA

March 19 to April 2 I had the privilege of giving my Bible Chart lectures in the Third Brethren church of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, of which Brother Wm. Steffler is the pastor.

We might almost call this a supernatural meeting as, about a month before, it seemed that Satan had made a determined

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

Where the North and the South Meet

The work at Hagerstown goes forward in spite of bank closures, depressions, epidemics or bad weather. We learned long ago that the Grace of God is not drawn out of banks nor rises or falls according to prosperity and depressions, but is free to all that call upon his Holy Name. We realize how badly we stand in need of his Grace and we are trying to call upon him. He has never failed his people, even though we have failed him many, many times.

Several weeks ago the Adult Department of our Sunday school staged a contest between the women's classes and the men's Bible Class. It was to continue until Easter Sunday and was in the form of a race, through various cities where we have churches, to Long Beach, California. Each city was an objective and the losing side paid a penalty. The penalty consisted of information regarding the Brethren work at that place. In preparation for this a questionnaire was sent out to the pastors along the proposed route asking for the following: Name of Pastor; Population of city; The year church was organized; Membership; Sunday School enrollment; Average attendance last year; What they considered their best department. We want to thank the pastors for their hearty cooperation in furnishing us with this information. Our church here has benefited from having this information regarding our churches. We sometimes get the idea that we are alone in the great work, like Elijah of old. It has given direction and purpose as we pray for the work throughout the brotherhood. The weather man has not been the best to us as it has rained most of the Sundays since our contest started. The men are ahead now but whether they will be on Easter Sunday morning remains to be seen.

We are in the first week of a two weeks' Pre-Easter meeting. It is too early to predict what turn the meeting will take. However at the first invitation a fine young lady came forward to confess Christ as Lord. Brethren, pray for us here that we may be faithful in preaching the Word and that many souls may be saved for the glory of Christ. Minds are full of everything but the soul's need, it is almost impossible to attract them with spiritual things. These are perilous times through which we are passing. Dictators arising upon every hand—it is not so difficult to think of a world dictator. We can do as Israel is told to do in the terrible days that are to come upon them, we can lift up our heads for our redemption draweth nigh. On the other hand these are wonderful days to live and have a part in the proclamation of the Word of Truth.

We enjoyed the visit of Brother Yett and his helpful message, as well as his pictures. Brother Yett loves the Lord and is standing true to the Word of God. Our prayers go with him as he witnesses in other places.

While we have enjoyed blessings and victory in many ways it has not been free from sorrow. The shadows have fallen and faithful members have been called home. The passing of Dr. Tombaugh while not a surprise, was a shock to all. Brother Tombaugh had not been able to attend services for some two years, except the Communion but he never lost his keen interest in the affairs of the Church. Last week the shadow fell again and another of our beloved and faithful members passed over to be with her Lord. Miss Fannie Schindel, for many years a faithful and most liberal supporter of the church, ceased her earthly labors. The pastor was in charge of the services. Dr. Shively came to preach the service at Brother Tombaugh's funeral. He and Dr. Tombaugh had been friends for nearly a half century and we felt that, if he could possibly do so, he was the one man in the Brethren Church who could say the things that should be said. His message on that occasion was greatly appreciated, not only by Mrs. Tombaugh and daughter, Martha, but by the Hagerstown people.

Easter Sunday will be a big day with the Hagerstown Brethren. We start the day with a Sunrise prayer meeting; Breakfast at the church; a fellowship program until 9:30; Sunday school; Close our revival with the morning worship service; Baptismal ser-attack upon my health. However, with the prayers of my own people, with those of Brother Steffler and his people and also with Brother McClain's assurance of the prayers of the Seminary "boys," we went forth to the meeting.

These people are indeed fortunate in having secured such a shepherd as Brother Steffler, with his good wife, have proven themselves to be. Seldom do we find a man of such ability and consecration; and seldom do we find a pastor's wife so capable and so interested in the work over which the Holy Spirit has made her husband an overseer.

A few years ago this church was discouraged, but now it is one of the Lord's thriving industries. It has a continual revival; conversions and baptismal services are in the general order of business and the people have full confidence in their pastor.

The attendance was in charge of a different group each evening. The Sunday school, the W. M. S., the men's chorus and other groups, each strove to outdo the other in the attendance on their respective evenings.

The matter of getting people to church may not prove to be of much value, unless they have a desire to hear. Brother Steffler's people have the ground of their heart well prepared to receive the message and they gave the evangelist the best of sympathetic attention.

We found a fine group of young people, many of whom take advantage of their opportunity to attend the Bible Institutes and thus carry back and create in their own church, an atmosphere seldom equalled anywhere.

It is written that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of Judgment" (Matt. 12: 36). Words influence lives, and are a great source of blessing or cursing in another's life. This was well illustrated in the conversion of a young man, whose heart was touched a few evenings before, when, in the closing prayer, the pastor was led to pray that any unsaved might have no peace until they found it in our Lord Jesus Christ. This young man went home but could not sleep and later gave his heart to the Lord.

It is also written that a little child shall lead them, and children, who first gave their heart to the Lord were later made happy to see a father or mother take the same stand.

Any true pastor's heart might well rejoice to have his Sunday school in the hands of such a man as Brother Louis Kolb. We thank God that the sad spectacle of the Sunday school children being taught nature studies in place of the Bible, is not tolerated here.

Special music was provided each service, from an almost unlimited source of supply; piano, pipe organ, trumpets, stringed instruments, solos, duets, men's chorus, quartet and others.

We were glad for the presence of Brother Kimmell and his people one evening, and for the special music provided by his choir.

We would not forget to mention the fact that the controlling power behind the parsonage, is little Harriet Ann, who conducts her own services, provides her own singing and leads in her own prayers.

May the richest blessings of our Lord abide with this church and their pastor as they thus labor together, looking forward to that Blessed Hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.

R. I. HUMBERD.

GRATIS NOTES

The Gratis church has just come through a history-making meeting, with Brother Claud Studebaker in charge. The Gratis and Pittsburgh pastors planned an exchange of meetings last fall. The writer filled his part of the agreement during two weeks in November, and Brother Studebaker came to us for two weeks beginning March 27th.

They were two full, fruitful, happy weeks. The immediate result is: the Gratis church in all departments greatly revived, the entire community and sister churches greatly blessed, righteousness given more nearly its rightful place, and thirty-one having made the good confession. Most of this number have already been received into the church and others will follow soon.

We tried to have our house in order for these meetings. The entire congregation had looked forward often to the meetings, and had prayed much about them. A loyal choir was ready to do its full share every night. Peace and harmony prevailed among us. The pastor's sermons for preceding weeks were aimed toward a fuller preparation for the meetings. And so, we feel warranted in saying that our house was in order. I think Brother Studebaker will bear me out in this and if he had had to use any great part of this short meeting in lining up members of the church, we could not have accomplished in two short weeks the results gained.

Brother Studebaker measured up in every way to our expectations. He readily and easily won the hearts of the people of our church and the entire community. Needless to say, he made for himself scores more of friends in this part of Miami Valley through this meeting. Brother Studebaker is a strong, successful "Gospel salesman." His sermons are clear, sound, fearless, and persuasive. And in his personal interviews he manifests rare tact and sympathy. His methods throughout are sane, fair, and constructive. It was a great joy to me personally to have Brother Studebaker conduct this meeting. We will not soon forget him, his genial spirit, his tireless energy, or the meeting. A bigger, better day has dawned for the Gratis church and the entire community. And we join in praying that rich blessing may continue to attend the life and service of a man whom God has graciously endowed with the evangelistic spirit, instinct, and passion. We shall remember him as a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed." My dearly beloved brother, thank you again and again—and so say we all at Gratis.

WM. H. BEACHLER.

PHARR, TEXAS

To my brothers and sisters in Christ everywhere and especially to those in the churches of Berlin, Pennsylvania and Carleton, Nebraska, I send Christian love and greetings. It was at Berlin where I arrived on the scenes of action in this life and at Carleton where I grew to womanhood and gave my heart to Jesus Christ the Son of God. The thought came to me that you might be interested in the beginnings and progress of the church in the most southerly section of the U. S. A., so I will try to give you an account of our doings so far. In the fall of 1928, W. D. Keller and wife and son Paul, of Baltic, Ohio, came to the lower Rio Grande Valley to spend the winter. Having always been active in the ministry, naturally he was interested in finding folks of his own faith. G. A. Cassel and wife of Ashland, Ohio, are interested in the Valley and have spent a number of winters here, so the Kellers and Cassels spent days going up and down the Valley, looking for members and finally gave out the word to all interested to meet at the home of W. J. Eash, a half mile north of Alamo, April 7th, 1929. Some over fifty were present. Elder C. D. Fager and some twenty of his congregation of Falfurries, seventy-five miles north of us, came to spend the day with us and help us get started. We had a beautiful day and a glorious meeting. We took a basket dinner which was served cafeteria style. We all enjoyed the Christian fellowship and it was decided to have another meeting before the Kellers and Cassels returned to their Eastern homes, so April 21st, the second meeting was held in our home in Pharr. Mrs. Keller brought us the afternoon message. She drew a very vivid and impressive word picture of Moses and his meekness, picturing him as the accomplished and highly honored adopted son of the Egyptian king's daughter and the great temptation to selfish interests, putting it all aside to endure hardships with his own people. At this meeting it was decided to draw no lines in the two branches of the church, but be as one, with the hope that it would be united everywhere in the near future. Our next meeting was held at the home of Brother Stewart Lichty in Harlingen, the next at Brother H. M. Yoder's in San Benito, then back to Pharr again and so on, always meeting in some member's home.

Shortly after our third meeting a cloud enveloped our little band when Brother Stewart Lichty was called to the great beyond. His jovial and enthusiastic spirit was always an inspiration to all and his passing, October 2nd, 1929 was keenly felt.

During the past years we have had the pleasure of having in our services and as leaders, M. R. Zigler of Elgin, Illinois; Charles Yoder of Rio Cuarto, Argentina, South America; Mr. and Mrs. Beery of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania; the Byler family; Mr. and Mrs. Harshman of Pennsylvania; Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Eshleman of Kansas; Mr. and Mrs. Curtis of Kansas; Mr. and Mrs. Ira Walker of Berlin, Pennsylvania; Rev. Hoak and wife of Roanoke, Louisiana; Rev. Pitzer and wife of Oklahoma, and of course, always look forward to having Mr. and Mrs. Cassel every winter season.

Rev. Hoak comes from Louisiana once a month to guide us and bring us a message but for the past two meetings Rev. Pitzer has taken charge.

February 5 1933, a meeting was held and it was there decided to hold our first Love Feast. I wish I could convey a word picture of that glorious event. Nature seemed to smile upon us and give us a perfect day. About three o'clock in the afternoon of March 5th, we gathered at the home of Brother and Sister C. J. Hoffman near La Feria. After a short Sunday school session, Brother Pitzer brought us the message, then preparations were made for the communion and feast. Two long tables were set on the neatly arranged back porch, and places were set for thirty-five, seating communicants and children, Brother Pitzer who has so endeared himself to the hearts of all of us during his short stay, conducted the services with the assistance of Brothers Cassel and Yoder. Everything was very impressive, and never to be forgotten was our parting service. Brother Pitzer asked us to arise from the tables and join hands in an unbroken circle and sing "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," and then asked God's blessing and benediction upon us all. We returned to our homes, feeling God had indeed blessed us. To me it was a feast indeed, as it brought to memory scenes pleasant and sad as it has been twenty-one (shall I say long?—no short years for the Psalmist says, "A thousand years is but yesterday when it is past,") since I sat with my sisters in Christ around the communion table in Carleton, Nebraska. Oh, no! I don't mean to say I have forgotten God during all these years and I am sure he hasn't forsaken me.

Last week, Brother and Sister Wampler and their two daughters took their departure for their Virginia home. In about two weeks Brother and Sister Pitzer will leave for Oklahoma. Brother and Sister Replogel to Johnstown, Pennsylvania, father Eash to Kansas. Then next Brother and Sister Casel, which leaves a rather small band of us here, looking forward to the fall season to bring back some of our migratory friends.

We have witnessed a wonderful transformation in this country in the twenty-one years we have been here, growing from brush, cactus and wilderness to the children of Israel's promised land, from waste to a land of oranges, grapefruit, roses and mocking birds. No, it isn't heaven, for like everywhere else on earth it is inhabited by numerous evil and greedy humans. And many a family has lost all their worldly possessions by falling among land thieves. We have our discouraging features like everywhere else on earth, but think we have the greatest number of advantages of any place, and we love our Valley. We hope in time to dedicate a regular church home in our Valley and we cordially invite you to visit us, or better still, come and live among us.

MRS. E. J. KELSO.

WHY A DAY OF PRAYER FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

The history of foreign missions proves that the most important factor in effective missionary work is prayer. Men and women are needed for foreign missions, money is needed, but what is needed most of all is PRAYER.

We should pray very definitely for God's guidance upon the officers of our foreign missionary board. The problems that confront them are beyond the wisdom of any man to solve. Our secretary and treasurer need wisdom from above and that wisdom is given in prayer answers.

We need to pray very specifically for the men and women who have gone into the field. It is said that the very atmosphere there is taken possession of by "the prince of the power of the air." The burdens that the foreign missionary has to bear, and the conflicts that he has to endure would be beyond endurance if we did not believe in a God who answers prayer. But we have no right to leave the devoted men and women who have gone out to the foreign field to fight their battles alone. Realizing that their "wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual host of wickedness in the heavens," we should with all prayer and supplication pray at all seasons in the Spirit, and watch thereunto in all perseverance, that God would give to these men and women victory in their personal conflict, and power in their efforts to win men from the delusions of the false religions that eternally destroy the truth of the Gospel that eternally saves.

We should pray, too, very definitely for the converts on the foreign fields; for their deliverance from error and delusion and sin, and that they may become intelligent, well-balanced, strong and useful members of the body of Christ.

And how earnestly and believably we must pray that the Lord will raise up liberal and sacrificial givers at this Easter time that we may not need to retrench in our present missionary program.

ALMOST TOO LATE!

At the last minute, comes a request from Lester V. King of New Lebanon, Ohio, asking the interest and prayers of the Brethren for a revival there, beginning Sunday, April 16, under the leadership of Dr. Charles A. Bame. Percy Yett speaking twice the first Sunday, also.

was a full program of song, prayer, testimony and discussion, praying and stressing prayer all the way through. Every pastor had charge of a period of prayer and some other leaders in prayer and in missionary interest were enlisted to pray and consider the missionary problems with them. The day closed with an Illustrated Missionary Lecture with slides by Dr. Bauman. This "Day of Prayer" program may be a suggestion to other Brethren groups, though it comes a little late for general application this year.—Editor.)

DARE TO BE A DANIEL

By Sophie S. Meader, Member of Dr. Bauman's Church

(In honor of Dr. Louis S. Bauman's 20th year at the First Brethren church at Long Beach).

O, who will march with Jesus,
Earth's gilded sins lay bare,
The ribald song and laughter
Rebuke God's wrath, declare?
Who'll heaven's vengeance utter,
God's righteous laws proclaim,
The Devils' machinations
Defy, in Jesus' name?

Oh, who will be a Daniel,
A knight in armor bright,
To fight the foe undaunted,
And bring back truth and light?
Who'll fling the blood-bought lifeline
To men by sin oppressed;
And paint millennium's glory
To nations so distressed?

Television answers:—

A gate is pushed ajar,
And one steps forth like Daniel brave,
Who lived in lands afar.
From western coast he rises,
A seer with Book divine:
With face aflame he preaches law,
Yet grace and truth combine.

The church triumphant marches

Through troubled seas unstained,
Safe, guided by a Daniel
Who preaches truth unfeigned.
Spoilers of Christ's bride, the church,
Are put to open shame,
While sinners bound by Satan's chains
Are freed in Jesus' name.

Anthems of victory swelling

Are borne to heaven's throne,
In thanks to Christ the Savior,
For him who stands alone:
Who, as the darkness gathers,
Proclaims the way aright,
And leads victorious armies
From gloom to glorious light.
Long Beach, California.

THE USE OF A GENTLE ANSWER

Often a civil answer will save you from rudeness and insult. Even rough men are softened by a few sweet, gentle words of a child, just as I have read that a little boy was softened by the notes of a bird.

The boy was playing in the garden, when a little bird perched on the bough of an apple tree close at hand.

The boy looked at it for a moment, and then, obeying the promptings of his baser part, he picked up a stone that lay at his feet, and was preparing to throw it, steadying himself carefully to take a good aim. The little arm was reached backward without frightening the bird, and it was within an ace of destruction, when lo! its tiny throat swelled, and it shook out a flood of sweet notes.

Slowly the boy's arm dropped to his side, and the stone fell to the ground again, and when the little warbler had finished its merry piping it flew away unharmed.

A gentleman who had been watching the lad, then came to him and asked him, "Why didn't you stone the bird, my boy! You might have killed him and carried him home."

The little fellow looked up, with a face of half shame and half sorrow, as he answered, "I couldn't 'cos he sung so."

And civil words may sometimes save you from damage, just as its sweet song saved the bird.—Selected.

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT IS SOUND CHRISTIAN ETHICS

Much discussion has been employed to determine whether the Eighteenth Amendment is sound in its ethical principles. In trying to settle this some have appealed to the Bible from both sides of the controversy. Both sides appeal to Church authority and deliverances. Brushing aside most of the arguments pro and con here are a few considerations that may ultimately settle the question of the essential morality of this piece of restrictive legislation as far as Christians are concerned.

Christian morality is more than the ten commandments or the example of any Biblical character; it is more than the pithy proverbs of the Old Testament or the even profound sayings of Christ. It is all of these treated under the principle "the letter killeth but the spirit maketh alive" and reduced to a set of ethical principles. These were fashioned by the Apostles as a part of their task and have been employed by the church in pioneering and setting all new domains of ethic since.

These principles are five in number:

1. " whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." That means that every item of our conduct must reflect honor upon God our Father.
2. "Walk worthy of the high calling wherewith ye are called." Our conduct must carry in it a consistency with our positions as children of God.
3. "As ye have opportunity do good unto all." That is fundamental principle in every system of ethics worthy of the name.
4. "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." This means self sacrifice for the sake of doing good. This is the principle of the cross.
5. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Or in modern speech "Doubtful conduct is sinful."

In the broad moral problem of alcoholic liquors there are five questions that demand an answer:

1. Is it ever right to drink intoxicants as beverages?
2. Is it ever right to give, sell, make or share in the profits of any such transactions?
3. Is it ever right for the civil government to tolerate such traffic?
4. Is it right for the civil government to protect such an industry?
5. Is it right for the government to use such a traffic as a means of raising revenue?

Take each of the above questions and submit them to the test of the first four of these ethical principles of the New Testament. Is there any one today who can honestly affirm that he can drink intoxicants to the glory of God, or in so doing can preserve the self respect that should be the heritage of the children of God, or do good to all, himself included or imitate the self sacrifice of Christ by so doing? It is doubtful if any one such can be found. Can any one shape his conduct by these principles and engage in the traffic in any wise? We doubt it. Can the civil government shape its policies by these principles and either tolerate protect or use this traffic in any wise? No honest man will affirm that it can.

But suppose there should be any doubt at any point, apply the last principle concerning doubtful conduct and the act under any fair construction of the principle must be ruled out, until the rectitude of it is clearly established, and it will take more than the habits and precedents of an unscientific past or the dogmatism of the wets to establish that rectitude.

By every one of these principles the Eighteenth Amendment is revealed to be a correct expression of Christian morality on a national scale. It is therefore right and worthy of the hearty support of every honorable citizen.—Christian Statesman.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

OSCEOLA, INDIANA

On Monday, April 17 the Bethel Brethren church of Osceola will—the Lord permitting —hold its Spring Communion service at 7:00 P. M. We shall be glad to welcome visiting Brethren. FRANK GEHMAN.

ATTENTION, INDIANA' CHURCHES

Because the Indiana District Conference failed at last meeting to elect a district statistician, I am acting in that capacity. Report blanks have been forwarded to all churches in the district with two exceptions. If you have failed to receive your blanks, please let me know at once as it is urgent that these reports be both full and prompt. The two exceptions are the churches at Cambria and at Gravelton. No addresses are available for either of these places and it would be greatly appreciated if some one would forward to me the information as to whom to mail the blanks for either of the two churches. Let it be urged, also, that no church neglect the making of these reports. The little trouble required to fill out the blanks in no wise compares to the advantages of having a complete report.

FRANK GEHMAN.

IN THE SHADOW

NEHER—The Second Brethren Church of Los Angeles, California has lost a dear friend and one of her choicest flowers in the death of her recent home-coming of Elvira A. Neher, wife of Albert E. Neher. Scores of people gathered from all parts of Southern California, filling the large auditorium of the church she loved, so well to honor the memory of a wonderful life, lived in others because it was lived for God. The writer, her pastor, has not had a harder task or yet an easier one in officiating at the beautiful service. It was hard because of the keen sense of an unusually great loss, but easy in that there was the knowledge that none could take issue with the highest tribute paid to her Christian life and virtues.

Sister Neher was a deaconess in the Church of her choice for a period of 22 years and filled the Scriptural standards of that office in a way that is rarely equaled. She was indescribably loved by her husband and children who are unseparably impoverished by her departure, but who are marvellously sustained by the grace of God in the faith and hope which they carry with them.

Elvira Neher was born in North Manchester, Indiana, October 22, 1872, and died at the home of her daughter, Leila Polman, at South Gate, California, after several weeks of serious illness due to a blood clot near the heart, at the age of 60 years, 5 months and 4 days. Accepting the Lord as her Savior at the age of 17 years, she devoted all her life fully devoted him to the end. Besides her husband to whom she was married in the year 1900, she is survived by one son, Gerwin, one daughter, Leila Polman, and three grandchildren, all of California.

A large cortege of approximately 75 cars followed her body to the beautiful Greenwood cemetery where it was laid to rest, waiting for the sound of the trumpet which shall precede her great victory over death, through Christ, according to the Scriptures. A. D. CASEMAN.

BEYMER—Mrs. Mary Wilmer Beymer was born east of Ashland on February 12, 1864. She married John Beymer of Ashland in the year 1887. They were both members of the Park Street Brethren Church. To them were born four children of whom three are living: Mrs. Esther McQuate of Ashland, Mrs. T. J. Hoag of Nankin, and Mr. Eugene Beymer of Cleveland. A son, Arthur, preceded his father's death fourteen years, and her husband seventeen years. Mrs. Beymer is survived by two sisters: Mrs. Clara Diefendorf of Aberdeen, Washington, and Mrs. Emma Lindemann of Ashland; and one brother, M. C. Wilmer of Buffalo Park, Kansas. Mrs. Beymer is also survived by fourteen grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren.

Brief funeral services were held and the body was buried in the Ashland Cemetery. This ended a good life. Services by the undersigned. J. ALLEN MILLER.

SNYDER—Laura Catherine Snyder was born in Greencastle, Pennsylvania, and departed this life March 2, 1933, at the age of 22 years, 3 months and 4 days. During a long illness, accompanied by much suffering, she was patient and cheerful, always appreciative of those things which were done by loving hands for her comfort. Sister Snyder gave evidence of being sustained by divine grace. With an unshaken faith in Christ, she looked for deliverance from the body of suffering. She passed to the life beyond, resting on the promises of God.

She is survived by her parents, four brothers and one sister. Funeral services were conducted by her pastor from the Brethren church of Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, before a large audience of relatives and friends. May the blessed Lord comfort the bereaved. W. C. BENSHOFF.

HOOVER—John L. Hoover, son of Anthony and Catherine Hoover, North Chicago, Illinois, July 15, 1881, and departed this life March 13, 1933, at his home near Osceola, Ind. Indiana, at the age of 70 years, 7 months and 27 days. He was united in marriage to Clara M. Kelsey, March 25, 1896. This union was blessed with three children, two boys and one girl, the boys having preceded their mother to the glory world. He leaves to miss the pleasant life he lived with them his companion; one daughter, Dorothy at home; one brother, Jacob of Oklahoma; one half-brother William of Twelve Mile, Indiana, and his step-mother, Eliza Louise of Twelve Mile, Indiana.

He united with the Corinth Brethren church while Brother J. H. Swihart was serving the church as pastor in 1895.

We have known Brother Hoover for a number of years, having been his pastor at Corinth, for two years. We always found him a man of sterling qualities and loyal to his Lord. His was a finer home which it was our privilege to enjoy on many occasions. True Brethren hospitality always met us at his door. While we miss those who have gone on before, yet we sorrow not as those who have no hope, knowing they are with the Lord, as we are informed in First Thessalonians 4:13-17.

May the Lord of glory bless and comfort the bereaved family. Funeral service at Corinth Brethren church, by the writer, assisted by Rev. M. E. Spacht of Mexico, Indiana. W. F. JOHNSON.

ENDICOTT—Mrs. Sarah Alice Endicott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry and Marie Goble, was born near Quincy, Ill., on September 13, 1856 and departed this life at the home of her foster daughter, Mrs. Alice Shilling of near Deerfield, Ill., on March 10th, 1933, at the age of 77 years, 11 months and 4 days. Mrs. Endicott came to Bourbon Co., Kansas with her parents in 1876 where she has resided since.

She was married to Eamuel Endicott, his January 2nd, 1881. Her husband having preceded her in death about five years ago, she is survived by the two foster daughters: Mrs. Alice Shilling and Mrs. Mary Shilling, also a niece, Mrs. Emma Cullison and a nephew, W. C. Goble.

Mrs. Endicott was converted and united with the United Brethren Church in her girlhood, and in 1909 she united with the Cato Baptist church, of which she remained a faithful and devoted member until death. She was a loving mother, her family being all Brethren, and she was kind and of a beautiful Christian character.

Funeral by the writer, who was an old friend of the family for many years, from the Cato Baptist church on March 21st, 1933. A very large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors were in attendance to show their respect. Many beautiful floral offerings were sent to the church. The body was laid to rest beside her husband, in the family lot in Pleasant View cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

LAFOLETTE—Laura Kerns LaFollette was born Nov. 24, 1853, and departed this life Jan. 12, 1933, at the age of sixty-nine years, one month and nineteen days. She had been a resident of Warsaw for nearly forty years. She was a native of Kosciusko County, being born on a farm near Leesburg, a daughter of William C. and Sarah Kerns. On Oct. 11, 1894 she was united in marriage with Jefferson LaFollette, who preceded her in death Jan. 18, 1920. Since before her marriage she was a member of the First Brethren church of Warsaw. Surviving are two sisters, Mrs. Charles Brown, of Ashland, Ind., and Mrs. E. C. Gardner of Warsaw; a brother, H. C. Kerns of Abingdon, Ill., and a son, Robert of Warsaw. Funeral services were conducted by the undersigned at the home in Warsaw, Indiana, Jan. 15, 1933. L. E. LINDOWER.

KEPLINGER—Mrs. Anna Keplinger passed on to be with her Lord, Feb. 20, 1933, after many years of physical suffering. Several years ago, through an infection in one of her limbs, its removal was necessitated between the ankle and the hip. Together with this she had a severe case of strokes of paralysis, the last of which was the cause of her death. Through all these things her trust and patience was manifest to all. Her afflictions did not affect her joy in the Lord. She remained cheerful and trusting until death. Funeral services were conducted in the First Brethren church of Warsaw, of which she was a member, Feb. 22, by the pastor. L. E. LINDOWER.

OLINGER—John Olinger, aged 74, passed away Feb. 22, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ray Cook, at Birmingham, Mich. He had been ill with Bright's disease. Besides Mrs. Cook, Mr. Olinger left another daughter, Mrs. Earl Gard, of Pontiac, Mich., and several more distant relatives who reside in Kosciusko County. His wife expired several years ago in Warsaw. Services were held at the Bible Funeral Home in Warsaw, and at the Rose Hill church. Burial was made in the church cemetery. Services in charge of the undersigned. Mr. Olinger was a member of the First Brethren church of Warsaw. L. E. LINDOWER.

POWERS—David Clinton Powers, long-time resident of Warsaw, passed away March 1, at the age of about 61 years. His wife and one son survive. A step-daughter, Mrs. Betty Kiser, of Warsaw, and two granddaughters, Mrs. Jennie Jackson of Pierceton, and two brothers, Charles and James Powers, both of Warsaw, are also among the survivors. He had formerly been a member of the First Brethren church of Warsaw. Services were conducted from the Bible Funeral Home, Feb. 2, by L. E. LINDOWER.

HART—Hiram Hart was born in Knox County, Ohio, Dec. 9, 1844; departed this life March 14, 1933, at the age of eighty-eight years, five months and five days. He came to Kosciusko County at the age of five years with his parents, when this county was a vast wilderness of timber. He lived with his parents on the farm on which he died, until the year 1877, at which time he was united in marriage to Nettie Carter. To this union was born eight children—four sons and four daughters. Two daughters have preceded him in death. In his early life he united with the Brethren Church, and at his death was a member of the First Brethren church of Warsaw. Surviving are five widows, six grandchildren, one sister, twenty-five grandchildren, five great-grandchildren and a large number of friends. Another one of the Lord's redeemed has been promoted to his eternal Presence. Funeral services were conducted by the pastor in a country church about seven miles east of Warsaw, on the county Highway, March 16. L. E. LINDOWER.

The Blessedness of Giving

By E. B. Williams

Remember the word of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said, it is more blessed to give than to receive.—Acts 20:35.

A FEW DAYS after I entered my first pastorate, an old Scotch farmer was introduced to me as one of the deacons of my church. Being interested to know the kind of church officials I was to have, I inquired about this man. I was told that he had lived alone since the death of his wife two years before, that he paid one-fifth of the current expenses and missionary gifts of the local church, and that he had contributed generously to many religious and charitable enterprises outside his community.

After I met this good man, a laborer in a neighboring village, whose family depended on his wages for a livelihood, suffered a long illness. But the grocer and the landlord continued to be paid, and before long it leaked out that the old Scotch deacon was responsible for this. At another time a poor man's house with its contents was destroyed by fire, and the old Scotchman furnished beds and clothing for the stricken family. In this way he filled his days with generous deeds.

Yet some said that he was close-fisted. I did not understand this until, one day, he invited me to his unpretentious little house for dinner. To my great surprise, there was scarcely enough food to satisfy my hunger. But there was no apology—except that when he could sell eggs for more than two cents each, he did not eat them, because it was not profitable. After the meal, we sat on the veranda and chatted; and I learned that it had been the habit of his life to spend very little on himself. With singular impressiveness he talked about the virtues of simplicity and self-denial. Then, suddenly sitting erect, he said with a noble pride, "Because I have not spent much on myself, I have been able to give a big share to God and humanity." Then he sat gazing quietly out into the dusk, with the light of peace and joy on his face. And I recalled the words of the Master: "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it."

FIRST Fruits of Easter Offering

This is being written on Monday morning, the day after Easter. Preliminary reports from two churches, one in the west and one in the east, indicate that God is answering prayer in the matter of our annual foreign missionary offering.

The first report came in a telegram from the First church of Long Beach, California, yesterday afternoon, as follows: "FIVE THOUSAND TWO HUNDRED, NEARLY ALL CASH, THIS MORNING, WHILE TEARS FLOWED DOWN MANY CHEEKS. MORE TONIGHT. SURPASSED LAST YEAR. NO LARGE GIFTS. EVERYBODY STOOD BY."

The second report came this morning from the little church at Ankenytown, Ohio, through the pastor, Brother Ray Klingensmith, who is one of our Seminary students. These people nearly doubled their offering over last year, giving over one hundred dollars. And there is more to come. But best of all, THIS CHURCH IS STARTING NOW TO GET READY FOR A GREATER OFFERING NEXT YEAR!

If these first reports are any indication of what is being done throughout the brotherhood, then the work of Foreign Missions committed to us by the Risen Lord will not go back but forward.

The central message of the Empty Tomb was not STAY AND WORSHIP but GO AND TELL. (Matt. 27:9-10) Until we have learned that, we have not grasped the Easter message.

DARKNESS at the White House

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, first lady of the land, writes easily upon almost any subject. Her latest essay is an "Easter Message" written for a syndicated Sunday newspaper supplement.

"To me," says Mrs. Roosevelt, "religion has nothing to do with any specific creed or dogma."

In this one brief, clear sentence, Mrs. Roosevelt defines her notion of religion. It has, after all, one dogma; and that is its dogmatic pronouncement against dogma. As far as Christianity is concerned, Mrs. Roosevelt's article follows out inexorably the implications of her one fundamental dogma.

In her "Easter Message" there is no Incarnate God who came down to save men from their sins.

There is no Atonement for sin.

There is no Resurrection from the dead. If you wonder what Mrs. Roosevelt's religion has to offer in a positive way, we may list first a very shadowy and attenuated god—"some power greater than ourselves and beyond our understanding." Christ is mentioned once, rather apologetically, and his "life" is suggested as a worthy "standard" for those who happen to believe in it. But even this is not essential. If you happen to have been "brought up under other skies or in other creeds," or if the "object to be attained goes by some other name," it is all very well. "The thing which counts is the striving of the human soul to achieve spiritually the best that it is capable of."

Mrs. Roosevelt's religion is very well known to students of history and religion. It is not Christianity. It is nothing more than ATHENIAN PAGANISM, just as gloomy and morally impotent as it was when Paul met it on Mars Hill. (Read Acts 17:16-34 and note that Paul opposed it by preaching "JESUS AND THE RESURRECTION.") If Mrs. Roosevelt has nothing better than Athenian Paganism to offer the people of this country, she would do well to follow literally the counsel of First Corinthians 14:34.

Even the newspaper syndicate seemed to feel that there was something lacking in her "Easter Message," for the page upon which it appeared is decorated with the figure of an angel holding an Easter lily, and sitting presumably in front of a tomb.

Such an utterance, emanating from the White House, is a national catastrophe of the first degree. "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."

ANOTHER "Easter Message"

A few days ago handbills were personally delivered at the doors of homes all over the country, announcing that a person named J. F. Rutherford would speak over a large network of radio stations on "THE WAY OF ESCAPE." His address was scheduled for one hour on the evening of Easter Sunday.

Those who are informed know that all Mr. Rutherford has to say is nothing but a rehashed form of RUSSELLISM. The name of the late "Pastor" Russell is no longer featured, and his books are no longer headlined as once. Mr. "Judge" Rutherford is now the literary prophet of the movement, and he brooks no competitors. But in all its essential negations, the religion of both Russell and Rutherford is one and the same.

Both deny the Deity of Jesus Christ.

Both deny the Incarnation of God in Christ.

Both deny Christ's complete Atonement for sin.

Both deny the Resurrection of Christ's body.

The "Easter Message" of this cult is the most outrageous caricature ever offered to the world in the name of Christianity. Here it is in a direct quotation from Volume V. of Russell's series of books: "It was necessary, not only that the Man Christ should die, but just as necessary that the Man Christ Jesus should never live again, should remain dead . . . to all eternity." THE MAN JESUS IS DEAD — FOREVER DEAD." (Page 454)

This is the "Way" offered by Rutherfordism. It is not the "Way of Escape." It is A WAY OF DOOM.

PROGRESS of the World

Just 441 years ago Ferdinand and Isabella promulgated their infamous decree banishing all Jews from the kingdom of Spain. If, five years ago, someone would have predicted the repetition of a similar decree on the part of a modern European nation in 1933, he would have been regarded as an ignoramus wholly unworthy of serious attention. Yet the thing has come to pass.

In some respects, the action of Hitler is even more brutal than that of Ferdinand and Isabella. The editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer cites two differences.

First, under Ferdinand and Isabella, a Jew could recant his faith and remain in Spain a citizen with full rights. But under Hitler, a Christian with even one Jewish grandparent is placed under the government ban.

Second, in ancient Spain, when the Jew was placed under the ban, he was permitted and urged to leave for some other country. But Hitler, having placed the Jew under the ban, will not permit them to leave Germany. They must remain and suffer.

The world has slipped back a thousand years in this one respect. Men on every hand are denouncing Hitler, as they denounced Lenin when he rose to power in Russia. But if a statesman succeeds in establishing himself in power, the world soon forgets. In a few years, if Hitler stays at the head of Germany, men will be telling us what a great man he is, as they are doing in the case of the Bolshevik leaders. Nothing succeeds like success.

BUT GOD NEVER FORGETS HIS CHOSEN PEOPLE.

Of the Jew, God has declared that "The sons of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee: The City of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel." (Isa. 60:14)

The day of the Hitlers and the Ferdinands will end when Christ descends from heaven to convert and restore his ancient people. The true Christian will pray for the peace of Jerusalem, not only because the Jewish people gave us, humanly speaking, our Savior, but also because there will be no peace for the Gentile world until the Jew is restored to the place of priority among the nations.

And God The Son was also Man

A few weeks ago we wrote an editorial entitled, "Was and Is Jesus God?" which interrogatory theme required and received an affirmative answer. But that, of course, is not telling the whole truth about the person of Jesus Christ, and on the part of editors as well as teachers, it is important that the whole truth be presented, especially when dealing with such a vital question as to who Jesus was and is.

It is true, as stated in the previous editorial, Jesus was and is God. That does not mean that he was God the Father, as some confusedly think, because of the common custom to use the term "God" as referring to the Father only. But "God" very properly and correctly refers to all three persons of the God-head, so that we say not only God the Father, but also God the Son and God the Holy Spirit. Very definitely we are told by the sacred Scriptures, that the Word—the Personal Word, the Son—is God: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God" (John 1:1). And without equivocation we are told that he was the true God: "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life" (1 John 5:20). Again the inspired Word very definitely calls the Son God: "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom" (Heb. 1:8). There can be no doubt about the teaching of the Scripture at this point, Jesus was and is God from everlasting to everlasting.

But Jesus the Son of God was also the Son of man, the one and only perfect man. The teaching of the Scripture is as definite in regard to the humanity of Jesus as to his deity. And many of the self-same references that declare his deity also indicate his humanity. Following are some of the references bearing on the subject from various angles.

The humanity of Jesus was foretold in prophecy. He was to be human born, born of a virgin. "Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel"—God with us (Isa. 7:14). "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given" (Isa. 9:6). "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots; and the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him" (Isa. 11:1, 2). "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch" (Jer. 23:5). That the promised Messiah was predicted to be an offspring of Jesse and of David certainly points to his humanity.

Jesus was human in his coming into the world, thus fulfilling prophecy. "Now the birth of Jesus was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. 1:18). Luke (1:35) records the angel as speaking to Mary: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born in thee shall be called the Son of God." John declares that "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us" (John 1:14). Again we read: "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; . . . For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren" (Heb. 2:14, 16, 17). The humanity of the Lord Jesus could hardly be set forth in plainer terms, and yet it is also clear that he is vastly more than human.

Again it was evident that Jesus was truly human because he had a body that developed in a perfectly natural way and required the care that human bodies universally require. Dr. Luke informs us that "Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man" (Luke 2:52). That is normal physical development.

(And what a challenge to Christian youth the world over!) He became hungry as men everywhere do, for we read: "And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungered" (Matt. 4:2). And Mark (11:12) records that on one occasion "when they were come from Bethany, he hungered". Jesus became weary; when he and his disciples were making their way through Samaria and came to Jacob's well, it is recorded that he became "wearied with his journey" (John 4:6). And Jesus also was subject to pain and suffering, to affections and passions as it is the nature of man to be. When he entered Gethsemane he said to his disciples: "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death," and in a perfectly human mood he wanted the nearness and watchfulness of his friends while he prayed (Matt. 26:38). Luke says he was "in agony," that he "prayed more earnestly" and "his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground" (Luke 22:44). He is said to have "groaned in spirit and was troubled" and "wept," sharing the sorrow of the sisters at the death of their brother Lazarus (John 11:33, 35). He was human in his affection: "now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of his disciples whom Jesus loved," (John 13:23), that is, Jesus had felt a closer attachment for John than for the other disciples. How beautifully human! And we also read that "Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus" (John 11:5).

The completeness of Jesus' human nature is further shown by the fact that he was tempted. He was "led into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil" (Matt. 4:1), but he did not yield, as does our common humanity, rather he was gloriously victorious. We therefore thank God that "we have not an high priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, and yet without sin" (Heb. 4:15). And according to the Word, the purpose of his being "made like unto his brethren" "in all things" was "that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in all things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted" (Heb. 2:17, 18).

Truly Jesus was the Son of man as well as the Son of God, and as man is become our mediator, as Paul writes: "For there is one God and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. 2:5). And it is vitally important that Christian people shall everywhere give recognition to his true nature. John declares: "Hereby we know the spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God. And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God" (1 John 4:2, 3). If Christ was not man, he was not a historic person, but a myth or a creation of the imagination. But the place of Jesus is as definitely and firmly established as that of any other person in all the annals of time. That he lived and walked up and down Palestine and accomplished a marvelous ministry no intelligent person can deny. And if he lived, he was what sacred history claims him to be, the ideal man. On the other hand, he was also the incarnate God. If he was not God, then we are idolaters when we worship him, and God the Father denies himself by requiring worship of one who is not God, for he has declared that "all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him" (John 5:23). Truly he who existed as man, knew himself also to be God, and so will continue to be through the eternities.

The more speedy this age becomes the more certainly it needs to be directed by accuracy, and to be accurate men must be sober, which they will not be if the saloons are returned.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Last week we had a report from Dr. W. H. Beachler concerning the evangelistic campaign conducted in his church at Gratis, Ohio, with Brother Claud Studebaker of Pittsburgh as the preacher. This week Brother Studebaker writes about the meetings from the standpoint of the evangelist. It is apparent that these two able pastors made a good team, God blessed their efforts at both points in the exchange and the experience was mutually enjoyable. One of the fine things about such meetings aside from the number of souls saved, is the building up of a fuller understanding and a richer fellowship among the ministers, as was the case in this instance. The Beachlers (for Dr. Beachler has some most excellent assistants in his household) have been preparing well the ground and sowing the good seed from which they have now reaped a harvest that promises a larger future for the Gratis church. Concerning the work at Pittsburgh, Brother Studebaker says the year was closed with finances in good shape, made so by the sacrificing and cooperating spirit of the members in the face of much unemployment. Several new members have been received into the church since his last report and others are expected to have been received on Easter Sunday.

Brother Dyoil Belote, pastor of the First Brethren church of Ashland, Ohio, received into the membership of the church six persons with the laying-on-of-hands at the Easter Sunday morning services. They had all been baptized on the Saturday preceding. In addition to the well-attended merged service at the regular morning hour, when the pastor brought an interesting message to the children as well as his regular sermon to the adults, a very inspiring early morning Easter service was held at 6:30 when Dr. E. E. Jacobs, president of Ashland College, delivered a helpful and thought-provoking address on "The Rejuvenating Power of Easter."

Under the direction of the Ashland Ministerial Association the churches of Ashland conducted union Good Friday services in sacred memory of the death of Christ on the cross and Prof. Alva J. McClain, Associate Dean of Ashland Seminary, brought an instructive and reassuring message on "The Cross of Christ in Christian Experience."

Our readers will be glad to hear from Dr. Florence N. Gribble concerning the work and health of our missionaries in Africa. There were several cases of sickness among our missionaries, but God raised them up. One of the things with which we were happily impressed in this letter, as has also come to us from other letters, is that beautiful spirit that shows itself in such fine fellowship, mutual helpfulness and service. There may be perfectly good reasons why that spirit should be more in evidence among a group of missionaries on the foreign field than in church circles in the home land, but we cannot help feeling that it might well be given greater prominence at home than it receives, and that if it were, it would redound greatly to the empowering and enriching of the church. It will be noticed that most of our missionaries are specialists along some particular line of service, for example, some in healing, some in teaching, some in building and some in other lines, but they are all evangelists, telling the "good news" and directing souls into the knowledge of the grace of God. We may be sharers with them in that noble work by our prayers and contributions.

From Dr. K. M. Monroe we learn that five new books have been added to the Ohio Ministerial Library and are now ready to be issued on call. Following are the names and authors of the books: "The Bible Confirmed by Science," by Bell Dawson; "Some Minor Characters in the New Testament," by A. T. Robertson; "The Ministry of the Word," by Morgan; "Seeing the Future," by Christabel Pankhurst; "With Christ after the Lost," by Scarborough.

The first reports of the Easter offering for Foreign Missions are most encouraging, as you will note from a reading of Prof. A. J. McClain's department. The Long Beach First church gave $5,000 in cash at the Sunday morning service, and more was to be received at the evening service. It is evident that Dr. Bauman and his people are not letting the loss they suffered through the earthquake hinder their giving to missions. Then the church at Ankenytown, Ohio, where Brother Ray Klingensmith is the aggressive pastor, reports that it doubled the offering of last year. We are also informed that the Fairhaven church, also near Ashland and shepherded by Brother Raymond Gingrich, greatly increased their offering this year.

The Economy Lesson We Have Not Learned

We are hearing a great deal about economy in government circles these days, and it is well that we are, for there has long been much need of it. But we have not begun to learn the lesson where it is most needed. The recent Akron disaster gives occasion for our thoughts along this line. One of our esteemed contemporary publications, The Presbyterian Advance, calls it "A Sacrifice to the War God." And he is right. Along with the immense property loss involved in the destruction of this giant of the air went the immeasurably greater loss of seventy-three brave and skilled men. No one knows just why that great ship, that was supposed to be lightning proof and filled with non-inflammable helium gas, should have gone down so suddenly. It was more thoroughly equipped with safety devices than any other craft that ever sailed the air, yet it seems to have made not even a brave effort to withstand the storm. The government is investigating the disaster, with the hope of learning the cause of the wreck and being able to avoid a recurrence of such a fate.

But the big lesson that ought to have stood out big, we have not yet begun to grasp, apparently, at least not in official circles. Military leaders plan to go on spending as extravagantly and as wastefully as ever. It ought to have occurred to them that such extravagance is wholly unjustifiable in times like these, when a crust of bread is a prize in many localities. There are all sorts of slashings of salaries and cuttings of appropriations; great experts are working themselves dizzy in efforts to find some new place or source of economizing. The pity is that they have scarcely begun to notice the one really big item of governmental waste, the one place where we might economize in the biggest figures, namely, in the building of naval equipment. In the face of the almost incalculable waste resulting from "the cracked sternposts of the latest cruisers, the wasted extravagance of air-craft carriers, and the series of disasters to costly dirigibles", the big navy advocates are asking for a quarter-billion dollar outlay for naval expansion. They are determined, whether the millions of poor eat or not, to build the navy up to the limit allowed by the London Treaty. "The chairman of the naval affairs committee of the House announces that he has the support of the speaker, the majority leader, and other administration leaders for a bill, drawn by the navy department, which he plans to introduce. The bill provides for the building of 27 warships of various classes. It is admitted that such naval building on the part of the United States would probably lead to a similar building by other nations, but the whole provocative process is defended as a means of lessening unemployment. Attempting to deal with unemployment by plunging into naval building is about as sensible as would be an attempt to improve medical standards by loading the water supply with typhoid germs," says Dr. C. C. Morrison in Christian Century. Here is the place to begin economizing where it will really count, but we have not yet learned how to do it.

Not only have we not learned to economize in our preparation for war, but we have not learned to place human life above sacrifices to the god of war. We are making scarcely any real effort to break with the old pagan ideals and attachments. The Advance says: "We lost with the Akron the best of our officers and personnel for the handling of such craft. The nation may forget its financial loss in its sorrow for the loss of so many brave and capable men and the heavy bereavement of their families and friends. President Roosevelt does not manifest any particular originality in his comment on the behavior of the doomed men, saying of them: 'They have gone down with their ship. They have added another inspiration to our people.' There is no doubt that the men faced death with courage, but they had no chance to do otherwise than to go down with the ship. They were as helpless to do anything as a trap-full of mice thrown into the sea. War demands heavy sacrifices even in times of peace. It is high time the world learned a better way." And may God give America the courage and conscience to exercise her great opportunity for leadership in the direction of that better way.

Church Music and the Great Hymns of the Church

By Robert E. Kline, Organist at National Cash Register and the Dayton Brethren Church

III—THE ORGAN

(Church Music in the Modern church has to do with a great deal more than voice music. The Organ has come to have a large place in the program and equipment of many of our congregations. It is therefore a real service to the church that Brother Kline has made the Organ the subject of one of his splendid articles.—Editor.)

When Pan joined reeds of different lengths and so invented the flute which bears his name, he was, in reality, creating an organ. It needed only to add to this flute a Keyboard and bellows to make one of those pretty instruments the first painters used to put in the hands of angels. As it developed and became the grandest of the instruments, the organ, with its depth of tone modified and increased tenfold by the resonance of the great cathedrals, took on its religious character.

The organ is more than a single instrument. It is an orchestra, a collection of the pipes of Pan of every size, from those as small as a child's playthings to those as gigantic as the columns of a temple. Each one corresponds to what is termed an organ stop. The number is unlimited. The compass of the organ far surpasses that of all the instruments of the orchestra. The violin notes alone reach the same height, but with little carrying power. As for the lower tones, there is no competitor of the thirty-two foot pipes, which go two octaves below the violincello's low C. Between the pianissimo which almost reaches the limit where sound ceases and silence begins, down to a range of formidable and terrifying power, every degree of intensity can be obtained from this magical instrument. There are flute stops of various kinds; tonal stops that approximate the timbre of stringed instruments; stops which serve to imitate the instruments of the orchestra, such as the trumpet, clarinet, oboe and bassoon. There are celestial voices of several kinds, produced by combinations of two simultaneous stops which are not tuned in perfect unison. Also the Vox Humana which is alluring even though it is tremulous and nasal.

Add to all this the continual breathing of the monster's lungs which gives the sounds an incomparable an imitable steadiness.

The organ is a collection of an indefinite number of instruments.

No two organs are precisely alike.

The Organ is a Temple of Love inspiring reverence and Worship.

Thomas Brattle of Boston had imported an organ from England and had it installed in his home, May 29, 1711. Two years later this same organ was bequeathed to King's Chapel, Boston, and this marked the introduction of organs into the churches of America.

It is well known that organ music long was frowned upon by our Puritan fathers, as a device of unholy origin and when Thomas Brattle presented the above organ to King's Chapel in Boston, there must have been much doubt and shaking of heads, for it remained seven months unpacked on the church porch before it was finally agreed to install it inside the place of worship. Brattleboro, Vermont, was named for Thomas Brattle. The Organ in the First Brethren church in Dayton was made by Estey in Brattleboro, Vermont. Recently I had the pleasure of visiting this quaint old New England City. It is ideally situated as the home for this great Instrument.

America has produced some of the greatest Organs in the world, a number of which are widely known. The instrument in the Mormon Tabernacle at Salt Lake City has long had a reputation, not only on account of its size, but because of the part it has played along educational lines.

Another one of educational value is in Carnegie Hall, Pittsburgh, where the late Frederick Archer inaugurated Sunday free recitals, the average attendance being twenty-five hundred.

The organ has played an important part in the spiritual, educational, and social life of the community.

The Organ is a Temple of Tone, inspiring reverence and worship. Emory J. Haynes pays a great tribute to the Organ in the following words, "It is the only instrument that is able wholly to take in man's entire person. Doubtless the universe is but an Organ, the stars and sun the keys, humanity the player of the New Song Eternal."

Johann Sebastian Bach, one of the greatest organists of all time.

The Work of Evangelism Today, Is It Reaching the People?

By N. W. Jennings

(Concluded from last week)

Congregations Spoil Pastors

Congregations sometimes spoil their pastors by saying after a great ingathering of souls and the evangelist is gone, "Why, our pastor could have done this just as easy as the evangelist, and the church could have saved that money." That is a mistake, he could not have done the reaping of those souls, his work with his people was to sow the seed. The same instrument that does the sowing never does the reaping, the drill sows, the binder reaps, the drill murmurs not against the binder, neither does the binder interfere with the work of the drill. If they have ever been jealous of each other they kept it to themselves, they were too big to tell it. As to the money the evangelist gets comes from both within and without the church, outsiders share in this part of the work, and the numbers and strength added to the church is worth more than what the evangelist costs. Anyway, who can put a price on an immortal soul?

Evangelism, Hope of the Church

I believe evangelism is the hope of the church! It always has been, and if we are to judge the future by the past, it always will be. In my little experience and travels, and I have traveled from the Atlantic to the Pacific, I have seen personal evangelism tested and have found it a splendid success. I have seen consecrated men and women of all walks, vocations and callings in life winning souls for Christ. None are too hopeless to be saved, if each and every man and woman in the church will do their part; even those far away from God, helpless and in despair, can be lifted into his white life of love.

God wants each one of us to work for him. He needs each one of us, but above all things we need God and his Son. If we break step with him and quit the work, God always has a man to take our place. We will be the loser. God can get along without us, the church can get along without us, the world can get along without us, but if our lives are surrendered to him, God, the church and the world can get along better with us. Don't forget there was a Joshua like a new rising sun when the great emancipator Moses went down like a setting sun. And all through the ages this has been true. When we are gone the work of God will still go on. Our work may be piling up on us, after a while we may wake up to see a world piled up in front of us, then we may cry, "Oh, my God, when will I ever get all this work done?"

An old man coming to Jesus in a meeting we held years ago, was past eighty years old. When he stepped out for his Master, he said to me, "If I only could call back and live my wasted live over, I would give the world, were it in my power." Let us be faithful in warning the youth to seek first the Kingdom.

The Future Hope of Evangelism

Let us think about the revival at Pentecost. Someone has given this picture: "The message was a prepared message. The messenger was prepared. The church was prepared, and the blessed Holy Ghost prepared three thousand souls to receive that God given message." Brethren, that was first century, modern evangelism. It won out then, it will win out now. They paid a price, the hundred and twenty paid the price, not silver and gold, the price was a ten days and night prayer meeting. Now if we were to hold a five hour prayer meeting, some of the people would think that we had committed the unpardonable sin. Hold a two hour prayer meeting, and see a graveyard face come on some of the people, perhaps on the face of a deacon. "Tarry, tarry, tarry." Will we do it for the sake of Jesus and for the salvation of souls?

We cannot have revivals on account of the depression, is the cry today in the churches. It is a delusion of the Devil. When the church ceases evangelism, she will nail herself up in a casket, and I fear it will be made by the Devil. Every Holy Ghost revival will pay for itself, and the church will never be the poorer but the richer from every standpoint. Try it, try it and see. May God give his church the heart throb of Calvary for the salvation of lost souls in these days. Soul winning is the biggest business in the world. Face this picture: What would you take for the soul of your boy or your girl? God paid a great price for the salvation of our souls. He gave his Son to die on Calvary. He poured out his life's blood to redeem us.

Evangelism in the Home

To my mind is one of the brightest hopes of evangelism is right in the home, and yet this golden opportunity is many times neglected. Wealing with aWDRLLHU;cFwH many times neglected. Dealing with a fine boy about his soul's salvation, he said to me, "I will have to ask my mother and my father if I may confess Jesus and give him my heart" as if to say, "they have never asked me to seek Jesus."

I grant you it is not always pleasant dealing with souls in the home. A good pastor in the State of Ohio asked me to go with him to a certain home to pray for the family. I said, "Surely, I will." When we reached the home the lady said, "you need not come in, I don't want your prayers." We kept on pressing our way until we were in the house. I said, "I am going to pray for you any way," so we fell down upon our knees and prayed, the lady sat upright. After the prayer we said, "God bless you and bring you to Jesus." She became angry and said she would never go to church again. She stayed away for a long time, but one day the blessed Holy Spirit convicted her of her sins. She went to church, confessed her sins and gave her heart to Jesus, asked the pastor to forgive her for the way she treated us, and asked the pastor to write to me and tell me that she was so sorry that she acted so ugly and so unkind. It pays to hold on. I hope to see that soul, that mother, in the land of an unsetting sun.

Cornelius paid the price, fasting and praying for four days and nights, but he had the joy of seeing all his household saved. We need the passion of love. To win souls we must have an undying passion of love begotten in answer to prayer. Moses was so in love with his work and people that it led him to pray when God was about ready to cut off the people in their sins and blot their names out of his book. Moses the man of God said, "I pray thee, blot out my name also." What love!

"Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth and one convert him: Let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

Closing. This story told by Mr. Moody, has been a help to me. The story is about a discouraged pastor, tired and worn in brain and body, and he wanted to die and go home to God. He had a dream and in it he went to heaven, an angel led him to the battlements of that city and told him to look down upon the earth. "What do you see?" asked the angel. "I see souls going through the gaping gates of hell to be forever lost, to be cast into a lake of fire." "Will you stay here?" asked the angel, "or will you go and preach the glorious Gospel of salvation to them?" He said, "I will go." He awoke and said, "I am willing to wear out for Jesus and for the salvation of lost souls."

Brethren, we have a big job, the world is before us. "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel and lo, I am with you." We don't want anything better than that, for if Jesus is with us on this restless changing sea of life, all power is with us, all heaven is with us. "Lo, I am with you."

New Light on Old Things--Part II

By Dr. K. M. Monroe, Professor of Hebrew and Archeology in Ashland Seminary

Solomon's Stables

For some years the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago has been carrying on excavation work at Megiddo, located on the south side of the Vale of Esdraelon. This place, called today Tell el-Mutesellim by the Arabs, guarded one of the four passes used by armies marching from Egypt to Syria in Old Testament days. King Josiah was killed there (II Kings 23:29) when he endeavored to preclude Necho, the Egyptian ruler, passing through his land to reach the north, to do battle with the Babylonians.

Dr. P. L. O. Guy, who has been in charge of the Megiddo excavations since 1927, made one of the most remarkable finds related to the period of King Solomon. In 1928-29 he brought to light well-built stone stables for some three hundred horses and plenty of space for chariots and grooms. Hewn stone was used in the construction of these stables. "Double doors hung on small stone sockets gave access from the street to a passage with fine lime-plaster pavement, and this to the rows of stalls paved with rough stone to keep the hoofs from slipping. The roofs were upheld by pillars set on large stones to equalize the downward thrust and with holes in the corners to halter the horses, while between each pair of hitching pillars was a stone manger. The largest stable consisted of five units with space for twenty-four horses each, while smaller stables brought the number of horses which could be accommodated in Megiddo up to three hundred."

Similar stables have been unearthed at Beisan, just south of Lake Galilee, and Ta'anak, not far east of Megiddo, and several other places in the land. No longer can anyone question the number of Solomon's stables made necessary by I Kings 9:15-19 and 10:26-29.

King Saul's Capitol

It is well known to Bible students that King Saul never ruled in Jerusalem for the city was not taken from the Jebusites until David's time (II Sam. 5:6-9).

Tell el-Ful, the site of Gibeah, of Benjamin, was the home and capitol of Israel's first king. Excavations there, by Dr. W. F. Albright, occupant of the Old Testament chair at the Johns Hopkins University and head of the American School of Archaeology at Jerusalem, have revealed some interesting things. Gibeah was occupied by Israelites shortly after they entered the land under Joshua. The first stratum, representing the civilization of the days of the Judges, indicated it had been burned as described in Judges 20:40. "This confirmation of the Biblical narrative is particularly interesting, since the historicity of the story in question has often been doubted," writes Dr. Albright.

Can the Modern Church Recover Conversion?

By Arthur G. Carroll

Acts 4:12

(Dr. Carroll, says the Methodist-Protestant-Recorder, who previously published his words, is a distinguished Methodist minister of New York State. His faith in the necessity of conversion is reassuring.—Editor).

Any discussion of the subject: "Can the modern Church recover conversion" compels us to intelligently and honestly look at and reckon with the world in which the Church of our Lord is appointed to labor.

One of the first problems is international in its scope, and international relations are more perplexing than at any time during the history of man. The late war and resulting complications, the almost complete eradication of space by means of communication and rapid transit has set us to rubbing elbows until no nation is free to do as it wishes because of the effect on all other nations. We are all one family insofar as relationship one to the other is concerned.

At home we are in a state of mental perplexity, characterized by a "mood of defeatism" and a "paralyzing adaptation to environment," all growing out of our great moral and social problems of present economic conditions, political graft, moral laxness in society, and an apparent lack of a positive note from religious leaders in relation to these social evils. In the midst of all this confusion, the Church stands today with a responsibility and opportunity that is mighty and difficult. The question we raise is—is the church equal to this task? to which we reply—only as she again has the fire of a Holy love burning in the hearts of her members. In other words she needs to recapture and preach the need of a "new birth."

I believe that the Church must recover conversion for this age because men are in especial and specific need of a criterion for moral judgment and action. As a certain religious writer has expressed it, "This world presents a picture of a great football game with all rules suspended, and the referee chased off the field." There you have it; rules suspended for moral judgment and action, resulting in lawlessness, gangster rule in the cities, graft, crime, and corruption. Immorality stalks openly, brazenly, and unafraid up and down our streets because there is not sufficient public disapproval to either defeat it or send it to cover. The need lies in some moral authority asserting itself. Our hope lies in the direction of a changed mind and heart, because the beginning of sin and its responsibility for it is in the will of man and the corruption of his moral nature. In the face of this need the Church must recover conversion, bringing about a change of mind and heart in man, and there is no other name except the name of Jesus whereby it shall be realized.

In the second place, I believe that the Church must recover conversion because its work in the world is specific and unique in this sense,—it is not in the world as a competitor, or merely to aid people, or to offer some entertainment and instruction alone; its chief aim and purpose is to create new life, not to make a new social order but a new man. Only thus can we hope or expect social reforms that are enduring when a new social character has been made; all other movements in that direction are temporary. It is the business of the Church to produce this new life, and the testimony of history and personal experience show us that this new creature can only come through the experience of conversion. To keep her place in its specific and unique sense the modern Church must recover conversion; there is no other excuse for her existence.

Finally, the matter of the recovery of conversion is not a matter of "can," but "must." In this I am not contending for a form but for a content of life. To quote a prominent religious leader, "any declaration of Christ's divinity made with our lips must prove itself in our lives." Modern psychology and modern theology are in a great measure responsible for our "mind set" today. Modern psychology holds that sin and salvation are obsolete terms and that right and wrong are only relative. Whatever they may think or say about sin does not change its nature or alter its result. Murder in the time of Cain is still murder in the twentieth century with all its evil and horror. Man still needs a mighty Savior from the great power of sin. Modern theology claims that there is no devil, no hell, no judgment, but regardless of the change of terminology men continue to be devilish, to create for themselves a hell, and our life's record must be faced and reckoned with because it is ours. We made it; no man can escape his record. Judgment follows swift and sure upon his heels. The Church, in the recovery of conversion, will change this false notion regarding sin, salvation, and the hereafter, bringing back two great pillars of strength and joy of the early Church,—that through the experience of conversion the people of that time could say, "we have in the name of Christ achieved victory over the adversary of our souls and can read our titles clear to mansions in the skies." I believe that the modern Church, faced with a task so perplexing and difficult, must recover this new life, and that it can only be realized in the name of Jesus Christ, divine Son of our Father.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

DESTRUCTIVE CRITICISM HAS ITS PERFECT WORK

Those higher critics who spent so much of their efforts in the destruction of belief in the Old Testament historical records may not have intended to bring such a people as the Germans to the exaltation of Thor and Odin as modern tribal ideals. Nevertheless when Chancellor Hitler recently announced an intention to tear the Old Testament out of the Bible and replace it with the German mythology he was but following the work of the destructive critics quite naturally. Those critics had made the German university graduates understand that the Old Testament history is folklore. Mr. Hitler thinks Aryan folklore is preferable to Semitic folklore. And from the racial standpoint he is quite logical.

Most of these critics are liberals in social affairs. They do not seek to bolster up militarism. It must surprise them indeed that their work should thus eventuate in aid for the saber-rattling Hitler, especially as they observe that he proposed to regiment the whole church of Germany into a State church designed to be but an adjunct of the dictator.

There is, however, nothing to create surprise. These modernists have done away with the idea of unique revelation from God. They have made people believe themselves but the result of an evolution, so that we are all but sublimated beasts. They have conceived of all religion as an evolution and of all progress as the result of struggle. Why should Herr Hitler not put the emphasis upon the fighter and junk the traditions of the evolution of Jewish religion for the traditions of the evolution of the sort of Huns he wants the modern Germans to be.

The simple fact of the matter is that whether or not he intends to do so, the modernist destroys the sanctions that come from divine revelation, and it is not at all strange that, with those sanctions gone, the university graduate is a criminal and the nation militaristic.—Christian Standard.

A JIG-SAW PUZZLE AGE

We make no case against the jig-saw puzzle. It provides a harmless pastime, and may divert the thoughts from cares and worries. But the jig-saw puzzle itself is a fitting symbol of the age in which we are living. Things are topsy turvy. Industry and politics are chaotic. Moral ideals are mixed up with economic wreckage. Outstanding features of our government are bombast, balderdash, and propaganda. Ideals are scrapped and fundamental principles are trampled into the mire, or sold for a mess of pottage. We need wisdom to place the different parts where they belong and to arrange them into a harmonious whole. Some who are working on the problem are getting the wrong parts together. They try to integrate immorality with prosperity; loose living with happiness; legalized vice with budget balancing; the debauchery of one class of citizens with the enrichment of others; class hatred and national antipathy with international good will; the altar of prayer with depraved appetite; the devil with the dollar, and hell with heaven. We await the type of leaders who have a proper sense of proportion and who are able to discern the relation between morality and national well being. They will need to see that the righteousness that exalteth a nation is higher and deeper and broader than mere commercial integrity and must have a higher expression than a law enforced against one set of crooks by another set of crooks who through changing circumstances happen to be entrusted with the job. The puzzle now confronting the people can be worked out only as it is approached by clean hands and a right spirit.—Religious Telescope.

QUEER DOINGS

The difficulties in writing laws as to the sale of 3.2 per cent beer are very queer. We are assured that it is non-intoxicating. We know that no exponent of wetness, either Jew or Gentile, would tell a falsehood about a thing like that. If this beer is non-intoxicating, why make such a fuss about it? We do not make laws regarding when, where and how soda water shall be sold. We do not forbid selling ginger ale to minors. Governor Lehman, of New York, is excessively distressed less politics get into this beer business, yet beer is non-intoxicating! The whole matter is a disheartening mess. This new beer will make people intoxicated, hence all the exercise of gubernatorial wisdom to fix up a way by which it can "get by." We have lived long enough to put no trust in "wets," whatever their race, party or condition of servitude.—The Presbyterian.

TIME FOR A BOYCOTT

In a number of States beer has been brought back to be dispensed with the freedom of soda water and lemonade. Grocers are handling it and restaurants are serving it in entire disregard of the offense it must be to many customers.

It is quite within the rights of Christian citizens and quite within their legitimate scope of action to have no business dealings with those who choose to deal in the stuff. Boycott is a legitimate and proper method of exerting moral pressure and in one form or another is always employed in commerce.

We suggest therefore that, as far as it is practical, drys refuse to deal with grocers or to eat at restaurants or refreshment stands or drug stores that deal in beer. It is an intoxicating drink. It is sold in violation of the Constitution. It is sold by these merchants in defiance of the good will of many dry citizens. Let them know that they lose that good will.

Ministers and Bible class teachers might do a real service by reading publicly the names of such merchants as refuse to handle the stuff.—Christian Standard.

"GERMAN CHRISTIANS"

A new Nazi Protestant movement in Germany, calling itself German Christians, and which has for its aim "the elimination of parliamentarism from the churches and their reorganization in conformity with the national resurgence," has just concluded its first convention at which it adopted the following canon: "God has created me a German. Germanism is a gift of God and God wants me to fight for my Germanism. Service in war is not a violation of Christian conscience but is obedience to God. Toward a government that fosters the powers of darkness the believer has the right of revolution; he has the same right against church authorities that do not unreservedly acknowledge the national resurgence. In the German view, the church is a commodity of believers bound to fight for Christian Germany. The aim of German Christians is an evangelical German State Church. Adolf Hitler's State calls to the church; the church must heed the call."—And the meeting ended with a solemn thanksgiving for the Lord's gift of Hitler to Germany! Their "national resurgence" may yet prove to have been a national disaster.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humbert

(Study Number Sixteen)

We have come to the seventh chapter of Revelation. So far the order of events have been progressive but now we reach our first parenthesis—a chapter that does not lead on in the matter of time. The sealing of the one hundred and forty-four thousand Israelites assures them of protection during the trumpet judgments. (Ch. 9-4). The vision of the innumerable company seems to be a foreview of the martyrs of the last three and one-half years of the tribulation period.

"Birds Eye View"

It might be well to give a bird's eye view of the book of Revelation, at this time. The reader may refer to former studies for some details and to future studies for others.

The apostle John was banished to the island of Patmos where he saw a vision of the Lord in glory (Ch. 1). Christ gave him certain messages for seven real historical churches, but these messages are for all churches of all time (Ch. 2 and 3).

At the beginning of chapter four, the church is removed from the earth and we see no more of it on earth. During these chapters we are on Old Testament ground and God is dealing with the Jews. God showed Daniel that there would be four hundred and ninety years of Jewish history until the Kingdom Age (Dan. 9). There is a break of some nineteen hundred years between the sixty-ninth and seventieth week. That is, there are yet seven years of Jewish history until Christ comes and reigns in righteousness upon this earth. Chapters four to nineteen deal with this period of time. Jeremiah calls it the time of Jacob's trouble (Ch. 30:7). Isaiah calls it the Day of the Lord (Ch. 13).

Chapter Four to Six

A throne is set in heaven amidst great display. Christ redeemed mankind at his first coming but did not take possession of the earth at that time. The title deed of redemption was sealed and placed in the Father's hand until the time for Christ to take the book, break the seals and take possession of his purchased possession.

Satan is now prince of this world and will fight back to the last ditch, when Christ comes to clear the scene for the Kingdom Age. Christ will purify the world by degrees because he is not willing that anyone should perish. Multitudes will interpret these judgments correctly and will turn to him.

Christ takes the book amidst a universal cry of joy and admiration (Ch. 5). He then snaps the seals. The first four reveal judgments upon mankind while the fifth reveals the souls of the martyred righteous who were killed during the first four seals. The sixth seal brings a great display of nature.

Chapters Seven to Nine

There remains one seal to be broken. There is a pause in chapter seven to give a little side view. The future judgments will be upon earth and in this chapter we are given a peep behind the scenes. When the seventh seal is broken, it does not reveal one certain event but rather a series of events. Seven trumpet judgments are to fall upon mankind but a portion of the human race will be exempt from these tortures. Chapter seven shows us why. They are sealed by God. The reason for this will be brought out in a future study.

Chapter seven also reveals an innumerable company of saved who come up out of the great tribulation. This is a gracious method carried throughout the book. God often stops before an impending judgment and comforts his people by reminding them that he will care for them (see Ch. 1:4; ch. 3:10; ch. 14:13; ch. 18:4; ch. 19:6, etc.). In chapter seven, the great tribulation is still future, for it is the last three and one-half years of this age. The seventh seal is broken and preparation for a series of judgments is revealed. The prayers of the saints are now to be answered and the first six trumpets bring forth their terrors as seen in chapters eight and nine.

Chapters Ten to Fourteen

The title deed is now open and Christ descends to take possession of the earth (Ch. 10). The taking possession of the earth does not become a fact until chapter nineteen but the breaking of the seventh seal brings forth the final judgments that will head up in Armageddon.

Several of the following chapters give details of different events during the last three and one-half years and are thus the same in matter of time.

The measuring of the temple protects a small portion for God, as we will see in a later study. This will continue forty-two months and will bring down the wrath of the entire world and culminate in Armageddon. The two witnesses will prophesy during this same period (1260 days) (Ch. 11).

If this is the time of Jacob's trouble, we might wonder about the Jews. Chapter twelve reveals them persecuted but protected during this same period of time (1260 days. Vs. 6 and 14).

Another question arises. What about political conditions during this period of time? Chapter thirteen gives us the answer.

Chapter fourteen is full of voices and ends with a heavenly view of Armageddon.

Chapter Fifteen to the End

Tribulation such as never has been upon the earth, is now ready to break and the vials of God's wrath are now poured out upon blaspheming humanity (Chapter 15 and 16).

We have another question. What has happened to the great religious and commercial systems that have played such an important part in the history of the world? Chapter thirteen gives us part of the answer, and chapters seventeen and eighteen give us the full information.

We might wonder what will become of Satan and his mighty men. If so, we find our answer in Chapter nineteen and twenty. Again we have God giving comfort to his people before these dooms are announced, and the courts of heaven ring with the hallelujah chorus.

The New Jerusalem

"In my Father's house are many mansions" (John 14). But Christ has something better for us. "I go to prepare a place for you," and in Revelation 21 and 22 we see the holy city, new Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And what a city—there it comes—fifteen hundred miles long and fifteen hundred miles wide and fifteen hundred miles high; sparkling like a diamond in the sunlight, not a dark corner in it. Its jeweled foundations ablaze with the glory of God and its massive white gates of pearl attended by twelve angel guards.

Sin's long war with God must come to an end. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father" (Matt. 13:43). May the reader of this note so put his trust in the Lord Jesus Christ that when the "Roll is called up Yonder" he will be there.

Straight Thinking and Christian Belief

III. From the above it necessarily follows that an authority in science is not on that account an authority in religion. Science analyzes the world of matter and, in psychology, the world of consciousness; seeks to ascertain the constituent elements and the laws which govern their interrelationships. Religion is concerned with values, purpose, leading to highest values, human nature and its remaking, the eternal interests of the spirit, the spiritual rebirth that is from above and the redemptive power that is in Christ Jesus, with God, the beginning and end of all spiritual experience. The scientific and the religious interpretation of the world are therefore widely different. It is very much as it is with the chemist and the lover of art. The chemist has his analysis of a master-painting, the chemistry of the pigments used, showing thereby whether or not the painting is genuine or a skillful reproduction. Such an analysis serves an important purpose. But entirely different is the viewpoint of the lover of art. For him, the all-important consideration is the theme of the painting and the artist's handling of that theme, the technique and the artistic genius displayed. The judgment of the chemist, even though he be a very eminent chemist, may not be of any value here. And the judgment of the lover of art may not be of any value in the field of chemistry no matter how dependable his criticism as a connoisseur in art. The judgment of each is of value in his own field. Sometimes the word of an eminent scientist is quoted in the denial of personal immortality, and that remark is quoted as a word of authority. But the fallacy of such a position is obvious. The word of the scientist is the word of authority in his field, no doubt, but not necessarily does it have any authority whatsoever in a field in which he is not conversant. We feel justified in claiming that none can speak with authority regarding personal immortality unless he has had experience in the Way which makes eternal life possible. "Whoso liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Has one by faith taken that Way? If not, his denial of personal immortality has no more weight than a chemist's denial of the immortal beauty of the Sistine Madonna.

IV. The wiser thought of today strangely corroborates religious belief. Recent scientific thought presents at least two avenues of approach to the affirmation that back of all things, within all things, above all things is the infinite Spirit and that in him all things consist. Gone forever is the old-time contention that behind all things is a mysterious something called material substance, that matter necessarily means mass, that the atom, an indivisible something, is ultimate. Vastly different is the new conception of matter, for the atom is now reduced to its constituent parts: protons, electrons, points of energy; inconceivable rapidity of motion. The two former "universal qualities" are now reduced to one, motion. "Matter" consists of points of energy in motion. So far the analysis of science, thus confirming the fine insight of Schopenhauer and of Bergson later who held that the ultimate is the "upward thrust" of vital energy. It is not difficult to observe that this better line of thought points directly to the Christian affirmation—

"Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
And back of the flour is the mill,
And back of the mill is the wheat and the shower
And the sun and the Father's Will."

Again, modern thought is increasingly inclined toward the teleological interpretation of the universe. The fact of the existence of life on our planet, and still more amazing, the fact of the existence of consciousness requires a more satisfactory explanation than the old materialistic mechanism could provide. That life and consciousness should be the product of a "fortuitous concourse of atoms" seems hardly credible. Surely to so hold would require a far greater faith than is demanded by a supernatural explanation of the universe.

It is not strange that the better thought of today is increasingly inclined towards the teleological explanation toward what science is pleased to call orthogenesis. To the thoughtful, the evidences are increasing to warrant the conclusion that the universe is the outward manifestation of the thought and purpose of the infinite Spirit, that it is God Who works in all things, that "all obey the first propulsion of his might." Science is accustomed to accept as its hypothesis certain tentative affirmations by which alone events can be explained. Lloyd Morgan, distinguished British scientist, among many others, freely expresses his belief in God as the necessary and ultimate explanation of that which otherwise would be inexplicable.

And so, we have before our very eyes today the significant fact of the cautious approach of scientific thought toward the eternal truths which the Christian Scriptures long ago confidently affirmed, "In the beginning God"; All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." Thus the "Souls' invincible surmise," expressed in the record of God's revelation to men is increasingly corroborated by the clearer and better thinking of the best minds of each passing generation.

Wherefore we do well to give heed to the injunction of the Apostle, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." To surrender one's faith, the faith of our fathers, because at the time a certain school of thought seems to contradict it, is a short-sighted policy as well as a tragic blunder. Far better to hold on. Scientific theories are constantly changing. Better theories do tend toward a corroboration of the faith. Continue to hold on and it would not be strange if one should find that a great word spoken long ago has a meaning that outlasts the years, when he, the fullness of the revelation of God declared. "I am the Truth"—The Evangelical Student.

Evangelistic Evangelicalism

By W. Graham Scroggie, Edinburgh, Scotland

The hour is ripe for a rebirth of evangelism. The decade which immediately followed the conclusion of the Great War was one of the most difficult in the history of the modern church, and for two reasons chiefly: The church had lost its head, and the world had lost its feet, or, in other words, the church had largely sacrificed its true message, and the world was living on delusion. But during the last two years or more, a change has been observable in both directions. The world has got through its delusions and is now facing naked facts, and the church, to some extent at any rate, is beginning to realize again that only the message of the gospel can meet the needs of a tired, perplexed, and suffering world.

The church has now a supreme opportunity, and if she misses it, she may become finally discredited in the eyes of mankind; but if she will now wash her heart, her eyes, her feet, and her hands, she will do for this century what the evangelical revival did for the eighteenth century. How, then, is such an end to be attained? It can be attained only by our facing up to the fundamental realities and relating them to the present opportunities.

Fundamental Realities

But some one will ask, "What are the fundamental realities?" Well, it is of the first importance that we should know, and we shall begin to know when we clearly recognize that Christianity is not an institution but a life, not a tradition but a revelation, not an ethic nor a philosophy, but a gospel. Too long and too widely the old gospel has been regarded as not adequate for the modern world, and it has been assumed that what is old is outworn, and that only that is true which is new. But this is an utter fallacy. The majestic and the potent things are the old things. The sun is old, but it has lost none of its life-giving power. The sea and the mountains are old, and yet they are new. Sin is old, but it is still a tragic reality. Death is old, but no one can discount it. Love is very old, but it is the greatest moral force in the universe. And does not the gospel belong to the category of the age-abiding things? Has it ever been found inadequate when fairly tried? Has any substitute for it ever been found adequate? Let us face up to these searching questions, and answer, "Yes," or "No." Of course, I am speaking now of the good news itself, and not of the terms in which it is expressed, nor of the manner in which it is applied. Terms and methods must be adapted to the needs of each generation, but the gospel itself is dateless. Puritan terms and methods would be as unsuitable today as crinolines would be inconvenient, but the realities, of which these were the drapery, have not changed. The gospel itself is not subject to fluctuations of fashion, however greatly may vary the terms in which it is expressed, and the methods by which it is applied.

But it is not merely in its terms and methods that the church of our time differs from that of the period of the evangelical revival in its presentation of the gospel, but to large extent, in its contents also. The name is retained where the message is changed, and so we have heard of the ethical, the social, and other gospels. Of course the gospel is ethical in complexion, and it has its social implications, but the heart of it is not the Sermon on the Mount, nor some dream of a city of God. Some preachers talk as though individual regeneration were a by-product of social service, and so transpose the fact and truth that social service is a by-product of evangelical conversion. It is just because the social implications of the gospel are so manifold and great, that it requires, as a primary necessity, the purifying and healing of the individual cells of the organism of each national society and of the body of humanity. And in like manner, the ethical requirements of the gospel pre-suppose a moral dynamic in us which our fallen nature cannot supply. What the people need, and I believe want, is the gospel, the good news of a Deliverer from bondage, and of a Savior from sin. The ethical Christ will not do; men need the redeeming Christ. It is not his holy life that saves us, but his atoning death, and they who stumble at the cross can never know the meaning or power of the gospel. If there is to be a revival anywhere, the great notes of the evangelical message must be understood, accepted, and proclaimed, and with intense conviction and simple sincerity.

JESUS SETS NEW STANDARDS OF LIVING

(Lesson for April 30)

Lesson Text: Mark 10:1-31; Golden Text: Luke 6:31

MONDAY

The Two Great Commandments. Matthew 22:32-40

When the lawyer asked Jesus which is the great commandment in the law? he may have been more sincere than we usually give him credit for being. The Word tells us he did this in order to try him. But was there anything wrong about that? Doesn't the Word tell us to "try the spirits"? I think Jesus was perfectly willing to be tested then, and I believe he is willing to have us test him now. And I believe all our testing will only bring out with greater emphasis the truth of the statement he made to the lawyer when he said "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And a second like unto it is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." I would like to say here that one should have a certain degree of love for self, or loving another as one loves one's self could not mean much.

This further implies that one should live such a life that it would be worthy of love.

TUESDAY

The Standard of Divorce. Mark 10:1-2

The problem of divorce is like the problem of the poor, always these problems are with us. I know there is a strong tendency in these modern days to place an interpretation on the words of Jesus that will harmonize with our modern theories of the divorce question, or the sanctity of the marriage vows. I know there is a growing tendency to look upon the marriage contract as being little more than a civil contract that may be broken at will upon agreement of the contracting parties. But on a question so vital as this, so pregnant with social consequences, as well as with spiritual pitfalls, I would prefer to take Jesus at his word and to let the Word be its own interpretation.

WEDNESDAY

The Child-like Spirit. Mark 10:13-16

Jesus set a new standard for the recognition of the place of children in the human family. In no other land are the innate rights of children recognized, regardless of sex, as in the land where the gospel of Christ is not only preached but practiced in the family life.

And yet, what is called Christian America is woefully slow about approving the amendment to our constitution that would prevent any manufacturer or other employer of labor from exploiting the puny strength of children for their own mercenary gain.

If our great daily papers had given one-tenth the first-page publicity to the "child labor" amendment that they have given to the propaganda against the eighteenth amendment, it would have been approved long ago.

THURSDAY

Complete Obedience Demanded. Mark 10: 17-22

The young man who came to Jesus with the question "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" was willing to go so far to accomplish his desire, but no farther. He was willing to surrender anything that did not require too much sacrifice; but he was not willing to "go all the way."

In many ways he was a lovable character, but he would not yield full obedience to his Lord, and so he could not become a real disciple, for Jesus does require complete obedience.

FRIDAY

Danger of Trusting in Riches. Mark 10:23-31

Jesus did not say a rich man could not get into the kingdom of God, but he did say it would be hard for him to do so. Why is this the case?

Is it not true that great wealth has a tendency to lead its owner to assume that his wealth will secure for him anything he desires?

One may buy one's self out of jail, but money will never buy a reserved seat in heaven. The young man was not required to give up all his wealth because wealth is sinful in its self, but because, in this case, it stood between him and God; and whatever stands between one and God must be given up before one can hope to stand in his presence.

SATURDAY

Living with Others. Matthew 5:38-44

In that marvellous sermon Jesus preached on the mountain he laid down a set of principles that would revolutionize the whole social and political world, if they were only put into practice.

While we are living in this world we must of necessity come in contact with others in social, business or religious ways, and if we desire to live harmoniously with others we will gain a great deal of strength for the task, if we will make a close study of the Sermon on the Mount, or better still, if we will just put its principles into practice in our lives.

SUNDAY

The Mind of the Master. Philippians 2:1-11

It is surely difficult to know the mind of the Master, unless one has a rather well defined knowledge of the Master himself, through one's acquaintance and association with him, and through a rather intensive study of his Word. Paul says, "Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

This intimate acquaintance with him and his Word, should give any one a fairly good understanding of "the Mind of the Master."

Selected Helps for Junior Committees

(Clip and paste them in your Scrap Book for future use)

A MISSIONARY EXHIBIT
For Missionary Committees

Let the members of the committee ask the other Juniors and their friends for missionary pictures, photographs, and curios illustrating the missionary topic, and see that these objects are in the Christian Endeavor room a week before the meeting. With the superintendent's help get some Endeavorers from the Young People's society to come to the meeting after preparing themselves for their parts. The photos and curios should be spread on different tables, and two Endeavorers, in costume, if possible, should be in charge of each table. These Endeavorers will impersonate missionaries, will show and explain the photographs, relate missionary incidents, and answer questions. Special questions may be written out beforehand and given to the Juniors to ask at the meeting. Group the Juniors around the tables, and have group singing and recitation of Bible verses.

A MEMORY MEETING

For Prayer Meeting Committees

At the beginning of the meeting slips of paper, each containing a question on the Bible, should be handed to the Juniors. These slips should be prepared beforehand, with the help of the superintendent. Then have a praise period, singing four hymns from memory. Let a Junior recite each stanza before it is sung. After prayer, let each one repeat two verses of Scripture from memory; and then let each Junior answer the question on his or her slip. If the answers are not correct, the other Juniors should be permitted to add to them.

A MEMBERSHIP PLAN For Lookout Committees

Prepare as many blanks as there are members in the society. Give a blank to each member, and ask him to write on the blank the names and addresses of as many children as he knows who are not members of the society, but who might be members. Let the blanks be returned at the next meeting. With the help of the superintendent make a list of all names handed in. Then assign the names among the members of the lookout committee, asking them to visit the persons assigned and invite them to the meeting. Make those invited especially welcome, and try to get them to join the society as preparatory members. Revise the list every two or three weeks, when the members will report progress.

the common law, the Committee stands convicted of 'assault with intent to inflict great injury' upon the missionary cause; for they did two things that sane men must have known would produce such a result. First, they sent broadcast throughout the country, and the world, by their 'press releases,' the most damaging criticism of missions and missionaries, while exacting from all who had their full report a pledge of the strictest confidence. They told an unfriendly and ill-informed public with a tone of authority that Protestant missions, as now conducted, are not worth supporting."

We would like to know who is responsible for the persistent effort to push the sale, the translation, and the use of "Re-Thinking Missions." There are a score of volumes recently published which would do far more to increase intelligent interest and sacrificial giving for the cause of missions, than the book in question. As we write these lines, there comes to our desk a circular, entitled "Missions in the World of Tomorrow," containing new proposals for using "Re-Thinking Missions" on every campus of every college. We are urged to use the book in convocations and chapel services, and in forums for the faculty and students. In order that "Re-Thinking Missions" may not cause wry faces, the volume is sugar-coated by offering it in connection with pamphlets by Dr. Robert E. Speer, Pearl S. Buck, and others. If missions in the world of tomorrow are to have no more secure foundation than is to be found in the earlier chapters of "Re-Thinking Missions," they will not have a glorious future.

MISSIONS

An Objective Appraisal or Modernist Propaganda?

By Rev. S. M. Zwemer, D.D., in "The Presbyterian"

Not without reason was there a mass meeting held at the Calvary Baptist church, Princeton, New Jersey, recently, in protest against the Report of the Laymen's Foreign Mission Inquiry. The reactions to the volume, entitled "Re-Thinking Missions," from the foreign field and from the churches at home, give one furiously to think. Had this been an objective appraisal for the consideration of those who administer missions, there would have been no storm of disapproval in the Christian press, but apparently those who are responsible for the early releases in the press and for the publication and publicity now given to the Appraisal, not only in this country, but abroad, are actually carrying on an active propaganda.

The Bulletin of the National Christian Council of China for February states that one thousand copies of the cheap paper edition are available, and that arrangements have been made for the translation and publication of the Report in Chinese, "without financial charge upon the Council." In the leading Christian paper published in Western India, "Dnyanodaya," Dr. J. F. Edwards states in an editorial: "The book has arrived in India, not only without the 'charming' personal speeches, but with the approval of the sex-novelist, Pearl Buck, printed in red letters on the front cover, as follows: 'I think it is the only book I have read that seems literally true in its observation and right in its every conclusion.' Why the imprimatur of a sex-novelist is published broadcast instead of that of a missionary expert, like Dr. Robert E. Speer, is not stated, but obviously it may be because Dr. Speer has riddled the book by his searching criticism. Concerning the possible effect of this publication, we have been forcibly reminded of one of the critical hours in British history when the great Pitt (was it not?), after a terrible war period pointed to a map of Europe and exclaimed, 'Roll up that map,' because it would be useless for many years to come. If the philosophy underlying this book, 'Re-Thinking Missions,' comes to be widely accepted, our missionary societies may as well roll up their lists of subscribers, for they will quickly decrease under the influence of such a work."

In a bulletin received from the Missionary Research Library, we have a number of commendations of the Report, but in this case also the comment quoted against the Report does not include the searching criticisms of those who have published their protest from the day of its issue. Why this ceaseless effort to whitewash, broadcast, translate and circulate a document which has been characterized as "a bitter disappointment and a subtle attack," by the friends of missions. Dr. Albertus Pieters, for many years a missionary in Japan and now professor of Missions at the Western Theological Seminary, uses sharp words which we would not endorse if they related to an objective appraisal in the hands of missionary experts, but which surely apply if "Re-Thinking Missions" is to be used as modernist propaganda of a theory of missions based on humanism and syncretism.

"Charity impels us to believe that the intentions of the committee were good, yet in view of the fact that they are intelligent men, this charitable assumption puts a strain upon our reason. In criminal law certain crimes are not committed unless a certain intention is present. Men are indicted of 'assault with intent to inflict bodily injury,' 'assault with intent to kill,' etc. Since the thoughts and intents of the heart are known to God alone, how can the prosecution ever secure conviction on such indictments? Under the principle of common law that the intent is to be deduced from the circumstances and the means employed. If the one who inflicted the injury was sane, used such weapons as every sane man knows would inflict a certain degree of injury, and used them in such a manner that the said injury would be likely to ensue, then he must be held to have cherished the 'intent' to bring about the result. His own disclaimer, under such circumstances, does not count."

"Judged by these equitable principles of

GIVE THE CHURCH A SQUARE DEAL

Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, long one of America's greatest preachers, used to tell the following story, which can well be applied to the conditions faced by many of our congregations today:

"I asked an old colored preacher how his church was getting on, and his answer was: 'Mighty poor, mighty poor, brudder.' I ventured to ask the trouble, and he replied: 'De 'cieties, de 'cieties. Dey is just drawin' all the fatness and marrow outen the body and bone of the blessed Lord's body. We can't do nuffin' without de 'ciety. Dar is the Lincum 'Ciety, wid Sister Jones and Brudder Brown to run it. Sister Williams mus' march right in front of de Daughters of Rebekah; den dar is de Dorcases, de Marthas, de Daughters of Ham, and the Liberman Ladies.' 'Well, you have your brethren to help in the church,' I suggested. 'No, sah, dar am de Masons, de Odd Fellows, de Sons of Ham, and de Oklahoma Promis' Land Pilgrims. Why, brudder, by de time de brudders an' sisters pay all de dues an' tend all de meetings, dere is nuffin left for Mount Pisgah Church but jist de cob.'"

In how many cases do the 'Cieties in and out of the congregation get more loyalty and devotion than the Church of God! Dues will be paid in the Mystic Knights of the Sea even when the church is left out in the cold. The other day one of our good pastors reported how a friend whose salary was cut in half immediately reduced his church pledge 50 per cent. This seemed a square deal until it was discovered that he made no cut in the time and money expended on golfing or on pleasure-riding in his car. After that it looked pretty cheap. You are certainly not giving yourself a square deal when you refuse to give a square deal to Christ and the church.—Exchange.

Missionaries Raised up Out of Much Sickness

February 14, 1933.

Dear Evangelistic Readers:

With the best of intentions one often fails. So it has come to pass that more than two months have elapsed since writing you last. The middle days of December were busy days in dispensary and village work for us all. Bible classes, school and hospital went on without interruption until the 21st when an attack of fever supervened, which kept the writer in bed for ten days.

Christmas Day will always stand out in my memory. It was a happy day! A day filled with the presence of the Lord. A day when to an unusual degree his nearness was realized. Doubtless many were praying that day and their prayers were answered and life was spared for service. It was not until the 31st however, that I was able to be up. Two days of convalescence, the Old Year out and the New Year in, and then Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and I started on our long contemplated trip to Bassai and Bellevue. Joseph Nguede went along as assistant chauffeur and Andre Bernard, one of our diplomed nurses, went along to assist in microscopical work.

Part way between Bozoum and Bassai we met Mr. Jobson who was starting for Bellevue and Bangui. The surprise was mutual and it took a little time to readjust our plans. The adjustment was made as follows: Mr. Jobson returned to Bassai with us. We commenced our work of diagnosis that evening and continued through the following morning, when, accompanied by Mr. Jobson, we left for Bellevue. We were much delayed at Bozoum and therefore did not arrive at Bellevue until 8 P. M.

Mrs. Sheldon served a bountiful though impromptu supper and hospitably took care of Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Mr. Jobson in her own home. The three ladies, Misses Bickel, Patterson and Crawford took me home with them. There was much to be said after our long separation and our good resolutions to retire early absolutely failed.

The next day, January 4th, was an extremely busy one, visiting the hospital and doing microscopical work on Miss Bickel's veranda. We continued this work on the following forenoon when, to our great surprise, we had suddenly to desist and go dinnerless to bed because of a relapse of fever. This time it was the effects of sun and the grippe, contracted perhaps at Bassai where we had found Miss Myers in the throes of an epidemic.

Complications arise when traveling in a party in Africa. Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway must return to their work at Yaloke. Mr. Jobson must return to his at Bassai, and I was unable to accompany them. It was therefore decided that the truck should leave Bellevue for Yaloke via Bozoum with Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Mr. Jobson. Miss Patterson who had long anticipated a visit to Yaloke found it necessary to go at this time as transportation could not be provided for her later.

At Bozoum Mr. Jobson rejoined his own car which he had left there en route. All parties arrived at their destination on Saturday.

Tuesday morning Mr. Sheldon, Kenneth and myself accompanied by Joseph Nguede and Andre Bernard filled my little car to overflowing as with our necessary baggage we proceeded to Bassai. Mr. Sheldon returned to Bellevue with one of the Mission trucks.

Andre and I spent the day following our arrival with microscopical work and diagnosis. The succeeding day, Thursday, we left for Yaloke in the following manner. Joseph Nguede had not yet his driver's license therefore it was necessary that he should drive under escort. Mr. Jobson who had long been contemplating a trip to Bangui kindly arranged it at this time.

It was with some trepidation that we saw Joseph Nguede and Andre start down Bassai mountain. But everything went well and they waited for Mr. and Mrs. Jobson and myself at the Ouahme. Here Mr. Jobson put both the cars on the barge at once and Joseph Nguede was soon speeding ahead to Bozoum where he was instructed to wait for me.

At Bozoum I relieved Mr. and Mrs. Jobson of my presence in their little car and joined Joseph and Andre in my own car. Joseph was surprised to think that I dared to ride with him, but it was a good opportunity to demonstrate the value of a human life. In the morning before our departure we had read the 91st Psalm and committed ourselves implicitly to God, and so it was without fear and with perfect safety that we came through to Yaloke. Up and down the hills we sped and across the narrow bridges without accident. Joseph Nguede received an ovation upon his arrival, so proud were the natives of their "brother" that for once they forgot to greet the missionaries. We are hoping that Joseph (who really drives well) will soon have his license and that we may be able to travel without missionary escort.

The day following their arrival at Yaloke Mr. and Mrs. Jobson left for Bangui, returning late on Saturday night. They spent Sunday with us and returned to Bassai on Monday.

Arriving at Yaloke we soon fell into our usual routine of work. For six days things went along normally and then on the 18th there was quite an exit toward Bangui. Mr. Hathaway, Miss Tyson, Miss Emmert and Miss Paterson were the missionaries traveling. Accompanying them were Joseph Nguede as assistant chauffeur, Elie Boy who hoped to take training as a nurse in Bangui and Thomas Lissene as cook.

As in the old days Mrs. Hathaway and I were left alone. I took my meals with her and locking our house at night shared her bed room.

The dispensary work was very heavy and we missed Miss Tyson and Elie our efficient Banou medical assistant. Yet we would have managed very nicely had it not been for a severe case of flu meningitis which required a large portion of the time of our two diplomed native nurses. I took on a temporary assistant from among the advanced school boys. Our case of flu meningitis was one of our stalwart Christian young men, Timothee Mimimo. Prayers of missionaries and natives alike ascended for his recovery for several days as life hung in the balance, and then God raised him up. It is said there are only twenty-six cases on record in the history of medicine of recovery from flu meningitis. We have had several in our own mission for which we praise the Lord.

On the 21st of January our Bangui party returned. An unusual thing occurred in that they returned on the day and hour expected. Mrs. Hathaway had a bountiful dinner ready and we had an evening of rejoicing together. We could not foresee the sorrow of the following day. In our little household of four Sunday evening found three of us ill. Miss Tyson went down with dengue fever, Miss Patterson soon followed. I went down with an attack of bilious fever, the combined effects of sun, malaria, fatigue and filaria. Miss Patterson fought bravely against the same disease which Miss Tyson had contracted, but finally had to go to bed Tuesday afternoon. On Tuesday and Wednesday I was up again and at work. I collapsed again on Wednesday night. I went to bed then to stay for fifteen days with one of the most severe and constant fevers of my life. It was good to welcome Miss Tyson and Miss Patterson up again on Sunday although I was not able to rise again until the 10th of February. Just yesterday I returned to work at the hospital and it was a joy to be back again in service.

One little incident of simple native faith may be here recorded. None of us had any assurance of my recovery. But just when things were at ebb tide, Voloungou (our assistant native pastor) came in to pray by my bedside. He arose from his knees with a shining face and turning to me said, "Madame I am very happy. God hears my voice, and I have asked him to make you well immediately." It was indeed very soon that the fever broke for the first time in thirteen days and convalescence was soon established.

During the siege of illness in our household Miss Emmert was marvelously spared. With simple faith and marvelous endurance she spent a week of her vacation managing the household, and gave with native assistance her whole time to the care of the three invalids. We praise God for her devotion and thank him for sparing her. Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway were also kept in health during this time.

Mr. Hathaway was enabled to make two village trips to the chapels. He had planned on being out this week also, but this not being a good time for village work on account of the annual hunts, he has decided to call in the evangelists for a week of intensive study instead.

Our hospital work has been very heavy. During the time that I was in bed and shortly after her own recovery, Miss Tyson had two severe obstetrical cases, admitted a man badly torn by a wild boar and had an unusually large dispensary. A very bad chest wound was sustained by a little girl brought in Saturday. Her recovery seems impossible. Another case of flu meningitis was brought to the station last night. We are battling for her recovery.

Miss Emmert has recently taken on 115 new school children. With unflinching patience and untiring devotion she takes 60 in the morning and 55 in the afternoon, going over the same curriculum. Those who are left of the advanced students are now under the care of a native monitor, Jack Adambou.

I must take a moment here to tell something of conditions at the other stations as I found them during my brief visits there. I found the work at Bellevue flourishing. Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon are very busy with evangelistic and Bible work. Miss Bickel is heroically endeavoring to care for 100 patients daily from almost empty shelves. One of our first privileges on our return to Yaloke was to send her a load of medicines from our own shelves far less depleted than hers.

Miss Bickel and Miss Crawford have made a three weeks trip of itineration during January among the native villages preaching and healing as they went. Miss Crawford hopes that soon the red tape of permission will be all unwound and that she will be able to begin her school.

At Bassai we found an aggressive evangelistic campaign being carried on. Mr. Jobson's itineration trips are numerous. Miss Myers and Miss Byron in addition to the hospital work have their hands full with Bible Classes and nearby evangelistic work. Mr. Foster is building and Mrs. Foster is helping in every way possible in the station activities. Mrs. Kennedy during our recent visit there was away alone on a long trip of itineration teaching and preaching principally at Baindi Chapel in the Tarre tribe.

Miss Myers is conducting an aggressive campaign against leprosy. With her remarkable persuasiveness she is succeeding in getting the cooperation of the lepers themselves in her plans for isolation and treatment. We predict great things for her work.

We have now brought this epistle up to date and hope to write you again during the month of March. Correspondents are complaining that they look in the Evangelist for letters in vain. We plead guilty to long silences and we hope that these will no longer be necessary.

Asking a continued interest in your prayers, we remain,
Yours faithfully,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

MEETING AT GRATIS, OHIO

This is the second report of a meeting with Dr. Beachler, this time at Gratis, Ohio, where he is the worthy pastor and I assumed the role of evangelist. The exchanging of meetings proved to be a delightful experience. I had known Dr. Beachler for some years but never had labored side by side with him. I found him to be a most congenial co-worker, a man of rare ability as a leader, strong in his faith, very gracious and kind in his contacts with men in the church and out. He is doing a splendid work at Gratis and especially with the young people. He lived in our home while in Pittsburgh and I lived in the manse while in Gratis. We not only worked together but lived together for four weeks. My life is richer and I have the highest regard for the Beachler family and the work they are doing for the church. Mrs. Beachler is very active in the Sunday school and W. M. S., the daughter Lorene, a public school teacher, is superintendent of the children's division. Mary Louise rendered a lovely special number in music. Dr. Beachler gives his time unstintingly to a union Y. P. S. C. E. which had 55 members in attendance the last Sunday evening I attended. Of course this fine family did everything to make me enjoy my visit with them, even "Midge" seemed to be glad to have me around. I thank them again and all the lovely homes that entertained us, for we were in a different home for both the noonday and evening meal and it seemed that every one tried to provide everything to eat. I shall not soon forget such gracious hospitality in so many homes. We had a good meeting, preaching every night, three times on Sunday, and a meeting for men at various business houses each morning at 9:15, followed by a morning prayer meeting at the homes at 9:45. These gave us a full schedule. The blessing of God was on the work from the beginning, good audiences, very attentive, the saints

SMILING TROUBLES AWAY

By Thomas W. Perks

Smile when the days are dreary,

Smile when the toil is long;

Smile when your heart is weary

And everything seems to go wrong.

Smile when your heart is breaking,

When the outlook is dark and cold;

Don't fret when your troubles are making

Your hair gray, and your face look old.

Cheer up your heart, break into a song,

Catch the rainbow as it flings

Its radiant lines; it won't be long—

Smile, cheer up, and sing.

God never gave you a burden

Too heavy for you to bear;

Rejoice in the load he has given,

Fear not to sing; he is near.

I will not fret or whine,

My heart shall not be afraid;

I will not murmur or repine.

My hope is in him who hath said:

"My grace is sufficient in weakness;

My love is constant and true.

I'll guide thee and guard thee—

My heart is set always on you.

So I sing and smile my troubles away;

I put myself in his care.

My troubles and griefs will last but a day,

And I shall smile up there.

were blessed, and sinners heard the call of the Spirit. Delegations came from New Lebanon where Rev. L. V. King is pastor, and with whom we worked in a meeting last spring; also from Clayton, where Rev. Morton L. Sands is pastor, and we held a meeting for this church two years ago. It was a special delight to meet these fine people again, some from these places were in several nights. Other visiting churches and ministers were present on various nights and we appreciated all, especially Rev. Baker of West Manchester, whose two boys were regular attendants of our church while in Pittsburgh. Also Rev. Armstrong, who was pastor of the U. B. church in Clayton while I held a meeting there, was in several nights, one night with a large delegation. There was not a single unpleasant experience in the meeting. I received a great blessing and the Lord seemed to use me in blessing others. Our church was delighted with Dr. Beachler and his work in our midst and there seemed to be that mutual response at Gratis. All concerned in the exchange were abundantly satisfied. May the Lord greatly bless pastor and people at Gratis is my earnest prayer.

Pittsburgh Church

The work here is moving along very nicely, with plenty of room for improvement, of course. It always seems to me I never have very much to report. We came to the end of the year with our finances in good shape, which is a cause for rejoicing these times. We had accumulated a deficit which was cared for out of some standing funds which were temporarily transferred, but we wished to replace them and asked our people for a special offering, to which 50% of our membership responded with an average gift of $10. This meant real sacrifice for many of our people, for we have many unemployed, business men suffering great losses, children who have no earning power. We rejoiced in the fine spirit of harmony and spiritual tone of the church which it reflected. Our Sunday school, W. M. S. and Christian Endeavor are all carrying on in a very commendable way. Rev. W. G. Gans, a local elder, and now retired educator of the city, fills the pulpit when I am away. Our choir rendered an Easter Cantata on Palm Sunday evening to a full house. It was a wonderful presentation of "Our Living Lord." Rev. Percy Yett was with us April 2nd. He has a very fine message in pictures and lecture. Several have been received into the church since our report and a number will be received next Sunday. We rejoice in every success and sympathize with every distress in the great work of the church.

P. S. If you have relatives or friends coming to Pittsburgh who should be interested in our church, kindly drop us a line, informing us of their street number. We shall be glad to take an interest in them.

STRONG WINDS For Lookout Committees

Did you ever try in your society a battle of the winds to see which of the four winds, north, east, south, and west, can blow strongest? Divide the society into four sides, and give to each side the name of a wind, east, north, and so on. Then at each of the meetings during the period of the contest arrange the chairs in four divisions, each division marked with the name of the wind; and the four groups of Juniors will sit in their own divisions. This is an attendance contest to see which wind is strongest. Each Junior counts one point, and each visitor counts two points. Have a chart showing the strength of the winds each week. The Juniors will be interested in having their side win. The contest is a test of strength, and that always interests.—Junior C. E. World.

We want men who love God supremely and souls next. We want men, not only willing to do, but also to suffer, the will of God; men of faith who can afford to despise the world and look forward to the surpassing glory in store.—J. Hudson Taylor.

Whence Our Presidents?

IT IS interesting this year of the inauguration of a new President of the United States to look to the records to note the states from whence they came. For the first forty years (1789-1829), Virginia and Massachusetts furnished the six men inaugurated. Massachusetts had father and son (Adams) one term each, while Virginia had four (three in succession), two terms each. Harrison, Tyler and Wilson were born in Virginia, but were residents of other states when elected to the Presidency. Virginia takes the lead in being the native state of eight Presidents, but W. H. Harrison was resident of Ohio, and Wilson of New Jersey, when elected. Ohio rivals Virginia, seven Presidents having been born there: Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Benjamin Harrison, McKinley, Taft, Harding; but Grant was of Illinois, Harrison of Indiana, and Taft of Connecticut, when elected. On the other hand, W. H. Harrison, though born elsewhere, was of Ohio when elected. Grant's residence was not a matter of state pride when elected, as he was more than any other the property of the nation rather than any state. New York has not fared so well, Van Buren and Roosevelt being the only New Yorkers who were natives and residents when elected. Cleveland was a New York resident when elected, but was born in New Jersey. We omit Fillmore, who was of New York by birth and residence, because he succeeded to, but was not elected President. Two elected Vice-Presidents, but succeeding to the Presidency by the death of the President, were born in Vermont, but Arthur was a citizen of New York, and Coolidge of Massachusetts, when chosen. Coolidge was elected President. Jackson was born in North Carolina, but was of Tennessee when elected, and the same was true of President Polk. The great state of Pennsylvania has furnished but one President, and New Hampshire likewise one, viz., Buchanan and Pierce. Abraham Lincoln was born in Kentucky, but, like Grant, was elected from Illinois. President Hoover was born in Iowa and elected when a citizen of California, the only one to represent either state. Thirty-one men have been Presidents by election or succession, but only eleven states have had Presidents born within their boundaries, and only nine have had citizens elected President.—Presbyterian.

When to Prepare

WE have heard much about preparedness in the past years. It has come to carry a meaning that is not in all cases pleasant. It has been keeping bad company and we are in danger of associating it with dreadful things even when the very opposite is intended. We dare never lose sight of the importance of being prepared. I am using the word now in a personal sense. Most of life is to be thought of as the time to be getting ready for something we shall be called upon to do.

The mill will never grind with the water that is past. It is too late. But it will grind with the water that is miles up the stream as well as with what is only a few feet above the mill. The water that is bubbling out of the spring in which the stream has its source will have its chance to run over the wheel and grind some grist.

Because there are no visible signs of the approach of an opportunity to do some really worth while thing is a poor reason for thinking that there is no need to be in a hurry about getting ready. No matter how far down the years may be the chance for which we have been looking, it is never too early to begin getting ourselves in shape to handle it when we meet it. It took Moses eighty years to get ready to do forty years' work. Jesus lived in the quiet of Nazareth thirty years in preparation for a ministry covering only three years. But they were not looking for big opportunities while they were living in obscurity. They were faithfully facing each day's duties. It is a mistaken idea to suppose that being fitted to face an opportunity is a matter of will-power and a determination to rise to the situation. We get ready for larger tasks by being faithful to the smaller ones which each day brings us, and by remaining faithful through a long period of time.—Selected.

YOUR SEAT NOT EMPTY

The preacher does better when you are there;
'Tis hard to preach to an empty chair.
But your seat is not empty when you're away,
For Satan's imps are there that day.
They are making faces at the preacher's text.
They are nudging the folks who are sitting next.
They are showing them how much the church is "down"
And it's all because you're out of town.

An Appeal to Conscience

By Dr. Frederick Brown Harris

Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., Monday Morning, December 4, 1932

The amazing response to what I said from this pulpit last Sunday, on the moral aspect of the liquor question, is indicative of the eagerness and expectancy of multitudes that the church shall assert its absolute supremacy in matters of morals and conscience. To repeal or not to repeal is not the only question being forced upon the Congress.

Shall America Retreat?

The real question upon which our legislators are evidently being forced to vote is, Shall America retreat in a great moral reform? If so, it is the first American retreat on record. Shall our country take the first step backward it has ever taken since the Constitution itself was adopted? Shall America invite back into its Capitol a loathsome evil which took more than half a century of educating and crusading by the nation's most prophetic souls to untangle from the now stainless flag? Shall America return to the liquor business like a dog to its vomit? In the increasing traffic of this machine age, shall America jeopardize her millions by herself selling the stuff which so muddles brains that eyes fail to distinguish between red and green? Shall America put above the Capitol the liquor flag which but a few months ago the leader of his party in the Senate declared had on it nothing but the skull and crossbones?

Shall the blot, eradicated from the flag by the toils and tears of millions of mothers, be put back? Shall the flag itself be hung at half mast in millions of patriotic hearts?

Is America's Sun Sinking?

The real question is, Shall America listen to her Borahs or to her brewers? Shall she believe her Jane Addamses or her Mrs. Sabins? Shall America surrender to the sidewalks of alien New York or safeguard her Main Streets, with their schools and white steeples, the real America? A nation which turns from her economists, her educators, her industrial leaders, her social workers, her humanitarians, her preachers, to the leering, selfish faces of those whose god is their belly and their bank account, has passed her zenith and her sun is sinking, just as did Rome's.

Is Macaulay's Prophecy to be Fulfilled?

In 1857, the historian Macaulay made this prophecy regarding America: "Your republic will be as fearfully plundered and laid waste by barbarians in the 20th century as the Roman Empire was in the fifth, with this difference that the Huns and Vandals who ravaged the Roman Empire came from without, and that your Huns and Vandals will have been engendered within your own country, or by your own institutions." Can it be that the Huns and Vandals are at our very doors?

Where Were These New Defenders of the Nation's Morals in Saloon Days?

Where were the present repeal leaders, whose faces are now bathed with crocodile's tears over the evils under prohibition, before the Eighteenth Amendment was passed? Where were these new defenders of the nations' morals when your fathers and mine were indicting the liquor traffic for high crimes against humanity? Where were they when men and women, whose shoe latches they are not worthy to unloose, were fighting a lawless institution which battered upon the weakness and misery of men, resisted all attempts to regulate it, leagued itself with vice, lent itself to crime, found protection in political corruption, and finally brought down upon itself the accumulated wrath of an outraged people? Where were these leaders of so-called temperance reform, as they like to be thought of, when the conscience of a Christian community was shocked by the bare and bold utterance of a speaker at a liquor dealer's convention, urging saloonkeepers to make good the annual mortality of drinking men by luring new levies of boys to the bar?

We Know Where they have Been Since Prohibition

Well, whatever their alibi as to where they were then, I'll tell you where most of them have been since prohibition won. They have spent their time in discounting it, discrediting it, ridiculing it, in every way endeavoring to handicap it. They have denounced poisonous propaganda in order to make the success of prohibition impossible. And now men who have taken this attitude during these past crucial years have the effrontery to come before the American people, pointing to the alleged failure of the noble experiment—Thank God for that phrase, coined by Herbert Hoover. They have violated the first requirement of a gentleman and an American, namely good sportsmanship. The Eighteenth Amendment was passed by a proportionally greater majority than was even the Constitution itself. And yet many of the present leaders for repeal refused to give it even a sporting chance for success. All such stand now beneath the White Dome with unclean hands.

Sculptured Lips of Frances Willard Speaking

Thank God, that under that dome is the marble likeness of Frances Willard. There in Statuary Hall those sculptured lips are speaking to America today, as they did so eloquently in other days. There she stands in the shrine of each patriot's devotion. Frances Willard, who wore the white ribbon and never showed the white feather, she hears the ribald laughter and muttered curses of the real forces that are back of this agitation. She hears them saying with the conspirators of old, "We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we in agreement. We have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves." But Frances Willard knows, as do millions of her followers alive today, that banished truth is not vanquished truth. And her voice is heard ringing from the Capitol to all the nation as in this new crisis she cries in words of Holy Writ, "Your covenant with death shall be annulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand. The hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, the waters shall overflow the hiding place. The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

"Once to every man and nation
Comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of truth with falsehood
For the good or evil side.
Some great cause, God's new messiah,
Offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand
And the sheep upon the right,
And the choice goes on forever,
Twixt that darkness and that light."
—The American Issue.

THE CRIMSON BALLOT

(Note—The following tragic poem was recently given from memory by Dr. R. R. Teeter as a temperance feature in the Ashland Sunday school program. It comes to us from the days of the legalized liquor traffic. There is imminent danger that the "New Deal" that moral reform is facing will bring this poem again into popular use.—Editor).

One day in a crowded courtroom
A sentence of death was said,
In the hush of the awful stillness.
To be hanged by the neck until dead.

And a mother's heart was broken
As she faltered a murmured name,
While a father's face was furrowed
With tears of grief and shame.

It was only one of the dramas
That are acted every day,
And the judge on the bench had asked him
What the prisoner had to say?

The jury has said I am guilty
Was the low, resigned reply,
And the law has summoned the hangman,
And said that I must die.

But before the God in heaven,
I did not kill my friend,
And to the looming scaffold
A guiltless man you send.

The dram shop did this murder,
And the drink that fired my brain,
That made me do its bidding,
And held me with its chain.

But not upon the dram shop,
Nor brewery, nor still,
Nor yet the high officials
Who watch them rob and kill.

But on your skirts, your honor,
And every man's who has stood
To legalize the gin mill,
Is stamped the brand of blood.

His voice rose like a bugle,
No other sound was heard,
While something kin to terror,
In all who listened stirred.

For back of the law's officials
Is the law that spells my fate,
And back of the law are the people,
And the people are the state.

My hand held the murderous weapon,
And the blood on its blade they saw,
But back of the deed was the dram shop,
And back of the dram shop the law.

And whosoever hath voted
To license this evil ties
The shameful noose of the hangman
'Round the neck of the man who dies.

And on his hands are the blood stains,
And on his brow the sign
That he is the one who sheddeth
My dead friend's blood and mine.

Then back to his cell they led him,
And there on the trap he will stand,
And the bloody farce will be acted
Again and again in the land.

And every reddened gibbet
Shall be for a nation's blame,
For every ballot is crimson
That is cast for a nation's shame.

OUR LITTLE READERS

ON SECOND THOUGHT

By Rev. Joseph D. Ryan

A group of sturdy Scouts eagerly knocked at their Scoutmaster's door on what they thought important business. There were five or six of them. To their delight their leader was at home and received them cordially. The leader of the boys announced the purpose of their visit.

"We have come to ask you to put John out of the Scout organization."

Before the Scoutmaster could make comment or ask a question another boy chimed in, "Yes, sir, he is the worst boy in the whole troop. He fights boys smaller than he is, he is selfish, and uses bad language."

"Boys, I am sorry to hear of this," the kindly Scoutmaster answered.

"We all went him out. Nobody likes him," a third boy added.

"Well, boys, I am very busy now so I can not go into the matter. But at the next Scout meeting I will investigate."

"Let's have a trial and vote whether we will put him out or not," another boy added. With this the boys left the Scoutmaster's home. Had there been a trial and a vote on this afternoon it is needless to say what would have been the fate of the alleged bad boy.

A few days later several of the Scouts were playing near the church. The Scoutmaster passed, saw them, and called all to him. The culprit (?) was present among the number. Scoutmaster and boys had a meeting beside the church in the open.

"Boys," began the Scoutmaster, "a few days ago some of you came to my home asking that John be put out of the Scout organization and you named several things he had done in violation of the Scout Oath and Law. Today we are going to investigate the matter."

The boys looked pleased but no one said anything for a moment. We have said that John was present. The Scoutmaster addressed John gently and sincerely, "John, the boys seem to think that you are guilty of violating the principles of Scouting."

After a second's thought John answered, "I did hit Henry but he called me a bad name. I would do the same thing again if any one else should call me such a name. I want to do what is right but no one shall call me the name he did." Henry blushed. "I know something else," John continued, "Bill told a falsehood to his teacher last week." Then he named the offence. Bill did not deny and seemed ill at ease.

Then the Scoutmaster spoke, "Boys, what ought to be done to a boy who stole an apple?" One of the boys here in this group stole an apple from me a few days ago when in my cellar. I had already given him one apple but when my back was turned he took another. Afterwards I felt his pocket and found the apple. What should be done about that?"

"I know who did it," John answered. "If you know, don't tell," the Scoutmaster requested. For fully half a moment absolute silence reigned. The boy who took the apple had his eyes fixed on the ground.

As yet Ray had not said a word. Addressing the Scoutmaster courteously he began, "It seems to me that John is not the only one who has not been true to the principles of Scouting. I could tell of more wrong things that some of the boys have done, including myself. If every guilty one were put out of our organization, not many would be left. Scouting should help us to be better boys and we defeat our own purpose when we turn some boy out for being naughty. I am not in favor of expelling John nor any one else."

Several seconds of silence.

"Boys," asked the Scoutmaster, "shall we vote John out of our organization?"

"No!" was the unanimous response. The boys shook hands with John and with one another and returned to their game.—The Presbyterian.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Give Your Soul a Chance

By Gypsy Smith

WHY don't you give your poor soul a chance with God? You need more than three square meals a day. You are not all dining room and kitchen. You need more than a change of raiment. You are something more than dummies to be put in a window to show off clothes. Bricks and mortar will not satisfy you. You can't buy a home. A home is created. It is built out of an atmosphere, made out of love, understanding, sympathy, God; made out of little cradles with babies in them. Home is a bit of heaven; you can't buy that Are you worried, tantalized, in agony, blistered by the terrible scorching fires of the world, the flesh, and the devil? Face up to God. He knows your capacities. You are built out of the stuff of which he built eternities. Your immortal soul needs something more than toys, motor cars, cocktail parties. The world is beautiful, the world is music, the world is purity. Don't confuse God's world with the devil's world—the world which would go to Communion on Sunday morning and give the rest of his day to frivolity; the world that despises the Bible, and ignores family prayer; the world that gets into and ruins the church. Oh, somebody will have to rise in the church in this Country and, like John the Baptist, risk his head in calling the church back from its perilous worldliness."

Face up with Jesus Christ

The Protestant Church Situation in Germany

There has been much interest, not to mention anxiety, created in the minds of church people in America over the newspaper reports concerning the revolutionary measures said to be put into operation by the Hitler regime. On April 5, 1933, the New York Times flashed the headlines, "Nazis to Control Lutheran Church; Its Constitution to be Rewritten," and follows with a startling report from which the following is quoted: "Thirty-nine million German Lutherans, comprising virtually the entire Protestant church in Germany, learned from the newspapers that their church was on the way to become an annex of the Nazi government and of an 'awakened Germany' . . . The church is to be reorganized on Nazi lines. Its constitution is to be rewritten and its parliamentary government abolished. . . . This is the startling effect of last night's convention of the new church movement, called the 'German Christians' held in the former Prussian Diet House, with Wilhelm Kube, Nazi Governor of Brandenburg and the leader of the new Diet, present."

We are indebted to Rev. F. H. Knubel, president of the United Lutheran Church for the following clarifying statements, which are excerpts of a statement published in The Lutheran:

"There is no national Church of Germany, nor according to Chancellor Hitler, is any such Church, as some would conceive, actually contemplated. Recognized churches exist in many of the German states, like the Lutheran Church of Saxony, the union Church (Lutheran and Reformed) of Prussia, etc. There is also the Catholic Church, which holds a supreme position in other states like Bavaria. Minority groups, like the Methodists and Baptists, are likewise given a legal standing. In addition, there are national federations of all Lutherans, of all Protestants, etc., but they are not churches and are comparable to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

"An 'Extra-Church' Movement

"There exist also movements in the German Church purely voluntary in their membership, which may be likened to such movements as we designate by the names Fundamentalists and Modernists in America. The meeting which is reported in today's newspapers was a meeting of the members of such a movement, which is called 'German Christians.' Evidently, furthermore, this was a meeting of just those members of that movement who are in the state of Prussia. This group has definite political purposes, while desiring to remain definitely Christian. It desires to be allied to the present government, and would, if it could, itself establish one national Church of Germany. . . . The 'German Christians' have thus far not had any important influence upon the Church in Germany, although they have aimed to give wide publicity to their purposes.

"These reports reveal once more that we must carefully sift all news coming from a land that is in the process of tremendous political changes."

From the Editor of The Lutheran we quote the following which gives some helpful information regarding the background of Hitlerism:

"We know that there are numerous political parties in the Reich, among whom the Communists, Socialists, Centrists and National Socialists are the most powerful, and that there has been no single group with a majority status until now. In a vague way we have realized that Communists are militantly anti-religious, but it has not been a matter of general report that Communist propaganda entering from Russian Bolshevism is one influence blamed by Germans for the collapse of their commissariat during the World War and that its doctrine of the international destruction of the private ownership of industry is highly distasteful to Germany.

"It is not frequently stated that the Socialist party is also Marxian in its political teaching and that it openly is anti-church where it is not anti-religious. Carl Marx was a Jew; the leaders of the Socialist party are in a large proportion of his religious or his racial origin. It is also internationalist rather than nationalist in its aims.

"The Centrists are a politico-Catholic group in the parliament, not representative of the entire Catholic population, because it is their plan to restore Papal dominance. By cooperation with Socialists, they have held considerable, and often the decisive authority in the Reich and with their allies filled official positions in the government. Roman Catholicism in its essence is either supra-national in the interest of hierarchical control of all governments or inter-national in its policies toward the states in which it has an effective but minority constituency. It is frankly Catholic and anti-Protestant.

"It has been generally known that the ascription of war guilt by the Treaty of Versailles has been a constant irritation to Germans and that the conditions resultant from international treatment since the war have been interpreted by them as a studied effort to deny them the privileges of a return of autonomy, to a condition of national authority which their neighboring states have enjoyed. The poverty, the almost continuous partisan strife, the manipulations of property, offices and privileges under previous governments have seemed to them to offer no future to their youth, to the church, of two thirds of the citizens and to economic rehabilitation. The final sweep of National Socialism was practically a revolution, due to the carefully propagated antagonism to Communism and to the failure of formerly trusted parties to bring the nation out of its position of inferiority. That a combination of denationalizing forces should have given rise to such an emphasis on nationalism as seems highly radical to those not affected, should not surprise any one experienced in the ways of popular government.

"As was said above, it was when the platform of intense nationalism was put in operation, and the effects on individuals became visible, that its particular injustices became apparent. That an attempt to array the power of the Church in behalf of the movement should occur among some groups of citizens of the nation is not surprising. Of course, time will bring correctives. To us who are witnesses but neither participants nor victims, the occasion arises for a valuation of the dangers of continued discrimination and unlimited partisanship."

The Way Out

A world in anguish cries in the agony of its helplessness, "Show me the way out of these awful conditions." The distress arises because the material instruments of relief such as employment, money, investments and all property values have suddenly lost their former power. The old key no longer works in the lock.

To everyone, who is sitting in the dungeon of this confinement, we beg to hand a Bible just as we do to the prisoners in the jails. Unlike the prisoner, however, you are free to stay or go as you please. If you still insist on fixing your only trust in the old money-power key to unbar the iron gate, you are likely to remain right where you are in the bondage of a hopelessness that is worse than death. If, on the contrary, you are willing to read and heed the Word of God in your hand you will find your prison doors swinging wide open as if influenced by some magic spell and before you know it you are out "in the green pastures," and along "by the still waters."

Turn first to the fifteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. Luke. Jesus Christ is speaking. He is telling three stories, one about a lost sheep, one about a lost coin, and one about a lost son. In the seeking and finding of the lost sheep we are shown the matchless picture of the uttermost outreach of the heavenly Father's love toward the humblest of his children who has strayed away. In the story of the lost son is reflected, as in a mirror, the exact portrayal of thousands whose spending has landed them in poverty in a far away country. Many thousands more are in this far away land through no fault of their own. They are the innocent victims of forces beyond their control and of large scale transgressors whose crimes against the public good are so subtle and so enormous as to pile up a final catastrophe from which there is no escape. But for all of them there is the assurance of sufficiency in the Father's house. All who have the courage to say, "I will arise and go unto my Father" will find it so.

Now turn to the Gospel according to St. Matthew and read the fifth, sixth and seventh chapters. Here Christ is teaching the multitude exactly what they must do to bring in an era of righteousness and peace and good will among men.

Finally turn to the fourteenth chapter of

The Kind of Child Welfare Effort We Most Need

We have seen no presidential proclamation this year calling for the observance of May Day as Child Welfare Day. Whether one has been issued and we have missed seeing it, or whether the President has passed it up under the pressure of the many emergency measures demanding his attention, there is nevertheless no small attention being given at this time of year to the community's responsibility for the care of childhood, particularly the safeguarding and improvement of its health. There is official sanction for such a day, for during Mr. Hoover's administration Congress by joint resolution authorized and requested the President to proclaim annually that "May Day is Child Health Day." In a proclamation which we read from the pen of Mr. Hoover, there was the affirmation that "the well-being of children is a community responsibility as well as an individual duty." And he suggested that public as well as private measures be considered by which "the health of our children may be conserved and advanced." Naturally such a move received wide approval and support, because childhood is so universally loved and everywhere regarded with such kindness and sympathy.

Perhaps the word "universal" covers too much scope; it is too all-inclusive, too sweeping. For the high evaluation of childhood and consequent care for the health of children is confined to countries where the Christian vision and spirit have come largely to prevail. Nothing like "The Children's Charter", such as grew out of the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection of a few years ago, ever came from a land that had not heard Christ's tender words and revolutionizing teaching: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." Not many even in the most Christian lands have been able to grasp that high spiritual conception of childhood that our Lord set forth, but practically all Christendom has come to have a more exalted view of the worth of childhood and of child-like qualities, because of what Christ taught and did. It is not surprising, since Jesus took the children, spurned by their elders, into his arms and blessed them, that men and women who have caught something of his spirit and viewpoint, have also taken into their arms children, neglected, forsaken, handicapped and uncared-for, and have bestowed upon them the blessing of nourishing food, medical care, needed instruction, and improved health. In a sense they have simply followed his example. Any one who loves children will approve of such efforts in their behalf.

But there are other kinds of child welfare far more important and yet receiving practically no attention. For example, there are more children in practically every community, who, in normal times, are being poisoned in mind and heart and spiritually stunted, by the vicious, commercialized movie, than are having their health injured through undernourishment and other handicaps. Children are always conspicuous at the movie houses, in fact, a large majority of the daily attendants are children or young people under age. Yet according to many qualified leaders who have made a careful study of the movie offerings, it is practically impossible to find a program that does not carry some appeal to sex or that does not idealize banditry and violation of the law. Dr. William Sheafe Chase, who knows the movie evils as few reformers do, says judges all over the country are declaring the movie to be responsible more than anything else for juvenile crime. Rev. O. R. Miller, State Superintendent of the New York City League, says, "The moral influence of motion pictures has grown steadily worse." Fred Eastman of Chicago declares that the movie majors in crime and sex stuff, and he has demonstrated that under the present arrangement the local movie operator is powerless to improve his screen, if he had a desire to do so. The producers control the output and arrange the program, which the local manager must take as arranged. And the public is doing nothing about it. The movies continue to pour into the minds of the children the crime and social sewage from the cesspools of Hollywood, and the community puts forth no effort to stop it. There is no small stirring of interest in the physical welfare of our children, but we are indifferent about their moral and spiritual welfare, or too much cowed to do anything.

Sex and crime magazines are meeting the eyes of the children from every news stand and many a public library and home. Their gaudily pictured covers with nude forms are a challenge to the curiosity of every growing boy and girl and a stimulus to evil imaginings, even if they never see inside the covers. And the contents of many of the most popular magazines are adapted to the intelligence of a ten or twelve year old child, and the principal purchasers of such publications are teen aged youths and morons, who spend hours gloating over abnormal situations and salacious representations of human life. Our news stands are filled with these vicious magazines, magazines that offer the minds of our youth nothing from a moral and educational standpoint, but whose every picture and suggestion are positively and continually evil. And seldom does any one offer an objection. There are leaders in increasing number in church and public school and in the community at large defending the right of the child and youth to have the handicaps to physical health removed if at all possible, but no one has the courage or conviction to demand the removal of the morally unfit literature from before their eyes.

The cigarette evil is a growing menace to the childhood of America from two sources—from personal habit and from influence through the mother. There was a time when a report of cigarette smoking on the part of mothers with suckling babes would have seemed unbelievable, but when a prominent city pastor made the statement the other day before an audience made up largely of ministers and Christian workers, that in his rounds of pastoral calling upon the sick in hospitals his eyes had met the sight of a new born babe resting on a mother's breast and a cigarette in the mother's mouth, no one seemed incredulous nor greatly astonished. The atmosphere was as if others had said, Of course, we have seen it too. And they had, and that is the shame of it and the pity of it. There are mothers with nursing babes poisoning their lives and their babes with nicotine and the scene is not unusual enough for preachers to be astonished at it. Besides boys and girls are being tempted on every hand to smoke on their own account. Every newspaper and secular magazine is calling loudly the virtues of this or that particular brand of cigarettes. School children troop past the editor's office window every day and many an early teen aged boy is seen puffing a cigarette, and occasionally even a teen aged girl. There are leaders in our town in behalf of undernourished children, but we have heard of none championing the right of children to be free from the energy-draining, character-sapping influence of cigarette smoking. We need the one, but even more do we need the other. God give us men and women who will stand up courageously and with a determination, in behalf of the kind of child welfare that no one now seems disposed to champion, and that is so greatly needed.

We read in the Word that the first shall be last and the last shall be first, and that is true in the mind of God and has been from the beginning. All the material things of this world were created before man, but man is first in the thought of God. He places a higher value on a single human soul than on all the wealth of the world. But man reverses the divine order, and in his greed places material wealth above human happiness and welfare.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The best teacher is he who makes truth clear by example.

When you want to spend an hour, don't steal another from one who doesn't have it to spare.

The College Board of Trustees and the Foreign Missionary Board are meeting at Ashland, Ohio, this week, consequently we have been favored with visits at the Evangelist office from a number of our denominational leaders.

On Easter Sunday three new members were received into the Brethren church at Roanoke, Virginia, all having received the rite of baptism during the week preceding. Brother Herman W. Koontz is the faithful pastor of this church.

Brother C. C. Grisso, pastor at Lanark, Illinois, sends "Just a line to let you know that Easter was a great day here at Lanark. At the morning service a splendid offering was received for Foreign Missions, and at the invitation sixteen came to confess Christ and unite with the church. There were also two life-work decisions. Last Lord's Day six came at the invitation. Everything looks encouraging for the work of the Lord here."

A letter from Beaver City, Nebraska, lets us know that the good people there are still struggling on in the service of the Lord, even though unfortunate enough to be without a pastor. The Sunday school is said to be progressing under good leadership and the work of the Christian Endeavors and the Woman's Missionary Society are being maintained. Easter was observed by the lifting of a Foreign Mission offering and a special program suitable for the day.

Brother Charles H. Ashman, a member of the Foreign Board and of the College Trustees, and pastor of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, delivered an eloquent and courageous lecture on prophecy before the Ashland Seminary and members of the Ashland Brethren church. It was entitled "The Rainbow in the Storm Cloud." After delineating from various angles the severity of the storm of these times, he pointed men to the rainbow of promise in the second coming of Jesus Christ.

Dr. K. M. Monroe, secretary of the Seminary Faculty, gives us an installment of news items. It is interesting to note the activity of the Gospel Teams. Both the young men and young women have been giving a good account of themselves and have extended their services widely. It is evident that churches greatly appreciate these young Gospel messengers. A few churches and individuals are mentioned as making direct financial contributions to the support of the Seminary program. This kind of support is doubtless much needed and will be appreciated from still others.

An encouraging letter is received from Brother L. G. Wood, pastor of the church at Fort Scott, Kansas. Easter culminated in the reception of ten souls into the church by baptism, the result of the efforts of the regular working forces of the church. Two weeks of union services preceding Easter, where the city pastors took turns in preaching resulted in a splendid evangelistic atmosphere, but the harvest of souls for the Brethren church was the result of the intensive efforts of the pastor and the cooperation of the Sunday school teachers. Easter Sunday closed with a well-attended and spiritual communion service.

Brother W. R. Deeter, pastor of the church at Carleton, Nebraska, writes us that on April 11th he entered "the Blue Valley Hospital at Hebron, Nebraska, for a major operation. He came through in fine style and was home in ten days after he entered the hospital. He is recuperating rapidly and will soon be able to resume his pulpit work, which has been cared for by out-of-town ministers. He is praising God for the divine care and recovery so clearly manifest, and also for the many calls, letters, flowers and other tokens and fellowship and good cheer received during his hospital experience. We rejoice with him in his recovery.

Brother W. C. Benschoff, pastor of the church at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, reports sixteen new members recently received at a revival conducted under his own preaching, and thirteen renewed their devotion to Christ. One has been received since the close of the meetings by confession and baptism. Previous to the meetings ten had been received by baptism and one by letter. This makes a total of twenty-eight new members reported and thirteen renewals. Easter Sunday with its special services was brought to a close with a record attendance at the communion service. All departments of the church are pressing forward with numerical and spiritual growth. The Sunday school reached an average attendance for 1932 of 215 and the need of more room is being felt.

A card from Brother Floyd Sibert, pastor at Masontown, Pennsylvania, says: "We had a grand Easter in spite of rainy weather. We had a sunrise service in the church . . . Then we broke all records for Sunday school attendance with 479 present. Then at the church service we baptized eight who had made confession since the revival. Two others are to be baptized Wednesday at the prayer service. In the evening a program of pageant and drama was given and the house wouldn't hold the crowd. On last Easter the attendance was 428. We also have an attendance contest on with Washington, D. C. We have been running neck and neck, with two more Sundays to go."

We are privileged to share with our readers a portion of a letter received from Mrs. A. D. Gnagey, of Altoona, Pennsylvania, where her husband is the efficient and much-loved pastor. We are not surprised to learn that she and Dr. Gnagey are entitled to membership in the Original Subscribers' Club of The Evangelist. Theirs has been a literary family and along with all the other splendid reading material they have provided through the years, they have never failed to keep their church paper on top of the pile, as we discovered from our contacts with their Ashland home for a number of years, when Brother Gnagey was editor of the Sunday school literature. It will be noted that practically all of these who have said they have been life-time readers of their church paper, began their reading habit when they were young. We are wondering how many parents are starting their children in this habit today, and how many pastors are giving encouragement to the same. Sister Gnagey tells us also of successful passion week and Easter services in our Altoona church and of two confessions of Christ.

Our Business Manager writes in his department about Evangelist renewals. These are hard times for church papers, and in fact for all kinds of religious papers. Two elements enter directly into the making of the way rough for such magazines, namely, the extremely hard times and the indisposition of people to read widely. In these days of radios and automobiles people are losing the reading habit. They are not even reading the newspapers as widely as they once did. This is a weakness that must somehow be overcome for the good of the people themselves, as well as for the welfare of their church interests. Denominational loyalty is not and never will be broadcast over the radio; to disseminate denominational ideals and projects, and to encourage loyalty thereto the church paper is essential. And it will be a sad day if the churches decide in large numbers that they can properly economize in these times by dispensing with the church paper, or by going off the loyalty standard. The government may or may not be wise in its decision to go off the gold standard, but there is no question about the folly of the church in any proposal to let the church paper take care of itself. The church stands to suffer too much, and there is no church paper, nor any religious paper of any kind that can make a go of it in these times, without some loyal friends standing up for its importance and encouraging people in the use of it. This is a challenge to all church leaders to strive to maintain Honor Roll churches.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for the revival to be held in the Roanoke, Virginia, church under the evangelistic leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller, May 2 to 21, Brother H. W. Koontz, pastor.

The Rejuvenating Power of Easter

By Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs, President of Ashland College

(Address at an Easter Sunrise Service at First Brethren Church, Ashland, O.)

I am sure that we all approach this morning with a feeling of seriousness and yet with joyful satisfaction, for this event has come to mean so much to the Christian world. All of this because in an oriental garden, some two thousand years ago, rugged with gnarled olive trees and broken of surface, one whom we regard as the divine Son of God, had prepared to surrender and did surrender, his life and then on the morning of the third day left the grave, to live, as we believe, for ever more.

I need not go back to recount the circumstances which led up to the events of this morning. I need only to recall to your minds that Jesus, in full consciousness of the consequences, surrendered his life, a ransom for many.

This is often spoken of as the divine tragedy, and yet there were human elements,—the betrayal by Judas, the denial by Peter, the court with its blunders, and the churchly hierarchy with its plottings, not one of which had the remotest inklings that he or it was playing a part in what would turn out to be, not only the world's supreme tragedy, but also the world's salvation.

So we are here this morning, dear friends, in the light of the world's most important, most far-reaching, and utterly unique event, whose importance we could not possibly over-estimate. The birth, death, and services of the world's most illustrious men sink into comparative insignificance in the resplendent light of this event.

I have stood by the tombs of many of our presidents, from the modest one of the Elder Harrison on up to the more elaborate monuments of Grant, Garfield, and McKinley, not to mention the humble graves of Cotton and Increase Mather, and other early New England worthies, and one has in the presence of these tombs, two feelings. One that what is earthly of these men is still there, or at least was put there, and that their influence is largely gone, their work is over, and that their places have been taken by others. But with the tomb of Jesus, all is different,—he is not there, his influence is not gone, and his place has not and can not be taken by another.

What are some of the lessons of Easter? The Savior is living, not dead; that is a guarantee of our own resurrection; that gives a hope to mankind; and it proves the divinity of Jesus, all of which, of course are indeed true, but I want to stress the rejuvenating power of the resurrection.

Now, by rejuvenating, is merely meant, to make young again, to make fresh, or to make over again. It is a well-worn saying that Christianity is always fresh, alive, and adapted to meet the changing needs of the changing world. And it is even pointed out that the individual Christian is buoyant and has a perennial hope. It is the boast of the Christian faith that it never grows old, defying, as it has, both age and death. And it is true that the finding of Jesus by the individual man possesses the same charm, the same adventure, that it possessed when Peter and others found him by the shores of Lake Galilee two thousand years ago.

It is also true that the Christian Church, as it progressed through the centuries, accumulated beliefs, cus-tomms, and errors, many of which it later shook off. That is the sad part of ecclesiastic history, but the elements of truth contained in this new, now old, faith were never fully lost sight of. The Sonship of Jesus, his vicarious death, the historicity of the resurrection, and that he came to redeem men,—these the rank and file of the church always believed. It is true that in these modern days, as perhaps in every day, certain church leaders either deny or slur over many of these important truths. But the record of Jesus' life, his rugged uncompromising character, his sinlessness and his vicarious suffering, have always charmed and held men and they do today. If that is true, then Christianity is as fresh, as compelling, as staunch, and as conquering, as ever it was. The eternal truths of the accounts of Jesus still claim men. "Upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail

THE FIVEFOLD NAME

By A. Judson Hughes

"Wonderful" because in him combined,
Both God and man we see;
Because the curtained human eye is blind
To that deep mystery.

"Counsellor" because the fountain-head
Is he of ageless lore;
Because he freely serves man's urgent need
From that exhaustless store.

"Mighty God" because in him there dwells
All power on earth and sea;
Because the life he lived on earth still spells Aloud his deity.

"Everlasting Father" for he broods
With sorrow on earth's pain;
Because he mourns the countless multitudes
That sin hath cursed and slain.

"Prince of Peace" because his teachings prove War's glory empty glare;
Because the wielding of his wand of love
Stills tumult ev'rywhere.

Anointed bearer of the fivefold name
We breathe our prayer to thee:
Help us thy goodly merits to proclaim
In grateful melody.

against it."

But to crown the truth of the New Testament, is the influence of the resurrection,—a unique event. Now let us remember that Jesus had had experiences with death before this. There were the cases of the little girl, the young man and Lazarus, but his resurrection is something more than a mere raising from the dead, such as these events several of which are recorded in the Scriptures. His resurrection gives (a) the church a living head, (b) the believer a living friend, (c) a promise of the time when he shall come to claim his own, and (d) serves to give hope to those dead in sin, that they may wake to walk in a newness of life. This last lesson, I want to stress.

The events which lead up to this morning were inaugurated last Sunday with the triumphal entry, when Jesus rode into Jerusalem in some degree of kingly state. Now, he was to make a triumphal entry into your heart and mine. Then, too, we must follow him to and through the garden, and suffer with him. And then comes the glorious event, the rising with him to walk in a newness of life, new idealism, new motives, a new creature! Thus every recurring Easter morning, we may be reminded by our own resurrection experience. We may not only contemplate the empty tomb of Jesus, but our own empty tomb of past errors, and set our face forward. Thus, Christianity becomes, the religion not only of the "second chance," but of renewed countless chances.

"Christ is risen. He is not here. Behold, he goeth before you into Galilee,"—into new experiences. And in this new body, most certainly of a spiritual nature, he consorted with his disciples some forty days. Many times they heard his voice; many times their astonished eyes beheld his glorified form; many times their hearts burned within them as he talked to them; and many times their minds went back over the three tumultuous years. But, mark you, these post-resurrection experiences made them faithful to the end,—many times the bitter end,—heroic martyrs. They knew that their Lord was alive, they saw him in life, they saw him in death, and later they saw him ascend into glory. And they knew, as we all know, that he is alive forevermore.

And the blessed experience of the indwelling Christ rests back upon the resurrection, the assured resurrection. For the believer, he lives, he holds sway, he rules, he reigns in his heart and at every recurring Easter time, he feels his rejuvenating power, his living presence, his perennial freshness, not in far-off Palestine, but within his own breast.

The Believer's Kenosis

By W. H. Schaffer

(Prepared to be delivered to the Pennsylvania District Conference October 8, 1931, Ministerial Session, and by vote was requested published)

Much has been written and much more said about that great and wonderful Christological passage found in Philipians 2:6-7 which sets forth the doctrine of the "Self-emptying of Christ," which in the language of theology is called his "Kenosis."

This doctrine is one of the great mysteries of the Bible, for we find Paul, writing to young Timothy (I Tim. 3:16), declaring that "without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh . . ."; and today if it were not for the Cross of Calvary to give a satisfactory answer for this act on the part of God, the world might well wonder the reason for it. But like one great chain every link is necessary in its proper place for the usefulness of that chain. God does things at times strange to human thinking. The fact that he offers to every believer that free, undeserved, unmerited favor of his, called "Grace," without one stroke of works unto complete salvation, is a stumbling block to men because they feel that they are well able to care for themselves. Paul perhaps has this thing in mind when he writes to the Corinthian brethren, "But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness." Of course the religionist sees nothing in the death of the Cross, for he has never felt the intimacy of it in his own life and experience. Certainly to the seeker of wisdom the Cross has no appeal, for it does not dovetail into his philosophy.

On the other hand, many professed Christians believe the truth of that passage as found in Philipians 2:7-9, and somehow many have overlooked the passages referring to their own "Kenosis" or self-emptying. The dynamic apostle of the early church experienced in his life what every born-again soul should experience. If Philipians 2:7-9 speaks of the Lord's self-emptying, then most certainly Galatians 2:20 and 6:14 speak of the believer's self-emptying. In this Laodicean age it is difficult to lead believers to the place where they are willing to empty their lives of self and be filled with Christ. If many of God's true prophets were working for their own glory they would have given up long ago, in utter despair, the attempt to inject this doctrine into the systems of their parishioners. Sometime ago I met one of the pastors of our town doing visitation. He had been going from door to door, and in his visits he came across an intelligent looking foreigner and asked the question, "Are you a Christian?" The man replied, "Sure, me Christian, but priest, he no Christian. When I have work and money and give lots to church priest say 'me good fellow' but now, no work, can't give to church, priest say 'I no good' and now me go to hell." That incident I believe could be multiplied not only among the Catholic faith but among our own as well. How can a pastor who has never experienced the self-emptying process in his own life, impart its spiritual significance to others?

We believe and teach separation from the world and many of our sheep are trying their best to keep separated but they are having a difficult time of it. The main trouble seems to be that instead of putting off the old man of sin they try to remodel him, seeking in that manner to extinguish the wrangling power of sin in their lives. There are many Scriptural references and relating passages which we might examine and expound but we shall confine ourselves to but two texts which we have already mentioned, namely, Galatians 2:20 and 6:14.

Weymouth translates Galatians 2:20 in this appealing fashion, "I have been crucified with Christ and it is no longer I that live but Christ that lives in me; and the life which I now live in the body I live through faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself up to death on my behalf." Paul proclaims, "I HAVE BEEN crucified with Christ!" The crucifixion of Jesus Christ on the Cross of Calvary was potentially the crucifixion of humanity. The whole world that ultra-historic day was represented on the Cross with him. The path of truth is narrow here, for we find no authority in the Scriptures for saying that believers have been crucified "for their sins" as some are wont to believe. Christ was crucified for our sins, and we by the grace of God were counted "in and with him" when he died. In the Cross we died "to sin," but not "for sin."

The apostle Paul wrote these words to the Galatian Church sometime after Christ's death, yet he proclaims in no uncertain tone, "I HAVE BEEN CRUCIFIED WITH CHRIST." Yes, it was an accomplished fact. As pastors and evangelists when we receive a confession that has been prompted by faith in the Lord Jesus as Savior, we invariably ask, "And do you now surrender your life into the care and keeping of your Lord and Savior?" We recognize that the faith which gives the New Birth requires also the handing over of the flesh with its desires and lusts to death. The big task is to keep this old man of the carnal nature in his proper place. He is somewhat like John Barleycorn; some folks thought they had him buried for keeps but it seems as if his would-be-annihilationists did not accomplish their work as well as they had anticipated. There are many of God's children, I fear, who do not realize that what was accomplished for them on the Cross and made real by faith at conversion is to be lived out in their daily walk.

The Holy Spirit has given to us, through Paul, that practical application; and Paul having experienced it in his own life writes, "I therefore so run as not uncertainly, so fight I, as not beating the air but I buffet my body and lead it captive" (1 Cor. 9:26-27). Again, "For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh." Again, "For thy sake we are killed all the day long." Another, "I die daily" (1 Cor. 15:31). Is there a contradiction involved? God forbid. Historically the lusts and affections of the flesh have been crucified in Christ. A God who hates sin and who has made complete atonement for sin would never tolerate sin agains. So in Christ the "I" is dead. If we love to emphasize the ego in our lives let us do it here, "I have been crucified with Christ!" In us, as sons of Adam in the flesh, this old sinful nature lives and although the Eternal Judge has pronounced its death warrant yet it only dies in our own experience as we "by faith" give him over to be crucified. So Paul says, "I die daily."

A young missionary to Africa who, when confronted by a friend's question, "Isn't it dangerous to go so far away from civilization where you will have no help and no medicine in sickness? Aren't you afraid you'll die?" Replied the young missionary, "I died when I decided to go." This young man knew the truth of Romans 6:11— "... reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

"IT IS NO LONGER I THAT LIVE, BUT CHRIST LIVES IN ME." That's the testimony that the children of the only true and living God should proclaim daily! Paul discovered that the Lord had so completely identified himself with him and his sins, that he (Paul) had been in the mind of God put to death with Christ on the Cross. That very common and obnoxious disease of "Perpendicular Pronounitis" in Paul's life was completely cured when he said "I have been crucified." That old self-confident life is dead! The German Kaiser during the early days of the World War was quoted as having made this self-exalting expression of himself, "Ich undt Got." It was the Kaiser's "Ich" in Paul's life that had been crucified.

Seated on the deck of an ocean liner, the cartoonist amused himself by drawing pictures of the different passengers. A few months before he had been employed on a newspaper; now, a professional cartoonist no longer he was on his way to the Philippines, a missionary of the Gospel. His vision had been as swift as it had been bright. A number of notable people were making the trip, and among them were the captain of an American battleship and three or four millionaires with their wives. One of the women, becoming enthusiastic over the cartoonist's ability, asked him if he would draw a picture of her husband. The cartoonist complied graciously, and while he was at work, the wife of the captain watched with interest. "Oh," she exclaimed at last, "I suppose you are one of those great American artists on your way to the Philippines for new ideas! What a wonderful thing to be so gifted! I suppose you make barrels of money?" "No, madam," he replied, "I am going to the Philippines as a missionary. I have given up my career as an artist." The woman regarded him first in astonishment and then with reproach. "The very idea," she exclaimed. "To think of a young man like you, with all your ability, throwing his life away on a lot of worthless heathen! I can hardly believe you are serious! Really, you are joking, aren't you?" Eight years passed, and the cartoonist and his wife were sailing for home on doctor's orders, for the climate had proved too much for the woman. The lives of both were wrapped up in their work; it was hard for them to leave the natives, who had come to depend on them, but there was no help for it. A great crowd of Filipinos came to the dock to see the missionaries off. Tears were running down the faces of many of them. All were sad and made no efforts to hide their feelings. As the steamer pulled out, thousands of hands waved the missionaries goodbye. The cartoonist and his wife stood silent together on the deck; their eyes were wet, and their throats felt tight and strange. And there on the shore the waving hands continued to flash in the bright sunlight. If the captain's wife had witnessed that scene, would she have said that the cartoonist's life was wasted?

You may talk about the heroes wars have produced but you have never known nor heard of real honest-to-goodness heroes until you know what thousands of missionaries of the Gospel of Jesus Christ have done and are doing all over this world of ours. "I died when I decided to go!" is the key word to many great missionary enterprises.

Yes, Christ died for "Whosoever will;" His death included the whole world, yet Paul found himself so individually connected with the Cross and its suffering that he pictured himself there.

The following incident is told of a missionary to Africa. Endeavoring to explain to a village chief how that Christ had died for him and after a rather lengthy and difficult effort the Missionary had just about given up hope when the Chief broke out in stern command, "Great God, come down from that Cross, that's my place." Not until we experience the fellowship of his suffering will we realize its true significance.

Paul does not speak of self-crucifixion for that would be impossible. No man could drive the nails into his own hands and feet. We are commanded to crucify the flesh with its passions and lusts, but who shall crucify that spirit that would exalt itself against God? Who shall crucify that carnal mind which is enmity to God; who shall crucify the Kaiser's "Ich?" Self crucifixion is impossible, yet many attempt it. How often as pastors we are confronted with the popular "good moral man" who seeks salvation by his own merits or attempts to lift himself by his own boot-straps. Little does he realize that he can lift himself no higher than he actually is. And how they delight to boast in their ability to keep the lusts of the flesh under subjection!

Not only our sins but our sinful selves have been, in the great redeeming purpose of God, nailed to the Cross. It is now, "Not I, but Christ who lives in me." Since I have been crucified with Christ therefore I must reckon my sinful self judged by God in his own Son on the accursed tree, and put in the place of death. Ye are dead and your life is now hid with Christ in God. BLESSED PARADOX—DEAD YET ALIVE! WONDERFUL MYSTERY—CHRIST LIVING IN ME!

Every sincere believer has the hope of the resurrection. Yet many who have believed in the Lord Jesus Christ as their atoning sacrifice before God, and have been by the Holy Spirit baptized into his death, that they might be sharers in his resurrection, have never experienced the fellowship of his Cross which precedes the hope they anticipate. There is no possibility of knowing that power of his resurrection in our souls if we have not first been made conformable unto his death.

Personally I do not care to class Christianity as a religion, nor as a philosophy but as a life after death. A death to the old things, the perishable and uncertain things of this world and living for the things that shall endure without end.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

VIOLET RAY KILLS DISEASE GERM CELLS

An addition to medical knowledge in the discovery of an apparatus method by which ultra-violet rays attack disease bacteria and kill them, was reported March 30 to the American Chemical Society. It applies to the use of ultra-violet rays from sunlight and from artificial "sun-lamps" in treatment of some kinds of disease and was credited with giving scientists a better understanding of why these rays are beneficial to health.

The discovery was reported by Drs. F. F. Heyroth and J. R. Loofbourov, of the University of Cincinnati, at the Chemical Society's final meeting. They had found that the ultra-violet rays apparently did their killing of bacteria by attacking the nuclei, or centers, of bacteria cells. The rays cause a change in some chemicals in the nuclei, which apparently kills the cells. Such cells are the fundamental, living building blocks that form bodies of bacteria and all other living things.

The rays that kill the cells were described as very short waves of invisible ultra-violet light. Not many of these short-killing rays reach the earth from the sun, most of them being filtered out of sunlight by a layer of ozone high in the air.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

HYMNS NEW AND OLD

It is a singular alignment in defense of the faith which finds secular newspapers like the New York Sun and the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, pleading for the old hymns against the aspersions cast upon them by choirmasters in some of our modernistic churches. Our own plea for their retention in our church services is not only on the ground of sentiment, but because in many instances they represent the last battle-line for evangelicalism. The hymns of Cowper, Bernard, Doddridge, Faber, Gerhardt, Newton, Montgomery, Watts, Wesley, and Fanny Crosby, Charlotte Elliott, Frances Havergal, Annie Steele, and many more of the past two centuries, have had constructive, edifying value in the lives of Christians comparable only to contemporaneous preaching in our pulpits. Not alone have these hymns stirred emotion, but they have illuminated the mind and affected the will of the worshiper in the strengthening of his faith as a witness for and a promoter of the gospel to the ends of the earth. We are not as familiar with the repertoire of the new church hymns as with the old, but those that we know are marked by an absence of the vital truths of Christianity, or a vagueness in their expression, quite in keeping with the liberal theology in vogue. Their poetry may be of a high order, and frequently is, and they may be set to music gratifying to the aesthetic taste, but the younger generation using them will lose something that made their fathers

GERMAN KULTUR AGAIN

With his usual clever irony, G. K. Chesterton, the British wit "rubs it in" on that type of liberal who in his zeal for peace has been trying to make it appear that the recent war was all the doings of the enemies of Germany. Mr. Chesterton ironically remarks that we have been so friendly to France and Poland as to bring even Potsdam and Berlin to dream of militarism and the age-long pacifism of the Junkers has given way. "The discovery that the Junkers are no longer Quakers may well shake us with remorse for the depth of our crime."

The occasion of all this comment is, of course, the brutal war in which Chancellor Hitler has been treating his enemies and especially the Jews while he has been seizing and using his power. Herr Hitler and his party are the same ones who were responsible for the German militarism that preceded the war, they glorify that old regime, they denounce democracy (not only Socialism), they preach race prejudice and despise the opinion of the rest of the world. Hitler is talking of restoring the monarchy and swallowing

German Austria. Meanwhile Jews are permitted to be brutally assaulted and killed.

All of this in the interest of German Kultur.
